How far the Voluntary Principle may be successfully realized in the Established Church is well illustrated in the history of Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, of which Prebendary C. J. Ridgeway is the vicar. The offertories alone for the last year reached the sum of £5,727 9s. 2d. During 1899, £1,300 was contributed to the Hospital Sunday Fund, and £448 to the Bishop of London's Fund. The total contributed from all sources for the year was over £8,600, of which £6,000 was given to objects outside the parish. During the present vicar's ministry the amounts raised voluntarily come to a total of £107,000, apart from money contributed towards beautifying the church. Of course, this is not only a fashionable but a wealthy church, and is well able to manifest a large generosity. But so are other churches which are conspicuously lacking in that virtue. If the whole available wealth of the Established Church were but voluntarily taxed to a small amount, there would be no such painful and unnecessary poverty among a large proportion of curates and incumbents.

The alleged dearth of curates, according to a letter in the Westminster Gazette from the secretary of the Association for Benefiting Aged and Indigent Curates, is simply one of young curates. There is a plethora of fully ordained and experienced and even capable men of forty, who have, however, little chance of being engaged in comparison with beardless youths fresh from college. This is a painful state of things. Spiritual work and leadership specially need qualities that can only be gained by experience. A preacher of forty should be in his early prime of usefulness and energy, and it is a sad waste of precious material that when a man has reached that modest age, he should be in danger of being discarded as too old.

The discussion in the Lower House of Convocation on the recent "Declaration" of the E.C.U. was neither dignified in its tone nor satisfactory in its conclusion. Nothing shows the strength of the Ritualist movement more than the half-heartedness of the opposition to it within the Church. Even those who earnestly abjure its tenets and tendencies hesitate to take a bold line of attack, for the sake of the "unity of the Church." Yet there can be no real unity existent in the presence of such incompatible divergences of faith and practice as exist in the Establishment to-day. The Evangelicals and the Ritualists have no point of contact except that they are both included in the "National Church." The time must surely come when one part or the other must go forth.

The British Weekly of last week contains an editorial, entitled "Illustrations of Conversion," which ably emphasizes the need for an acknowledgment of the "objective" element in the Atonement. Ethical, as opposed to Evangelical preaching, is distinguished by ignoring the remission of sins through the blood of Jesus, and "takes for granted that we are forgiven when we say we are sorry and will try to do better." If this were all, it is not possible to explain the death of Jesus. In the apostolic words, Christ "died in vain." The writer continues in words that penetrate to the marrow of the question:—

> It is not mere mercy on which we cast ourselves. It is the mercy of God as revealed in the cross of Jesus, that meeting-place of mercy and of judgment. The atonement of Christ is not merely a doctrine of Scripture. It is a postulate of conscience.

The fact of atonement meeting a deep need in the moral nature of man is a line of thought that is fruitful, and helps us to realize more clearly the Godward necessity for an expiation or sacrifice.

Our contemporary has elicited from various correspondents their opinions upon a leading article by the Editor, in which it was pointed out that many modern sermons lack the note of direct appeal for a definite surrender to our Lord Jesus Christ. It was charged that very many preachers content themselves with imparting information to their congregations, and that beyond this they do not venture. The majority of the correspondents seem to agree with the Editor. Of course it would be unfair to generalize upon a question of this kind, but it cannot be doubted that, for many, in measure the charge is true.

It is not sufficient to convey to men information about Christ; the dominant passion of every preacher should be to labour and to pray for the regeneration of souls by Christ. This desire, when supreme in the heart, must radically affect both the matter and the manner of the preacher. A man who is desperately set upon bringing his audience to Christ will frequently be compelled to avoid those niceties of speech which become a snare to so many, and "make void the Cross of Christ." In the physical world the generous warmth of the sun ripens fruit and perfects flowers, but it also ripens poison berries and completes the decay of rotting matter. And so, if men receive only the informative light of the Gospel, whilst their natures remain unregenerate, the evangel will simply evoke and perfect those elements of their nature which are opposed to God. It is still true that the Gospel is a savour of life or of death.

Reviewing the re-issue of Boston's "A Soliloquy on the Art of Man-Fishing," Dr. Parker earnestly invites young preachers to read this stirring text-book in soul-winning. He describes Boston's ministry as—

> No occasional event, no mere livelihood, no fine art in words. It would be better marked by such terms as sacrifice, burning, agony. The whole book is in the title-page. This man must have souls for his hire. The day is wasted that sees no soul brought to the Lord; and the sermon that does not save men is little better than waste words.

In these graphic words Dr. Parker describes an ideal of the Christian ministry, which it would be well for this country if it were revived. In the multiplicity of things a preacher is expected to do, it is not difficult but easy for him to forget the one thing for which he exists, and that is to "bring men to the Lord."

The verdict at the inquest on the victims of the Slough disaster, conveys an impressive lesson that has important spiritual bearings. It was found that the accident took place owing to the failure of the driver to notice that the signals were against him. This was the first lapse on his part in a long working life, for it transpired that he had, in his time, driven trains carrying an aggregate of 150,000,000 passengers in all, and had never had an accident before. A single moment's failure in watchfulness thus broke a splendid record, and cost several lives and much suffering and loss besides. The wonder indeed is that such cases do not happen oftener on the railway, and in many other secular callings. But when they do, tragedies usually follow as the necessary consequences. The Spectator has a useful letter showing that a period comes in men's middle life when such a lapse as the above is very likely to take place. The writer urges that no man over fifty-five ought to drive an express train.

The wonder, on the other hand, is that men who would visit with severe blame any failure in alertness in matters physical, forget so persistently the need of an unceasing watchfulness in the spiritual world. The higher life is surrounded by more perilous and persistent enemies than any bodily dangers can possibly be (Eph. vi. 12), and any sense of undue security is bound to be followed by instant advantage to these enemies. Our Lord, knowing this, was perpetually urging on his disciples the imperative need for spiritual foresight and preparedness (Matt. xxiv. 43, 51, &c.), and St. Paul is scarcely less emphatic in stirring up the sense of watchfulness in all. For lack of it, some of the brightest young souls fall into perdition. But the special lesson of the incident in question is that at no time in our career can we afford to relax our efforts in this direction. "Watching unto prayer" should ever be the Christian's motto.

It is believed in well-informed quarters that a new dogma will shortly be added to the heavy burden which all faithful Romanists are required to carry, that of the right of the Pope to the temporal power. Monsignor Ireland, and other dignitaries apparently, are paving the way by referring to the idea as one in regard to which it is their duty, not only as bishops, but as Christians, to "think and speak in the same way as the Holy Father;" and history shows that declarations of this kind generally precede a formal pronouncement of a Roman Catholic doctrine to be incumbent upon the faithful. The idea, however, is utterly obnoxious to the mind of Italy, and it is not likely that it will, even although the whole power of the Jesuits is thrown into the scale, ever become anything more than a rallying cry. Certainly it would be an unhappy day for Italy if it did.

The growing unrest and disobedience within the Romish body finds still another exponent in the recent editor of the R. C. journal, the Weekly Register, who, in the current number of the Nineteenth Century, takes very strong exception to a recent pronouncement in favour of Rome, and characterises it as a "specious dressing up of facts." After quoting a long list of R. C. books published in recent years as illustrations of the same practice, and of the effect of "the malaria that gathers round the rock of Peter," Mr. Dell goes on to state that—

> There is, in fact, no important country in Europe where the intellectual life of Catholics is not paralysed . . . Superstition, in late years at least, has been allowed to flourish almost unchecked, and hardly any extravagance in devotion or even in theological expression is interfered with.

The cultus of St. Anthony, for instance, having "reached a pitch that is scarcely distinguishable from Paganism." In proof of this Mr. Dell adds:—

> Such publications as the Propagateur de St. Joseph, in which priests and nuns relate how St. Joseph has at their request removed persons distasteful to them for the sum of five francs are issued under episcopal patronage; and even an English Catholic paper recently published an advertisement in which a girl offered St. Anthony two shillings to make her hair grow two inches by a certain day, on which she was to attend a ball.

News of a significant movement reaches us from several parts of France. The proprietors of a number of large shops are forming themselves into a league for the purpose of securing Sunday rest for themselves and for their employés. Each day the newspapers publish the names of additional members who join the movement. It does not appear, so far, as if any religious spirit were behind the agitation; the reason for forming the league is apparently solely utilitarian. Experience has proved that men who are compelled to work seven days per week do not offer the best service; hence the League thinks to do the masters good by demanding the Sabbath rest. It is good when men learn by experience how wise are the commands of God; but more than this is necessary, France sadly needs true apostles to preach, and to show that loving obedience of God's will is the chief thing, and that this is only possible through the Gospel. At present the Frenchmen do not believe in their priests; but they are ready for the truth, if it is wisely presented to them.

A daily contemporary, dealing with the question of the housing of the poor in the Metropolis, says that fifty-five per cent of the children of the London poor die under the age of five years, a few of them dying "dramatically"—starved, beaten to death, or by accident.

> But we do not hear of the quieter tragedies of child life that are happening around us daily, of the little ones carried off in shoals by fever, bronchitis, diphtheria, acting on puny frames that have never known sufficient nourishment, the disease helped on its way by foul air, and an attempt at nursing so crude that it can hardly be differentiated from neglect. . . . It is a heavy tax for the nation to levy on poverty.

In the face of facts such as these, what importance the Children's Day in the Country and other holiday associations assume, for without their beneficent work thousands of the back street and slum children would never see the fields, or breathe any but impure and vitiated air. We commend our fund to the generous sympathy of our readers as in former years.

The Ethical societies, which now have a number of Sunday meeting-places and "Labour Churches," but whose creed seems to be of an invertebrate and vapoury kind, have proclaimed at their recent Congress that the object of their movement is "not merely to add one more church numerically to the steepled throng, but to raise a distinctive issue, and show the world the customary tiny birth in crib and manger of a new order, the church of men to come." As if this were not sufficiently vague, a speaker emphasized as a salient point in their mission "the scientific elaboration of a tangible ethical sanction for the many."

No wonder that some of the "Ethicists" asked that ritual and prayer, "as an uplifting of human emotion and aspiration," might be included, ethics seemingly proving inadequate in times of sorrow and need; and, as some of them find that Christ's life is, "in the way of example, the highest natural force we have in the bracing of moral effort," we may well pray that their unrest be deepened until they turn to Jesus for that peace which passeth understanding, and which is not to be obtained in ethical studies.

Pekin.

A CALL TO THE CHURCH FOR PRAYER AND SERVICE.

NEVER since the Indian Mutiny, perhaps, has such a dread fear taken hold of the heart of the nation as that caused by the threatened—if not, as yet, actual—massacre of Europeans in the inaccessible Chinese capital. The bare thought that statesmen, pleasure-seekers, missionaries, merchants, casual and permanent residents, may all have been engulfed in a terrible slaughter is so appalling that to the last we must hope they are still safe.

With the scanty information that has as yet percolated into the Press, it is not possible to say more; but, while cries of "Vengeance!" fill the air, we look for "a more excellent way," and for Christian volunteers from our churches to step forward and fill the missionary ranks of their brethren and sisters who may have fallen.

We learn that already the clamour of riot and murder has been interpreted in some waiting hearts as

and that some missionary societies have during the last few days received a number of intimations from Christian men and women of their willingness to proceed to China as soon as circumstances permit.

A missionary, home on furlough, was urging last week that what he and his fellow-labourers need most of all is the earnest prayer of the Church at home—prayer for statesmen in China, that their steps and thoughts may be guided aright; prayer for European residents, that their lives may accord with the profession of a Christian country; prayer for the native converts, that they may "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things"; prayer for the missionaries and their families, not only that their lives may be preserved in the hour of danger, but that their spiritual life and energy may be maintained at a high level in the time of peace.

Surely we shall not deny this modest demand. Let the people of God unite insistently, agonizingly, in supplication at the throne of grace, that this and much more be granted our brethren and sisters across the seas, in China and in every heathen land. And may a multitude of Christian stalwarts hear the Divine appeal: "Who will go for us? Whom shall I send?" and join in glad response: "Here am I; send me!" Here is indeed "an open door."

The Forces of Sin.

Studies of John the Baptist.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Mark vi. 27.

THE Evangelist Mark tells us that Herod on his birthday made a supper to his lords, and the high captains, and the chief men of Galilee. The days that preceded the celebration were probably filled with merry-makings and carouse. Groups of nobles, knights and ladies would gather on the terraces, looking out over the Dead Sea, and away to Jerusalem, and in the far distance to the gleaming waters of the Mediterranean, while, in the dungeons beneath the castle, lay that mighty preacher, the confessor, forerunner, herald, and soon to be the martyr.

In such a scene, I would have you study the genesis of a great crime, because you must remember that in respect to sin, there is very little to choose between the twentieth century and the first, between the sin of that civilization and of ours. That is why the Bible must always command the profound interest of mankind—because it does not concern itself with the outward circumstances and setting of the scenes and characters it describes, but with those great common facts of temptation, sin, and redemption, which have a meaning for us all.

This chapter is therefore written under more than usual solemnity, because one is so sure that, in dealing with that scene and the passions that met there in a foaming vortex, words may be penned that will help souls caught in the drift of the same black current, and are being swept down. Perhaps this page shall utter a warning voice to arrest them, ere it be too late; and be a life-buoy, or rope, or brother's hand reached out to save them as they rush past on the boiling waters. For there is help and grace in God by which a Herod and a Judas, a Jezebel and a Lady Macbeth, a royal criminal or an ordinary one, may be ARRESTED, REDEEMED, AND SAVED.

In this, as in every sin, there were three forces at work:—First, the predisposition of the soul, which the Bible calls "lust," and "the desire of the mind." "Among whom," says the Apostle, "we also all once lived in the lusts of our flesh, doing the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature children of wrath." Second, the suggestion of evil from without. Finally, the act of the will by which the suggestion was accepted and finally adopted.

I. The Predetermination towards this Sin. Herod was the son of the great Herod, a voluptuous, murderous tyrant; and from such bad parentage he had inherited a very weak nature. Perhaps, if he had come under strong, wholesome influences, he would have lived a passably good life; but it was his misfortune to come under the influence of a beautiful fiend, who became his Lady Macbeth, his Jezebel, and wrought the ruin of his soul.

The man who allows himself to drift weakly before the strongest influence is almost certain to discover that, in this world, the strongest influences are those which make for sin; these touch him most closely, and operate most continuously, and find in his nature the best nidus, or nest, in which to breed.

The influences that suggest and make for sin in this world are so persistent—at every street corner, in every daily newspaper, among every gathering of well-dressed people, or ill—that if people have no other failing than that they are weak, I am bound to warn them, in God's name, that unless they link themselves to the strength of the Son of God, they will inevitably become wicked. Remember that the men, and especially the women, who are filling our gaols as criminals, were, in most cases, only weak; but they therefore drifted before the strong, black current which flows through the world, and have become objects against whom all parents warn their children. With all my soul—and I have had no small experience of myself and of others—I implore that if you are conscious of your weakness, you shall do what the sea-anemone and the limpet do, which cling to the rock when the storms darken the sky. "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might."

Herod was reluctant to take the course to which his evil genius urged him. He made a slight show of resistance, as we have seen; but he did not break with her, and so she finally had her way, and dragged him to her lowest level. Here was the cause of his ruin, as it may be of yours. You may be reluctant, will falter and hesitate, will remonstrate, will resist, but ultimately you will drift into doing the very sins, to accost you with which brings the red blood into your face.

Beware of yourself. If you are so impressionable to John the Baptist, remember that you may be equally so to evil suggestion: take heed, therefore, to guard against anything in your life that might open the gates of your sensitive nature to temptation, which you may not be able to withstand. If you are weak in physical health, you guard against draught and fatigue, against impure atmosphere and contagion; how much more should you guard against the scenes and company which might act prejudicially on the health of your soul!

II. Temptation. In the genesis of a sin we must give due weight to the power of the Tempter, whether by his direct suggestion to the soul or by the instrumentality of men and women whom he uses for his fell purpose. In this case Satan's accomplice was the beautiful Herodias—beautiful as a snake, but as deadly. She knew the influence that John the Baptist wielded over her weak paramour, that he was accustomed to attach unmeasured importance to his words, and "do many things." She realized that and therefore the more liable to be affected by his words when he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come. She feared for the consequences if the Baptist and Herod's conscience should make common cause against her.

She watched her opportunity, and it came on the occasion we have described. The ungodly revel was at its height. Excited with the meeting of the two strong passions, which have destroyed more victims than have fallen on all the battlefields of the world, Herod, in his frenzy, promised to give Salome whatever she might ask, though it were to cost half his kingdom. A dead silence fell on the company, and every ear strained for her reply. "And she asked, saying, I will that thou forthwith give me in a charger the head of John the Baptist."

Mark that word, "forthwith." Her mother and she were probably fearful that the king's mood would change. What was to be done must be done at once, or it might not be done at all. The imperious demand of the girl showed how keenly she entered into her mother's scheme.

It is thus that suggestions come to us; and, so far as I can understand, we may expect them to come so long as we are in this world. There seems to be a precise analogy between temptation and the microbes of disease. These are always in the air; but when we are in good health they are absolutely innocuous, our nature offers no hold or resting place for them. Microbes of consumption and other diseases are probably never far away from us, but are powerless to hurt us, till our system has become weakened by other causes. So temptation would have no power over us, if we were in full vigour of soul. It is only when the vitality of the inward man is impaired, that we are unable to withstand the fiery darts of the wicked one.

This shows how greatly we need to be filled with the life of the Son of God. In his life and death, our Lord, in our human nature, met and vanquished the power of sin and death; He bore that nature into the heavenly places, whence He waits to impart it, by the Holy Spirit, to those who are united with Him by a living faith. Is not this what the Apostle John meant, when he said that his converts—his little children—could overcome, because greater was He that was in them than he that was in the world? He who has the greatest and strongest nature within him must overcome an inferior nature; and if you have the victorious nature of the living Christ in you, you must be stronger than the nature which He bruised beneath his feet.

III. The Consent of the Will. "The king was exceeding sorry." The girl's request sobered him. On the one hand, his better nature revolted from the deed, and he was more than fearful of the consequences; on the other, he said to himself, "I am bound by my oath. I have sworn, and my words were spoken in the audience of so many of my chief men, I dare not go back, lest they lose faith in me." "And straightway the king sent forth a soldier of his guard, and commanded to bring the Baptist's head."

Is it not marvellous that a man who did not refrain from doing deeds of incest and murder, should be so scrupulous about violating an oath that ought never to have been sworn? You have thought that you were bound to go through with your engagement, because you have pledged yourself, although you know that it will condemn you to lifelong misery and disobedience to the law of Christ. But stay for a moment, and tell me!

WHAT WAS YOUR STATE OF MIND

when you pledged your word? Think! Were you not under the influence of passion? Did you not form your plan in the twilight of misinformation, or beneath the spell of some malign and unholy influence, that exerted a mesmeric power over you? Looking back on it, can you not see that you ought never to have bound yourself, and do you not feel that if you had your time again you would not bind yourself? Then be sure that you are not bound by that "dead hand." You must act in the clearer, better light, which God has communicated. Even though you called on the sacred name of God, God cannot sanction that which you now count mistaken and wrong. You had no right to pledge half the kingdom of your nature. It is not yours to give, it is God's. And if you have pledged it, through mistake, prejudice, or passion, dare to believe that you are absolved from your vow, through repentance and faith, and that the breach is better than the observance.

There was a tread along the corridor. It stopped outside John's cell. The light gleamed under the door, the heavy wards of the lock were turned; in a moment more he saw the gleam of the naked sword, and guessed the soldier's errand. There was no time to spare; the royal message was urgent. Perhaps one last message was sent to his disciples; then he bowed his head before the stroke; the body fell helpless here, the head there, and the spirit was free, with the freedom of the sons of God, in a world where such as he stand among their peers. Forerunner of the Bridegroom here, he was his forerunner there also; and the Bridegroom's friend passed homeward to await the Bridegroom's coming, where he ever hears the voice he loves.

Months afterwards, when he heard of Jesus, the conscience-stricken monarch said: "It is John the Baptist, whom I beheaded; he is risen from the dead." And still afterwards, when Jesus Himself stood before him, and refused to speak to him, he must have associated that silence and his deed together, as having a fatal and necessary connection.

So the will, which had long faltered with the temptress, at last took the fatal step, and perpetrated the crime which could never be undone. There is always a space given, during which a tempted soul is allowed time to withdraw from the meshes of the net of temptation. Sudden falls have always been preceded by long dallying with Delilah. The crashing of the tree to the earth has been prepared for by the ravages of the borer-worm, which has eaten out its heart.

If you have taken the fatal step, and marred your life by some sad and disastrous sin, dare to believe that there is forgiveness for you with God. Men may not forgive, but God will. As far as the east is from the west, so far will He remove our transgressions from us. Perhaps you can never again take up public Christian work; but you may walk humbly and prayerfully with God, sure that you are accepted of Him, and forgiven, though you can hardly forgive yourself.

MILDMAY ADDRESSES.

The Relation of Joy and Praise.

By Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, M.A.

Let all those that put their trust in Thee rejoice; let them ever shout for joy, because Thou defendest them; let them also that love thy name be joyful in Thee (Psa. v. 11).

The essential meaning of praise is found in six familiar words, etymologically related, and yielding the history and genealogy of praise—Price, appraise, appreciate, prize, precious, praise. That last word, the expression of our appreciation of God, is associated in the Bible both with what He is and what He gives. The true spirit of praise is a true appreciation of God. We may know that we have it by possession of the spirit of joy. The latter results from accepting, realizing, and maintaining a right relation to God; and it covers the whole of our life, past, present, and future, in recollection, realization, and anticipation of what God has been, is, and will be to us.

We must distinguish between happiness and joy. Happiness depends upon what happens, and is therefore variable; but joy, being a condition of soul, should be independent of our surroundings. Happiness is like the waves of the sea—to-day calm, to-morrow turbulent; joy is like the ocean bed—the same in storm or calm. Happiness depends upon what we have; joy depends upon what we are. When the life is right we shall prize God; and, prizing, we shall praise Him.

"Let all those that put their trust in Thee rejoice." This is the joy of atonement made, guilt cancelled, righteousness imputed; and the joy of conversion issues in the joy of consecration. Then we have the joy of assurance, "Let them ever shout for joy, because Thou defendest them," or dost cover and protect them. This is joy, not because of our faith or trust, but because of God's faithfulness or trustworthiness; it is the outcome of confidence in God as our strength, our shield, and our eternal salvation. Then, there is the joy of love, "Let them also that love thy Name be joyful in Thee." This implies fellowship; for God's name is his nature and character as revealed in Christ. The experience of this threefold joy will be the subject and the substance of our praise to God.

The deepening of joy should be the growth of praise. The Christian life is intended to be one constant progress upward, onward, heavenward, homeward, Godward. God intends us to grow in grace, and to realize the blessings that He has in store for us. Taking those three references to joy, we have a progression, running from the human standpoint, through Divine power, unto God Himself. There is also in those words of the psalm, a suggestion of deepening joy with reference to our own action. First, there is joy expressed in a solitary act "rejoice;" then it is seen in a constant habit, "ever shout for joy;" lastly, we have it in a settled character, "be joyful in Thee."

Our Christian life should not continue year after year as a succession of intermittent acts. If your life and mine is not settled down to habits of prayer, praise, holiness, and formation of character, there is a great want and weakness somewhere. The same thought of appears in other parts of God's Word. "I write unto you, little children," answers to the joy of trust; "I write unto you, young men, because ye are strong," answers to the joy of assurance; "I write unto you, fathers," answers to the joy of love. See also John xxi. 15, 16, 17, the latter verse referring to the growing sheep, corresponding to "fathers;" Acts xx. 24-27, with reference to the Gospel, the Kingdom, and the counsel. The same progression appears in the "babe" of 1 Cor. iii.; the instructed Christian of Rom. viii.; and the mature believer of Eph. i.-iv. There should be a deepening of our joy, and a consequent growth of our praise.

The degree of our joy must be the measure of our praise. There is a great law of proportion in the Kingdom of God. It may be traced in the frequent use of the Hebrew and Greek prepositions rendered by our phrase "according to" (Psa. cxix and the Epistle to the Ephesians). God's grace is according to his love, and human life should be according to his grace. If God is real to us, our praise should be according to our joy. We have in Acts viii., "much joy;" Luke ii., "great joy;" John xv., "abiding joy;" Psa. xvi., "fulness of joy;" 1 Peter i., "unspeakable joy;" Isa. xxxv., "unspeakable joy." Trust and joy in man, should respond to grace and mercy in God.

This, then, is the relation of joy to praise: the nature of joy is a call to praise; its experience is the substance of praise; its deepening is the growth of praise; and its degree is the measure of praise.

I sum up with two practical truths. Joy is a simple test of Christian life, a barometer of our spiritual condition. What is God to me now? If He is not real to me, there is no joy and no praise. Some reality of God—some joy and praise; much reality—much joy and praise; abiding fellowship with Him—abiding joy and praise. Let us, each one, ask, now, at this moment? If He is real and precious, there will be joy unspeakable and full of glory.

WHAT IS GOD TO ME

We cannot test our own holiness, nor register our growth in grace, nor gauge our own humility; for these things are grounded in unconscious self-effacement. But we can test our joy. We shall be able to see whether God is real to us by the measure of our joy and our praise. Let God be real, put Him first, submit to his righteousness, depend upon Him, appropriate his fulness, surrender to his lordship; and the result will be an ever-increasing joy, an ever-deepening praise, a love that will manifest ever increasingly the glory and the praise of our God.

Joy in the Lord.

By REV. W. DARLOW SARJEANT.

"Finally, my brethren, rejoice in the Lord" (Phil. iii. 1).

The greatest evil in this world, next to sin, is sadness. Piety, as taught in the Book of God, should not only be genial and calm, but bright and cheerful. Faber asks whether a melancholy man can ever be made a true saint. I find that doleful Christians are generally censorious. Religion, to be attractive, must be separate from morbidity, angularity, and depression. The Book says that her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. Many young people are repelled from the Church by the unattractive, sullen, grumpy people who profess Christian discipleship. We are to be examples, not only of goodness, but of happiness. You may say, "I am like a barometer; and there are so many east-wind Christians about that I cannot maintain my joy." Oh, the melancholy of the Church! They who so indulge themselves are only convalescents.

Joy brings to the soul a life-long morning without a cloud. It comes from fellowship with God, and the realization that the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. The consummation of Christian life is, rejoicing under all circumstances. The apostle's final instruction is, "Rejoice in the Lord." The knowledge of God in the face of Jesus Christ brings joy unspeakable. Do not try to rejoice in your own faithfulness, experience, or work. It will be an immense disappointment if you are tempted to rejoice in yourself, however pious that self may be. Abiding in Christ, our joy will be full (John xv. 4-11). We are to rejoice in the Lord. If He is to us what the Bible reveals Him to be, there is much in the Christian soul, as we review Christ's atonement, resurrection, ascension, enthronement, and the gift of the Holy Ghost. Although we see Him not yet, believing, we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

A boy talks to me of his father's gifts; but is he forgetting the giver? No, it is the father's personality, love, and care which creates joy in the boy's heart. Brethren, our joy is not in our possessions, nor in the revelations God graciously gives to us. From the mount of transfiguration we must come back to the humdrum of life—to a devil-possessed world; but we have the Lord. Whatever the change in our experience, He has not changed. For that reason our joy in Him is unspeakable and full of glory.

We are to rejoice in what He is to us. The Lord stooped to meet the conditions of belief imposed by doubting Thomas; and immediately upon realization of the truth, Thomas said, "My Lord and my God." It needs our Saviour's master hand to bring out the joy of our life. An attempt on my part to bow a violin produces jangled notes at every touch; but Christ, by the power of the indwelling Spirit, puts all the chords of my nature into tune, and brings my whole being into harmony with God. On my renewed nature He will make music for men and for angels. There is a story of an organist who, at first, refused the use of his instrument to Mendelssohn, not knowing the great musician. When the latter at length fingered the keys, the poor organist was astounded by the strains produced, and still more so when he learned the player's name. If we yield ourselves unto God, as those who are alive from the dead, and our members as instruments of righteousness, He will play upon the keys of music for the healing of a distracted world.

The joy of which I speak does not depend upon feeling. Amid desolation, as regards outward blessing (Hab. iii. 17), we may joy in the God of our salvation. Lasting joy is in the everlasting God. There is joy, too, in the realized presence of the Lord. A girl incapacitated by sickness for the ordinary duties of life, may yet be bright and happy in the company of a mother who loves her. Jesus Christ says: "Lo, I am with you;" see also John xiv. 23. In the marvellous walk to Emmaus, we have the outward picture of fellowship; and the disciples afterwards say: "Did not our hearts burn within us, as He talked with us by the way?" Oh, the joy that is found in heart-fellowship with God!

Joy is a source of strength (Neh. viii. 10); and, in order that the Church of to-day may meet its privilege and responsibility as to discipling all nations, it needs the strength whic comes of unbroken fellowship with the indwelling Saviour. Christian joy influences men. Our arguments for Christianity are frequently gainsaid; but the best advocate for Divine truth is the brightest example of its joyous influence. The baptism of joy at Pentecost led the people to say, "These men are full of new wine." Yes, Divine joy is the wine of God's Kingdom. When God restores to us the joy of his salvation, transgressors are taught and sinners are converted. It is the joy of harvest. Oh, for labourers in a ripened field, who will not be discouraged, but will toil on until the harvest is gathered!

Sometimes sorrow is needed to bring out the music of the soul.

SICKNESS AND SAINTLINESS

often go together. Lazarus died in the house where Jesus lived. The clash and clamour of bells in a belfry may obscure the chime; but the peal brings cheer into solitary homes, and inspires the labourer in the field. We are detached from many earthly things, that we may be attached to God. Wires stretched on castle towers yield Æolian harmony when the storm rages; and when we talk with God, there is a joy which is mellowed by the pain that may be in our soul.

Memory is also concerned with joy. Shall we remember our sorrow and bereavement, and not our joy? A baron who had been a poorer man, had in his house what he called a chamber of memory. Asked why he trod its rough and crooked floor, with hollows and creases, he replied, "That I may keep my heart warm with gratitude." In the day of your doubt, tribulation, or temptation, say, "This is my infirmity; but I will remember the days of the right hand of the Most High." The causes of joy are found in the blood of atonement, the sealing of the Spirit, and the hope born in the soul. We may live in such communion with heaven, that our joy shall be an unbroken blessing and strength amid all the suffering and labour of human life.

Afternoon Gatherings.

MISSIONARY MEETING.

The present troubled condition of China, and the dangers to which missionaries in that land are exposed, excited eager interest and much solicitude among Christians attending the Conference; and this state of feeling caused Room No. 4 to be rapidly filled for the meeting, at which it was known that some stirring personal experiences of life and labours among the Chinese would be narrated.

The prayer offered by Dr. Grattan Guinness commended the great unreached heathen world to Christ's abiding compassion, and besought God's care for the imperilled native Christians of China and for European workers among them.

Rev. W. E. Burroughs, of the C.M.S., said they had come to hear what God is doing, and what He would have them to do. The safety of Admiral Seymour and the various Embassies was cause for thanksgiving to God. The shaking of the great empire of China is like the earthquake that anticipated the resurrection morning. There seems much necessity to separate Christianity as far as possible from the foreign element which the Chinese hate, and to present Christ to them through the lips of native evangelists. Taught by current events, we may very earnestly pray and aim for the day when China, India, Africa, and Madagascar, shall be evangelized by their own sons and daughters, after the pattern of the various peoples who at Pentecost "heard in their own tongues the wonderful works of God."

In a remarkably pathetic and heart-stirring manner, Mrs. Howard Taylor (née Geraldine Guinness) sought to encourage confidence in God's faithfulness by her account of

among the Chinese, to whose highest welfare her life is devoted. It was, she said, rest of heart and comfort to know that God's Kingdom ruleth over all; and what is transpiring in various parts of the world, must turn out for the furtherance of the Gospel. We cannot, however, shut our eyes to a serious state of affairs, which should awaken a deeper sense of responsibility as to constant and believing prayer. The native Christians of China make special demands upon our sympathies and intercession, seeing that they have no possible means of escaping massacre, save the protection of God. Many of them have already suffered death for the faith they cherish. In illustration of the spirit that is common among them, an old Christian coolie, of whose sincerity there was full evidence, earnestly prayed that the remaining years of his life might be taken from him, and devoted to prolongation of the valued labours of Mr. Hudson Taylor, then lying dangerously ill. This man, left in charge of mission premises, was visited by a Confucian scholar, who, having heard the Gospel a few times, was interested in the coolie's Book and its good effects upon the owner. The cultured gentleman was led to Christ by the humble coolie; and being not ashamed to confess the fact, suffered bitter persecution. His Christlike life, however, was instrumental in the salvation of his own wife, and leading men of the city were also converted. He had a friend who was only intellectually convinced of the truth of Christianity. When the mission premises, then occupied, were beset by a fanatical mob of many rioters, this friend, whose presence saved the lives of the speaker and another lady missionary, was powerfully impressed by the calmness of Christians amid peril, and the joy which their faith in God gave them, even

IN FACE OF DEATH.

As a result, he became a decided follower of Christ, and himself preached the Gospel in the power of the Spirit. Through his testimony, many were brought to God; and in the courtyard where the missionaries had expected martyrdom, nineteen men were baptized.

An interesting review of events in Madagascar, since 1820, was given by Rev. James Sibree, who told of missionary pioneering, persecution, and growth of Christian influence. Since 1895, when the island became a French colony, rebellion, famine, and the machinations of the Jesuits have sorely tried missionary faith. Now, however, religious liberty finds governmental favour; and here, as elsewhere abroad, there is urgent need to increase the number of Christian workers.

Mr. Arthur Mercer referred to the important position occupied by Basutoland during the last eight months with regard to our colonial position in South Africa. Among the Basutos, Gospel progress has been seen on an important scale, through the manifold operations of the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions.

MILDMAY DEACONESSES.

At one of the gatherings in the shade of the historic Mulberry Tree, the work of the Mildmay Deaconesses was represented. Mr. James E. Mathieson, who presided, quoted the Scripture authority for the calling of a deaconess: "I commend unto you Phœbe, our sister, which is a servant of the Church which is at Cenchrea" (Rom. xvi. 1).

Miss Faulkner, in giving a brief sketch of the extensive labours of the deaconesses, said that Mildmay workers—over 200 in number—are brought into contact with nearly half a million souls. The work of the sisters had a small beginning. The wife of the founder of the institution was raised up for a special purpose—to prove that women could do a work for God in the Church without becoming unwomanly on going outside their own sphere. Much of the deaconesses' work is "underground." It is done by prayer and study of God's Word. It is done by quiet, unobtrusive going from house to house, speaking from heart to heart. It is not by eloquence, but personal dealing, that souls are saved. The first mission was in Cabbage Court, Bacon Lane. This was the beginning—the acorn, which has now become the strong oak, with its branches broad and numerous. The hospital in Austin Street, Bethnal Green, is a boon to many who, for various reasons, cannot gain admittance into general infirmaries.

Miss Williams, in a forcible address, detailed the methods of their mission to the homes of the people. By visiting the dwellings of the poor, ministering to their necessities, and above all, seeking to win precious souls to Christ. In one of the a deaconess was called to visit a man who was supposed to be dying of consumption. He had recently been discharged from prison. The deaconess found the home a wretched hovel. Sitting beside the bed she endeavoured to attract the man's attention, but the more she tried the more obstinate did he become. The deaconess then read a portion of the third chapter of St. John, and went on to explain what is meant by the love of God. Suddenly the man turned in his bed, and exclaimed, "That is not in the Bible." The deaconess replied that it was. "Then," said the man, "I never knew that God loved the sinner." Gradually the light shone into this dark soul, and the troubled heart was at rest, and rejoicing as a child of God. Other instances were given, showing how signally God has blessed the labours of the deaconesses.

The Hon. R. Moreton added a few words on behalf of the work of the deaconesses, pleading for more generous support and sympathy.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

At a meeting which was held in the South Tent Dr. Maxwell introduced representatives of three different phases of Medical Missions at home and abroad. Miss Greenfield, of Ludhiana, spoke of what is, perhaps, one of the boldest and noblest ventures in the field of Christian healing, namely, the North India School of Medicine for Christian Women. In the Punjab, during the last twenty years, almost every missionary society has built medical hospitals in connection with evangelistic work, and has sent out women to take charge of them; and it has been the general testimony that the work of healing is one of the most powerful aids in bringing Indian women to Christ. Christian lady doctors need helpers; and the important object of the N.I.S.M.C.W., started at Ludhiana in 1894, is to train the Christian young women of India to be assistant medical missionaries, helping in the Zenana hospitals all over India, thus utilizing for the best purposes the young strength of the Christian Church in that land. Forty-five students are being trained, in connection with all denominations; and, in addition to building requirements, it costs £1,000 every year to keep the Medical School going. Two lady doctors and a trained chemist are needed.

The claims of "Friedenheim," Miss Davidson's Home for the Dying, were eloquently presented by Dr. Percy Lush, whose medical ministrations in the institution enable him to say that it is not only a hospital, but a place where suffering men and women are pointed to the Giver of life eternal, and where they often embrace the spiritual benefits which Christ freely offers.

Dr. Albert Fenn described how the Victoria Park Medical Mission, which is numbered among Mildmay institutions, meets the case of ailing people with scanty means, scarce work, and pressing family responsibilities. Not only are bodily ailments cured, but, under the Christian influences of the work, patients go away with a new life, and with fresh courage to face the difficulties and trials of their existence.

YOUNG MEN AND YOUNG WOMEN.

A joint meeting in the interests of the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. was held on Tuesday, under the Mulberry Tree. Sir George Williams, who presided, said that young men and young women—the very power, beauty, and strength of the country—are worthy of our care; and Christian people should help them in every possible way. The Associations are instrumental in providing about a hundred ministers or missionaries every year; and extension of the general work is a source of great joy.

The Hon. Mrs. Fraser spoke of what had been done, by co-operation between French and English Christians, for the furtherance of French Y.W.C.A. work generally, and for the care and protection of girls visiting Paris during the Exhibition.

Australia was represented by Sir James Fairfax, ex-president of the Sydney Y.M.C.A., who brought an encouraging report of work carried on in that city, including a lads' institute, effort on behalf of soldiers and sailors, and affiliation with the College Christian Union. All through the Australian colonies, the Y.M.C.A. is well represented.

Interesting features of the World's Y.W.C.A. were briefly sketched by the Hon. Emily Kinnaird. Last year Miss Reynolds travelled 30,000 miles to promote the interests of the organization; and among its useful achievements are Indian and Burmese homes and institutes at Simla and Rangoon. From the central establishments responses to world-wide applications for help are constantly going forth. Means for extending such aid are much needed, especially in view of the claims of English girls going abroad, as well as the necessities of their sisters who are natives of other lands.

Mr. R. Hinde, representing the soldiers' branch; Mr. W. H. Seagram, chairman of the Foreign Committee; and Mr. R. D. Pringle, general secretary of the Bombay branch, also spoke upon various departments of the comprehensive work that is done by the Y.M.C.A.

SUNDAY, July 15. Prov. ii.

GOD'S appeal is to the young. Each generation, as it steps out to assume the responsibility of life, is urged to receive God's words, and to lay up his commandments. We need wisdom which results from an entire surrender to the will and guidance of God. The Hebrew word for wisdom may well be rendered "sanctified common-sense."

Suppose a youth or maiden offers to God the whole heart, desires to live entirely for his glory, allows the judgment to be illuminated by the principles of Scripture, and lives always up to the highest ideal, deciding in every question from no selfish standpoint, but so far as possible in accord with what God's Word would direct and God's Spirit prompt—that attitude of mind, and the conduct to which it would give rise, is what the Hebrews of the time of Solomon would have called wisdom. The basis of wisdom is not intellectual, but moral; not the ease and agility with which the mind can pass through processes of reasoning, but the just judgment which results from doing not our own will, but the will of God.

Let us seek for wisdom, as men will cross the world for gold mines! And we shall find that as we act up to the highest decisions of conscience, our judgment will become increasingly clear and strong. We shall be shielded from many Satanic attacks, guarded and preserved in our ways, watched, kept, and almost instinctively we shall avoid places and people which tend to evil. We shall have a faculty of instant and right decision; a comprehensiveness of grasp which will be of immense service in the direction of our personal matters, and of such as pertain to the kingdom of God.

To be truly godly has the promise of this life. It adds length of days, years of life and peace to the soul, because it removes so many of the causes of fret and anxiety which wear out the life energies. It hangs around the neck the jewels of mercy and truth, and inscribes them on the heart tablet. It secures the favour of God and man. Surely in this paragraph we have an anticipation of the youth of Jesus of Nazareth. In all difficulty let us trust God; in prosperity, honour Him; in chastening, yield to Him. Neither poverty nor wealth will hurt if they do not come between you and Him.

It is impossible to attain the godliness, which is the mother of wisdom, apart from effort. We expect to labour to obtain the wealth of this world; it is equally necessary to earn that of the other. God is not going to give the priceless wealth of his kingdom to spendthrifts, or apart from earnest and laborious seeking. Merchandise is a system of barter; we must be prepared to renounce the less for more, the earthly for the heavenly. See to it that every day you acquire a little more patience, purity, meekness, and faith.

The godly man is safe. When he lies down, and when he walks in the way, the Lord is his confidence, and the divine friendship is with him (v. 32, R.V. marg.). Is it to be supposed for a single moment, that God will forsake his friend, or hide his secret purpose? Nay, He will sit in his tent door and eat with him; He will be his shield, and his exceeding great reward.

TUESDAY, July 17. Prov. iv.

It is well for young life to be warned by the passing generation. The scientific man passes on the results of his experiments to his successor;—and it is well when the father or teacher can enable the young to start where they leave off. The one essential condition of all true education of human life, is the knowledge of God. To give teaching apart from the spiritual apprehension of God, is like giving light French rolls to children, from which the properties most needed to build up bone and muscle have been carefully eliminated. It is a shame when the children of our land are taught everything but the knowledge of God on the one hand, or are fostered under a false priestcraft on the other, which substitutes superstition for religion. Nothing is so becoming to a young head as the chaplet of grace and the crown of beauty, which pure and undefiled religion affords.

Let us not be chary of putting the young on their guard against the evil of the world. By all means guard them against newspapers and pernicious literature which communicate defiling and degrading details; but it is well to show up the way of evil men, and to contrast it with the path of the righteous, like the light of dawn, shining more and more. Happy the child whose father will take pains to show the working out of great principles of good and evil in the men and women around.

After all the heart is the citadel of the life. It must be guarded above all else; as we instinctively lift our hand to protect our eyes, or as soldiers are gathered to defend the metropolis of their fatherland. In unceasing streams, thoughts are passing to and fro through the portals of the soul; let us keep a detective there, to discover the traitors. Nay, let God's peace keep your heart and mind.

WEDNESDAY, July 18. Prov. v.

The stability of a country depends wholly upon its home-life. So long as the homes are pure and God-fearing, it is impossible that its freedom or influence should be permanently obscured. Our strength is not in our arms, or ships, but in the purity of our manners, the elevation of the domestic ideal. Hence this book, which is the vade mecum of a strong, sweet life, is so emphatic in denouncing impurity. Oh, that young men would lay this chapter to heart!

What an awful insight these words give to the heart of the fallen! Siren-like, she is beautiful above the surface, but ends in snaky folds. Her lips drop honey, but her feet go down to death. She finds not the path of life level, though it may be strewn with flowers. She causes mourning at the latter end when the tabernacle of life lies in ruins. In proportion to the magnitude of her influence for good, is woman's influence for evil. No pain should be spared by mothers to teach their girls the ways of purity. Nothing should be so deeply inculcated upon young women as an unutterable devotion to whatever things are pure and lovely. For my part, I advocate more openness of speech between mother and daughter than usually obtains, for I find that much of the evil of the world is due to ignorance. And young men should be taught to protect and reverence the honour of every other man's sister as they would that of their own.

The Jews encouraged early marriages, and it is well when possible. But where the conditions of modern life render it impossible then an early engagement is often the tie to purity and integrity. One of the greatest safeguards to young men in our city life is to be engaged to pure, noble girls, whose constant correspondence is like a breath from the everlasting hills.

THURSDAY, July 19. Prov. vi.

In spite of the injunction of this first paragraph, men have persisted in becoming surety for others, and in innumerable instances have had to rue the day when they disobeyed. How many men have I met whose peace and fortunes have been ruined by their suretyship! It is difficult to refuse, but you have no right to put your life in pawn to another man's exigencies. Remember you have your wife and children to think of.

How important to heed the warning of the next paragraph—against sloth! The secret of life is to leave no moment unemployed. Every hour should receive some seeds that will fruit in harvests by-and-by. We cannot continue doing the same thing, but we may turn from it to others. Happy the man who has several interests in his life, so that, when one set of faculties is wearied, he may turn the nervous energy into other channels. Recreation should be a means to an end, driving the red blood through heart and lung, that it may presently return oxygenated to the brain.

What respect the Hebrew youth was exhorted to have towards father and mother! It would be well if the children of Christian homes were more considerate in this respect. There are no words in the English language, young people, more noble than Father and Mother. Never call your parents by other names. Granted that they have not been educated in colleges and schools, and subjects which are in vogue to-day, remember that they have seen and experienced the outworking of certain principles in human life, which have taught them priceless lessons which may be the light of your life. In any case guard against impurity of the heart, which sooner or later will burn its way into unholy deed.

Line on line, precept upon precept, the preacher returns to his text. Too much time cannot be given for insistence upon purity. It is strange that these words are addressed so much to young men, for in point of fact, young women are almost more simple and void of understanding. It is bitter, indeed, to see horse-play amongst girls and boys in our streets, the light laughter of girls with men in the public-house or places of public amusement, the careless coquetry with which girls entice men forward to their common destruction. Oh, the sad tales which have been told me by young women who never knew how near the precipice they were, whose mothers never warned them, never even told them of the wonderful purposes of God in the formation of their nature. If you want to save the young men, I think you must begin with the women, and to reach them you must first reach their mothers.

Much the same may be said of the influence of mothers upon their sons. If women will give up their children to the care of paid nurses, if they persist in leaving a family of young children in the evening in order to go out to their party, or even their church, they have themselves to thank if their boys grow up to be a curse. If a woman is not prepared to give herself up to her children, let her remain unmarried.

This chapter warns us of the perils of the streets, but let it be understood that those perils would cease within a week if Christian men and women were to exert their proper influence. The sorrow and shame of the world have been infinitely increased because so many Christian people have been disposed to consider themselves exclusively citizens of the New Jerusalem, and have failed to act as the salt and light of social and civic life.

SATURDAY, July 21. Prov. viii.

A beautiful personification of the quality of wisdom. She stands and cries, like Him who stands and knocks. She offers her wares, knowledge and instruction, without money and without price. It is surely the love of God Incarnate which thus pleads with men, offering freely the rubies of heavenly mines. Upon her majestic brow are evidences of the presence of judgment, intelligence, foresight, and prudence. Happy the king, or judge, who is in alliance with her! But so meek and lowly is her nature that all who diligently seek find her. Those with whom she abides are brought to lasting wealth and righteousness. She causes those that love her to inherit substance. Young friend, will you not hear her loving appeals? Wait daily at her gates. Rest not, till you find this pearl of great price.

Wisdom tells the story of her birth. She is the daughter of the Eternal. Away back before creation began, in the everlasting ages, she was daily his delight, rejoicing always before Him. Creation itself is due to this quality of the Divine nature. Remember that Wisdom as here portrayed became Incarnate in the Word, for the Word is the spoken Wisdom of God. Remember, also, that such wisdom cannot be thine or mine apart from the direct impartation of the Divine nature. We can only receive the wisdom of God by fellowship with the Son of God, and through the operation of the Holy Ghost. This ray of supernal light, emanating from the Source of light, must come to us from without, else we shall be for ever dark and obtuse.

Oxford Letter.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

OXFORD has begun to assume its Long Vacation appearance. A few men are still up for their schools, and most of honour lists have yet to appear. Many have said good-bye to their Alma Mater, and thereby severed a link which will have much to do in moulding their future. Wycliffe summer term begins on the 31st inst. Mr. Grey, the new principal, will have the assistance of Rev. F. Carter as lecturer. Mr. Carter was ordained to St. Clement's on Trinity Sunday last. Both Wycliffe and St. Clement's are fortunate in securing his help. He took a first-class both in history and theology. He is full of energy, and eager for work.

We are glad to note that attention is being drawn in the local papers to the fact that while restrictions can be made as to the granting of new licences, there seems to be none to the extension of the old buildings. This is an aspect of the temperance question which is prone to be overlooked. We have several cases in the city where large and imposing buildings are being erected on the old sites; in some cases the adjoining building has been inclosed. These are among some of the evidences that "the trade" mean business.

Some interesting facts about India were given at the annual meeting of the Oxford Mission to Calcutta held last week. Time was when the conversion of India was regarded as near at hand, but that hope has been dispelled. The time has passed when whole nations could be moved en bloc to burn what they had adored and to adore what they had burned. Moreover, Hinduism has in this century manifested that extraordinary vitality which is given it by the vagueness of its tenets and adaptation to its environment. Within a generation, we have seen two remarkable Hindu revivals—the social reform movement, and that orthodox Brahman reaction which constitutes, perhaps, the most serious political problem now awaiting solution in India. But while Hinduism has been demonstrating its vitality, the disintegrating forces of Western thought have been at work. And it is here the exertions of the missionary societies are needed. Room has been made for a moral and religious reconstruction which the State cannot undertake. This falls to the lot of societies akin to the Oxford Mission, and, as Canon Gore remarked, "We shall be missing a unique opportunity if the wave of imperialism which is passing over the country does not carry us on to a deepened sense of individual responsibility for a task which, while it lies beyond the sphere of the State, is yet the very essence of England's mission to the nations."

Oxford Evangelicals are grateful to Dr. Ince for his exposure of the methods of the E.C.U., re its Declaration on the doctrine of the "Real Presence" at its annual meeting. The Regius Professor's letter to The Times, showing how the quotations from Jeremy Taylor, Bishop Ridley, and others, had been perverted, was reprinted in our local papers, together with an appeal from Canon Christopher, calling upon the old Historical High Church Party to unite with Dr. Ince in the effort to frustrate the conspiracy to undo the Reformation. We are glad to see that Canon Moberly, of Christ Church, Regius Professor of Pastoral Theology, has publicly dissociated himself from the Declaration. We hope this is the prelude to a combined movement by all who love the truth and hate dishonesty.

The celebration of the bi-centenary of the S.P.G. commenced in Oxford on Friday, when a sermon was preached in the Cathedral by the Bishop of Norwich. He pleaded for a recognition of our responsibilities, as individuals and a nation, with regard to those peoples who had a claim on us for spiritual and moral nourishment. He reminded his hearers of the fact that only too often the heathen has been used merely to fill the white man's purse and to feed his lusts, and he pleaded that they might take into their hearts the words of their Great Example: Of those whom Thou hast given me, I have lost none."

Scottish Notes.

AMONG many items of interest at the Women's Temperance Convention was a statement by Dr. Young that at least 200 medical students, men and women, in the West of Scotland are abstainers. More than one of the foreign delegates spoke out plainly about the scenes of drunkenness witnessed on the streets of Edinburgh on the Saturday evening, one from North Dakota describing the horror with which she—a native of a Prohibition State—for the first time saw a woman reeling drunk and leaning on the arm of a man, who was also drunk. Another, from Canada, had heard incidentally of an engine-driver who, on one journey from Edinburgh to London, had been offered drink over thirty times.

On some points the Scottish delegates were fain to be silent for very shame, but there was another side to the picture. Dr. Hood Wilson (Barclay Church) pointed out the hope for the future which lay behind the fact that the great bulk of the ministers are abstainers, and that the same can be said of the probationers and divinity students, as well as of the normal students—the future teachers of our children (both male and female)—in all the training colleges.

The principal attack on the observance of the Sabbath, so far as the West of Scotland is concerned, continues to centre round the opening of the Glasgow People's Palace; and it is satisfactory to find, through a motion brought forward in the Town Council, at a time when public attention was diverted from the subject, that there is no diminution in the former sweeping majority against the proposal.

Attention was called in Inverness Free Presbytery last week to the desecration of the Sabbath in connection with the departure of a detachment of Cameron Highlanders, who were accompanied from the military depot to the railway station by a band playing secular airs. Dr. Black was able to say that such a thing had never been known in Inverness before, and unless he had been misinformed there was no sufficient reason why they should have left on that day at all.

The Bridge of Teith Missionary Association had an interesting annual gathering a few days ago, when encouraging reports were received. The amount collected for missionary objects had been £53 14s. 4d. A special feature of the occasion was an able address given by Dr. Husband, C.I.E. (of the United Presbyterian Mission, Rajputana), on the present position of evangelical work in India, and the conditions created through the present distressful famine.

The monthly conference of the Lanarkshire Christian Union was held at Biggar, Major Mosman, of Auchtyfardle, occupying the chair. The subject was, "Joseph a Type of Christ," helpful and interesting addresses being given by Rev. Alexander Smellie (Carluke), Mr. John Climie (evangelist, Glasgow), and Mr. Kerr (Paisley). There was a good attendance, and the local members were much encouraged. Under the auspices of the Union a three weeks' tent mission is in progress at Ward, Strathaven. An excellent beginning was made by Mr. Leeder, the evangelist in charge.

Communion Hours.

WHEN round his table all his people meet,
My Lord and I have seldom much to say;
The thrill and rapture of his presence sweet
Comes not to me in any special way.

But when the busy working-days appear
With common tasks too crowded for my power.
Ah, then with "I will help thee" He draws near,
And then we have a sweet communion hour.

A. GERTRUDE HUMPIDGE.

At Festival and Racecourse.

EVER seeking pastures new, the Open-Air Mission visited for the first time the Annual Temperance Festival at Newcastle, as well as the races held the same week. Arriving in the north on Saturday, June 23, the evangelists were most kindly received and hospitably entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Dymond at the Rooms of the Y.M.C.A. This branch of the Y.M.C.A. is perhaps the most complete, and certainly the most handsome establishment of the kind in England. It is furnished and appointed sumptuously, largely, as I am informed, through the generosity of Sir William Stephenson, and Mr. Bainbridge.

The Festival held on the Town Moor, and the Races at Gosforth Park, seem to bring to these centres the whole country-side of Northumbria. The elements fiercely threatened the success of the effort. Commencing on the Sunday evening, the rain came down in torrents, kept on all night and up to noon on Monday, and we feared that if it were not stayed by evening, the moor would be at best little better than a bog. The powers of the air fought against us, and unless controlled, our compaign, which depended materially on the weather, meant failure. We were driven to prayer, and as believers in the force of united supplication, we wired to London to catch the Aldersgate Street noon prayer meeting. Let it be reported here that the clouds were stayed from Monday afternoon, and onwards from start to finish of the great festival days in the most signal manner, a circumstance which was acknowledged by the Newcastle Leader as "providential."

the Festival has been run, so Mr. Halliday (a most indefatigable and firm friend) informed us, had such a thing occurred as three consecutive fine days.

While the field work was graciously owned, and ground held on the racecourse, it was in the city itself that during the four evenings of our visit a most gracious outpouring of the Spirit was witnessed. Our station was Bigg Market; here every evening, from the moment our banner was unfurled, the crowd increased in size, and, on its becoming noised abroad that the shout of a King was in our camp, many hard-headed Tynesiders gathered to gaze and wonder. Men and women convinced by the Holy Ghost were yielding to the Lord on all sides; twenty-eight were counted from first to last every one of whom came out without any undue pressure, entirely of their own consent and desire.

Cases were of varied and striking interest; among the saved was a sailor youth from a London schooner trading in the Tyne, a man of colour belonging to a steamer lying in the dock, a man who had lost £5 on the racecourse, and two young women (who were dealt with by Miss James, the excellent leader of the Y.W.C.A.). A backslider, too, was evidently greatly moved; handing me his cane, he went down on his knees and confessed with tears how he had been converted in a Methodist meeting in America twenty years ago, but had fallen and suffered many things. He was graciously restored.

When the Lord works, the public, without the spur of modern advertisement, begin to look out; hence, although unknown and strangers, we were sure of our congregation; yet our banner flew with none other name upon it than that of man's Great Mediator.

How sweet singers filled a score or so of chairs that were brought in friendliness from round the corner; how the city missionaries helped to strengthen and keep our ring; how Mr. Armstrong, the popular secretary of the Y.M.C.A., helped us in many ways; and how the Lord's sheep, doubtless of several folds, rallied—all blend in pleasing memories; and as I write, Newcastle through the Y.M.C.A. sends along an invitation for another visit next year.

B. BARRY WAKE.

The Evangelical Alliance.—The council has just received a letter of request signed by some 150 ministers of all the churches, and influential laymen asking that the next (54th) annual conference may be held in Liverpool. In accordance with this request the conference has been fixed for Oct. 24, 25, 26. The Bishop of Liverpool (Dr. Chavasse) will deliver the first address, and many leading speakers from the Continent as well as England, will assist.

A Generous Offer.—Mr. Andrew Elliott ("Westport Bent") intimates his willingness to give his services absolutely free to temperance societies, P.S.A.'s, Men's Owns, &c. With a large and varied repertoire of lectures, recitals, and sketches, Mr. Elliott has achieved considerable success. Being an excellent elocutionist, he never fails of a hearty reception, and a pressing invitation to "come again." He gave one of his "evenings" at Mr. Meyer's church on Saturday with much acceptance. CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

THE COMING CONVENTION.

"LONDON, 1900," is at this time upon the lips of Christian Endeavourers the world over. Many of the visitors from beyond the sea are already here, whilst throughout the Homeland thousands of young people are preparing to journey to the great Metropolis, in order to have a part in the gathering at the Alexandra Palace during the coming week.

Hitherto this "World's Convention" has been held in America; and the interest it creates there is indicated by the fact that no fewer than 10,000 delegates desired to attend even this Convention so far away. Unfortunately the ordinary summer traffic across the Atlantic is always congested. The Paris Exhibition this year has made it still worse, so that only some 2,000 have been able to secure facilities for getting here, and that at a very largely increased cost. At the last moment one of the vessels chartered to bring the party over, the Saale, was destroyed in the terrible and devastating fire at New York. But Christian Endeavourers are not easily daunted; and when they mean to "get there," they usually do it.

Two thousand delegates is, after all, a fairly good company to cross the Atlantic to attend a week's religious meetings. We should have a considerable task to secure 1,000 to go to the next convention in America from this country. The fact is that have realized the great helpfulness of these Conventions. They are centres from which flow instruction, inspiration, and spiritual power to the utmost limit of C.E. activity. No doubt this huge gathering will give a great impetus to the rapid growth and prosperity which is now characterizing the movement in the British Isles.

The first C.E. Convention was held at Williston, N.Y., in the church of which Dr. Clark was pastor, in 1882. Six societies took part, and reported a total membership of 481. Eighteen years have passed, and now, at "London, 1900," there are well on towards 50,000 societies, with three and a half millions of members, scattered over the whole world.

How many conventions have been held in those eighteen years it would be hard to say. In addition to the World Convention, there are national and sectional conferences. Every union practically has its own convention; and when it is understood that London has some seventeen or eighteen unions, the total of these gatherings begins to appear in its true magnitude. Of course these local gatherings are on a much smaller scale, but in their general conception they are all akin, and have contributed in no small measure to the marvellous success which has been attained.

It need hardly be said that the arrangements for a convention such as the coming one must have presented a task of great difficulty; and the Convention Committee will deserve well at the hands of the country as well as the churches and societies represented, if all passes off as well as it promises. Our children are returning home from abroad in large numbers, and strangers are coming with them to this convention, and all who care for the credit of dear old England, must hope that the event will be worthy of the land and the city in which it is being held.

The President of the British Society, has been busily engaged throughout the year in work which has all led up to this event. The great burden of organization—the detail of which has necessarily involved many disappointments and innumerable perplexities—has fallen upon the energetic and enthusiastic secretary, Rev. W. Knight Chaplin. How he has been able to keep in touch with all the committees, unifying and inspiring the work in all its departments, while at the same time maintaining the work of his pastorate, presents a problem which may well perplex the average worker. The C.E. Society is to be congratulated upon its executive officer. Needless to say, no one man could do all the work involved in such a convention. Months ago it was happily divided and a separate committee given charge of a definite section of the arrangements. Rev. J. Brown Morgan—one of the earliest promoters of the movement in Great Britain—is chairman of the general committee, and Mr. F. F. Belsey, J.P., vice-chairman; Miss M. Jennie Street has been convener of the Decorations Committee; Rev. Carey Bonner—who has done so much for the music of the Society—has presided over the Praise Committee and will personally lead a choir of 1,500 voices during the meetings of the Convention. Miss E. M. Weatherley has been responsible for the interests of the Junior Endeavour work. Mr. J. W. Spurgeon and his helpers have been busily engaged in disseminating information through the press, and arranging for the comfort and convenience of the pressmen at the Convention. Rev. J. Tolefree Parr has presided over the Committee charged with supplying the pulpits of London with Convention preachers. Upon Rev. H. B. Workman has fallen the heavy responsibility of securing special rates on the railways, and the issuing of necessary orders to every single delegate. That Mr. Chas. Waters, the treasurer, has been busy, may well be understood, whilst the Hospitality and other Committees have found plenty to do. Mr. A. C. Waller, Chairman of Registration Committee, will have a band numbering some hundreds of London Endeavourers, scattered around at all the railway termini ready to receive, register, and direct incoming delegates. The Committee will be easily recognised by appropriate badges.

REV. F. B. MEYER,

Special badges of various kinds, in addition to the general Convention Badge, will be a characteristic of the event. Endeavourers at any rate believe in SHOWING THEIR COLOURS.

The Palace itself will be full of interest. It is to be profusely decorated, and every possible arrangement for the comfort and convenience of the delegates has been made. The Great Hall, with its capacity for an audience of 10,000 people, will be used as the chief centre of the meetings. The magnificent organ—one of the largest in the kingdom, having four manuals and 136 stops, and requiring two steam engines to blow it—will be used to lead the singing of the immense choir and congregation.

The Concert Hall and Theatre, each seating upwards of 3,000 people, will be in continuous use for various meetings, whilst in the grounds two large tents, each accommodating 5,000 people, will be constant centres of Endeavour activity.

Apart from the meetings, probably the most interesting feature of the Convention will be the camp. Unable to provide accommodation in the homes of the people for so vast a throng, the Committee conceived the idea of an encampment. To the American visitors this will be nothing new. Camping out is a favourite manner of spending a holiday across the sea. At Northfield and all the great camp-meeting centres canvas is much in evidence; but, then, they can depend upon the weather in a measure, which we cannot. The fact that the committee has planned to accommodate at the camp is an indication of large faith which we most earnestly hope will be honoured of God in the sending of fine weather.

But the question of the elements has not been the only one causing anxious thought to the Committee. The war has directly and indirectly monopolised nearly all the tents in the country, so that it has been necessary to partition large marquees for part of the accommodation. Then the matter of bedding has been an awkward problem, but after encountering a host of difficulties—which, had they been all seen at the beginning, might well have appalled the workers—they have met them one by one, and now face the convention with pleasant smiles, conscious of having performed a very difficult service with credit to themselves and the cause they represent.

The commissariat is apparently in good hands. The official bulletin says:—"The Palace caterer will have on the spot a plant worth about £10,000, including vast bakeries, and a mineral-water manufactory of unusual dimensions. The dining and refreshment rooms and buffets are numerous, comfortable, and we believe adequate for even the crowds that will assemble at this World's Convention."

Interesting and comprehensive are the announcements made as to conveniences provided. The west end of the Eastern Picture Gallery will be used as a delegates' writing-room. This again will be furnished by the Remington Typewriting Company with a number of machines and a staff of operators. Delegates can thus have their letters written by machine free of charge. Experienced photographers will be in constant attendance at the Convention studio, so that groups and single photographs can be taken at any time. A corps of the St. John's Ambulance Association will also be present, with their own tent, in the Park.

The programme is full of interest, so much so that it is very difficult to make a choice of days. Every reader unable to attend all must choose for himself, and to help in the choice we append an outline of the programme :—

Saturday, July 14.—An Organ Recital will be given in the great Central Hall, and at 6.15 a Musical service will be held, at which a choir of many voices will sing. The musical programme will be followed a 7 o'clock by a Welcome meeting. At the same hour, a Musical service and Welcome meeting will be held in the Royal Albert Hall, Kensington.

Sunday, July 15.—Special arrangements have been made by which many pulpits in London will be occupied by Christian Endeavour pastors. At the Alexandra Palace, sermons will be preached by Rev. Theo. Parr, M.A., and Rev. Maltbie D. Babcock, D.D. At a Men's meeting in the afternoon, Lord Kinnaird will preside. The Women's meeting will be presided over by Miss M. Jennie Street.

Monday, July 16.—All meetings on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday will be held at the Alexandra Palace. On Monday morning, the speakers will include Rev. C. M. Sheldon, author of "In His Steps;" Rev. Maltbie D. Babcock, D.D.; Rev. J. Monro Gibson, D.D.; Rev. John Watson, D.D.; Rev. John Clifford, D.D.; Rev. G. C. Lorimer, D.D.; and Mr. Arnold F. Hills, D.L. In the afternoon, denominational rallies will be held, addressed by prominent ministers. In the evening, four Missionary Demonstrations will be held, commencing at 7 o'clock, in the Central Hall, the Concert Hall, the Theatre, and Tent "Endeavour."

Tuesday, July 18.—Meetings in the Central Hall and the Concert Hall will be devoted to "Demonstrations of World-Wide Endeavour." Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., will deliver his "Presidential Address" as President of the C.E. World's Union, and the speakers will include Mr. J. Willis Baer, Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, and Rev. H. N. Peloubet, D.D. Four meetings will run concurrently in the afternoon, commencing at 2.30. The Central Hall meeting will be a Temperance Demonstration. In the Concert Hall, "Citizenship" will be discussed. In the Theatre the Ministers' Meeting will be held. In Tent "Endeavour," there will be a Conference on the Tenth Legion and the Quiet Hour. At 5 o'clock an Evangelistic Service will be conducted in the Great Central Hall by Rev. John McNeill. Four meetings will be held in the evening, to consider the subject of "Pentecostal Power."

Wednesday, July 18.—Professor W. W. White, D.D., will deliver an address on "The Divine Library, its Use and Abuse," and a School of Methods will be conducted by Professor Amos R. Wells. In the Concert Hall, at eleven o'clock, "Messages of the Churches" will be delivered by the Bishop of London, Rev. Joseph Parker, D.D., Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, M.A., Rev. J. G. Greenhough, M.A., and Rev. W. Watson, M.A. During the morning a Junior Rally will be held, and in the afternoon National Rallies by the American, Canadian, Australian, German, and French delegates. The closing meetings, on Wednesday evening, will be held in five sections. The Roll Call services will be conducted by Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., Rev. E. R. Barrett, B.A., Mr. J. Willis Baer, Rev. E. R. Hassé, and Rev. James L. Hill, D.D. The "Closing Words" will be delivered by Rev. John Smith, D.D. (Edinburgh), Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., Rev. Reuen Thomas, M.A., D.D. (Boston, U.S.A.), Miss Marianne Farningham, and Rev. J. D. Jones, M.A., B.D. (Bournemouth).

Thursday will be devoted to excursions o many places of interest, and on Friday morning Endeavourers will rally at St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey.

Missionary Pence Association.

SINCE its formation, in 1892, the Missionary Pence Association has raised £10,000 in aid of upwards of 100 societies and missions. At present fully 5,000 contributors are giving Carey's weekly penny, which is the basis of the Association's income, though many friends help with larger sums.

Eight workers in the foreign field are being entirely supported by the members, while many others are being largely helped. One asylum for lepers has been erected at Mandla, and another is in course of building at Mungeli, both in connection with the Mission to Lepers, while twenty-three children of lepers are being maintained. Many missionaries have been substantially assisted with outfits and passages.

Information as to the work may be had from Mr. John Jackson (treasurer) or Mr. W. Roger Jones (secretary), Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

Points and Outlines.

Following Afar Off.

JESUS has many lovers of his consolation, but few of his tribulation. He finds plenty of companions of his table, but few of his abstinence. All wish to rejoice with Christ, but few wish to bear anything for his sake. Are not those to be called hirelings who are always seeking consolation? Are not those manifestly lovers of themselves rather than of Jesus, who always keep in view their own advantage and gain?

Thomas à Kempis.

Putting Off.

Matt. xxv. 1-13.

The parable of the virgins tells of :—(1) Crisis—"And when they went out to buy, the bridegroom came;" (2) Division—"They that were ready went in to the marriage;" to the others, coming afterwards, the Lord said, "I know you not." The foolish virgins had all things needful to share in the wedding except oil; through putting off the getting it, they were unsupplied when their need was essential. Says the proverb: "By the street of By-and-By one arrives at the town of Never."

A Pastor to Pastors.

By your work you are related to Christ as well as to your flock. You are the stewards of his mysteries, and rulers of his household; and He that entrusted you will maintain you in his work. But then "It is required of a steward that a man be found faithful." Be true to Him, and never doubt but He will be true to you. Do you feed his flock, and He will sooner feed you as He did Elijah than leave you to want. If you be in prison, He will open the door; but then you must relieve imprisoned souls. Richard Baxter.

Forgiveness of Sins.

What is not involved in this phrase? To the man who, by faith, lays hold of the Divine-human Saviour, forgiveness of sins is—(1) Justification; he is put in such a relation to the broken law that the law has no further condemning claim upon him. Moreover, forgiveness of sins is also (2) Restoration to Favour, which means reinstatement in sonship (John i. 12). Also it is (3) Regeneration, as illustrated in the altered direction of the man's pardoned nature. Then comes (4) Heavenly Help, as a result of the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. God's forgiveness is complete; it should be our joy to believe the testimony concerning it, and return his love with trust and obedience.

SUNDAY, JULY 15.

How Mission Work will Gain Success (Acts i. 6-14).

EVERY machine needs driving-power. Take a motor-car, for instance. The machinery may be bright and new, the wheels tyred with rubber, everything contrived for comfort, but it will not move an inch till the power is applied. Take a maxim gun—one of the deadliest weapons in existence; it is not enough that it is charged with destructive missiles, it must be fired, and the explosive must communicate its irresistible impulse. So with the Gospel of our Lord Jesus. He had died and risen, the work of redemption was finished. His disciples were appointed and were ready to carry the tidings of salvation to the world of dying men, but power was needed—the power of the Holy Spirit. And this is what our Lord promised.

He received his anointing when He was baptized, and He desired that all his followers should have the same. He knew that they could not do their work of witnessing properly until they had been made strong for it; and He made haste to go to the Father that He might send them the Holy Spirit of which He had so often spoken. "It is expedient," He had said, "that I go away; for if I go not away the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart I will send Him." The Holy Spirit could not be given till Jesus was glorified, so He hastened to the glory He had with the Father before the world was made—that, having received from the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, He might be able to send Him forth (John xvi. 7, viii. 39; Acts ii. 33). It is an earnest question for each of us—Have I received the Holy Ghost, to be in me the source of power? If not, it is not to be wondered at that we are weak and our testimony faltering.

Notice the circles of our life: witnesses in Jerusalem—that's our home; and in all Judæa—that's the immediate society into which we are thrown; and in Samaria—that's the city or town where we live; and the uttermost parts of the earth represent the great heathen world, with its claims on us all. For each of these we have some responsibility. Let us begin at our Jerusalem, and God will lead us step by step to the uttermost parts of the world. There are too many, alas! who are eager enough for the uttermost parts, but they neglect Jerusalem and ignore the claims of Judæa.

God wants witnesses. The word is from witan, the Anglo-Saxon to know. It appears in our word to wit. A witness is not expected to reason or argue, but to say what he saw and heard, to give facts. The advocate pleads the case of his client. God does not want advocates but witnesses. This is more easily beyond our reach. We are required to tell people what we have found Jesus to be to ourselves—to say what we have known, and tasted, and handled of the Word of Life. Our witness-box is the shop in which we are employed, the office among our fellow-clerks, the mechanics' shed, or the position in business where we are daily called to rub shoulders with those who know not Christ. Our smile, our peace, our joy in God amid discouragement, our holiness and integrity of heart, are our witness to Jesus. Men cannot see Him, except they see Him in us. When the sun sets, men see not his light, and have no direct sight of the orb of day, but the moon bears witness to him, until the morning brings him back. So the Church of Christ bears witness to her unseen Lord.

He was in the act of speaking, when He began to ascend. The attraction of heaven acted on Him as the gravitation of earth acts on us. With his hands outspread in benediction, He slowly and majestically rose above them to where the cloud awaited Him, like a car of gold or fire. What a blissful sequel to his earthly ministry, that He went to intercede for us at the right hand of God, and to send the power of the Holy One to all weak and weary ones, between his ascension and second Advent!

The little band of apostles and others returned to the upper room, which was so closely identified with their Master's Presence, and remained there in earnest prayer. Though the Lord had told them that He would send the Holy Spirit, they properly felt that their prayers were necessary to receive the fulfilment of his promise. It must never be forgotten that we must cash God's cheques with believing prayer. It is not his will that we should leave Him to carry out his divine and holy purposes, for all these things He waits to be inquired of. Stedfast perseverance, loving accord, and earnestness of purpose, are three conditions of success. F. B. M.

Chinese "Boxers."

WHO are the "Boxers"? I can imagine some of my young friends asking. What are they doing that everybody is talking about them? Let me tell you a little about this infamous organization that is responsible for most of the disorder and massacre which is causing such great anxiety and sorrow.

The literal translation of the Chinese name of the society seems to be "Righteous Harmony Fists." A second or alternative name is "The Big Knife Society." Some missionaries, however, go so far as to say that the "Boxers" are a myth, the only real society being that of the "Big Knife."

The organization is made up of innumerable local bands which have been put through a course of gymnastic exercises and military drill. They are filled with hatred of all foreigners. They detest all Western customs and methods, and declare that their Chinese institutions and religion are much older than Christianity. Other nations are held in the utmost contempt by them, and they regard all other peoples as barbarians.

For their motto they have, "Exalt the dynasty; extirpate the foreigners." They are armed with swords, or large knives, which they use dexterously upon all who favour reform. Their followers act like madmen, parading the streets and flourishing their swords, shouting, "Ta-pi yang-kuei-tze; Ta-pi, Ta-pi." "Kill the foreign devils; kill, kill!" And the last news, as I write, reports that over 1,000 foreigners—including probably all the members of the different Legations in Peking—have been ruthlessly massacred.

Several European missionaries are known to have been murdered, and much damage has been done to the property of native Christians. Mission stations have also been utterly destroyed.

It is believed that the Boxers are secretly encouraged by the Dowager-Empress and high Chinese officials. At all events no steps seem to have been taken to restrain the lawless horde who have already caused so much trouble and shed so much blood.

The leaders of these enemies of order and toleration claim to be possessed by spirits; and affirm that all who follow them will be invulnerable in battle. But, of course, this is not the case. In this way they persuade thousands of idlers to join their ranks. The failure in the crops last autumn left a large number of farmers without food or employment. It was no difficult to gain their support.

Toward the end of last year the Boxers worked great mischief to the Chi Chou Protestant Mission. And this is only an example of what has been going on all over Shantung and the adjacent provinces. Some of the missionaries attached to American societies have undergone much peril and hardship. It is quite clear from all this, and much more that could be told, that Christian work in the North of China is entirely at a standstill, while great fear is entertained for the safety of Christian workers in the South.

Thus it has come to pass that the bright hopes of Christian people that China was on the eve of being won for Christ have for the moment been scattered. Perhaps some of you have friends or relatives in China who went out simply to tell the Chinese of the infinite love of God for them, and of the sacrifice of Christ for their sins. You are in great anxiet yon their behalf. The next telegrams may bring the tidings that your friends are in grave peril.

Of one thing I am certain, that the girls and boys who love to read this page will pray for China, for the missionaries "holding the fort" there, for native converts, for mission stations and schools, and all who are in trouble. Prayer is such a real thing in days of darkness like these. But God is able to bring good out of this evil, and faith knows that He will. "The kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." J. W.

Princess Mary Village Homes.

THE Duchess of York paid a visit to the Princess Mary Village Homes at Addlestone on Thursday afternoon last, in connection with the annual "Commemoration Day."

After a short service in the Homes Chapel, conducted by the Bishop of Peterborough, her Royal Highness visited several of the cottages, and was then conducted to the schoolroom, which was most beautifully and gaily decorated and packed to its utmost capacity.

The children having sung the "Song of the Flags," the Duchess presented the prizes in a kindly and gracious manner. The proceedings closed with a vote of thanks, proposed by Lord Rookwood, treasurer of the Homes; seconded by Rev. J. C. Cornford, chaplain; and supported by the High Sheriff of the county.

Amongst those present were Lady Eva Dugdale and Major-General Sir Francis de Winton, in attendance on her Royal Highness; the Earl of Meath, Lord Amherst, Sir F. and Lady Wigan, Lady Wetherall, &c.

A guard of honour was formed by the 3rd East Surrey Volunteers. Selections were played at intervals by the Volunteer band on the village green, and also by the band of the boys of the School of Handicrafts, Chertsey.

They Need a Change.

HOW many a poor and delicate girl is toiling hard in the crowded city to whom a week of pure air would be the greatest earthly boon; but to stop work means to stop wage, and so the change of atmosphere and scene and society is beyond her means; and yet 8s. sent to Miss Mary Reynolds, of Invercloy, Woodford Wells, Essex, would secure all that is needed for one such.

For eighteen years this Home for City Young Women has thus helped the overdone ones of busy London. It is situated on the edge of Epping Forest, where the trees wave and the birds sings, and where many a pale face has regained colour and brightness.

Many are able to pay for themselves; but many must be received as "free cases." Who will supply the means for one to have a week's real holiday; but is a week enough? Let her have a fortnight, for 16s.

Miss Reynolds writes of one as a sample of many: "A. R., a young girl of nineteen, who, owing to the death of her father a few years ago, has had to give all her earnings to her mother to help support a large family of younger brothers and sisters. She came to us in a very anæmic condition, having been unable to work for some months, and consequently being short of proper food and clothing. With outdoor life and good food, she quickly improved, and at the end of six weeks was able to take a light situation."

From this it will be seen that help may also be rendered by gifts of clothing. Books, house linen, and food are also useful. Communications may be made to Miss Mary Reynolds, or through this paper.

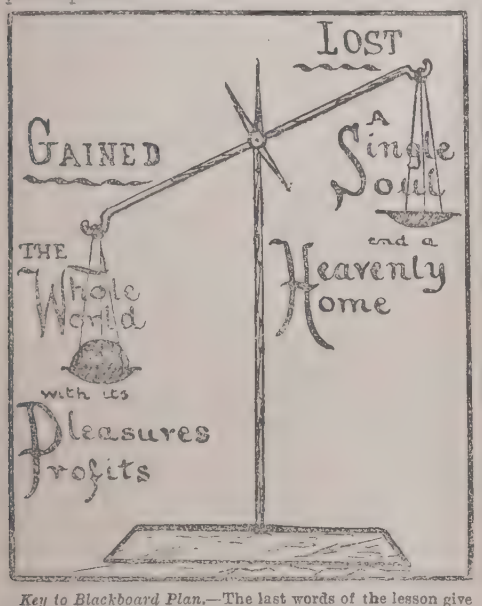
Peter's confession and Christ's rebuke.—Matt. xvi. 13-26.

Golden Text.—"If any man will come after Me let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow Me."—Matt. xvi. 24.

Introduction.

WITHIN fourteen verses we have Peter speaking, with all confidence, words that it does well for all of us to be able to say with all our hearts (v. 16); but we also hear Peter speaking other words, bold and interfering, and from these words we must take a warning, that we are not to command our God and tell Him what to do. He knows what is right, and He ever fulfils his own perfect plans.



Key to Blackboard Plan.—The last words of the lesson give us a great fact to consider. The world with all its pleasures, amusements, and riches, cannot be compared even to a single soul, which when lost will never fill the prepared place for it in the heavenly home.

1 "Come." (13-17).

We will take three words from the Golden Text; "come," "deny," "follow," and so work in the lesson with them.

Notice "ye" (15); read rather—"But ye, whom say ye that I am?"

To come to Jesus is to be able to answer in the words of Peter, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Learn by heart the following texts and add them to Peter's answer:—John i. 49; vi. 69. Matt. xiv. 33, Mark viii. 29, Luke ix. 20, John xi. 27. To come to Jesus is to talk with Him (13-15). It is to hear Jesus say to us, "Blessed art thou" (17). It is to be clear about Christ's Messiahship, not to think He is someone else (14).

John the Baptist was dead; Elias was Elijah; Jeremias was Jeremiah. To-day people try all sorts of things instead of coming simply to God's Son; see Christian Science at work, or spiritualism with all its unhealthy excitement, and yet people will rush to these instead of trusting and believing in the world's Great Redeemer.

2. Deny. (21-23).

Jesus Christ knew what self-denial in its deepest meaning meant. He knew what taking up the cross was, (21; and Mark x. 33, 34;) and all for us.

"Thou Lord, hast borne for me
More than my tongue can tell,
Of bitterest agony,
To rescue me from hell;
Thou suff'redst all for me,
What have I borne for Thee?"

Let us ask again and again, how often do we deny ourselves for Christ's sake? (22) It would have been well if Peter had practised a little self-denial with regard to his speech. Christ had to rebuke him for his boldness and forwardness. What is self-denial?—"To keep under." Paul knew this (1 Cor. ix. 27).

3. Follow (24-26).

To follow is to come to Jesus, to deny self, to take up the cross, to plant the feet in the footsteps of the Master and to go "onward, upward, heavenward." It is to lose the life here (25) that is to lose much of earthly gain and pleasure, but it will be doubly repaid in heaven and doubly gained. "To follow" is to go in an opposite direction from that in which the people of the world go, it often means to give up comfort and things that please though they may be harmless in themselves. Is this hard? It is worth it even if it does appear hard, for "what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Therefore { COME, DENY, FOLLOW, and God will give you his own peace, which passeth all understanding.

Prof. White's Bible School.

EZEKIEL was the subject dealt with by Dr. White, at the Queen's Hall on Friday last. The aim of the lecture was to demonstrate the patient persistency of God in his beneficent purposes towards the human race, in spite of the rebellion, ingratitude, and continuance in sin with which those purposes were met. Dealing with the position of the Jewish people in the time of Ezekiel, Dr. White pointed out that the best of Israel, the hope of the nation, were in Babylon. Jeremiah xxiv. shows the basket of good figs compared to "them that are carried away of Judah whom I have sent . . . into the land of the Chaldeans" (v. 5), while the evil figs are the residue. The then, began in Babylon, the centre of Polytheism; the time of reconstruction, during the time of exile. In connection with this reform movement, "Ezekiel," says Geikie, "was the true forerunner of Ezra."

God revealing Himself to these Jews in Babylon, teaches once again the lesson that in revealing Himself, He is independent of places. Men clung to the idea that He could be sought and found in certain spots exclusively. One of the accusations against Stephen was that he said, "Jesus of Nazareth shall destroy this place" (Acts vi. 14); and Stephen accordingly dealt with the point in his address, quoting, in connection with the temple, "What house will ye build Me? saith the Lord; or what is the place of my rest? Hath not my hand made all these things?" (Acts vii. 49, 50). While, for good purposes, God established the temple, He is not confined to one place. It was when the Jews of that day saw the application Stephen was about to make, that they gnashed upon him and stoned him.

God appears to Ezekiel even in Babylon. In chap. i. the prophet sees the vision by the river Chebar, and later, in the vision in the temple, is taken back to Jerusalem (viii.-xi.). There he sees God leave the once holy place, which has been made unholy by man, and go to his people in Babylon. (The tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them, Rev. xxi. 3.) The rebellious section said, "Let us trust in Egypt," hoping that what was said by Jeremiah, in Jerusalem, and by Ezekiel, in Babylon, would be found incorrect. Jerusalem, however, was to be destroyed; but after the destruction Ezekiel's message is of the restoration of country, city, and temple. It is important, in studying the book, to note what may be termed its balancings, e.g., the watchman, in chaps. iii. and in xxxiii.; and the visions of (a) the temple (viii.-xi), and (b) the new temple (xl.-xlviii.).

Dr. White briefly reviewed the political, religious, and moral situations at the time when Ezekiel wrote. In observing the political position, Egypt and Babylon are to be specially considered. The prophet shows, too, the judgment of the former (xxix.-xxxii.), in which it is described as in the grave with other dead nations, while Nebuchadnezzar is given the right to overrun the whole of the west and set up a throne in Egypt. The judgment of Tyre, also, is described (xxvi.-xxviii.); with marvellous imagery this great centre of shipping is pictured as a magnificently equipped ship of the period "broken by the seas in the depths of the waters." The doom of Ammon, Moab, Edom and Philistia is shown in chap. xxvi.

The moral condition of the Jews had tended downward from the time of Samuel and David, when it was comparatively high, and God had sent the prophets to warn of visitations of judgment that must surely result unless the people would turn from sin, especially the sin of idolatry. Reforms were initiated by kings, who put down idol worship, but the the disposition of the people, who returned again to their evil ways. No thorough system of education was adopted. In the Northern Kingdom all the kings were idolaters, and in the Southern, nearly all. Ahab and Jezebel were idolators, and yet the reforming Jehosaphat married his son to their daughter. Idolatrous customs were introduced and mixed with the worship of Jehovah, and the downfall of the Southern Kingdom was the outcome.

The political situation, with the relationships of Egypt and Babylon, is brought out in chap. xvii.; the religious (with the account of the abominations seen in the vision of Jerusalem) in chap. viii.; and the moral in chaps. xvi., xxii. 25-28 (showing that all classes practised sin), and xxiii. Dr. White described the latter chapter as "the most awful in the Bible."

In analyzing the latter part of the book, with its pictures of restoration, of the temple and the river, Dr. White called attention to the parallels between the books of Ezekiel and Revelation; in fifty to a hundred cases images in the former are used in the latter. Whatever view may be taken as to the literal meaning of these prophecies, important as such views may be, we must primarily endeavour to realize the wonderful vision of a restored heaven and restored earth. The climax of the comparison between Ezekiel and Revelation is that the city described in Rev. xxi. has no temple, "for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it." As regards the land as described in the first portion of the book, God is not there, but as to the city of the vision in the latter part, it is said "Jehovah-shammah,"—The Lord is there.

West London Mission.

JULY is here, and we Londoners are beginning to think longingly of the holidays. We anticipate with joy the moment when we shall turn our backs upon the heat, noise, and stuffy air of London, and be off to refresh our minds and bodies with the beauties of the country, and the cool breezes of sea, moor, and mountain. I ask those who are looking forward to a holiday themselves to help the weary men, women, and children who will have no breath of fresh air, or respite from the monotonous round of daily toil unless assistance is given them.

I think now of a widow in delicate health who has struggled with heroic bravery for two years to support herself and two children. The doctor says she will not work for another year unless she has rest and fresh air. Another widow, a tailoress in Soho, has not seen the sea for forty years! Only last week a girl of seventeen was brought to us ill with starvation. Her mother had died in consumption, her father out of work, and the home sold up for rent. The only chance for that poor child is rest, food, and fresh air, so that she may regain strength to fight the battle of life for herself. These are but types of hundreds of others whom we long to be able to send away. The country holiday not only does good physically, but the brief days spent in the woods and fields amongst the sights and associations of country life, often revive hope and longings for goodness and purity in despairing hearts. To many whom we know the country holiday has been the beginning of better things. Will your readers help us? Katherine Price Hughes.

Theatrical Employees. — The twentieth annual excursion of theatrical employees, organized by Mr. William Forbes, was held on Friday last. The rendezvous was Theydon Bois, in Epping Forest, and about 130 persons accepted Mr. Forbes' invitation. After tea, addresses were delivered by Revs. D. B. Hankin and G. R. Thornton.

"The Little Angel," A Slum Story, by Mr. Warwick Guy Pearse casts a sidelight upon some of those pathetic and beautiful instances of noble character not infrequently found in humble life. The story is true, and written to elicit practical interest in the West London Mission, as an aid to sending into the country some of the children of the pavement, that they may enjoy rural blessings, and learn lessons from the birds, the flowers, and the fields. Mr. Pearse's special work is in connection with the St. Christopher's Boys' Club. His address is 19, Fitzroy Square, W.

Progress in Japan—II.

THAT the Gospel of Christ should meet with no check or opposition is not to be expected, and is contrary to the history of the Christian faith in other lands. What we are experiencing in Japan is what has taken place elsewhere, and is inevitable in the growth of a system that is hostile to and destined to supplant all other forms of belief. This is felt already to such an extent that the chief Buddhist sect is divided into two hostile parties on the question of toleration. One section is willing to allow all to stand on the same platform. But another part insists upon certain rights being accorded to Buddhists that others do not enjoy. It is their wish and purpose to make Buddhism the State religion.

Such strife will only hasten the downfall of ignorance and bigotry. Christianity has nothing to fear from opposition of this kind. All that is asked is a free field and an increase of suitable labourers from the home lands.

The field is now ripe. There is such a spirit of inquiry as has not been found before for many years. The prosperity and strength of Christian nations is so evident to the Japanese that they want to know how it is that Christianity has such an influence, and whether there is not something in its teachings that is needed in Japan.

One of the Princes, who is the President of the House of Peers, and a leading man in educational circles, has recently made a visit to Europe and America, and on his return said, on a public address, that the one thing that especially impressed him was the fact that the men who control affairs in Great Britain, Germany, and the United States are sincere Christians.

THE QUESTION VERY NATURALLY ARISES,

if such is the case, why not encourage the growth of Christianity in Japan? The mere mention of this fact will awaken interest on the subject in many minds, and prepare the way for the reception of the Gospel.

A few days ago there died in Tokyo a Judge of the Supreme Court, who was regarded as one of the ablest and most learned men who have ever occupied that important position. He was a devoted Christian.

There are two battle-ships of the first class in the Japanese navy, and both are commanded by Christian captains. They are both members of the Presbyterian Church, as is also Mr. Kataoka, the honoured President of the Lower House of the Diet.

There are three Christian professors, and upwards of sixty members of the Christian Association in the Imperial University in Tokyo. There are thirty Christian Associations among the students in Japan, and a total membership of 850. Sixty students were baptized last year who had been brought to an acceptance of Christianity, chiefly through

THE INFLUENCE OF THE Y.M.C.A.

A writer in one of the secular papers in Tokyo sums up the reasons for encouragement on the part of Christians as to the results of the past year somewhat as follows: The rapid strides made by Japanese Christians in educational work in Korea, the launching of a Gospel ship for mission work in the Inland Sea, the establishment of a house for discharged convicts, the opening of reform schools for young criminals, the formation of the young men's reform association, are all events of such importance that they deserve our careful consideration.

Though not accompanied by the noise and eclat that have characterized the Buddhist movements, the work which the Christians have done has been solid work; they have laid the foundation for a future structure. It is reported on good authority that a person can now travel from Nemuro (which is on the Island of Yezo, and the extreme northern part of Japan) to Kumamoto, at the southern extremity of Kiushiu, and spend every night in a Christian home. When we compare this state of things with what existed only thirty years ago it seems almost incredible. Such a change could never be brought about by the efforts of man alone. It is surely the work of God.

"Ni Dieu—ni Maitre."

"NI DIEU" first—and as surely as Night succeeds to Day—"ni maitre" will follow.

How far the effort to sweep from Paris the acknowledgment of God is being carried may be gathered from the heavy tax which is now being levied upon "La Culte de Religion."

Some time ago this tax was served upon our four Homes in Paris. We resisted, showing that we did not exist solely for religious instruction, but also as an industrial society; that from one of our Homes, since December 20, 1872—out of over 10,640 young women received as inmates, at 77, Avenue Wagram, Paris—we had found over 7,000 situations through our Free Registry; that our work has a strong moral influence—our Homes only being open, irrespective of creed, to respectable English girls.

Now a more severe law has supervened, a sommation being served upon me personally, which not only enforces the payment of the tax, but imposes fines to the amount of over 23,000 francs—nearly £1,000!

We have again protested, though with little hope of success, showing that the morning and evening prayer in our Homes and our Bible readings on Sundays are but the complement of family life and worship as held in ten thousands of homes in England, and that each lady in charge conducts them as head of the household, and not as a paid or special delegate.

Should our protest be disregarded, the effect—unless averted by God's outstretched arm—must be most disastrous. We have nothing to pay with, and shall be at the mercy of the Huissier—at our Mother Home, 77, Avenue Wagram, which to-day has a household of 72—who is authorized to sell by auction until every centime of the amount is realized.

I write, indeed, at a time of need, calling upon each one who reads this to plead with God, not for our Homes alone, but for France drifting into open atheism—ni Dieu—"regardless of the terrible floodgates of human passion which burst forth without restraint—ni maitre."

And as each family supplicates for God in his mercy to avert the blow which we fear, and to turn it into blessing—may I ask each family for an offering? To the financial mind of France a tax pour la Culte de Religion, paid by thousands of English homes at their family worship, must leave its mark—not easily effaced—for God's glory. (Mrs.) Ada M. Lewis.

Mission Work in South America.

AT a meeting at St. Martin's Town Hall, farewell has been taken of a number of missionaries who are proceeding to take up mission work in the Paraguayan Chaco, and in Araucania, under the auspices of the South American Missionary Society. Nine missionaries were farewelled; and of these, one, Mr. Grubb, the Superintendent of the Chaco Mission, is returning after furlough, and the other eight being new missionaries, one clergyman, five laymen, and two ladies. Three of the new workers are going out to take up medical work, and three are proceeding as industrial missionaries.

The Bishop of the Falkland Islands, who presided at the meeting, gave an interesting account of the Society's work in South America. Through the faith, devotion, and courage, of the missionaries, prejudice had been broken down, and the confidence of the Government had been secured. The work was progressing in many ways, and they looked forward to the future with hope. Some of the departing missionaries addressed a few words to those present, and the valedictory address to the outgoing party was given by Rev. Prebendary Barlow, D.D., Vicar and Rural Dean of Islington.

At Paris Exhibition.

THE evangelistic meetings in the Salle Rapp, 59, Avenue La Bourdonnais, grow in interest and power. For just over a fortnight, from Sunday, June 17, to Sunday, July 1, inclusive, we have been privileged with the presence and help, night after night, of Pastor E. Houter, of Marseilles. I already knew M. Houter by his writings, especially by his valuable popular monthly, Le Relèvement, but had not before heard him speak. He has been for many years the president of the Mission Intérieure, a society founded in France directly after the war, and just before the McAll Mission, with the double object of promoting evangelistic work amongst Roman Catholics and a deepened spiritual life amongst Protestants. He is an evangelist of great gifts and much spiritual power; and our hearts have been filled with thankfulness in listening to his clear presentation of the fundamental truths of the Gospel, which has been "in the demonstration of the Spirit and of power." His first address was in answer to the question: What is to be the religion of France in the twentieth century? He showed that neither Roman Catholicism, notwithstanding the beautiful lives of some of its adherents, nor a merely traditional Protestantism, can meet only a return to the religion of the Gospels, the religion of Christ, can win and save France.

Another evening, dwelling on the sufferings of Christ upon the cross, physical, mental, and moral, he constrained us to remark that never since Moody's last visit to England had we heard these solemn verities so powerfully declared; we were enabled in some degree to realize the great Apostle's description of his own preaching—"Before whose eyes Jesus Christ was openly set forth crucified." M. Houter's address last Sunday evening dealt with the question: "What must I do to be saved?" To a French audience, mainly composed of those whose only religious education had been in the Roman Catholic Church, it was necessary to begin by explaining what is meant by being "lost" or "saved;" this was done by means of a living picture of a wanderer lost in an Australian forest. Then, from point to point, we were led up by arguments appealing at once to the intellect and to the heart, and the glorious doctrine of justification by faith in a crucified and risen Saviour. On this occasion, one seemed to be listening to

A MODERN LUTHER.

The speaker's manifest sincerity and profound humility, united to a fine voice and ready language, with a freshness and depth and variety of thought that did not once fail throughout his fifteen days' visit, evidently made a powerful impression on his hearers.

Last Sunday evening, the chairman invited those who wished to have personal conversation with M. Houter, before he left, or with other workers, to remain behind for that purpose; three or four only availed themselves of the opportunity, but these conversations, as well as many remarks made at the door on various occasions, showed that hearts are being reached by the Gospel message.

Every Monday evening we have the valued help of Pastor Saillens, of the Baptist Church, whose poetical style, lively imagery, and rich eloquence commend the Gospel message to his hearers.

Not all the meetings are equally well attended, nor do all the speakers understand in the same degree how to arrest and retain the attention of their hearers by the preaching of Christ crucified. But on the whole we are greatly encouraged. We are already seeing the answers to many prayers; and we would entreat our fellow-Christians to continue in prayer, that this great gathering of the nations around the glories of human science and art may also be the means of bringing many to a knowledge of the higher glories revealed by the Lord Jesus Christ. Joseph G. Alexander.

Mr. Hermann Warszawiak.

At the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church held recently in St. Louis, the decision of the session of the Fifth Avenue Church, New York, arrived at in November last year, was upheld. The following resolutions express the said decision:—

"Whereas: It is now nearly three years since the date of the alleged immoral conduct charges against Hermann Warszawiak, namely, gambling at certain gambling-houses and pool-rooms; and

"Whereas: The said Hermann Warszawiak has since that date been debarred from the communion of this Church; and

"Whereas: He has during that time been leading a moral life, and has not ceased to publicly teach the blessed Gospel of our Lord to the people of his own kindred; and

"Whereas: The witnesses named to support the charges (except some who were called to prove formal matters) were professional detectives and not members of the Church (except possibly one), and some of them not even adherents to any form of Christian faith, and therefore are not such that unqualified credence should be given them; and

"Whereas: the first trial and subsequent proceedings have been a source of continual irritation and a detriment to kindly, brotherly feeling in the Church, and a detriment to the advancement of Christ's kingdom in our midst, therefore be it

"Resolved: That it is the judgment, that a re-trial of Hermann Warszawiak upon the charges heretofore preferred against him would not result in any good or to the purity of the Church, but on the contrary would disturb the peace and unity of our congregation and of the Church; therefore

"Resolved that the said charges be, and they hereby are, dismissed, and that Hermann Warszawiak be, and hereby is, restored to the communion of this Church as a member in good and regular standing."

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church has in this case arrived at a lame and impotent conclusion. It is unsatisfactory to the accused himself, to the Church, to the witnesses, and to the public. Unsatisfactory to the accused, because it leaves him unvindicated, and the charges undisproved. Unsatisfactory to the Presbyterian body generally, and to the Fifth Avenue Church in particular, because it reverses a former judgment without any subsequent inquiry into the case. Unsatisfactory to the witnesses, because it pronounces them unworthy of credence, on the insufficient ground that "they were professional detectives and not members of the Church (except possibly one), and some of them not even adherents to any form of Christian faith, and therefore not such that unqualified credence should be given them." Unsatisfactory to the public, because every citizen is vitally interested in the exercise of righteous judgment as the result of impartial and exhaustive inquiry.

We might have used a stronger word than "unsatisfactory"—as regards the witnesses, a much stronger word. Nothing less than incompetence, lunacy, or perjury, could have justified the General Assembly in declaring that they were "not such that unqualified credence should be given them." It was the business of the assessors to submit them to cross-examination, and if they were false witnesses they would have been found contradicting themselves or one another.

To "restore to the Communion of the Church as a member in good and regular standing," by practically denouncing as perjurers, without a shadow of proof, men who would be regarded as competent witnesses in any court of justice in the United States, is to make a burlesque of judicial inquiry, and to bring Church procedure into contempt. Such "restoration" is incompatible with self-respect on the part of the General Assembly, or of the member thus "restored."

The Indian Famine.

THE latest news from India affords encouragement as regards the monsoons, but the reports which continue to reach us from missionaries as to the present position of the famine-stricken districts are of a heartrending character. The people have lost all, and the need for farming implements, bullocks, and seed corn is urgent, for ploughing and sowing must be commenced. The outlook is gloomy in Rajputana and Gujerat and Central India, where the cattle bought in anticipation of rains, are dying, and the people are much disheartened. The cholera mortality continues high in Bombay.

Mrs. L. Wheeler Moore, of Basim, Berar, writes: "One of our out-stations is being visited with cholera as well as famine. The people are zealous worshippers of the "cholera goddess," but many of them have died. Mr. Moore is doing his utmost to search out sufferers from the famine and save them from starvation. Our prayers are being answered for some who have long been convinced of the truth. One man brought his idols (seven in number); and after confessing his faith in Christ as the true Saviour, his old mother also came, and his younger sister. We are praying that God's will may be done in this sorely afflicted district."

We have again heard from Dr. Margaret Mackellor, of the Canadian Presbyterian Mission, Neemuch, Central India, who says: "We have in Neemuch homes for boys and girls respectively, and a receiving home into which we are gathering famine orphans and widows. In the early days of the famine we fed thousands who were passing through, but since the outbreak of cholera the famine people are not allowed to come into the camp Bazaar at all, so now our work is rescuing women and orphans, of whom we have about 300 at present under our care, while 254 have been sent to other missionaries. The help of your readers has greatly aided us in our work for these poor people."

Rev. A. Norton, of the Boys' Christian Home, Dhond, Poona, writes: "We are weekly receiving new parties of famine orphans, some are kept, and some sent on to other missionaries who have asked for them. The poor villagers are looking with anxiety for a good rainy season. In some of the villages about us three-fourths of the cattle have died; and on this account the ploughing, which in other years goes on at this season in anticipation of the rains, is not being done. We are giving the orphans daily Christian instruction, and train them in industrious ways. Needy people have been employed in preparing buildings; one of these is now ready, and makes a comfortable home. Our boys heartily thank your readers for their prayers and sympathy."

Jordans Conference—Chalfont St. Giles.

FOR the sixth successive year, a gathering has been held in this interesting spot, far removed from the noise and bustle of the outside world. Well might the worldling ask, "What's up?" as carriages and bicycles passed along the lanes conveying lovers of the truth to the meeting place. Will not the same question be asked when the Lord comes and his servants are all taken out of this present evil although lovely world, to be in his presence for ever more? Rev. F. S. Webster's address on "Four Marks of a Dead Church," was greatly appreciated.

Between the morning and afternoon meetings an informal open-air missionary meeting was held, at which Mr. Walter B. Sloan, C.I.M., spoke of the present dangers in China, and called attention to the fact that every war in China had been followed by the door being more widely opened for mission work.

Mr. F. T. Lane, lately returned on furlough from Central Africa, spoke of the simple faith exhibited by the native Christians; and Rev. F. B. Gwinn, formerly of the Training College, Calcutta, spoke of England's responsibility for the increase in infidelity by destroying faith in the Sacred Books of the Hindoos, as education advanced, without giving them the Gospel with its purifying influence in their place. There must have been some 300 persons present at the little Conference, and considering the isolation of the spot, it shows how great the interest is in such a gathering.

What the Flowers Did.*

IN PICCADILLY.

"THE flower that flowereth and knoweth naught.' One night in June, some three years ago, Sister Margaret was going home from her work in the streets, sad at heart because of the sin and misery about her, and somewhat disappointed at what seemed a night of fruitless toil. She had taken with her a bunch of flowers, and now they were all withered except two roses that had kept their freshness—the one a deep red, the other a pure white. As she looked at them the words occurred to her, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow." Suddenly looking up she saw in the shadow of a doorway a young girl, a picture of utter despair. The Sister came to her and held out the roses; but the girl's face at once hardened scornfully, and she turned away. Quietly the Sister followed her, when the girl turned and said angrily, "Why do you come to me with flowers? Do you want to torment me?" "Do you know what these roses seemed to say to me, this white and this red rose?" said the Sister kindly. "The message they spoke was this—'Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow.'" "Yes," said the girl, "that is all very well for you; but I am not fit to touch them."

"Oh, but the message is meant for you as much as for me," and again the Sister held out the flowers.

Then the girl burst into tears. "I will take them and keep them for my mother's sake. She sent me two roses in her last letter. I have got them now in the Bible she gave me when I left home to come to London."

It was an easy thing now to urge the message of Love. That night the girl left her life of sin and came simply to the Saviour. She was soon restored to her home in the country, and her new life has been a blessing to many. Frequently there comes from her a box of flowers to Sister Margaret, with the message: "Give these to the girls; a flower saved me. It may do as much for somebody else."

"THEM VILETS."

Bill was a costermonger, a fierce, fighting, drinking costermonger, to whom everybody was an enemy, from police to parsons. No fine words nor any bribes could get over Bill, nor over Bill's wife either. In vain for her the attractions of the mothers' meeting; and for him in vain the charms of an entertainment. But one day Bill was broken down, and his wife was won for the meeting. It was Bill himself who explained how it came about.

"P'raps you ain't no better'n some of the rest of 'em as comes foolin' round, but blow me if yer didn't a-knock me down when yer comed and put them vilets round our baby. Yer never said nuffink more'n 'Good mornin', and I'm so sorry for yer—and the flower says it better'n I can.'

"And my ole gal she says, 'I'll join her ole meetin' next Toosday, that I will!' She took on so about them vilets, yer see. They did speak if yer like, they did!"

CHARLIE.

It was at the excursion into the country that Charlie, who is a member of Sister Grace's Guild of Poor Things, waxed eloquent. The fields were yellow with buttercups and purple with the clover, and the hedgerows were bright with a score of flowers.

"Lawk's! Here's a lovely pile of flowers. It fair turns me upside down to see 'em all a-growin' and a-blowin', and the children all a-pickin' of 'em. It seems nateral-like ter see children and flowers together, don't it now? Blowed if I ever thort o' that before. But then the country mikes yer think. Yer ain't got no time ter think nuthink in Berm'sey, it's so bloomin' hot, and there don't seem no room for us all somehow. Down 'ere yer feels as if you can breathe."

Personalia.

Dr. Amory Bradford is taking the services at Carr's Lane, Birmingham, during the remaining Sundays of July.

The Marquis of Northampton has been elected President of the British and Foreign Bible Society in succession to the late Earl of Harrowby.

We regret to learn that Mr. D. C. Joseph, of Haifa Mission, is still confined to his bed by illness. Mr. Joseph asks us to thank, in his behalf, the many friends who have condoled with him in the death of Mrs. Joseph.

Rev. William J. Woods, the secretary of the Congregational Union, has visited the Memorial Hall, from which he has been absent for nearly a year. He has received permission from his physician to return at an early date to office for partial service.

Home Missions.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

FOUNDER'S Day at Dr. Barnardo's Homes is always a welcome festival, affording, as it does, a convenient opportunity for the friends of the institutions to renew acquaintance with the many departments of the work, as well as manifesting to the public at large a succession of practical illustrations of the useful and many-sided character of these remarkable undertakings of Christian philanthropy.

As the years go by it becomes increasingly difficult to accommodate, in the playground at Stepney Causeway, the large company which assembles. At the celebration on Saturday afternoon last the audience seemed larger than ever, and it distinguished itself as much by its appreciativeness and enthusiasm as by its size. The day's proceedings began, as usual, with an inspection of the premises, and particularly of the industries in which Dr. Barnardo's young people are trained. The sight was even the most critical mind, and to accentuate the story told during the afternoon of a gaoler who, showing some visitors over a prison, and feeling semi-apologetic on account of the many empty cells, explained, "You see, that Doctor Barnardo, he empties such places as this." There were busy bands of tinsmiths, bootmakers, blacksmiths, and wheelwrights on the ground floor; above, were carpenters and brushmakers; higher still, mat and harness-makers; while in the highest floor a number of clever young compositors and printers showed, in their collection of circulars and posters, how skilfully they had taken advantage of the system of technical education. Perhaps the most interesting of all, in the eyes of the onlookers, were the white-uniformed lads who filled the rôle of "baker's men," and prepared seemingly endless relays of loaves and cakes for the great family of the Homes.

The department which is designated "Her Majesty's Hospital," in which the sick and incurable waifs are cared for, again added its melancholy picture of the deepest sorrows of the child life of the slums. Most of these forlorn little sufferers appear too feeble to take much interest even in their toys, and seem placidly content merely to lie still and gaze at the graceful greenery and festoons of flowers with which the wards are decorated. The "Babies' House," or crèche, was also a notable centre of attraction.

In the spectacular display of physical exercises, which are so popular a feature of Founder's Day, a novelty was introduced in the shape of a model kitchen, rapidly carried in and erected by a troop of "handy men" in naval costume, and then utilized by a under the direction of an able matron. With commendable promptitude the little people prepared and cooked dishes so diverse as scones, liver and bacon, tea rolls, lunch biscuits, mashed potatoes, and jellies. Presently the finished articles were exhibited, and the girls, who had gone through their public ordeal with credit, retired amid encouraging cheers.

At the annual meeting which followed, Lord Brassey presided, and such representative speakers as Canon Fleming, Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, Rev. F. S. Webster, Mr. Arnold White, and Mr. T. A. Denny stated, in earnest terms, the present position and needs of the work, and pleaded that a still larger measure of support should be accorded to Dr. Barnardo in his efforts to "keep open doors for the destitute." The record of the past year is one of unprecedented usefulness, no fewer than 3,011 girls and boys having been admitted, of whom 1,182 had been rescued from positions of moral peril as well as from destitution, while 73 were incurable cripples, and 200 infants under three years of age. The trained cases sent to Canada numbered 647, making a total of 10,660 emigrated by the institutions, while the Dominion still "asks for more." The total number of children under Dr. Barnardo's care at the present time is 5,343. Stress was also laid upon the familiar but important fact that total abstinence principles are inculcated, and that the chief aim of the directorate is not only to save the waifs and strays of our land from starvation and careers of crime, but to teach them to become true followers of the Lord Jesus.

During the gathering a lengthy procession of sturdy young folk, who are to be included in the next Canadian party, passed among the audience, and made a satisfactory impression by their intelligence and modesty of demeanour. One could well accept the reminder that of those who are emigrated the failures are to be reckoned at only 2 per cent. The proceedings, which were of a hearty character throughout, concluded with a distribution of prizes, by Lady Hope, to some scores of bright young fellows and maidens who had earned this recognition by retaining their situations for periods of a year and upwards.

Billingsgate Christian Mission

BILLINGSGATE MARKET presents many opportunities for useful labour on the part of Christian workers, thronged as it is for a considerable part of the day with those whose living depends on the fish industry. Indeed, the entire vicinity, with its narrow streets and crooked alleys, under the shadow of "London's column, pointing to the skies," is one of the busiest spots in the metropolis, and at the same time, from a spiritual point of view, one of the most needy. It is satisfactory, therefore, to find that the good work of the Billingsgate Christian Mission prospers as the days go by, and that among the salesmen and porters, as well as the riverside population at large, the Gospel is preached.

An important development of the work is the Medical Mission. Commenced as an experiment, it has come to be regarded as a necessity. Accidents are frequent, and the nurse in charge has been able to attend to no less than 1,075 cases during the year. Such injuries as lacerated wounds, burns, and scalds are promptly and satisfactorily dealt with, while advantage is taken to give words of earnest counsel, and, as one result, some whose wounds had been sustained while under the influence of strong drink have become abstainers.

At the annual meeting held in the Mission-hall, on Thursday afternoon last, Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, congratulated the workers on which had been made, and Mr. A. Walters,

THE PRIZE-WINNERS.

the secretary, showed in the course of his summary of the year's operations, how in each department of the work, there had been a consistent endeavour to lead sinners to Christ. The directly evangelistic work lies chiefly in the Gospel meetings and in the personal dealing and visitation of Mr. Walters, and of the missionary, Mr. Wright. Some difficulty is experienced, as yet, in obtaining permission to hold gatherings in the market; but Mr. Wright is able, in the course of his work, to interest groups of men and conduct what is practically a series of open-air meetings. The labours of the missionary are, indeed, of a varied and comprehensive nature. In the course of his day's work he may stop a street fight, find trace a prodigal, help an injured man to the Mission, and deliver a dozen addresses. Mr. Wright, who gives a ringing testimony to the marvellous change wrought in his own heart and life by the power of God, toils with acceptance among the rough characters of the market, as he aids them to live a better life, relieves the distressed, and advises those in difficult circumstances. Truly he proves himself to many, a friend in need.

In the course of the meeting, Rev. F. H. King, Mr. Finlay Gibson, and others, referred to the sound and aggressive character of the work, and the hope was expressed that, ere long, the burden of debt which hampers the Mission may be removed. Mr. Walters may be addressed at the Christian Mission, facing Billingsgate Market, E.C.

London Temperance Hospital.

DURING the twenty-seven years that the London Temperance Hospital has provided for the treatment of medical and surgical cases, its claims, probably, have never been stronger than at the present time. Its distinctive principles respecting the use of alcohol for medicinal purposes serve as a protection from those perils which attend its administration, and commend the institution to a wider circle of supporters. The death of the Duke of Westminster removed one who had been president of the board of management since 1887. He has been succeeded by Mr. Thomas Cash, who for twenty-six years acted as chairman.

An illustration of the value of the institution is found in the number of in-patients who were admitted last year, viz., 1,354; while the out-patients numbered 8,328. In the casualty department 12,545 cases were treated, and 30,656 visits were made.

The spiritual needs of the patients are not overlooked, but every provision is made by the committee for the ministration of the Gospel.

The nursing in the hospital is characterized by sisterly and womanly feeling, and the continued success of the institution has been the result of the judicious and economical methods upon which the work has been maintained. The hospital has demonstrated the fact that it is possible to treat 16,628 patients practically without the use of alcohol. The sick poor of the country, as well as the city, find the hospital to be a boon and blessing in their hour of need. The secretary is Mr. A. W. Bodger, at the Hospital, Hampstead Road, N.W.

Littlehampton Home of Rest.

IN the course of an appreciation of "The Hillyers" Home of Rest, Littlehampton, "A. M. W." recounts the circumstances which led to the founding of the Home by Rev. and Mrs. Darlow Sarjeant, and the success which has attended their efforts to provide comfort and soothing spiritual influences for weary and ailing workers. The writer says: "The Home is open to Christians of all creeds, and the charges are most reasonable. Cases which commend themselves as worthy and needy of help are never refused. 'The Hillyers' is well furnished, and takes about seventy vistors, and is superintended by two Sisters.

"Both Mr. and Mrs. Sarjeant's interests are ever with the Home, though they themselves may be absent. An air of peace and order breathes over the house, the welfare and happiness of the visitors being the first and foremost consideration. Only such rules are imposed on visitors as are necessary to the order and happiness of any well-regulated private house, and are chiefly those of courtesy. The domestic wheels run smoothly, and there is a delightful ease of social intercourse. No discordant note is heard in 'the trivial round.' We meet people of all nationalities, ages, and diversities of gifts. We breathe a social atmosphere of courtesy mingled with Christian love, and many are the hours of happy fellowship."

Referring to the religious worship in the Home, the writer says:—"It is strictly non-sectarian. We meet people of any or no church; but all, as members of the Universal Church, are 'stamped with the image of the King.' Visitors meet for morning and evening prayer, which, in the absence of Mr. and Mrs. Darlow Sarjeant, are conducted by Sister Emma. We sometimes have the privilege of listening to the fresh and spiritual Bible readings both from Mr. and Mrs. Darlow Sarjeant. These religious services are the necessary scaffolding for the building of an inner spiritual life. But there is something more. What is the silent, invisible spirit that breathes over the Home, making life more joyful, more peaceful? We answer, the transforming power of that pure and undefiled religion that fadeth not away. In other words, Christianity is the motor that rules and vitalizes the life of the house."

Further particulars of the Home may be obtained from Rev. Darlow Sarjeant, 59, Oxford Gardens, London, W.

Touching the Depths.

IT has been the aim of the London Central Wesleyan Mission to gather for worship a congregation that should be representative of the locality in which its operations are carried on. The extension of the premises at Clerkenwell render this practicable to a greater extent than has been possible hitherto.

The main building, opened last year, with its accommodation for the spacious school-room, lecture hall, dispensary for medical mission work, &c., are evidences of the growth and development of the Mission. At the heart of all the organizations there is a strong spiritual life, and the various organizations are closely knit in one common desire to promote the spiritual and eternal welfare of old and young. The Boys' Brigade, Slate Club, Thrift Society, are in a flourishing condition, and bear unmistakable testimony to the devotion and diligence of the workers associated with the Mission.

The services of the Sisters have proved of great benefit to many in trying and lonely circumstances, and the aged, as well as the young, have been cheered by visits, and many have been led through their instrumentality to in life. At the Liverpool Road Chapel, there is every sign of a revival of the prosperity of this time-honoured sanctuary. The transfer of the chapel premises to the Central Branch of the Mission has meant the creation of a new hope for the "cause," a stronger activity, and the awakening of a new spirit. The congregations have materially increased and the membership is steadily growing. The most hopeful sign, however, is the number of earnest inquirers at the services.

From the other branches of the Mission the news of progress is most reassuring, and the aggressive spiritual and social work, such as the neighbourhood requires, is being maintained with vigorous activity.

The superintendent of the Mission is Rev. John E. Wakerley, 19, Lloyd Square, Clerkenwell, E.C.

London City Mission Outing.

ON Friday last the City missionaries had their annual outing. Their destination, by G.E.R. from Liverpool Street, was Broxbourne. They were entertained with unstinted generosity by Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Barclay, at High Leigh, Hoddesdon. The missionaries greatly enjoyed themselves, and entered with zest into the various sports and pastimes provided.

A number of friends and sympathisers were present during the day, including Mr. F. A. Bevan, Mr. and Mrs. T. Fowell Buxton, Mr. and Miss Smith Bosanquet, Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Barclay, Revs. G. Campbell Morgan, E. W. Moore, P. S. Holland, George Martin. E. Bacheler Russell, and J. Sharp, Mr. Caleb Kemp, General Bruce, &c. The L.C.M. secretaries, Revs. R. Dawson and T. S. Hutchinson, were, of course, present with the heads of the office staff.

By an interesting display, Mr. Barclay's visitors were pleased to find that many of the missionaries have qualified themselves in the "First Aid" work of the St. John Ambulance Association, thus becoming able on emergency to minister to the bodily comfort and alleviation of victims of accidents occurring in the busy centres of over-crowded London. The missionary is more likely than most men to find occasions for usefulness of this kind. He is found in street and factory, omnibus yard and railway terminus, amid busy humanity at Billingsgate and Beckton; in fact, wherever men congregate for business or pleasure. There were five stretcher squads, and the missionaries proved their ability to temporarily set broken limbs, bind dangerous wounds, induce artificial respiration, swathe and soothe burns, and lift and remove the injured for skilled treatment at the hospital. Well-planned and executed, the display, with its realistic effects, evoked warm applause. Among the spectators there was both amusement and admiration, for there were several mock scenes of the "desperate situation" and "Help! Help!" kind.

Mr. Bevan, in distributing the St. John Ambulance certificates, remarked rightly that the missionary would be much more appreciated by the people generally if he were able not only to deal with difficulties of the soul, but, like his Master, could help in the healing of the body. A very pleasant feature was the singing by the Mission Choir, and after tea there were the customary speeches, in which Mr. Barclay and Mr. Bevan made many graceful allusions, enabling missionaries by their applause to show the warmth and depth of their gratitude for the signal favours which had characterized the day. Powerful addresses of exhortation and encouragement were given by Revs. E. W. Moore (Wimbledon), E. Bacheler Russell, and G. Campbell Morgan, each of whom showed keen sympathy with the work of the missionary, and took very practical and helpful lines of thought.

Russian Baptists and the Stundists.

DEAR SIR,—In your issue of March 22, Mr. Walter Morice protests against confounding the Dukhobortsi with the Quakers. His letter has suggested to me the wisdom of doing the same in the case of the Stundists and the Baptists. Our friends in England and America wrongly apply to us Baptists the name of "Stundists." I do not mean to dispute about mere names, but, as you will see, the names may affect our cause.

The clergy of the established Greek Orthodox Church, being hostile to any faith except their own, in derision call us Stundists, while our German brethren are called by them Baptists. This is not without a purpose on the part of the clergy. In 1894 a law was promulgated against Stundists, forbidding them to meet for worship, laying many restraints and social disabilities on them, and thus almost reducing to nought their rights as citizens and loyal subjects. This enactment refers to the Stundists properly so-called — a Pædobaptist Protestant sect with which the Baptists have no organic connection.

The Stundist body having ramified into minor sects, is now being swallowed up by the Baptist denomination, and consequently the Russian Greek Orthodox clergy are trying to identify us with real Stundists, in order to apply to us—the Baptists,—the above-mentioned law issued against the Stundists, in spite of our distinctive creed and practices. Whereas certain privileges were granted by the Russian civil law to the Baptists (without mentioning their origin or nationality) such as liberty of professing their faith, liberty of worship, and some civic abilities, the Russian Clergy are now attempting to deprive us of enjoying them, asserting that they refer exclusively to the "Baptists," but not to the "Stundists" or "Stundo-Baptists," as they would call us; viz., they refer only to the Baptists of German origin.

The English press, by calling us with a wrong name (Stundists), practically sanctions the casuistry of the Greek Orthodox clergy in denying us our proper denomination and the lawful privileges granted to it by a special Imperial decree. Having regard to the unfavourable consequences which may ensue owing to the above-said misnomer, let me say the Russian native Baptists are not to be called Stundists.—Yours truly,

A RUSSIAN BAPTIST.

Y.M.C.A.—Crane House, South Quay, Great Yarmouth, which the local Press describes as "a spacious mansion, containing large and lofty dining, reading, and assembly rooms, hot and cold bath, and bedroom accommodation for forty boarders," has just been opened as a Seaside Home, in connection with the Y.M.C.A. Young men visiting breezy Yarmouth, and requiring a good home at moderate terms, should apply to Mr. Edwards as above.

House of Rest.—At the gatherings on Friday last Mr. Henry Varley spoke in the afternoon on Luke xxi. 24. He emphasized the fact that the prediction of our Lord concerning the destruction of Jerusalem and the dispersal of the Jews until "the times of the Gentiles were fulfilled" was a guarantee of the fulfilment of his second prophecy that He should come again to reign over the earth. He thought that the end of the present age was close at hand. In the evening Rev. T. J. Hazzard, of Bow, and Mr. W. B. Sloan, of the China Inland Mission, gave short addresses.

Evangelistic.

The Evangelization Society.

As the years roll on, organizations of long-standing are seen to pass into obscurity or entirely disappear. To some institutions, however, the lapse of years brings evidence of vigorous growth and development; in this class we find the Evangelization Society, which happily maintains its old position. The annual report is a record that will appeal to many who have doubts as to whether the work of evangelization is prosecuted with becoming earnestness and devotion.

The men who have taken part in the conflict with sin, under the auspices of the Society, called of God to the service of the Gospel, have sought

TO LIFT UP CHRIST CRUCIFIED.

The records of incidents tell of divine blessing following in various centres of activity.

The testimony of clergymen and ministers respecting missions conducted by evangelists of the Society is full of encouragement. The earnestness, faithfulness, and ability of these servants of God and witnesses of Jesus Christ have resulted in numbers being brought to repentance, believers have been refreshed, and the faint-hearted strengthened and encouraged.

Of the number of missions conducted it is unnecessary to give details. Some fifty or sixty are proceeding weekly. The preaching of the Gospel, in simplicity and sincerity, in districts often difficult and trying, has been devoid of sensationalism and extravagance.

No branch of the work has been more honoured than the tent missions. During last year fifty-four tents were in use. Two hundred and nine missions were thus conducted under canvas by sixty-one evangelists, involving between 4,000 and 5,000 addresses, at a cost of £3,000. Many cheering communications as to the of missions have been forthcoming. One of these, from Middlesbrough, reads: "We started here in a very small way, with an audience of not more than 150; but the numbers very soon increased, and long before the end of the mission the huge tent, holding 1,500 people, was full, and the sight on the last two Sunday nights, when the sides of the tent had to be taken down, will not soon be forgotten."

From Blackburn a correspondent writes: "During the whole time the meetings were held there was a manifest working of the Spirit of God, and we have cause to rejoice that not a few were converted, while many believers were led on in the truth, which was so richly and clearly set forth night after night." During the winter the evangelists of the Society were engaged in the Glasgow Campaign, and in addition to united missions in public halls, &c., preachers are frequently supplied to various churches and chapels throughout the kingdom.

All information respecting the Evangelization Society may be obtained from the hon. sec., Mr. John Wood, 21, Surrey Street, Strand, W.C.

Mr. Charles Noakes at Northampton.

During the past four weeks we have experienced a work of grace at Northampton in connection with a Gospel Tent Mission, conducted by Mr. Chas. Noakes, of the Evangelization Society. The tent was pitched in the lowest part of the town, and has been filled each week-day night, while on the Sundays crowds have stood outside listening to the Word of life. More than ninety persons have openly testified to their acceptance of the Lord Jesus, and these are being gathered into the various churches. Testimony is forthcoming to the effect that the whole neighbourhood in which the Mission was held has felt the power of God. Many outside the influence of the churches have been induced to attend the meetings, and some of these have been led to God. J. H.

London Tent Campaign.

THE meetings at Stratford have grown in interest until there is really a great revival of God's work. Monday night being the final meeting, a great mass of people had gathered together. On Sunday night it was said that the field outside the tent appeared to be full of people. On Monday night the earnestness was indescribable. At eight o'clock, before there had been any preaching, the platform was surrounded by anxious souls kneeling and weeping. Everyone seemed desirous of blessing, this last night of the tent. One man said, "I should have liked to get out of the midst of the crowd last night at the door of the tent, but the press was too great." Under conviction of sin, he would have gone away, but he said, "I could not move," and now he was praising God for having saved his soul. The power of God seemed to pervade the meeting in a wonderful manner. The burden of all hearts seemed the salvation of souls. Requests for prayer were made in scores for friends and relatives, and the number of written requests kept pouring on to the platform, until it was quite impossible to read them, and Mr. Garstin simply held them up before the Lord in bulk.

After very short preaching, a number held up their hands for prayer, intimating thereby that they wished to be saved. We had been praying for revival; surely God's reviving power was amongst us. It was hard to get the people to depart from the tent after the meeting terminated. The meeting closed with many expressions of regret that the tent had to be removed. This was, indeed, a mighty scene of salvation, and we pray that God's people will take up the work. Many of our hearts are exceedingly sad that, with this great open door, the work should have to be abandoned; but God is sufficient to carry on his own work. May the hearts of the Christians in Stratford be so exercised that they cannot rest, seeing that the Holy Spirit's power is being so much exercised in their midst. May the desire for souls still increase, until Stratford churches shall be aflame with the fire of God. The names of the many converts are being distributed to the several pastors in the district, as well as mission halls.

Further reports of these meetings are given by the workers engaged, at the Aldersgate Street Noon Prayer Meeting, from 12 to 1 o'clock every Wednesday. It is impossible to describe the scenes in many of the tents. We would conscientiously say that many hundreds are finding the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. Nine large tents are in full work. We ask the prayers of God's people. A. G.

At Wood Green tent, on Sunday evening last, Mr. W. Grove preached and the people were impressed. There have been many interesting cases of conversion at this tent. The writer asked one of a group of three or four young women if she were converted, and she replied, "Yes, in the tent a fortnight since. These are my two friends that have come with me to-night, and they are also converted." God has done a wonderful work at Wood Green. All the converts are directed to join some evangelical body.

Reports from other tents are more or less similar, and generally encouraging.

Rev. Robert Wood, of Albemarle Baptist Church, Scarboro', has been conducting missions in the churches in the United States, holding special services in New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh. Much blessing has attended the preaching of the Word.

At the request of Miss Robinson, a worker of the London City Mission recently undertook the charge of a spiritual effort among the Militia at Aldershot. A promising start has been made; several men have decided to follow Christ, and a number of pledges have been taken. Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelization Society, has concluded a fruitful mission at Bacton. Many who had not attended a place of worship for years were seen in the meetings. It is nearly thirty years since Mr. Harris first missioned in this neighbourhood.

Among the evangelists who take permanent or occasional part in the campaign are Messrs. Leonard Weaver, Henry Varley, C. Inglis, William Grove, J. T. Vine, Van de Venter, J. S. Brunning, Newton Jones, the Brothers Weaver, and S. Levermore.

To Cyclists. Christian workers who may be cycling in the neighbourhood of Mortlake are invited to assist at the Tent meetings being held by the Evangelistic Mission each night (except Saturday) at 8 o'clock. The Tent is at the corner of Howgate and Vernon Roads (near the Railway Station).

Request for Prayer.

Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Alexander, evangelists, ask prayers for the restoration to health of their second son, the Imperial Yeomanry Hospital Staff, Deelfontein, who is ill with rheumatic fever.

The late W. S. Greig.

William Sibree Greig, who passed away at Bercy, Paris, on the 2nd inst., was the eldest son of Rev. C. E. Greig, director of the M'All Mission in France. Though only seventeen years of age, he had won the affection and esteem of all around him by his bright Christian character, and in the Lycée Charlemagne, one of the great public schools of Paris, his influence had made itself felt. M. Théodore Monod, who officiated at the funeral service in the Protestant Church of Bercy, mentioned that a few weeks previously he had been present at a Christian Endeavour meeting held in that church, when nearly all the members offered prayer. He was particularly struck by the brief petition put up by Willie Greig, to the following effect: "O Lord, Thou knowest that my schoolfellows tell me that religion is out of date (démodée). Help me to show them that it is not dead, but is living and active." The funeral was largely attended by friends of the M'All Mission and members of the church at Bercy, which is almost entirely composed of converts of the mission. Much sympathy is felt for the family of Mr. Greig.

Correction.—The mention of Dr. Cuyler in Dr. Weymouth's letter on Atonement in our last was made under a misapprehension. Dr. Cuyler did not advocate making Atonement—At-one-ment—but on the contrary "referred with sorrow and indignation to the article on the New Reformation," in which this view appeared. See The Christian, March 22 (page 19).

Temperance Summer School.—At the Temperance Summer School, recently held at Torquay, under the auspices of the Women's Total Abstinence Union, Dr. Annie McCall and Dr. Odell pointed out the effects of alcohol on the human body. Mr. W. N. Edwards interested the audiences with illustrated lectures on the chemistry of alcohol, the licensing laws were discussed by Mr. C. L. Rothera, Miss E. M. Davies lectured on hygiene, and Miss A. M. Holder on elocution. Meetings dealing with popular topics were held in the evenings. The interest in the school deepened from day to day, and the promoters believe that a lasting influence for good has been brought to bear upon the students.

A Missionary Exhibition.—At St. Peter's, Islington, a deep interest in the welfare of foreign missionary work has been manifested for some years past, and a number of missionary sales have been held with a view to raising funds. "This year," writes the vicar, Rev. F. Trevelyan Snow, "a missionary exhibition was held, managed by Mr. Malaher, of the Missionary Leaves Association, who fitted up our inner school-room as a Chinese guest-room, in which Misses Hooke and Jukes gave missionary talks. Addresses were also given on the work in North and South America. The sale realized over £50. Three workers from our parish are now in the foreign field; three more are in training. Two have offered (one of whom we hope to adopt as our own missionary, if she be accepted), and others are waiting on God, that He may make his will and way plain for them."

About Books.

The sixth volume of The New Penny Magazine (2s. 6d. Cassell & Co.) is a big budget of wholesome reading.

The Anglo-Saxon Guide to the 1900 Paris Exhibition is a useful publication. The letterpress is accompanied by many illustrations, maps, and plans. (1s. nett. Boot & Son, 24, Old Bailey.)

Civilization and Foreign Missions is a thoughtful booklet by Rev. George Alex. Allan, M.A. (Elliot Stock). The pages review the subject in various aspects, and from the standpoint of warm sympathy.

A Brave Poor Thing, by L. T. Meade. This story recounts the hardships and difficulties which befell a member of the Guild of the Brave Poor Things, and the way in which they were overcome. (3s. 6d. Isbister.)

The hero of The Magic Word is Prince Cardella, an Italian landed proprietor, whose character is outlined not without care and versatility. The narrative depicts the feelings of youth and a freshness of life in many aspects. (3s. 6d. Isbister.)

"An Aged Pilgrim" gives us much that is wise and good, in poetical form, in Thoughts and Observations: Sacred and Secular. Some nursery rhymes are added. A sound spirituality pervades the booklet. (1s. 6d. W. H. & L. Collingridge.)

Resources and Responsibilities (6s. Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.) is a volume of sermons of exceptional interest and practical value. We regret, however, to note sacramentarian teaching, which compromises the Evangelical character of the more general contents.

The words and works of the Evangelicals of the seventeenth century must now and again be rehearsed; and among welcome attempts to secure attention for them we place a substantial booklet, What England owes to the Puritans, by Rev. S. B. Handley. (6d. nett. H. R. Allenson.)

Pretoria Day is a handsome folded card, with a portrait of Lord Roberts as frontispiece, and Psalm xxiv. printed in bold type on the fly-leaf. The publication directs attention to the highest view of the South African conflict. (2s. per 100. Scripture Gift Mission, 15, Strand, W.C.)

The half-yearly volume of Little Folks (3s. 6d. Cassells) is as bright as ever. Some of the pictures are coloured, and the general contents appeal to various stages in the great world of youth. There is no need to praise a publication which has so long enjoyed such a high reputation.

In Glorious Gospel Triumphs (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly) we have a singularly readable narrative of the life and work of John Watsford in Fiji and Australasia. The pages are alive with observation and incident, and here is an admirable portrait of the venerable author. The book is in reality the autobiography of a warm-hearted Methodist preacher.

Rev. W. T. Gidney, M.A., has written another work on the Jewish Mission—At Home and Abroad: A Description of the English and Continental Missions of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. (1s. Office of the Society, 16, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.) The pages are historical as well as descriptive, and there are numerous illustrations.

The Sun-Children's Budget is a quarterly without a rival in its line. It discourses in the brightest manner, and with blue letter on fine paper, upon botany as a juvenile interest and pleasure. The second volume is as good as the first; and more cannot be said. Edited by Phœbe Allen and Dr. Henry W. Godfrey, this is in every way a choice publication. (3s. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.)

Rev. Robert Middleton, author of "The Experiences of a Country Curate," knows what it is to encounter Ritualistic opposition, and has experienced somewhat of the delivering mercy of God. He is also able to tell of spiritual signs following his work in the city of Norwich. These and other matters are outlined in an attractive manner in his recent booklet, Some Experiences of a City Rector. (6d. Jarrold & Sons.) The pages deserve many readers.

God and Thyself: A Treatise on Godly Living. By Gerhard Tersteegen. (1s. Edinburgh: Christian Literature Company, 3, Lochrin Terrace; London: Nisbet & Co.) This booklet outlines a spiritual philosophy which will find a response in many a thoughtful heart. First we have an unfolding of "True Wisdom," then "A Soliloquy" on life and duty; lastly, a word-picture of "Our Exemplar." To read these pages is a very profitable exercise.

A substantial book in its line is Fifty-two Addresses to Young Folk, by Rev. James Learmount. Preachers who are in the habit of making talks to the young will find helpful material here. An index of anecdotes and illustrations is a useful feature. (3s. 6d. H. R. Allenson.)

Dr. Robertson Nicoll's Calls to Christ is a little work of great value. It is specially designed to help inquirers. Many Gospel workers have found it of service when placed in the hands of the anxious. There are not too many good books having such purpose. This is distinguished by a freshness of thought and expression calculated to arrest attention to the "calls." That a new edition has been published will doubtless be welcome news to many. (1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

For Cloudy Days; being Words of Comfort for those in Sorrow—has been compiled by Harriet E. Colvile, in the hope of being found helpful to the large circles that have been plunged into anxiety and pain by the war in South Africa. The pages present Scripture passages, and choice extracts, both in prose and verse, of a kind calculated to encourage those in suspense, and strengthen such as are bereaved. Alike in design and execution, this is a good book, the compiler's own contributions being uniformly excellent. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

Dr. Louis Albert Banks, of Cleveland, Ohio, has added another to his series of volumes of revival sermons—David and His Friends (6s.). The discourses number thirty-one, and they are based on great sayings and scenes of the Old Testament. There is a pointedness about these utterances that justifies the description "revival" sermons. Another book by the same author is Twentieth Century Knighthood, a series of addresses to young men (3s.) These pages present sound principles and enforce good counsels for life. (Funk & Wagnalls Co.)

Principles for Churchmen, by the late Bishop Ryle, is a volume deserving of serious attention at the present time. A fourth edition, revised, containing the Bishop's farewell letter to the diocese of Liverpool, is before us. On the title page, the book is described as "a manual of positive statements on some subjects of controversy, with an explanatory introduction on the pressing dangers which beset the Church of England." It is this in all seriousness; and the subjects are of importance to all Christians, to whatsoever communion they may belong. (2s. 6d. nett. C. J. Thynne.)

Worship in the Christian Church: Sermons preached at All Saints, Margaret Street, in 1898 and 1899, by William Allen Whitworth. (Sampson Low, Marston, & Co.) These pages present worship as something essentially mechanical. They speak of Holy Church, and the Divine Office, "reciting daily mattins," and so forth. The author's historical deductions are in some cases flagrantly unreasonable. The worship which he describes is such as belongs, not to the Christian, but to the High Church, and in that sense the title of the book requires qualification.

The Dual Land: being a Collection of Verses from many sources for the Great Family of those who have been, who are, and who may be Bereaved. (10s. 6d. Elliot Stock.) To present in an accessible and somewhat connected form poems and hymns dwelling on the main aspects of bereavement has been the aim of the compiler of this handsome volume. Writers of all ages and many lands are represented in the pages, and cheerfulness is the predominating note. The selections relate to death and paradise, resurrection, and eternity, and there are copious indices of authors, titles, and first lines. This is a book which will be welcomed in many a shadowed home.

Dr. Moule's volume of sermons, The Secret of His Presence, is a spiritual feast. The discourses were delivered in various pulpits and at long intervals, but they all strike a high key-note. The life of consecration is kept well to the front. A sermon preached in February last is entitled "England Chastened in Love," and has reference to the South African war. Another discourse commemorates "Two Cambridge Saints: Nicholas Ridley and Henry Martyn." This choice volume is lovingly inscribed to Rev. Charles A. Fox, incumbent of Eaton Chapel, London. (3s. 6d. Seeley & Co.)

Rev. John Brownlie has for some years been giving to the world religious poetry of a high order. Of late he has done much to promote a deepened interest in classic hymns. Now he gives us Hymns of the Greek Church: Translated, with Introduction and Notes. (2s. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) Mr. Brownlie speaks of his translations as "a very earnest attempt to acquaint English readers still further with the valuable praise literature which lies buried in the service books of the Greek Church;" and he informs us that, of the forty-seven pieces presented, thirty-five appear for the first time in English verse. These facts, taken in conjunction with the intense sympathy of Mr. Brownlie's renderings, invest this volume with peculiar value.

The Holy Spirit and Christian Service, by Rev. J. B. Robertson, M.A., D.Sc., of North Berwick, is a timely contribution to the study of a theme of essential importance. Quite recently the conviction has been expressed that the place and work of the Holy Spirit is but slightly recognised in religious literature. This substantial volume will meet the needs of many as an orderly treatment of its subject. The substance of the book was originally placed, in the form of lectures, before students of the Christian Workers' Training Institute, Edinburgh. As expanded and completed, the work contains eleven chapters, and from first to last the pages are loyal to Scripture, and true to Christian experience. In a word, doctrine and practice are faithfully combined, and the book is as helpful as it is undoubtedly timely. (3s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

The Baptist Church Hymnal, issued by the "Psalms and Hymns" Trust, is a publication characterized by many useful features. Among these may be noted: (1) The grouping, within the sections, of hymns and tunes of the same metre, so that these appear on a opening and afford considerable choice of tunes; (2) The extensive selection of hymns for children; (3) A large number of metrical litanies in the chant book; (4) The pointing of the chants being arranged in columns, thus facilitating congregational singing; (5) The use of the Revised Version (of the Old Testament) as being more lyrical and in more modern English; and (6) The arrangement of the anthems in sections, thus affording easy and appropriate selection. Other points combine to make this work, which has been several years in course of compilation, one which churches of the Baptist order will readily adopt. The old notation music edition is ready (4s. 6d. upwards); there are several editions of words only (8d. upwards), the "standard," in bold type, containing, in addition to full indexes, particulars of various readings in the hymns, also biographical notes—a very welcome feature. The combined book contains 802 hymns and 716 different tunes, 254 chants, and 127 anthems.

Students of ecclesiastical history will find much that is striking and of present interest in The Church: Past and Present—a Review of its History, by various writers; edited by Rev. H. M. Gwatkin, D.D., Dixie Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Cambridge. (7s. 6d. nett. Nisbet & Co.) Thirteen in number, these essays are devoted to great epochs, parties, and schools. "The Apostolic Age," by Rev. J. Llewellyn Davies, is followed by "The Second Century," by the Editor, who also writes on "The Latin Church," "The Origins of Church Government," and "Protestantism." Rev. Dr. Bigg contributes "The School of Alexandria;" Rev. G. A. Schneider, "The Age of Councils;" and Professor W. E. Collins, "England before the Reformation." Two bishops are among the writers—the Bishop of London, whose subject is "The Reformation;" and Bishop Barry, who concludes the volume with a paper on "English Christianity To-day." Other chapters are: "The Rise of Dissent in England," by Rev. Dr. J. Hunt; "History of the Lord's Supper," by Rev. Canon Meyrick; and "Romanism since the Reformation," by Rev. Chancellor Lias. There is nothing narrow in the pages; the impression made by the book is altogether wholesome. Christ is greater than the Church, and the Church is more than an organization. The chapters by the Editor are robust in statement; the article on Dissent is a model of respectful treatment. Though not written in a controversial style, this is emphatically a book for the present times, and calculated by its judicious tone to help some who have imbibed Romanist notions of the Church and Christian doctrine.

WORSHIP: What is It? is a thoughtful little book, by Cortopaxi. (4d. W. G. Wheeler.) It discusses the object of worship, also the place and manner; and from first to last the appeal is to Holy Scripture.

A timely booklet is A VOICE FROM MAFEKING, in which Rev. Charles Bullock deals with the social and religious needs of the masses, and describes various "Mafekings at home." (1d. "Home Words" Office.)

THE PERSONAL IMPULSE IN TEMPERANCE WORK is a sermon by Rev. Alexander Mackennal, D.D., in aid of the Manchester, Salford, and District Temperance Union. (1d. Sherratt & Hughes, Manchester.)

THE FACE AT THE WINDOW is a stirring tale by Mrs. G. S. Reaney. It reproduces scenes and incidents only too frequently met with by those who labour in the temperance cause. (1d. Houlston & Sons.)

The June issue of THE NEW LIGHT (½d. W. A. Keyse & Co., Peckham, S.E.), the monthly organ of the National Prohibition Party, is a ventilation of many evils which blight the history and mar the prospects of civilized communities.

A HAPPY BOY, a striking narrative by Rev. E. Payson Hammond, has been issued, in the form of an illustrated folding-card, for circulation among young people. (One half-penny. A. Stevenson & Co., 9, North Bank Street, Edinburgh.)

Rev. William Burnet has written a suggestive and timely booklet, WHAT IS THE REAL PRESENCE? The question is answered by the expression of views justified by the declarations of Christ and his Apostles. (Stoneman, 39, Warwick Lane.)

The Howard Association have added to their numerous publications a pamphlet on THE RURAL EXODUS, AND BACK TO THE LAND, dealing with the social and economic disadvantages of the subject. (5, Bishopsgate Without, London, E.C.)

Mr. Silas Henn's latest pamphlet is THE CHURCH VERGING TOWARDS THE APOSTASY. (3d. The Author, 4, Himley Road Dudley, Worcs.). The inconsistencies of professing Christians, and the preversities of many church organizations, furnish material for these warning pages.

Personal Dealing.

DEAR SIR,—The great evangelists have always recognised the importance of personal dealing with the unconverted—work which is not peculiar to the preacher, but which effectively supplements his own, and is possible where he is never heard. Probably nothing would prove a greater blessing to the world than the general extension of this work by means of some union and method practicable everywhere.

What if, in recollection and imitation of the first great example of such endeavour, an "Andrew and Philip Society" were formed, by the simple engagement of its members privately to present the grace and claim of Christ to one person, at least once a week, by tract or spoken word, or both? The promise might refer to a week, while the purpose and the practice would belong, almost certainly, to every day.

The reasonableness and use of pledges need no proof. Total Abstinence and the Christian Endeavour Societies have depended upon them for cohesion and power, while the principle is confessed by every member of a Christian church. The bond should be real, and yet as elastic as its purpose will allow. The benefit to self would be committal, reminder, habit and fruitfulness; to other Christians—example, encouragement, fellowship; to the world—an increase of testimony and service.

An Andrew and Philip Society would unite habitual soul-gatherers all over the world, increase their number and the joy and power of their endeavour. Reports might be invited, and the most striking results collected, as illustrative means of evangelism, while conferences of members might periodically further the work.—Yours faithfully, MATHETES.

Sunday Cycling Excursions.

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to call the attention of your readers to the latest amongst the countless schemes put forth for the secularizing of the Lord's Day, and to ask for their moral influence and practical help in resistance? Let me also ask your readers to take courage in fighting the enemies of the Lord's Day, and to remember that mainly by Christian influences during the past year seven-day newspapers have been suppressed; the bold conspiracy for running the Crystal Palace seven days a week was exposed and crushed; and the London Board Schools, captured one month by the Sunday secularizers, were recaptured by the defenders of the Lord's Day two months after.

This latest scheme is put forth by the "Road and Path Cycling Association," as follows, in recent advertisements:—"The Council offer prizes in 1900 of the value of three guineas each in foreign hotel coupons and foreign railway tickets, for best attendance at Saturday and Sunday runs to all centres having not less than twenty members." Then, in another part of the advertisment (in order doubtless to satisfy young people who still have some conscience left as to the duty of public worship), amongst the advantages of the Association set forth are "Sunday rides having for a specific object attendance at places of public worship."

Can any movement be more destructive to the religious life of a nation than these organized Sunday excursions? An earnest friend writes of this scheme: "It means profound mischief more than appears on its face." Surely rail servants and the inn-keepers and barmen and young women, and other toilers who work such long hours on week-days, should be protected against Sunday labour. I sound this note of alarm for the day of rest in the hope that the same great forces which have crushed other powerful attempts to seize the Lord's Day for secular purposes may be stirred to action against this latest attack on the people's day of national rest.—Your obedient servant, CHARLES HILL.

Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, 12, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.

The Revised Version.—At the ensuing Wesleyan Methodist Conference, a discussion is to take place regarding the use of the Revised Version in public worship.

The Churches.

Church of England.

The new Mission Church of St. Barnabas, which is to serve as a chapel-of-ease to Mossley Hill Parish Church, has been dedicated by the Bishop of Liverpool. As a chapel-of-ease to Mossley Hill Church, it will serve a portion of the parish of St. Matthew and St. James, which is very thickly populated. Rev. R. B. De Wolf has been appointed to take charge of the new church and district.

The summer meeting of the Islington Ruridecanal Conference has been held, Rev. Prebendary Barlow, D.D, presiding. There was a good attendance, especially of laity. Chancellor P. V. Smith, LL.D., dealt with the subject of "The Reform of Convocation," and in an able speech recommended a larger representation of the parochial clergy, beneficed and unbeneficed; and the election of a house of laymen as part of Convocation, with equal powers of voting. An interesting discussion followed.

In connection with the Men's Service at St. James-the-Less, Bethnal Green, the annual "open" service was recently held, on which occasion the men were invited to bring their wives. The church was crowded. The vicar (Rev. J. E. Watts-Ditchfield) gave an address on "Home: Babel or Bethel, which?" dealing with those details of home life which do so much to make homes either happy or miserable. The Men's Service has taken a firm hold on the neighbourhood, and is increasing the communicants of the church.

The Bishop of Newcastle has, through the Diocesan Gazette, addressed a letter to the clergy and laity of the diocese, with reference to the Church Congress to be held at Newcastle the last week in September. The first Newcastle Congress, the Bishop points ont, held in 1881, was followed in 1882 by the completion of the movement for the establishment of the diocese of Newcastle-on-Tyne. "Let us prove in 1900," he adds, "that the diocese has been for the extension of the Master's Kingdom, and is prepared to take its due share in the growth of the Church and the evangelization of the world.

Congregational.

The dinner-hour services held every Wednesday at Bishopsgate Chapel are proving encouraging. During the remainder of July the services will be conducted by Revs. W. J. Dawson, Benjamin J. Gibbon, and T. Dixon Rutherford.

Centenary services have been held in connection with the church at Beaconsfield. Three of the past ministers—Revs. J. Duthie (Blackburn), M. H. Le Pla (Kingsland), and H. W. Summers (Reading)—took part in the meetings. It was pointed out that, although it was the centenary of the present church, yet a Nonconformist cause (Congregational) existed in Beaconsfield as far back as 1725.

Resignation.—Rev. H. W. James, Radcliffe.

Calls (accepted).—Rev. W. Alfred Allan, of Fowey, to Nailsworth; Rev. J. Hoatson, late of Melbourne, to Leek.

Baptist.

Rev. J. Bradford, of Leytonstone, intimates that the stone-laying of the new London Baptist Association Church at East Ham is to take place on the 19th inst.

At the quarterly meetings of the London Baptist Association, held last week at Fillebrook Chapel, Leytonstone, a resolution was passed commending to the churches the suggestion that Sunday, October 14, should be set aside as Baptist Union Sunday, and that collections be taken for the Century Fund.

At the twenty-fifth anniversary of the erection of Enfield Tabernacle, the pastor (Rev. Geo. W. White) was in the vestry during the day to receive the thank-offerings of his people, the amount realized being about £30. In the evening a sermon was preached by Rev. G. P. McKay, of Stoke Newington, Rev. W. Cuff being absent owing to continued indisposition.

Out of a large number of candidates six have been elected to enter Bristol College in September next. Two students who have been four years in the institution are to have twelve months' practical training before resuming collegiate life—Mr. W. H. Stradling, under Rev. H. E. Blomfield, at Coventry, and Mr. V. H. C. Russell, under Rev. J. Baillie, at Cardiff. The following have begun their work as pastors:—Mr. A. T. Matthews, at Brecon; Mr. W. H. Spinks, at Kirkcaldy; Mr. O. Ayres, at Nailsworth, Glos.; and Mr. W. Linton, at Leicester. Mr. G. Hooper sails for the Congo in the middle of July.

The annual meetings of the North Wales English Baptist Union were held last week at the English Baptist Church, Groes, Ruabon, there being a large number of ministers and delegates present from the respective churches comprised in the area of the union. Rev. Gomer Evans, Holyhead, presided, the subject of his opening address being "Our Churches and the Young People." Rev. J. Raymond (secretary), Llandudno, submitted an encouraging report.

Call (accepted).—Rev. Peter Miller, Nantwich, to York Road, Leeds.

Methodist.

On Saturday afternoon last, memorial stones were laid of extensions to the Lytham Wesleyan Church and schools, which are estimated to cost £6,000.

Rev. J. Cockin has accepted a unanimous invitation to remain a twenty-fifth year as minister of the Truro Circuit of the Free Methodist Church. Though an "itinerant" minister, Mr. Cockin has had no other ministerial sphere of labour than his present location, to which he went from college in 1876. He is well known throughout Cornwall, where he has done substantial service.

At City Road Wesleyan Chapel, Chester, anniversary services were conducted by Rev. T. Waugh, Connexional Evangelist. Last year, at the anniversary, also conducted by Mr. Waugh, a corporal of the Lancashire Regiment professed conversion; he was severely wounded at Spion Kop, and his letters home testify to his continuous trust in Christ. This year another soldier, who had been influenced by the corporal, sought the Saviour.

Presbyterian.

The new church at Felixstowe, erected at a cost of £4,000, has been opened by Dr. John Watson. At the inaugural service, Dr. Watson said the debt on the building was £1,800. The offertory amounted to £285. The site was presented by Mr. Peter Leckie, for many years an elder at St. John's Wood, and the church will accommodate 500 worshippers.

Rev. R. E. Welsh, of Brondesbury, writes as Moderator of Presbytery, with reference to a visit to East London:—"At East India Road there was an attendance that almost filled the church. It was very gratifying to see that in the East End, where it is usually understood we have only weak congregations, good work brings hearty response and encouraging results."

The annual collection on behalf of work on the Continent is to be made on Sunday next. An account of the past year's operations says:—In France the need of the Gospel continues as great as ever, and the opportunities of proclaiming it by evangelists and colporteurs seem to be steadily increasing. We have lately received a very interesting account from the secretary of the Evangelical Society of Geneva of the growing demand for their colporteurs throughout France. In Belgium the need of increased help to our self-sacrificing brethren of the Christian Missionary Church continues very great, but we have only been able to continue our former grant. In Italy the Waldensian Church prosecutes its great work with encouragement and success.

Resignation—Rev. John Brown, Seaton Delaval.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. JOHN WILKINSON, senior deacon of Grosvenor Street Congregational Church, Manchester, with which and Roby Schools he had been connected for about fifty years.—Aged seventy-seven, Mr. HENRY COOPER, of Swadlincote: an esteemed member of the Baptist body.—Rev. JAMES KELLY, of Dalmarnock Parish Church, Glasgow, who died suddenly on a recent Sunday evening.—Rev. W. HARRIS, D.D., first president of the Wesleyan Local Preachers' Mutual Aid Association.—A young medical missionary in Rajputana, Dr. JOHN WHITEHOUSE, of the Presbyterian Mission, died of cholera at Taragurh, Ajmere, on June 18 last. Dr. Whitehouse was only in his eighth year of missionary service, and till the morning of the 18th seemed in good health. He had for some time been finding a special joy in attending to little waifs rescued from starvation, and at an earlier period he nursed some of them through cholera.—Aged seventy-two, Rev. FLAVEL SMITH COOK, D.D., formerly vicar of Christ Church, Clifton, who was the subject of deep sympathy twenty-five years ago when prosecuted for refusing the holy communion to a parishioner whom he had reason to suspect of rationalistic views. Dr. Cook was more recently chaplain of the Lock Hospital, and had published sermons on Universalism and Annihilation.—Rev. R. R. FORLONG, rector of Hemley, Woodbridge, Suffolk, aged forty-three.—Rev. A. B. SIMPSON, rector of Fittleworth, and Prebendary of Chichester Cathedral, aged seventy-two. He was ordained in 1851, and had spent the whole of his ministerial life in Sussex.

Children of India.

A SOCIETY for the Protection of Children, similar to the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children in England, was formed in Calcutta last year, with the Hon. Justice Pratt as president. The need for such a Society is great. Some may doubt this, as people have always doubted the need for the National Society in every new district into which it has been introduced, until experience has abundantly shown the contrary. The causes are various, but are found in every country. In India, especially in the case of little girls, abundant cause can be shown, as the writer, who has just returned from Calcutta after forty year's residence in India, can testify.

The Society has made a small beginning, but it is felt that, to make it a success, there is need of a secretary who can give his whole time to the work. The committee would be glad to have one who has had experience of the work in England, but this might involve more expense than a young institution could afford. They hope, however, that when the need is fully understood, someone may be found who would go out, at least for two or three years, at his own expense. If there be such a one amongst your readers, he would have a most hearty welcome in Calcutta, and if he would correspond with the writer, more particulars could be given and communication opened with the committee. For further details apply to Rev. B. Waugh, 7, Harpur Street, W.C., or to the writer. I am, &c., JOHN P. ASHTON.

A Missionary's Bungalow Burnt.—Rev. J. Nelson, acting chaplain of the Church of Scotland at Lucknow, sends an account of the destruction by fire of his bungalow. Mr. Nelson writes:—"The greatest loss is that of all my books, many of them the gifts of friends when I left for India in 1876. Some were from Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, besides works of Rev. F. B. Meyer, Mr. Moody, and others. Our family Bible and all our smaller Bibles, hymn books, etc., were destroyed, as well as the tracts and periodicals which I had for the hospital. If any of your readers should feel inclined to help me in the matter I should be grateful." The origin of the fire is unknown. Happily, there was no loss of life. Mr. Nelson's address is, 5, The Mall, Dilrusha, Lucknow, India.

The Rev. F. B. MEYER'S NEW BOOK is dedicated to the Members of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour.

He says:—"At the close of the happy year of my Presidency of the British Christian Endeavour Societies and on the eve of the great London Convention, I inscribe this book to Christian Endeavourers." (Signed) F. B. Meyer

THE PROPHET OF HOPE:

STUDIES IN ZECHARIAH. A New Expository Work, by Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

With Lifelike Portrait of the Author.

CLOTH BOARDS 2s. 6d.

CLOTH BEVELLED BOARDS, GILT EDGES, 3s. 6d.

Mr. Meyer says in the PREFACE:—"It has been my single aim to give the salient features and lessons of each chapter, with the object of alluring the Bible-student to a more searching and careful acquaintance with this Prophet.

"As one who has found spoil, which he would fain share, the author writes across this prophetic treatise, Dig Here; and hopes that many will be attracted by Zechariah's holy and eager spirit, through which God spake.

"The title of this little book lays stress on one thought which pervades the prophecy of Zechariah. He is pre-eminently the Prophet, as Peter is the Apostle, of Hope."

By his Son, W. R. MOODY.

CLOTH BOARDS, 10s. 6d.,

or, in Cloth Bevelled Boards, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

592 pages, Super Royal 8vo, including over ONE HUNDRED ILLUSTRATIONS, with Portraits and Views specially reserved for this Volume.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS:

"The story is told so that we see the whole man. . . . The narrative is brightened throughout by a great variety of characteristic anecdotes and sayings, most of which will be fresh to the general public. This volume is

"Mr. W. R. Moody has ably discharged the filial duty of giving to the world of his father. No one can study it without feeling impressed by the uniqueness of the evangelist's personality, and by the striking results he achieved during his life of self-sacrifice and devotion."—Leeds Mercury.

"THE RECORD OF MOODY'S UNTIRING ACTIVITY in evangelistic campaigns, of his Northfield Schools and Conferences, of his life at home, of his ways of work, and many other interesting details, will be found in this biography by his son."—Christian World.

"THE BOOK CERTAINLY DESERVES AND WILL WELL REPAY PERUSAL.

It will be particularly helpful and illuminating to those who are engaged in 'teaching and preaching a living Gospel to a world of dying men and women.'"—Daily Chronicle.

SOME PERSONAL TESTIMONIES:

Mr. IRA D. SANKEY says:—

"This biography will prove very satisfactory to Mr. Moody's friends. It will be to the millions who knew of his work and were interested in it."

Dr. N. DWIGHT HILLIS says:

"A FAITHFUL, INTERESTING, AND DISCRIMINATING STUDY. All who loved Mr. Moody will be charmed by his son's story."

Rev. Dr. CUYLER says:—

"I have just finished reading your truly admirable Life of your glorious father; and

IT MORE THAN SATISFIES ME.

Biography is difficult work, especially when the author is embarrassed by either a sad lack, or (as in your case) by an over-abundance of material. Your method of classifying the salient features of such a wonderful career under various heads, is very happy and successful. I hope to see its circulation run up to a million."

Incapacity.

Psa. lv. 22.

I AM not able, Lord, to bear
The burden on my shoulders laid;
For there is none the load to share,
And all my soul is sore afraid
That I must faint beneath the cross,
And so thy cause shall suffer loss.

Isa. l. 4.

I am not able, Lord, to speak
The message these poor souls desire.
My head is dull, my voice is weak,
My heart is ice that should be fire,
And so they shall no aid receive
Who in my power to help believe.

Isa. xli. 13.

I am not able, Lord, to hold
The hands stretched out to grasp my own.
I cannot gather to thy fold
The foolish flock which wanders lone.
Yet, oh, how gladly would I keep,
And watch, and tend thy erring sheep!

Isa. xxxviii. 14.

I am not able—I am thine.
Lo! every power is thine to use;
And all this precious work of mine
It is thy work—do not refuse
To undertake its care for me,
Whose utter weakness Thou canst see.

Isa. xlix. 4; Phil. iv. 13.

I am not able; but Thou art,
O Christ, who makest tumult cease.
Come, and fill up this aching heart
With resignation, faith, and peace.
Thus only can thy will be done
When victory in my soul is won.

C. MAUD BATTERSBY.

Cromlyn, Rathowen, Ireland.

Zambesi Industrial Mission.—The latest developments of the work are the establishment of the flour-mill and the erection of a number of new schools. Writing from Dumbole, Mr. Galloway says:—"We have had another baptismal service, when twenty-one persons, mostly young lads, made a public confession of their faith in, and love of, the Lord Jesus Christ. The day was bright, and a goodly number came to witness the ceremony. Each candidate, in turn, gave testimony, telling how and when they began to seek the Lord and his righteousness." Encouraging accounts of the work have also been received from Chiole and other stations.

TO COMPLETE THE GOOD SAMARITAN WORK OF THE

"LIBERATOR" RELIEF FUND.

After seven years' earnest pleading, a further £10,000, or 200,000 shillings, still urgently needed to give relief to hundreds of aged, destitute, and afflicted victims of the great "Liberator" fraud, who were taught and trained in habits of temperance and thrift by their trusted leaders, only to find themselves suddenly robbed of their life savings, and driven to face the dreaded workhouse, in spite of all their praiseworthy endeavours to make some provision for their old age. Ninety per cent. of these sufferers are members of some section of the Christian Church. More than half of them are connected with the Church of England.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the Law of Christ."

There are 2,830 cases on the books of the Fund, of whom 1,500 are Widows or Spinsters. 690 are over 70 years of age, 1,460 are over 60 years of age. Over 350 deaths through the disaster. THE BITTER CRY FOR HELP is still coming to the Committee from sufferers who have bravely borne with their difficulties, till sickness or great destitution has compelled them to apply.

Cheques and P.O.'s should be made payable to the "Liberator" Relief Fund, crossed "The London City and Midland Bank," and sent to the Secretary, Rev. J. STOCKWELL WATTS, 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Notes & Comments

THE terrible news of the massacre of Europeans at Pekin, with the possibility, if not the probability, of similar tragedies happening elsewhere, has given a profound shock to the whole civilized world. The deepest sympathy of all goes out to those who have lost friends and relatives in this outbreak of Oriental savagery. What more can we do at the present time than pray that God may overrule even this horror, and sorrow, and sin for the good of the whole world?

In all this hideous blackness of darkness there is a ray of light in the fidelity with which the native Christians in various places have faced their doom. What greater consolation could the massacred missionaries have than that "in their death" they and their converts "were not divided"? Granted that it was perhaps as sympathizers with the "foreigners" rather than as Christians that they bore their martyrdom; but this in no way minimizes their devotion to their Lord, for whose sake they suffered the loss of all things, even of life itself. Here is an eloquent reply to the charge that "missions are a failure."

There is a disposition in some quarters to deprecate any promulgation of the Gospel in China on the ground mainly that the natives of that Empire "belong to an older civilization and older religion." If so invertebrate an argument could be admitted in the case of China, it would, of course, have to be recognized as applicable to all missionary effort; and, in fact, to the establishment of the religion of Christ, the Founder and the first preachers of which had no undue regard for those corrupt civilizations and erroneous religious systems which the teachings of Jesus were intended and potent enough to permeate and transform.

The bright summer weather affords boundless opportunities for circulating Gospel truth in the form of tracts among the multitudes in the open air. We are continually receiving applications for grants, in many cases from earnest workers whose means will not allow them to purchase. Our Tract Fund and list of "Applicants for Tracts" help in many such cases.

The Parliamentary debate on the immoral state of West End streets at night, and on the rapid spread of demoralizing literature in this country, especially in the form of cheap obscene pictures, reveals a condition of things that should not be tolerated in any civilized city. The difficulties raised by the Home Secretary in the way of reform are of little account, as was shown by Mr. Samuel Smith, who pointed out that while the condition of Liverpool ten years ago was almost as bad, a great reform had been brought about through the pressure of public opinion on the authorities. There is a special difficulty in the way of rousing or raising the standard of public morals in London on a sufficiently large scale. But so much improvement has been already achieved by the London County Council in the parks under its control, that it is clear how much may be done by a better supervision of the police, and a more strenuous application of the law. This would be a step towards the strengthening of the law itself.

A very strong indictment against the modern music hall is brought in a paper in the current number of the Contemporary Review, by a writer who professes to have given close study for years past to the performances given at those places of amusement. Mr. Andrew Wilson's article is one which should strengthen the hands of the authorities who are empowered to enforce restrictive regulations upon the halls, for the verdict is strongly against the argument so freely and thoughtlessly urged in many quarters, that they are a moral factor in the life of their patrons. The writer asserts, without reservation, that most of the songs sung are suggestive when they are not conspicuously vulgar, and such as could not be sung before any respectable and decent household; that, in fact, they are in glorification of vice and drink, and in the exploitation of a low and vulgar side of immorality. Mr. Wilson also says:—

> What effect all this purveying of obscenity, veiled or implied, can have on the masses it is not a difficult matter to determine. It can only serve to lower their respect for morality at large, it puts decency and cleanly living at a discount, and it glorifies immorality all round.

It is difficult to bring public sentiment to bear upon the evil; all the more need, therefore, for those who have the power of official repression to enforce it.

Few nations are so conscious of their past as the American, brief as their history has been. It is well that among the many celebrations of the past by the present a place should be found for the great theologians. Jonathan Edwards has been honoured with such a commemoration. Though only a name to most religious people nowadays, his influence on the world's thought and life is not by any means a spent force. Some of his teaching was put into a form too drastic for present-day taste, but his passion for souls, and his wonderful realization of the sovereignty of God in creation, providence, and redemption is in vivid contrast to the attitude of most modern thinkers and preachers. We sadly need some strong teaching in that direction. There are very few who retain anything like a hearty and practical belief in the Divine government of the world.

The laughter of God is a terrible thing. "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh." It is one of his answers to the threats of men to rid themselves of his yoke. And it would seem as if we were hearing this laughter at the present moment. For some years past many leading men in various countries to whom religion is a fiction, have babbled of the "glorious march of human progress," and they have openly preached science and civilization as the only true gods. These were to be our emancipators, to perfect humanity, to inaugurate the millennium and to establish an universal brotherhood. Anti-Christian socialism has ceaselessly preached these doctrines, and their echoes have gone everywhere. And now the derided God is mocking the folly of men. A godless science and a godless civilization have resulted in the manufacture of terrible engines of war, in broils and factions, and, worst of all, in race hatred. And this is the millennium to which we were to be brought!

Those who think it necessary at "popular services" to announce their subjects in sensational style, and to deal with all manner of topics culled from recent events, or the social problems that are always with us, would do well to weigh the words of Dr. Maclaren at his "open service" recently. The success of the veteran preacher has been continuous from the beginning, and on this occasion he announced the secret of his method.

> So far as my part is concerned, I have not conceived it my duty, nor even necessary, to take sensational subjects, or to find my texts in newspapers or the last popular novel, or even in social and current questions. I have something better to do than that. Rightly or wrongly, I have of set purpose confined myself to the tremendous necessities of man and the fundamental verities of the Gospel, and, God helping me, I shall do so still.

He who thus speaks from the heart and centre of the Gospel will in the end sweep the circumference as well.

It was a wise old minister who said, "I am always grateful to anyone who will point out a fault that I can correct. I am not grateful to anyone who points out a deficiency, of which I am as conscious as he is, but which I am unable to make good." Here we have the secret of wise, as distinguished from unwise, fault-finding. The misery caused by the perpetual denouncing of frailties in others which are irremovable, and which should be patiently borne with for that reason, is almost as great as that due to remediable faults that are wilfully persisted in. Willingness to mend on the one side, and patience with what cannot be helped on the other—these are two prime secrets of happy Christian intercourse. The precept, "Let your considerateness be known of all men," covers both.

A German layman has been accounting in one of the religious papers for the lack of attendance in the Berlin churches, and has found it in the fact of an unsympathetic ministry. He instances the case of a pastor being applied to by a mother to bury her daughter, who had been confirmed by him, refusing on the ground that he was off duty that week, and suggests that this is typical of other facts. However that may be, it is unquestionable that a minister who does not make it his privilege to weep with those that weep, and to rejoice with those that rejoice, among his flock will miss the very best chance he can ever have of doing them good. A wide and effectual door is opened by sorrow to the true pastor, through which he can not only enter himself, but carry the most precious consolations of the Gospel with him to those that need them in their extremity. This is one of the surest touchstones of a Christ-like ministry.

Dr. Mair, in his little book just published on "Speaking," in dealing with the secret of successful pulpit speech, strongly endorses the late Dr. Caird's advice to his divinity students, always to divide their sermons into heads. Undoubtedly this time-honoured custom, which has fallen into disrepute of late, is worthy of judicious revival. The mind of the average hearer is not capable of carrying away the burden of a vague, confused discourse, however weighty it may be; but there are few who cannot take home with them the chief points of a sermon or address which have been methodically marshalled and distinctly enunciated. The "literary form" of the discourse may to some extent suffer, but its effectiveness as a weapon for good is decidedly increased. Many preachers would benefit themselves greatly if they forced themselves to observe more order and method in their thinking; and what benefits them will doubly benefit those who hear.

The extreme High Church teachers have advanced many strange theories before now, but it has been left to a writer in the Anglo-Catholic (Rev. G. S. Tyack) to discover that:—

The heretic, reducing the Eucharist to the merest figment of a memorial, may still (and, as a matter of fact, does) communicate with such thankfulness as his cold creed inspires; but to him "Benediction" is at best unmeaning. The Catholic, and he only, sees in it a means of displaying devotion to his Lord.

Yet the Lord Himself ordained that the observance of the Communion should be a "memorial," and as such the early Christians regarded it. Nor do we suppose that their devotion to their Lord has ever been surpassed, even by that of Mr. Tyack himself. So we should judge from Paul's declarations, in 2 Cor. xi. 24-27.

Doubtless Uppingham School can claim to have as large a roll of soldiers and sailors now serving their country as any other of our public schools, and it is interesting to note that in addition to the 135 at the Cape, Sir Claude Macdonald, of Pekin, also was trained there. These circumstances give very great emphasis to the pronouncement of the headmaster, Dr. Selwyn, who at the recent speech day, in referring to the proposals of the headmaster of Eton for the enrolment of all public school boys over fifteen, "able and willing," deprecated the conversion of public schools into public camps, and added, "The hand of the War Office must be kept off them at all costs." In the face of the strong development of militarism in our midst—a spirit which perhaps just as frequently provokes war as it prevents it—such thoughtful words are well worthy of consideration.

Much of the unrest evident in spiritual life is in many cases due to a feeling of dissatisfaction with the smallness of that which we can do for God, and a longing for the extended sphere and the greater work. Bishop Phillips Brooks has wisely said:

If in any way God is using you for one of his gathering, and distributing points of spiritual life, be satisfied. There is no nobler work which anybody in this world can do than that. To know God so that other souls may know Him from us; to be in any way a deepener and enlightener of the lives of our brethren—what is there for a man to thank God for like that?

The steady decrease in the number of young women in domestic service—which fell by 159,000 in this country alone during the decade 1881-91, and which since then has been as steadily declining—will soon bring home a very serious problem to the community. How is it to be made more attractive? The first thing to be done is to get rid of the "social stigma" which is still supposed to be associated with it. Service is not servitude. There is no degradation in a calling which lies at the root of family peace and comfort. Consideration, kindliness, and loyalty on both sides are the conditions of success, and these are within the reach of all mistresses and servants.

The Meaning of Pekin.

By Rev. GEO. HUDSON, of Hangchow.

At a time when the hearts and minds of the civilized world are necessarily turned to China, where the most tragic events are succeeding each other with frightful rapidity, it behoves all who have any knowledge of the causes leading to the present outbreaks to contribute their quota towards enabling the public to obtain a correct view of the situation.

It must be borne in mind that the present outbreaks are not anti-Christian in their nature, but anti-foreign. Their object is not the suppression of Christianity, but the total elimination of the foreign element from Chinese affairs. The fact that the native Christians have suffered so severely arises, not so much from their profession of Christianity as from their identification with the foreigners who have introduced Christianity into China. These are regarded as agents of the various foreign powers, sent to China for the express purpose of stirring up sedition, and thus preparing the way for the Emperor's broad domains to be overrun and conquered by the armies which it is believed will follow in the wake of the supposed secret political agent. Let it be noted that the text of the decrees of the Empress-Dowager and the latest usurper of the Imperial prerogatives is "Expel or exterminate the foreigner." The fact that Kiao-chau was seized by the Germans as part compensation for the murder of two German missionaries — that this was accompanied by the seizure of Port Arthur by the Russians, and Wei-hai-wei by the British, and soon after followed by a demand from the Italians for a "concession" at Sammen Bay, on the coast of Chekiang—is proof positive to the Chinese that the religious propaganda is only a cloak for the political, and that the ultimate design of the Western nations is the absorption of China.

It must also be remembered that books, newspaper articles, &c., have openly discussed the partition of the Empire for years past. It seems to have been assumed that all this discussion went on without the knowledge of the Chinese authorities. Perhaps it will be news to many of your readers to learn that Bureaux of Foreign Affairs have been established in many, if not all, of the provincial capitals; that an English-speaking Chinese is attached to each bureau as interpreter and translator; and that through him the high provincial authorities have been able to follow closely the out-spoken and ill-advised proposals for dismemberment. I am well acquainted with this official at Hangchow, the capital of Chekiang, and can testify to his accurate knowledge of English, and ability to inform his superiors of what was being planned for their country by the Occidental world.

By the efforts of the French Minister, the Chinese Government was induced last summer to grant official status to the Roman Catholic hierarchy. The effect of this is that the bishops and clergy may carry on negotiations with the various officials independent of the consular authorities. Bishops are entitled to demand interviews and conduct affairs with viceroys and governors, priests with prefects and magistrates, just as if they were possessed with ministerial or consular rank. It is inconceivable that a Chinese will be able to distinguish between the political agent and the religious propagandist under such circumstances.

I venture to bespeak beforehand an impartial hearing and careful consideration of what I believe to be a third and very potent cause of the hatred of foreigners on the part of the Chinese. I refer to the opium traffic. I am perfectly aware that no less an authority than the present Viceroy of India, in his able work "Problems of the Far East," dismissed the whole opium question in about twenty contemptuous lines, and informs us that the pretence that China is hostile to the British people or to Christian missions because we introduced to her the opium habit . . . is about as rational as to say that the national soreness that sometimes arises between England and France, is due to our resentment at having to cross the Channel for our best brandy.

I can assure his Excellency and your readers that he is profoundly mistaken. If he had taken the trouble to inquire in the proper quarter he could easily have found abundant proof of the two following propositions, which I submit without fear of contradiction:—

First, that the Chinese trace their national decay and attribute their national disasters to the use of opium.

Second, that the introduction of the habit is indissolubly associated with their intercourse with foreign nations, and especially Britain.

These sentiments are common to all classes. The great Viceroy at Wuchang, Chang Chih Tung, probably the ablest man in China to-day, has denounced the use of the drug in unmeasured terms, comparing it to a devastating flood which sweeps everything into destruction in its onward rush. The general manager of the Salt Gabelle, a high official in Soochow, writes:

From ancient times to the present day there has never been such a stream of evil and misery as has come down upon China in her receiving the curse of opium. . . . From the time that opium was first introduced into China until now, a period of over a hundred years, the number of deaths directly caused by it must count up into the millions. . . . Now, in China there are many among the upper classes who seem to be in ignorance concerning the true state of affairs, and are not willing to blame the Chinese for their fault in using opium, but ascribe the real cause of the whole trouble to the avariciousness of foreigners, and thus look upon them with hatred. Also, the ignorant masses having even intenser antipathy towards them, we continually see on every hand anti-missionary outbreaks and riots.

I have quoted the above official at length in preference to making a direct statement of my own, because it might be said that, as a missionary, I would naturally be prejudiced against opium smoking, and inclined to see it in its worst light. But these are the views of a high Chinese official, and I repeat, and anyone having any extensive acquaintance with different classes of Chinese will sustain me in bearing testimony to the fact, that these views are also held by the vast majority of Chinese, and that foreigners are hated and suspected because of their supposed complicity with the opium traffic.

I shall not trespass on your space by entering into any discussion of the moral aspects of the question, but I ask your readers, in forming an estimate of the present situation, not to overlook one of the most important elements in the case. When the present disturbances are suppressed, our Government, in conjunction with the other European Governments and America, will be called upon to formulate a new policy with reference to China. One ventures to express a hope that the whole past policy of the Government in regard to Chinese affairs will be reviewed, and the greatest blot on the English escutcheon be wiped off.

BY REV. EVAN H. HOPKINS.

WE ought to find a Divine answer to the important inquiry—When and in what circumstances is it our privilege and duty to praise God? What are the seasons and occasions of praise?

First of all, we should praise God when we draw near to worship Him, for praise is of the very essence of worship. We may come into God's presence and not worship Him; we may confess our sins and unburden our hearts, and our approach may be a reality and our supplication sincere and earnest; but yet there may be no true worship and praise. When we pray we are more or less thinking of ourselves, our needs, our trials, our duties, our difficulties; but when we rise into the atmosphere of praise our thoughts are occupied with God, his gifts, his goodness, his glory. So we notice that in those inspired prayers which we find in the Epistles, the Apostle continually rises

FROM PRAYER TO PRAISE.

It would seem as if the Apostle Paul could not pray long without bursting out into praise. So if we would know what it is to worship God, we must know, not only what it is to pray, but also what it is to praise.

Because praise is the expression of gratitude, in no other way than by praise can we acknowledge the goodness of God. It is not enough that there should be a feeling of thankfulness to God; that feeling must find expression. He who made the heart made the lips, and He demands the whole man. We must lay every member upon his altar. God not only looks for a feeling of gratitude, but for an expression of it. "My lips shall utter praise, when Thou has taught me thy statutes." What a striking instance is found in the case of the Samaritan leper, who, when he saw that he was healed, returned and praised God. "He fell on his face at his feet, giving Him thanks" (Luke xvii. 14-18).

We should bless God as we are engaged in the ordinary duties of life; we should praise Him then, for praise is the state of fellowship. When we think of prayer we not only think of an act but of a state—we may be in a state of prayer though not always engaged in acts of prayer. So also we may live in and prayer. "And they continued daily with one accord in the Temple, and did eat their meat in gladness and singleness of heart, praising God" (Acts ii. 46, 47). That beautiful picture illustrates a condition of praise. A wonderful change had been brought about in that case by the power of the Holy Ghost. People are always looking to circumstances. Was this a case of changed circumstances? No, it was the inward state, the condition of their heart that was changed; the people were in a state of praise. They knew what it was to be in the communion of the Holy Ghost, to be in fellowship with God. So you see in all the concerns of life, even every-day life, it is possible, by the power of God, to praise Him.

Again we should praise God when we are passing through special suffering and trial, because praise is the spirit of triumph. The life to which we are called is to be a victorious life; we are called to be overcoming believers. The Apostle Paul lived what he preached, and he said, "In all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us" (Rom. viii. 37). Conquerors over what? Tribulation, distresses, persecution, famine, nakedness, peril, and sword—seven things. Could anything be worse, could adversities be more formidable? Yet in all these things, not in changed circumstances, we are more than conquerors. Here is of Christ. What can Christ do for me in the most adverse circumstances? He enables me to rejoice and glory in them—to rise above them. Hence, we may bless God when we are passing through trials, because the spirit of praise is a spirit of triumph.

Address given at Mildmay Conference.

How many Christians reason thus: "It is not possible to praise God now; everything seems against me?" Let me ask you—What are looking at? It is possible to see many things, and yet not to look at them. "The light affliction (says the Apostle) which is but for a moment worketh in us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen." The things which are seen we know of, but we are not compelled to look at them. We look at the things which are not seen—not at the window, but through it at the landscape; not at the telescope, but through it into infinite space. We are long-sighted, and look to the things which are eternal.

If in your daily life you see the Lord, your heart will be at rest, and, whatever may be the nature of your surroundings, you will find it possible to bless and praise Him. Paul and Silas in the dungeon of Philippi did not look to their chains; hence they were able not only to pray, but to bless the Lord. Here we see

THE TRUE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

What are the times and the circumstances of blessing God? All times—"I will bless the Lord at all times; his praise shall continually be in my mouth." Not only all times, but all circumstances: "In everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, make your requests known unto God."

A Christian man once told me that this verse was a prescription. He had suffered from sleeplessness; having many anxieties, he was always thinking about them, and, of course, he could not sleep. A friend gave him the prescription, and he carefully considered the words. He could not get rest until he took the special ingredient "with thanksgiving." He began to count up his mercies, and they took him longer than he had anticipated. In the course of his count he dropped off to sleep. It was a good prescription. The passage gives us the standard of practical confidence, and then a promise "and the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." Do not look at God's standard as an impossible ideal. It is one thing to aim at an ideal, another thing to enter into the blessing. Supposing a volunteer had been practising a long time, and you were to ask him what progress he was making, and he should say "I've never hit the bull's eye and don't expect to—but I'm aiming at it!" Many do not expect to enter into the enjoyment of God's blessed assurance, but the standard we are contemplating has been realized by men of like passions with ourselves. Let us not merely aim at it, but, by God's grace, enter into it.

Another thing, do not judge God's ideal by your own experience. I have met people who reason thus: "I know something of my Bible, and have been brought to realize my standing in Jesus Christ; but I cannot say that my life has been a praising life; speaking of it generally, it has been a great deal more down than up; I cannot say that it has been a victorious and rejoicing life. Therefore when I go to the Scriptures I have to understand them according to my experience." That is to say, you tone down God's Word, to bring it into harmony with your experience. If you find passages or privileges which do not agree with your backsliding and low-level experience, you leave them on one side. What a mistake to make! Rather, should we not bring our experience by God's grace up to the level of God's Holy Word? This is within the reach of men, and herein lies our equipment for spiritual service. We need to guard against that mischievous suggestion that the blessings of the Spirit in the days of the Apostles are not intended for us to-day. "The promise is to you and to your children; and to those that are afar off, even to as many as the Lord our God shall call."

There are many people who look upon peace and rest, and joy and praise as spiritual luxuries. As a fact, they are the proper equipment for work for God. Remember, therefore, God not only calls us to work, but supplies us with all that is needed to qualify us for that work. The sum and substance of my message is, submit to the Holy Spirit. All things that pertain to life and godliness and divine power are given us. Nothing more remains in the way of provision. The Holy Spirit is present to reveal, communicate, inspire, and equip; and when we yield our whole being to Him, we discover that He comes to dwell in our hearts as the Spirit of praise. He fills our hearts with love and joy and peace, and the outcome is continual praise to God.

The Bliss of Praise.*

BY REV. C. G. MOORE.

Strange to say, it was a Christian writer who remarked that life is but seldom incandescent. Although our subject to-night goes in the face of that statement, there is much in many lives that makes them like a bit of cold and unillumined charcoal, because they are rarely penetrated by the spiritual current which would make them glow, burn, and shine. Turning from the word of the servant to that of the Master, there is glorious hope for the lighting up of our life by the indwelling and inworking of the Spirit of our risen Lord. I do not say the New Testament teaches that life is a course of unbroken joy; but it does show us that by fellowship with Christ God's praise may be continually in our mouths,

UNDER ALL CIRCUMSTANCES.

Paul and Silas, in the Philippian prison, praised God, despite the stripes and wounds upon their backs. A farmer's wife, listening at the door of a room where she had sheltered a poor widow and her children, heard the woman say, "My heart is breaking, but God is good."

The secret of the bliss and the blessing of praise is with the risen Lord and with his Spirit. "Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high. . . . While He blessed them, He was parted from them and carried up into heaven. And they worshipped Him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy. And were continually in the temple praising and blessing God" (Luke xxiv. 49). This is the Christ who is as much ours as He was theirs. The bliss thus begun was perpetuated in the power of the Holy Ghost; for in the story of the Acts, the note of praise is continually struck. Heb. xii. 22-24 is a wonderful picture of our position in the risen Lord.

In praise we yield to God

THAT WHICH HE SEEKS

and prizes; and in that fact lies a great part of the bliss of praise. It is well to have a sense of rightness for every practice of our life; and, at times, nothing else will afford so much strength as the thought that God asks for, seeks, desires, and has a right to our praise. In revealing his character and ways, God asks me to be glad because of what He is and what He has done. To illustrate my meaning, from Mal. ii. 17 onward, we have a contrast between the men who said that under the evil conditions of their times it was vain to serve the Lord, and other men of a very different spirit who glorified God's character, and would not charge Him with want of discrimination in his providence. God prizes the praise we give Him when things difficult and perplexing seem to be against Him and against us.

My own life has been largely built upon the promise that no good thing will God withhold from them that walk uprightly. For many years there was one thing that I thought would be good, and I could discern no reason why it was not given. Not long ago, under circumstances which I need not describe, I found myself in the house of a friend to whom had been given the very thing withheld from me. I saw its effect upon him, and, in that respect, I would not stand in his place for the world. I went home, knelt at Christ's feet, and bathed them with the tears of my joy. He had waited more than twenty years for the praise that was his due. Oh, the bliss of such an hour, when the soul thus meets God's expectations in regard to praise!

The bliss and blessing of praise advances with the soul's awakening toward God. Beyond the first great quickening of the natural man, which makes him alive unto God through our Lord Jesus Christ, there is the long process of grace, whereby we gradually awake to a larger knowledge of Him whom we trust. There is a remarkable illustration of this process in the case of Jonah. God seeks to rouse him from a comparatively dark life into some sense of the Divine greatness, goodness, and mercy. First, he is put under the influence of a great duty in his commission to warn Nineveh, but he turns from it. Then comes a great peril, amid which there is the only approach to waking up found in the whole record. In order to take us into the bliss and blessing of praise, God casts us into all sorts of experiences of surprise, trial, sorrow, and responsibility.

A safeguard against many of the perils that beset us, is found in the bliss of praise. The heart must have something upon which to spend its enthusiasm; and such glorying in the Lord as that referred to in Jer. ix. 23, 24, will protect us from glorying in things forbidden. Delight thyself in the Lord, plunge into the bliss of praising God; and you will be so safe before Him that He can give you the desires of your heart. Stand where God can give thee all lesser good, because thy heart has perpetual joy in Himself. Praise guards us against a chief element in the world's spirit—the taking of God's gifts without thought of Himself, and without reference to his will. We, being heirs of God, He will one day give us all things; but, meanwhile, we are to learn to hold them without peril to ourselves, and without grief to Him.

God has much to do to develop in us and this is illustrated in the case of his people Israel. Jacob was definitely directed to go down into Egypt with his sons. If they had stayed in Canaan and enriched it, without the long sojourn elsewhere, how difficult it would have been for them to regard the possession of their land as a gift from God. Our own deprivations and separations teach us to hold each good thing as our Father's gift, to meet Him in it, and to bless Him for it.

I close with two practical points. First, let us praise God all the way toward his gifts. For some mercies we are called to long patience, and hope deferred maketh the heart that dead thing which needs God's awakening. Some of my gladdest hours have been spoiled by remembrance of grumbling and unbelief. In that hour of joy toward which God and you yourself are looking, and which will be one of the great events in your history, you will know the bliss of praise in its intensest form. Hope thou in God; meanwhile praise Him, and praise in eternity will be all the stronger and sweeter.

Then, give God a large liberty in your life. He loves to open a door for his foes, and then to set Himself in glorious rivalry with them, that we may know his power and might. Jesus allowed death to enter the home at Nazareth, and then set Himself in competition with it, to the joy and delight of those who loved Him. Through earthquake, storm, and things that seem to leave no footing for you in the universe, the Son of God will give you a vision of his glory that shall bring you, in a way you could not otherwise know, into the full bliss and blessing of praise.

Famine Relief in Armenia.—Mrs. Mary Hickson, of the Friends of Armenia Organization, forwards particulars of the famine in Armenia, as described by Dr. Raynolds, of Van: "Children are brought in wasted almost to skeletons, and they tell of many unable to leave their homes, while the majority of the population have absolutely nothing to eat but the roots they dig in the mountains—they dig anything they can find. There is some fear, too, that the 500 children in the Orphanage may not continue to be sustained. This would be a calamity indeed. It is heartrending to the missionaries to have to turn away many who seek admission"

Scotland for Christ.

THERE are those in this northern land of ours who believe that we are on the verge of the mightiest spiritual awakening that our country has ever seen. For years there have been signs of increasing interest and desire for blessing in every part of the land. Men have been stirred up to preach the Gospel in its full, clear simplicity; ministers who themselves had faithfully prepared the way for ingathering, have welcomed the help of men of evangelistic gifts who have come in to reap.

The recent great Evangelistic Campaign in Glasgow is only one out of many movements which have been arranged by united churches or Presbyteries in almost every county with the hope of promoting spiritual quickening. These movements may not bring the visible results hoped for, but they indicate a longing created by God, and surely in his own wise way, to be satisfied by Him.

In every part of the country there are God's hidden ones who are crying unceasingly for the coming of the Lord in saving power, and from every part there come now and again wonderful tidings of blessing sent

IN STRANGE, UNEXPECTED WAYS.

Some time ago there was news of revival in the far off Shetlands. A young woman from a shop in Lerwick, went out to conduct some services, and used to move whole districts, winning the great proportion of the young people to Christ. A minister, who had been cycling through a town near the Scottish borders, told the writer recently how he dropped into a meeting there, and found to his surprise and joy a large gathering waiting

IN SOLEMN QUIET AND DEEP INTEREST.

He said, "I felt the power of the Spirit so mightily resting on the people that I knew there must be blessing, no matter who the preacher might be or what he might say. A young business man had been conducting services there, and for weeks the harvest of souls had been nightly gathered in."

In flashes like these the power of God's working is being revealed in many places. We rejoice and praise God, but that is not all we look for. We long and hope for a great flame of spiritual fire to burst out and spread across all our beloved land, until every city, village, and country district has been reached, and into every gathering of God's people the glory of the Lord has shone. As to how it shall come—God knows. We can only say it must come down; it cannot be worked up by fleshly wisdom or energy. As to when it shall come, we know not; we are certain that God's purpose is to glorify his own name through his own people, and that wherever He finds a submissive, waiting, longing people, there the windows of heaven will be opened for blessing.

A great spiritual movement at home would solve many a problem in Christian missions. "Water runs down hill; get blessing on the hills," said Mr. Moody. The highest spiritual hill in the world is our own land, and blessing poured out in overflowing measure over it would reach every part of the Gospel-encircled globe. Money and men, prayers and spiritual power, would come in abundance to our foreign mission work. Our brethren in the colonies would feel the throb of the strengthened pulse, and where the Church now languishes, and the world seems to conquer, there would be health and vigour, and victory for the King. It is for faith, for willing consecration, and asking, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

With the hope of binding the Church of Christ in Scotland, in unity for definiteness of desire, a prayer card has been prepared for distribution, which it is hoped may be taken up, and signed by many. Copies may be had from the undersigned. ANDREW STEWART.

Richmond House, Wardie, Edinburgh.

Prof. White's Bible School.

THE subject taken by Dr. White at Queen's Hall, on Friday last, was "The God of Amos." The lecturer commenced by reading Amos iv. 12, 13, and v. 8. He pointed out that the prophet recognises that his God is one who controls the forces of nature. Amos has come to know God in solitude, on the hills of Palestine. Divine influences impel him to leave his home at Tekoa, in the south, and proceed to the north country, with its two centres of false worship, Bethel and Dan. There he delivers the message of coming judgment upon the surrounding nations and, ultimately, upon Judah and Israel. He is opposed by Amaziah, the priest, who bids him return home and at "a royal house." Amaziah evidently estimated Amos as preaching, like himself, with a view to personal gain:—"eat bread there." He also suggests that Amos is not sufficiently cultured: a "royal house" requires a superior preacher—such as Amaziah himself. The reply of Amos contrasts Amaziah's words with those of God: "thou sayest," and "thus saith the Lord." His justification is: "I was no prophet, no cultured man, no trained scholar, but 'an herdman and a dresser of sycamore trees; and the Lord said unto me . . . Go, prophesy.'" "You (Amaziah) tell me to go home, but God says, 'Come here.' You say, I am unfitted to preach, but God says, 'Prophesy.'"

Referring to chap. i., Dr. White pointed out that Amos recognizes, while in the midst of the false worship of the north, the centre of true worship:—"The Lord shall roar from Zion." Gripping the attention of his hearers at the outset, the prophet first deals with the sins of Damascus, and the judgments that are to follow. The Israelites hear readily, for Damascus is their enemy. They listen with deep interest, too, as Amos goes on to declare judgment for sin upon Gaza, Tyre, Edom, Ammon, and Moab.

Then he comes close home, and deals with Judah and Israel. He thus reviews the whole Syrian position, declaring that the Assyrian is to override all, and that Israel will come down in the general ruin. In prophesying against all the nations, except Israel and Judah, however, he does so on the ground of ill deeds towards fellow-nations. It is the laws that obtain among themselves that they have broken. Judah, on the other hand, has "rejected the law of the Lord," and Israel is guilty of specific sins in neglect or defiance of God, of oppression of the poor, and of impurity.

Moreover, "I raised up of your sons for prophets, and of your young men for Nazarites. But (after all the kind treatment shown you) ye gave the Nazarites wine to drink, and commanded the prophets, saying, Prophesy not." The God of Amos is a God of INFINITE PATIENCE AND LONG-SUFFERING.

He does not send judgments unless he is compelled to do so. Israel had reached the point where they would not regard warnings. They retorted on Amos: "We are the chosen people of God, and God will not send us into captivity. You are only a herdman; you have not studied political economy, and do not understand the position."

In chap. iv. visitations are shown to be warnings; to chap v. comes the refrain, "Ye would not return"; chap. vi. is a series of invitations; vii., viii., and ix. give the visions of the locusts, the fire, the plumb-line, and the basket of summer fruit. We see how God deals with the nations, and appeals to the good in man. In each of the first eight chapters the concluding words give a summary of what has been said, in striking language, and each speaks of judgment—e.g., iii. 15, "I will smite;" iv. 12, "This will I do," &c. The book does not end, however, in destruction. The "hut of David" will be built again. Instead of concluding amid general misery, God says, "I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old."

D. L. Moody's Monument.

As an old student of the Bible Institute, Chicago, may I ask if anything is being done in this country to perpetuate the memory of our beloved Mr. Moody? It has been decided by his friends that the best possible monument that could be raised is an endowment to perpetuate the schools which he founded.

These schools, it will be remembered, include the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, which is now in the eleventh year of its existence. Of the 2,941 students who have been enrolled, 202 are now engaged in various forms of home mission work, 180 are evangelists, 368 are pastors, pastors' assistants, and church visitors; 58 are Sunday-school missionaries, 25 are Y.M.C.A. secretaries, 32 are colporteurs, 186 preach the Gospel in foreign lands, 38 are engaged in educational and philanthropic work, and 64 are superintendents of city missions and similar institutions.

When Mr. Moody saw these results, as thus summarized, he said: "I did not realise we had done so well;" and, in answer to a question put to him on his last visit to Philadelphia, by the Hon. John Wanamaker, as to whether he considered the Bible Institute a success, he replied: "Yes, it has been a great success and a wonderful blessing, and I would follow the same plan were I starting over again." The writer, with scores of others who have left the United Kingdom and passed through this school, can testify in like manner to the blessing received.

Then, of course, there are the Northfield institutions, the Training School for Women, Seminary for Young Women, and Mount Hermon School for young men. As Mr. Moody has said: "The object of these schools is to help young men and women, of very limited means, get an education such as would have done me good when I was their age. I want to help them into lives that will count the most for the cause of Christ." Their unique feature is the pre-eminence given to God's Word, and the dignity of honest labour. The students do most of the work on a farm of over 1,000 acres, and nearly all the general housework; 2,854 young men, and 2,656 young women, have been enrolled during the last twenty years.

The treasurer of the Moody Memorial Endowment is Mr. D. W. McWilliams, of 195, Broadway, New York City.

Miss Charlotte Mason.

DEAR SIR,—Knowing the interest that you take in Miss Mason's excellent work, and the Homes of Rest, I write to thank you most sincerely for the kind help and impetus that you gave to my fund for Miss Mason's seventieth birthday. I have collected a very nice sum, which I hope to present to Miss Mason at a Thanksgiving meeting on Friday, July 20, at the Home of Rest, 10, Finchley Road. This meeting, as already announced in your paper, will commence at three o'clock, and any reader of The Christian will be welcome. I am still glad to receive cheques and postal orders at the Royal Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth, or purses or gifts at the meeting. The opportunity to cheer Miss Mason's heart by a handsome gift on her seventieth birthday can never occur again.—Yours,

Agnes E. Weston.

A Livingstone Memorial in London.

THERE is probably no name which is more universally honoured among missionary pioneers than that of David Livingstone. This was strikingly shown at the Livingstone Exhibition held a few months ago, when people of every shade of opinion came together to see a collection of articles associated with his life and death, and to do honour to his memory.

All this tends to show that the name "Livingstone College" has been happily selected for an institution which has for its object the fitting of missionaries to meet the physical difficulties and dangers of unhealthy and especially tropical climates. Since its foundation seven years ago, some remarkable statements have been made by those who were best able to judge as to the eminent suitability of the title "Livingstone College." The late Rev. Horace Waller, who was a companion of Livingstone in Africa, stated at the opening of the present premises in Stratford, that it was a work which Livingstone himself would have been glad to be identified with, and therefore the college was very appropriately called by his name.

Livingstone College has already seen more than 100 students pass through its course, and go forth to the mission field. These are now at work in every part of the world; and yet all this time the work has been carried on in two houses rented at a yearly tenancy! Such an important work as this should have a building in every way suitable, and it cannot but be considered right that an institution which forms the chief memorial in London of the work of so great a man should be "housed" in a manner worthy of its name.

It is with great satisfaction that we are able to announce that the freehold of Knott's Green House, Leyton, formerly the residence Mr. G. Gurney Barclay, has been secured for this purpose. The price of the house and ground (about two acres) is £5,000, and as the alterations and furnishing will come to at least £1,000 more, the Council of the College are appealing for the sum of £6,000, which it is hoped will be sufficient to meet all expenses connected with the change.

Knott's Green has many happy associations. Mr. and Mrs. Gurney Barclay were accustomed, year by year, to welcome to their beautiful grounds the workers of the London City Mission, and of the London Bible Women and Nurses' Mission, besides having garden meetings in connection with the British and Foreign Bible Society. It is most appropriate that a house with these happy associations should have been secured for such an excellent object.

Mrs. Bruce, Dr. Livingstone's eldest daughter, writes: "I highly approve of your getting a proper building as the Livingstone College premises, as I consider it a most suitable Memorial of my father in London. It is one that would have been after his own heart."

The past year at Livingstone College has been the busiest since the College was first opened, and the Council hope that with much improved accommodation many more may avail themselves of the teaching given by the College.

The next session opens in October next, and applications for admission should be sent without delay to the Principal (Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby) at the City office of the College, 133, Salisbury Square, Fleet Street, E.C. Dr. Harford-Battersby will also be glad to furnish full particulars, or forms of application, and to acknowledge any contributions to the Livingstone Memorial Fund.

In "Canvas City."

WHILE thinking of troops in South Africa and China, let us not forget the thousands of men in "Canvas City," the camp of Salisbury Plain. Here are streets of tents and soldiers from every state of society; but one of the special features this year is the coming and going of great bodies of volunteers, many of them from good homes, who find the Plain very trying, and to whom the comforts of a Soldier's Home are most welcome, where they can get drinks of a non-alcoholic character, extras in the way of food, and other needfuls.

The Church of England and Wesleyan tents are in one part of the camp; but at the other end Miss Perks has her Home in the Wood—a canvas one, like the surroundings, but none the less a home away from home. Letter-writing to absent ones is a great feature of the work, as many as 700 letters being written and posted in one day.

But the chief work is the second tent—the Tabernacle—where the Christian men meet to pray and sing and hear the Word.

One fine young fellow told Miss Perks that he was a young Christian, and when he was leaving home his people were dreadfully afraid the religion would be all knocked out of him in the camp. "But," said he, "I found this place, and it has done me a world of good. I am going back stronger in the faith than when I came."

That the men are taking back blessings will be seen from the following letter:—"Having had a brother in camp, I was exceedingly pleased to hear him tell of the glorious work you were doing for God amongst our soldiers, who are mostly miners. I am a miner myself, and bless God because the blood of Christ atones for the miners, and that his presence may be felt even in the dark recesses of the earth. We have some gallant soldiers of the cross here amongst the pitmen."

There will be a constant change of men up to the end of September, so that the work is very far-reaching. Will friends remember Miss Perks, Soldiers' Home, Bulford, Salisbury, and the older work still carried on at Winchester?

Derbyshire Villages.—Pastor Howton, of Glossop, sends news of blessing in connection with the operations of the "Beacon Light" Village Missions. A notable case is that of a man who owed £20 for goods obtained from a shopkeeper. All hope of receiving payment had been given up, but the total amount has been cleared in £1 weekly instalments. Pastor Howton may be addressed Mission Hall, Glossop, Derbyshire.

SUNDAY, July 22. Prov. ix.

THIS chapter concludes the first part of the Book of Proverbs, in which Wisdom is personified, as the daughter of the Eternal. She builds her house, prepares her banquet, and issues her invitations. Surely this must have been in the mind of our Lord when He spoke his parables about the great feast, and the wedding guests. To the simple, the invitation is specially addressed—to those whose character is as yet unformed, and who, though they have not taken up with good ways, at least have not chosen evil ones. Their simplicity, and open-hearted ingenuous character, peculiarly exposes them to temptation. There is the more need, therefore, for us to be beforehand with the appeals of the Gospel.

Here are such aphorisms (7-12) as might well be passed across Wisdom's banqueting-table, especially if Gaius, as Bunyan painted him, sat as host. Would that our conversation might always be with grace, even though it may not always be of grace, seasoned with salt. There is nothing more important than to be able to guide conversation into right channels, so that whilst it sparkles, it may edify. We must not preach at people, but we should endeavour, in the most natural and unaffected manner, to purify the streams of talk which are ever pouring past our feet.

The reverse picture is very striking. The foolish woman here is the unchaste and fallen one. She affects simplicity. It is one of her arts to appear to know nothing and intend no special evil. She adopts the very words of invitation which Wisdom had uttered (v. 16, compare v. 4). But beneath this apparent guilelessness there are the most desperate perfidy and infamy. The honeysuckle and clematis may twine around the doorway of herhome, but the back communicates with the bottomless pit.

Righteousness, so often referred to in this chapter, is that high-toned quality of soul which is begotten within us by the Holy Spirit. Jesus Christ is essentially "the Righteous One." We stand before God in his imputed righteousness, and his likeness is begotten within us by the blessed Holy Spirit. "If ye know that He is righteous, ye know that every one also that doeth righteousness is begotten of Him."

Trace all the blessings which accrue to the righteous. They are delivered from death (2); their soul is not permitted to famish (3); blessings encircle their head as a chaplet (6); their speech is like the welling forth of fountains of life (11); their labour tends to life (16); their tongue is as choice silver, and their lips feed many (20, 21); their desires shall be granted, and they rest on an everlasting foundation (24, 25); their hope is gladness, and they shall never be removed (28, 30); from their mouth is wisdom, and their lips are acceptable (31, 32). What a noble catalogue of advantages and blessings is here, and how much to stir up our desire to learn the secret by which they may be acquired. Evidently religion like this hath the promise of this life, as well as of that which is to come. And righteous men like this will preserve cities today, as ten of them would have done in Sodom of old.

In contrast to this portraiture is that of the wicked, whose treasures profit nothing, whose desire is thrust away of the Lord, whose mouth covers violence, whose name shall rot, whose heart is little worth, whose fear comes upon them, who are swept away by the whirlwind, whose years are shortened, whose expectation perishes, and who may not dwell in the land. If two parallel columns were made, the one headed Righteousness, and the other Wickedness, we should obtain at a glance the main contents of this chapter, and see an anticipation of the blessing and curse spoken from the judgment-seat of Christ.

The man who shall take the Proverbs as his guide in business is likely to be successful. Here are the conditions of prosperity. If God delights in a just weight, see that you delight in it, business man! Be guided by the integrity of the upright. Have something better than your wealth, which shall stand you in good stead in the Day of Wrath. Seek those riches which are laid up beyond this world.

Where you get, be sure to give. Remember the golden rule in v. 24; as you scatter you will increase. Be liberal to water others, and you shall be watered yourself. Give your barley-loaves and fish, and you shall gather twelve basketfuls. Never be drawn in to the "rings" of salt or corn or ice, lest you incur the curse of the people. Above all, do not trust in your riches, then will you flourish as a green branch, heavy with foliage and fruit.

If any should read these words whose lot is among the poor, who are always finding it difficult to make the handful of meal last for all the hungry mouths that wait for feeding, let them take heart. They are delivered from many temptations, and they can have that true wealth which makes a family really successful. How often I have seen children pampered with everything that wealth can give, turning out so badly as to bring the parents down to a premature grave. On the other hand, the children of some country parsonage, or some Scotch manse, where religion has been the rule, have grown up to be a comfort to all who love them, and to achieve name and fame in the world.

WEDNESDAY, July 25. Prov. xii.

As the previous chapter dealt largely with riches, this has to do with rulership. Would you rule? Be sure to be ready to receive reproof. Find favour with God, and you will get favour with man. Never make a short cut to power. Thrones gotten by wickedness are not established. Be rooted in righteousness. Be not turned right or left by the thought of gain. Follow the highest impulses of your nature, that you may win the honour that cometh from God only.

Be careful with whom you keep company. In every movement there are a number of vain persons; keep clear of these. However dark your path may be, follow the narrow track of integrity; it will bring you out of trouble. Be sure to listen to wise counsel, and to advice from any quarter where the fear of God is the final court of appeal. Always remember that the lip of truth secures permanent influence. The just man may be slandered and misunderstood, but no evil thing will happen to him. The waves of the sea of ink may dash up at his feet, but the spray will not splash him. It is of the utmost importance to conceal your knowledge of private matters and state secrets, that men may trust you. Let your hand be diligent, and let your heart be always lifted in faith and humility to God, that you may use for Him any influence which you have gained over your fellows.

The interest of this book arises from its antitheses. The balanced sentences tell not of the upper, but of the under side. If we would walk in the light of the first line of each couplet, we must avoid the darkness of the other. Perpetually we must remember the words of the Apostle, and refuse to yield ourselves to the solicitations of deceit, vanity, and self-seeking, whilst we yield ourselves to God as those who are alive from the dead.

THURSDAY, July 26. Prov. xiii.

Wisdom may be taken as the keynote of this chapter, though its topics are very various. It may be manifested in the son, as he listens to his father's instruction and acts upon it. It is largely manifested in the guarding and keeping of the lips, in diligence and in hatred of lying. It avoids contention, and waits to be well-advised. It gathers its wealth by honest labour and straightforward dealings. It becomes a fountain of life to others as it speaks forth its aphorisms and terse judgments to all who listen. It is in part learnt from the conversation of wise men with whom we walk, but it is for the most part due to the direct operation of the Spirit of God.

It is good and wise for us to learn lessons from the precepts addressed to children in this book, for we, by faith, are the children of God. Let us hear our Father's instruction, and heed his reproof, and let us accept the chastening of his rod as a token of his love. The R.V. marg. tells us, in the 24th verse, that he that loveth his son chasteneth him diligently. Ah, surely there are many whom their heavenly Father chastens thus: but it makes a great difference when they can discern his hand. My little grandson, I know not why, but on his own initiative, sent me a cross the other day, the first result of his tool-box. The cross is a very rude one, of two split pieces of firewood, nailed together with two large nails. Now, I am not fond of crosses, and have never had one before in my room. But since those little fingers made it, I value this, and it stands in a conspicuous place in my study. Yes, it makes a great difference when you know whence your cross or chastening comes.

To secure permanence has always been a dream of the sons of men. To secure this, they erected the Pyramids, and built great cities, and reared mighty cenotaphs. Men would vie with the earth herself in stability and endurance. But it befals that many monuments are without their labels; we cannot tell to whose memory they were reared.

The righteous shall be had in perpetual remembrance. The wise build the house of their life on the rock, and every just and holy action is an additional brick or stone placed on the rising pile. And when the troubled waters swirl around and against it, there is no tremor or panic—it is founded on a rock, and the fabric is compact. Lying, deceit, infidelity, disintegrate and weaken the house of life; whilst truth, honesty, and fidelity to trust, strengthen it.

What a contrast is presented by the foolish man that builds on the sand. The preacher characterizes him with brilliant strokes. He pulls down more quickly than he uprears; is perverse in his ways; despises the Lord; is scourged by his own works and words, which come home to roost; finds no pearls of great price; lights on no treasures hidden in the field; takes tortuous ways to increase wealth, but meets with perpetual disappointment; is insolent, self-confident, soon angry; envy rots his bones, and evil-doing finally thrusts him down to the bottomless pit.

Surely we need not repeat the point which our Lord makes of the contrast; but it becomes us to be careful that we are not forgetful hearers, but doers of the Word. That we hear his sayings and do them is the essential condition of blessedness and permanence.

SATURDAY, July 28. Prov. xv.

Wouldst thou have a good life, crowded with as much well-being as possible? Speak and walk in uprightness, looking always upward into the face of God; because God's eyes are always upon his children. The prayer of the upright is his delight. Be softly spoken, and avoid stirring up evil words and actions. Live in love towards thy brother, whom thou hast seen, and God, whom thou hast not seen. He loves them that follow after righteousness.

Cultivate a happy, yea, a merry heart. Do not be afraid of joy. I have met those who have drunk cups of joy with great apologies that they were so happy, and a secret dread that something bitter would be dropped into their cup, as a makeweight. But God is glad for us to be glad. The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, and peace. Let thy heart bubble over into thy face, making it cheerful. Then the way of thy life shall go upward, winding up from the valleys among the everlasting mountains. Beware of evil devices, of greed for gain, of insubordination to reproof, and often remind thyself that God is near thee, listening to thy prayers, and waiting to shed his light upon thine eyes. Happy is he who knows the accents of Life when she reproves. O Spirit of Life, speak even more loudly in the inner shrine of my soul, arresting, criticizing, staying every wrong thing that may be harbouring there!

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

"LONDON, 1900."

The Day of Prayer.

VERY properly a Convention representing Christian work the world over began with a day of prayer. City Road Wesleyan Chapel was the centre of one continuous service of prayer and praise from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. on Friday last. The leaders changed every hour, and naturally the crowd varied alike in its personnel and numbers. Towards evening the body of the church was well filled, and by 7.30, when the opening sermon was to be preached, the place was packed.

The leaders through the day were: Rev. F. H. King, President East London C.E. Union; Rev. Isaac F. Row, India; Rev. J. H. Elliott, America; Rev. G. Howard James, Derby; Rev. Alex. Matheson, M.A., London; Rev. Joseph King, Australia: Rev. John Bradford, Ex-President London Baptist Association; Rev. T. Carritt, Ipswich; Rev. Robert F. Y. Pierce, D.D., America; Rev. T. Townsend, Shrewsbury; Rev. F. W. Wilson, Canada; Rev. Herbert J. White, America; Rev. J. E. Walton, Australia.

The devotional exercises of the evening service were conducted by Rev. J. B. Stedeford (of London); Miss Ada Rose (Mrs. Gibbs) sang us a solo, "There's music in my soul," carrying the congregation with her in its sympathetic and earnest rendering.

Rev. A. J. Palmer, of Folkestone, preached the sermon, taking for his text 1 Cor. xiii. 13, and xiv. 1. "But the greatest of these is love. Follow after love." Christ, said he, had pointed out the possibility of persons possessing very wonderful gifts, and yet it would be necessary for Him to say to such "I never knew you." These people at Corinth appeared to be of this class, and hence the apostle urged the emptiness and worthlessness of everything without love. Looking at the preacher reminded his hearers that it meant far more than mere kindness to the poor. It included that, but it was much more. Indeed, such kindness grew out of the true spirit of charity. Nor should we simply identify charity with the spirit which makes little of the differences which lead to denominationalism. Such charity may be true, but it is not deep. Love suffereth long and is kind; it envieth not; it rejoiceth not in iniquity; but is, in a word, dynamic of all real religion.

Love helps us to understand God. Without love it is impossible to know Him. Many of the Swiss villagers are totally unconscious of the beauty which is all about them, because destitute of the æsthetic sense. So multitudes are seeking for God along intellectual lines, and cannot find Him, because He is only known through love born at the Cross.

Love helps us to understand the Word of God. It brings us into the necessary sympathy with it. He had recently met a friend of his with an ill-spelt letter in his hand and tears in his eyes. It was his boy's first letter from school, and whilst the critic would find little in it of interest, love discovered much. The more of love we have, the more the Word reveals to us.

The work which Christ has given Love to do is the greatest in the world. All preaching should be in love. Duty compared with love is as the clear, cold moonlight compared with the brightness and life-giving warmth of the sun.

Love is the highest inspiration for service. The prospect of reward and the certainty of success are not always present. But love is all-sufficient. The mother knows that her child must die. No service she can render will prevent the end coming. But love inspires her to every possible service for her child. So where love is, whatever else may not be, service will be constant and true. "Follow after love."

The Welcome Meetings.

SATURDAY.

Thousands of Endeavourers gathered in the Royal Albert Hall on Saturday night—one-half representing the London Societies to welcome the other half—visitors from every part of the world. The meeting proper was preceded by a Musical Service, conducted by Rev. Carey Bonner, supported by a large choir, with Mr. Edward Barrow, R.A.M., and Madame Kate Cove as soloists.

The entrance of Rev. F. B. Meyer and Dr. Clark, together with a number of ministers interested in the work in England and abroad, was a signal for an outburst of genuine enthusiasm. The great auditorium was for a few moments a mass of fluttering white, whilst the Endeavourers gave their leaders what is termed "a Chautauqua salute." The opening hymn, "See the eager crowds assembling," was sung with characteristic fervour. Rev. D. J. Rounsefell led in prayer, and then Mr. Meyer gave his address. Among other things, he said: "Christian Endeavour (and I trust it will not be deemed impertinent to repeat what is so well known amongst us) stands for

FIVE GREAT PRINCIPLES:

(1) Personal devotion to the Divine Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, so that we do not simply rely on his work of propitiation, finished on the cross, but view Him as our living King, whose will is law in every department of life. (2) The covenant obligation embodied in our pledge, without which there can be no true Society of Christian Endeavour. Covenant, mark you, as the President of Scottish Endeavour insists, which implicates the help of the Spirit of God as the only source and inspiration of our Endeavour. (3) Constant religious training for all kinds of service involved in the various committees, which are, equally with the prayer meeting and the covenant, essential parts of every society of Christian Endeavour. (4) Strenuous loyalty to the local church and denomination with which each society is connected. (5) Interdenominational spiritual fellowship, through which we hope, not for organic unity, but to realize our Lord's Prayer for spiritual unity, that all who believe in Him may be one. In these five points the heart and soul of the Christian Endeavour Movement is concentrated.

"Christian Endeavour is a protest against the life which is built in water-tight compartments; it demands that Christ shall be supreme—over the cricket field and lawn tennis court, over the store and workshop, over the weight in the scale and the sentence on the bench, over the drawing of a cheque and the writing of a book.

"Christian Endeavour insists on the necessity of a higher-up and

and asks not only what did Jesus do, and what would He have me do, but for the source of Power by which to do it.

"Christian Endeavour protests against the idea that religion means dulness and gloom, and insists on glad enthusiasm, and abounding life, as the essential marks of discipleship.

"Christian Endeavour holds that young men and women should meet together in a common quest for God and goodness, and that their comradeship will be a greater blessing than if either sex met separately.

"Christian Endeavour protests against the idea that Christians should abstain from civic and municipal responsibility, and demands that the public conscience should be sensitized by Christian ideals, and that Christian men and women should do their utmost to return clean men, of whatever political party, to places of power.

"Christian Endeavour believes in the Church and Christian ordinances, but protests against the intrusion of the priest into the office of Christ, and against the notion of sacramental grace apart from the living faith of the soul.

"Christian Endeavour is a protest against the isolation and exclusiveness of our religious bodies, and whilst pledging its members to make in their affections, demands that each sheep should remember that it belongs not only to its special fold, but equally to the one flock; that each soldier should think not alone of his regiment, but of the entire army; and that each member of the body should seek the life and power of the whole organization of which Christ is Head.

"In conclusion, let me remind you, that if we want to be like God, like God we must be content to be in the background. The youthful followers of the Messiah are compared by the Psalmist to the dew, which waters the parched ground, and disappears from the eye of day. We must not boast ourselves better than others, but must SHOW OURSELVES BETTER.

We must not only protest against mistake and failure, but show a more excellent way, with that unobtrusive modesty which wists not that its face shines. We must present ourselves to the Divine Spirit, who proceeds from the Father and the Son, that He may clothe Himself with us as He did with Gideon, and work out through us his own programme of redemptive ministry.

"Welcome, then, to all—to our Colonial C.E.'s whose presence here will weave closer, than even companionship in arms can do, the bonds which are fast binding in one great empire, the motherland and her daughters—to the delegates from the great sister country across the Atlantic; may our flags ever wave together in peace and in war, when the sword must be drawn in the cause of righteousness and in defence of the oppressed. And to you especially, beloved founder and president of world-wide Endeavour, and to your dear wife, welcome, again and again. Welcome also to fellow-Endeavourers from every part of the world, and may this Convention inaugurate that revival of pure and undefiled religion for which the Church, and we may almost say the world, is waiting.

"Advance, then, Christian Endeavour!"

Rev. J. Brown Morgan, Chairman of the Convention Committee, delivered the formal address of welcome. He regarded this as a meeting of tremendous importance. They had met in the first city in the world in a world's convention of a movement which is and world-saving in its purpose. On behalf of the Convention Committee, of the 30,000 London Endeavourers, of the 200,000 British Endeavourers, he had to say, "You are welcome, you are welcome."

Difficulties have been immense, and on the heart of every committeeman there remained a consciousness of imperfection, but still they had laboured for a harvest in the spread of C.E., and if that harvest should be reaped it would more than repay them for their labour. The world had many hubs, but the present hub of the C.E. world was London. He humorously described London as containing many Londons—historic London, the outer London of streets, political London, social London, underground London with its destitution, and a splendid philanthropic London, which was mainly interested in the welcome he had now to give.

British Endeavourers were welcome, but this, he said, was chiefly its British welcome to friends from across the seas. To the Endeavourers of the United States—the home of Endeavourers, to visitors from the Colonies, and to people from the countries of Europe, Britain said thrice welcome. In conclusion he had to welcome them as young people, buoyant and hopeful, in whose keeping are the

and bid them press on to realization of a redeemed humanity, and the kingdom of God.

Rev. F. W. Bourne, President of the London Federation of Free Church Councils, also extended a welcome on behalf of the Churches.

The Chairman then called upon Dr. Clark, who was received with tremendous applause. He expressed his appreciation of the honour of responding to the kind things which had been said. He had to speak for U.S. and Canada, and it was not altogether inappropriate, since he was born under the Union Jack, although a thoroughly good American. He was not surprised at the welcome, for he had discovered that there is nothing more cordial and hearty than a British welcome. He desired to speak for other lands as well, for Japan and China. He read formal greetings from the Annual Convention at Foochow, at which he was present but a few weeks ago. The interest manifested in that land was illustrated by the fact that the first C.E. Society formed there was called the "Drum around and rouse up Society."

In course of journeying he and Mrs. Clark had spent a few days in Pekin, and since then they had been daily lifting their hearts to God for the safety of the Christians in that distressed city, and he now stopped in his address for a few moments and asked Dr. Clifford to voice the petitions of the vast congregation in asking for the saving of those in distress. In conclusion, he described the bridging of Niagara. A boy's kite first carried the string across the mighty torrent, and then followed cord, rope and cable, until the great suspension bridge was built. So had Christian Endeavour carried across oceans the strong cords which were drawing ever closer, and uniting nations of the earth in the one kingdom of the Lord Christ.

THE ALEXANDRA PALACE.

Pastor F. Blecher then responded for Germany. Rev. Carlos Aranjò (Spain) was accompanied by an American missionary, who acted as interpreter. When Mr. Meyer suggested that here was an illustration of the way in which C.E. makes for peace, uniting in bonds of brotherhood men of nations which only a little while ago were meeting in battle, the enthusiasm was unbounded. Rev. C. E. Greig (France), Mrs. Brockway (India), and Pastor Dubois (Switzerland) also addressed the meeting—which was one long to be remembered.

Another "Welcome Meeting" was held in the spacious Central Hall of the Alexandra Palace. It was crowded to overflowing, many of the audience standing throughout the proceedings. It is safe to say that there were more than 10,000 persons present. Before Rev. J. W. Lamont, chairman of the National Council, took his place to preside over the meeting, half-an-hour's musical service was given by a choir under the direction of Mr. G. Newton, with Mr. A. J. Hawkins (of the City Temple) at the organ.

Just before the hour for beginning, choir and congregation joined informally in singing together "Blest be the tie that binds Our hearts in Christian love." Then the meeting was opened with further praise, and Dr. Newman Hall led in prayer. A solo, "Creation's Hymn," was next sung by Miss Sydney Bushnell. Then came

THE CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS.

It was his privilege, he said, to bid visitors from all lands "a hundred thousand welcomes" in the name of the National Union of Great Britain and Ireland. The object of this Convention is to answer the question, How may Endeavourers help the Church of Christ more effectively? No doubt can be entertained as to the need for such aid. There is great disproportion between the agencies which the Church of Christ employs and the results achieved; but the man who finds fault should be ready to point out remedial measures. The Church must never grow old, but should preserve the dew of its youth by constant accessions of young Christians. It can well do with a bit of C.E. enterprise, and with the enthusiasm which is broad in outlook, fertile in method, and enduring in effort. There are in the way of such churches as are prepared to encourage youthful zeal, and to use the elements which this movement furnishes.

Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, hon. secretary of the Convention Committee, said he could not describe his emotions now that the hour was come for welcoming friends from across the Atlantic, to the actual realization of a desire voiced in America and finding response in England so long ago as 1893. He spoke in the name of 7,000 C.E. societies in the United Kingdom, with a British membership of not less than a quarter of a million. His welcome to Endeavourers from India, China, the Colonies, and South Africa was mingled with sincere sympathy respecting varied troubles in most of those lands, and with prayer that God may restore peace and prosperity to their people. Reference to the "marriage" of the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack at the St. Louis Convention ten years ago evoked signs of much enthusiasm in the meeting; nor was the feeling less strong when he declared that the visitors were welcomed for their attachment to the Name that is above every name, and for the Christian principles that they represent. One great plank in the C.E. platform is Christian citizenship, the determination not to leave the making and the administration of laws to the world, the flesh, and the devil. There must be no submission to a reimposition of the yoke from which the blood of the martyrs set us free. Under the banner of "The Old Power for the New Age," Endeavourers believe that Pentecostal light will show them what to do, and that Pentecostal power will enable them to accomplish it.

As a representative of the National Federation of Free Churches, Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson counted it a great privilege to join in the chorus of welcome to beloved friends from all parts of the world. In the movement for union, the Spirit of the Lord had guided both the Free Churches and the C.E. Societies; and Dr. Gibson expected to see the time when there will be not only a Convention, but an Ecumenical Council of the Catholic Church which is distinguished by Protestant principles. He would ask the present prayers and future co-operation of Endeavourers, with respect to the projected Free Church evangelistic campaign intended to begin next January in London, and to extend all over England and Wales.

RESPONSES TO THE WELCOME.

Mr. J. Willis Baer, secretary of the United Society, responded for America. You greet through me, said he, 40,000 C.E. societies with a membership of over two millions. Much disappointment and delay to would-be voyagers had been caused by the New York fire, with its lamentable loss of life; but there was determination among the delegates to visit this Convention even though it were impossible to reach it before its closing day. Mrs. Clark (America) spoke of the interest taken in the Convention by the junior Endeavourers.

After a solo by Miss Bushnell, a response for Australasia came from the lips of Sister Lizzie. A sweet assurance that "The Lord is our Shepherd" was voiced by Madame Antoinette Sterling. Responses were resumed by Rev. Canon Richardson (Canada), Pastor Merle-d'Aubigne (France) Miss Catherine Barbour (Spain), by another delegate from Germany, and, in a brief but very stirring speech, by Mr. Ezekiel Cotelingam, for India. The choir closed the meeting by singing "The Mizpah Benediction."

Convention Sunday.

Throughout London Sunday's engagements in very many churches, chapels, halls, and tents were in line with the bright, earnest, and expectant spirit of the Convention. Special sermons and addresses, dealing with C.E. topics, were delivered, both by prominent American and colonial preachers now in London for the Convention, and by ministers occupying their own familiar pulpits and platforms. Visiting Endeavourers were busy with meetings in numerous Sunday Schools; and the ministry of those friends was also acceptably exercised in "quiet-hour" gatherings at the close of evening services, thus illustrating a characteristic feature of the movement. The

at Alexandra Park opened with a well-attended early morning prayer-meeting in a large marquee called "Tent Endeavour;" and this was followed later by a quiet hour of meditation, exhortation, and waiting upon God, under the same canvas roof. It was here, too, that the morning service was held. Unison of praise, as regards musical measure and expression, is secured in all the meetings under the baton of one or other of the two conductors, Rev. Carey Bonner and Mr. G. Newton; for this is a necessity with such great congregations.

The preacher was Rev. Theo. Parr, of New South Wales; and, ere he entered upon a discourse which was full of point and fervour, he led in the exercises of Scripture reading and prayer. Psalms xxiv. and lxvii. were repeated, in alternate verses, by preacher and people. Before prayer, hearers were reminded that they might take upon themselves the privilege of priests unto God, without distinction of class; and they were asked to remember friends across the sea, especially those in trouble. God was earnestly entreated to put an end to cruel war, to guide the nations out of their entanglements, and to bring glory to Himself, and benefit to men in the events that lie beyond disaster and bloodshed.

A WORD FOR THE NEW CENTURY.

"Be strong" was the subject of the sermon. This expression was traced through Scripture, from the days of Moses and Joshua, to the exhortation in Eph. vi. 10, "Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord." Here we see three distinct epochs: the taking of Canaan, re-possession of that land, and the formation of the Church, whose mission it is to take possession of the world for Christ. A new era for God's work approaches. There is a grand coming together of those who have a life link with Jesus. The Church is seeing that her real mission is not merely getting ready for heaven, but that it is the bringing of heaven upon earth.

We are not going to shut our eyes to things outside this Convention. Part of our task is to transform governments as well as society and human nature. It is God who speaks; and therefore it is possible to be strong for what is a tremendous work.

The essentials of physical strength are health, diet, exercise and judgment; and these have important lessons for us. If we are to be used of God in his regeneration of man, the healthy and full endowment of the Holy Spirit must be appropriated by us.

OUR SPIRITUAL DIET

should be the Word of God; let us put earnest study into it. Things easy to read cannot afford much intellectual or moral strength, though they may legitimately afford relaxation. Consecrated culture will be a need of the new century. The world is sick of twaddle and inanity; and if these things get into our work, the devil will laugh at us. Along the lines of Christian fellowship shall strength also be found. Oh, for the strength of united supplication before God!

Exercise brings strength. "I cannot," often means "I do not want to try." May God help us to get our unused talents into work for Him.

Strength avails little unless it be directed by prudence. Consecrated commonsense is needed if we are to do much for God; and the late D. L. Moody was a splendid example of how to use our wits in Christian work, that we may capture the world for Christ, and give Him his rightful place as King.

It is especially

to be strong to bear, suffer, and do all the Saviour's will. This may mean death and wounds; but it also means liberty for the world, the dominion of the Redeemer, and the everlasting crown.

IN THE AFTERNOON.

Separate gatherings had been announced for young men and young women respectively; but, owing to the absence, through delayed Atlantic transport, of lady speakers who were to take part, the two interests mentioned were united in one big gathering within the walls of "Tent Mizpah." A letter was read from the Marquis of Northampton, expressing regret for unavoidable absence, in which he said, "This movement among young people is full of promise for the future. So many lives consecrated to Christ at an early age must have effect in Christianizing the world, and will thus prepare for the coming of the Lord."

Lord Kinnaird, who presided, coupled together the words, " . . . if ye can find a man" (Jer v. 1) and St. Paul's saying, "I knew a man in Christ," showing the source to which we must look for

THE IDEAL OF TRUE MANLINESS.

The first characteristic of that quality is courage to stand alone, in the attempt to do great things for God. Then there must be fitness in body, intellect, and spirit. Earnestness cannot take the place of physical and mental competency.

From the reference in Rom. xvi. 12 to "Persis the beloved, which laboured much in the Lord," Miss Jennie Street derived some valuable lessons for her sister Endeavourers, as to the necessity of care for physical as well as spiritual strength, and the value of personal acquaintance with Christ. If, like Persis, women are they cannot fail to be happy; in contrast to the poor, dissatisfied, restless, and querulous creatures who make no real and practical use of life. The world is just waiting for women to settle many of its social questions; and God himself wants women who will adorn his doctrine and spread his messages.

The closing address of the afternoon, by Rev. Alex. Ramsey (London), was founded upon

REV. F. WARDLAW THOMPSON.
From Photograph by Mr. W. Goodfellow, Regent Street, W.

Psa. cxliii. 8, "Cause me to know the way wherein I should walk; for I lift up my soul unto Thee." To the merely speculative intellect, God answers nothing; but if we seek truth, we must make love to it. The place given to meekness and humility, and the pre-eminence of love, differentiates the Christian character from all others of a moral kind. There is a peculiar call in the present day to the Christian exercise of intellect in matters of public concern; and between such service and Christian character influences must arise to benefit both.

It was a trying moment when, on Sunday evening, Rev. Knight Chaplin had to announce to the great assembly the news, only just received, that the appointed speaker, Dr. Maltbie Babcock, could not be present. Owing to the burning of the steamship Saale in New York Harbour, he had had to come by a later and a slower boat, which had failed to reach port at the time expected. Very wisely Mr. Chaplin directed the assembly to earnest prayer for guidance in such an unfortunate contretemps.

Mr. P. P. Bilhorn, of Chicago, well known as a singing evangelist, sang with marked effect "The Bird with the Broken Wing," a hymn of his own composition,* which has brought a message of hope to many a despairing soul.

Mr. Chaplin then addressed the gathering from Eph. iv. 8, leading his hearers through some of the scenes of the Saviour's life on earth, until, as "the world's greatest Conqueror," He led captivity captive, and gave gifts to men. An after-meeting followed.

MONDAY.

The Dawning Age and its Problems.

The Concert Hall was early packed, and a brief song service preceded the meeting proper, over which Rev. W. H. Towers, of the British National Council, presided. Mr. J. E. Randall, secretary of the Jamaica C.E. Union, led the devotions, reading 1 Cor. xiii. The singing was most hearty, the vast congregation following the lead of the conductor with splendid effect. Some amusement was caused by the chairman's request that the ladies should remove their hats, apparently that the people might better see the speakers, but the response was almost universal.

The Chairman said the period of welcoming had now passed, and the Convention was face to face with a feast of good things. The eighteenth century revival produced the missionary movement which, in the nineteenth, has girdled the globe. The end of the nineteenth has produced the Christian Endeavour movement, which will enter upon the new century three and a half millions strong. C.E. stands for many things, but it certainly stands for Christian citizenship; and he believed that when the young men identified therewith become voters, there will result a purer and a better England.

The first speaker of the morning was Rev. C. M. Sheldon, who received a wonderful ovation. He said there was only one problem in the universe, and that is instead of our own. All others are included in this, but for the sake of discussion we are to talk of "Commercial Problems," &c. We have the right to ask if the world of trade is in harmony with the will of God. Is it dominated by love and the Sermon on the Mount? Or is the first thought rather the making of money? The facts seem to show that the commercial world is not doing the will of God, but rather its own. He did not mean to say that there were no exceptions, but on the whole he believed his statement to be true. He had made a canvass of business men, and had lived among them, and almost all admitted that to conduct business on lines of love would certainly fail. Just at that point Christ come in. It is not necessary for a man to live. It is necessary for him to do the will of God. He had received many letters from young men expressing their perplexity, and asking for advice. In his college days he spent a vacation as waiter in a summer hotel. At his table he was asked, according to menu, for green, black, and English breakfast tea, and going to the pantry, found two great urns out of which all the tea was drawn. This was his first acquaintance with the duplicity of business.

Then the prime necessities of life were increasingly being cornered. A member of Parliament had told him last week that three great interests always commanded a respectful interest in the House, and others had little chance if they ran counter to these. They were the railway, the land, and the brewing interests. ("Shame.") These are facts which we have to face, and we can only meet them by and the Sermon on the Mount. And if these are insisted upon, martyrdom is sure to follow. If we do not follow Christ wherever we are, doing his will in all our business, we fail to realize the "doing of all things to the honour and glory of God."

Rev. J. Monro Gibson, D.D., delivered an address on the "Intellectual Problems of the New Age." The subject was so vast that he must limit his address to the problems which face earnest Christians. These of necessity meet doubts. He had sought to discover some general principle which would apply to a[illegible] varying problems, and it seemed to him that such would be found in an adequate response to the general demand for certainty in religion. This led many, on the one hand, to the Church of Rome, and on the other to Agnosticism. Can this demand be satisfied? The apostles were satisfied. Through all the New Testament, in spite of persecution, there was certainty. It came, not from the Church, but from personal knowledge and fellowship with Christ. He says, "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest."

Why are not people thus satisfied? Because they demand a preliminary and a logical certainty. God could have given us such a revelation that no man could err concerning it. But He requires righteousness, and this cannot be had through reason without conscience. Only through the Spirit can this certainty be. Directly we know Christ, "we know whom we have believed." Get the difficulties which lie between the individual and God removed, not by waiting until every question has been satisfactorily answered, but by pressing on to God, and then you see the difficulty

SOLVED IN THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOD.

Rev. Maltbie D. Babcock, D.D., of New York, who was to have spoken on "Social Problems," failed to appear, and in his place, at a few minutes' notice, Dr. F. W. Tomkins, of the Reformed Episcopal Church of Philadelphia, took up the theme. He began by saying that the world will never be converted until there is social unity in the church. In the world there are many distinctions which stand in the way of social progress. The working men would not go to church because they believe they are not wanted. You can't do very much for the remedying of these things by law and resolutions, nor yet by agitation. It can only be mended by the developing of true spirit of brotherhood. In Christ Jesus only can we realize this brotherhood, and be one. He called upon those present to persist in the conflict until the victory should be won.

Rev. John McNeill, who had just arrived, followed. He said he had always been an Endeavourer, and his father and mother were such before him. These problems of which so much had been said, had the beginnings of their solutions in the home. His parents had solved the drink problem for the family by bringing up all as abstainers. May many such solutions be found! Another influence making for the solution of these problems, and suggested by his own early life, was the family altar; and very beautifully and pathetically, in conclusion, the speaker described the daily worship in the little cottage where his childhood days were spent. The meeting then adjourned with prayer.

was crowded on Monday morning by an eager throng of Endeavourers, intensely interested in the weighty utterances which were then made upon the subject. A member of the British National Council, Rev. John Watson, D.D. (not "Ian Maclaren"), occupied the chair. He spoke of the great light which Christ now sheds upon the world. The passing century has brought new revelations of God and disclosures of his counsels. To our children must be left its unresolved problems and difficulties. The fact that there are so many and such problems is due to the mental and spiritual activities of the age; and the absence of these difficulties would be no good sign. Let the young go forward with courage and hope to possess the land, in the exercise of that mental freedom, that right to think for themselves, which has been so hardly won and dearly bought in the past.

"Commercial Problems" were treated by Mr. Arnold F. Hills, D.L., London. Commercial prosperity, he said, depends upon the underlying forces of Christianity. The commerce of America during the last decade has advanced by leaps and bounds; and we have a significant hint as to the virtues that have brought this about. For more than twenty years that country has been working out its own salvation from the grog-shop and the drinking saloon, and has written the word prohibition across her Legislature. The is a hopeful sign of our day. We look to the Christians of the coming century to harmonize the claims of conflicting interests, and to aid the helpless multitude, in response to the bitter cry of the bondmen of labour, making it easier for men to live and to serve their God in freedom from the constant anxiety of the wolf at the door. Christianity tends to substitute co-operation for competition. From personal experience the speaker gave the facts and figures of a novel industrial development, tried on a considerable scale for a number of years with eminently satisfactory results. Christians should promote the principle that no man can be happy unless his men are happy with him.

Rev. Dr. Clifford dealt at great length with the subject of "Social Problems."

It is work, he said, that keeps men alive, and feeds the energies, mental and spiritual, within us. In forgetting our neighbour we forget our best possible selves. Men who drop out of work at forty have lost touch with human life, and have left off battling for righteousness.

PAUL WAS AN ENDEAVOURER

to the end of his life, saying, "This one thing I do," not dream, wish, or hope. Social service is the divine method of growth. These problems must be solved by the forces, facts, and ideas, of the Gospel of Christ. History still turns on the axis of religion.

The great fight to-day seems to be between money and man; and who can beat money save the man who is redeemed? The requisites for the fight are: unselfish service for men, irrepressible hopefulness in our cause, faith in the recovery of the fallen, and daring in the onslaught upon evil—these things are found only in Christ.

As to methods, do not fail to use your vote, which is a trust from God, to be exercized for righteousness. In the matter of the drink, we must be either the hammer or the anvil. Then there is an imperialism that would paint the universe red, and would constrain us to enter the ranks of militarism in order to extend the mere acres of our empire. But there is that would go to death rather than do a wrong thing, that would rather suffer loss in acreage than in character. We must be true imperialists on the side of God, and of the activities that bring blessing to the world.

"Intellectual Problems: The Literature of the Twentieth Century," was the subject allotted to Rev. G. C. Lorimer, D.D., of Boston. After greeting brethren and sisters in the Lord, in the name of America, he said that the dominant spirit of the intellectual problems of the age is reflected, directly or indirectly, in its literature. If literature expresses the common thought of the age, it is, in a special sense, a mirror of what is taking place in religious circles. The age learns more of the theological problems and great philosophical issues of religion from current literature than from the things which are written to advocate these various issues. In the present century, it is that has come to occupy a leading place. The great community looks into such books, and forms conceptions therefrom as to what is agitating the religious world. Ministers are told that people have outgrown doctrinal sermons, and that they should talk about the glitter of the sunshine and the brightness of the moonbeams. The fact is, the world is hungering to know the eternal verities on which a man is to stand; and the minister is sacrificing the grandest function when he condescends to trivial themes, and leaves to the novelist the grand issues that concern the future of humanity.

The literature of the coming century will be more socialistic and less idealistic, using the former term to indicate the modern tendency by which the solidarity of human life is recognized, and we come to believe that no man can do wrong without injury to others. Men have preached their rights; but the day is coming when they will learn their duties, when the capitalist and labourer shall stand closer together than now, and when the ideal of a common brotherhood will prevail.

There were several denominational rallies during the afternoon. In the evening there were meetings on one of them in Tent Mizpah, and the other in the Concert Hall. In the former place the chair was occupied by Rev. Richard Richard, of the British National Council.

Rev. S. Chadwick (Leeds) spoke upon missions "at home." He said that the people generally regarded as the world's prophets and outlookers are amongst the young people. The young represent the starting point of the new generation. There is but one word from God to the world, "Come," and but one word to the Church, "Go." While Christ is honoured and studied more than ever before, the Church has a looser grip upon the masses. If our methods do not answer their purpose, we must change them.

Rev. Alexander Connell dealt with the voices that come back to us from the days of a dying century. First, there is a clear and overwhelming confession from all the ends of the earth that if there be no salvation in Christ Jesus, then there is absolutely no hope at all. No ethical code can rival that in Jesus Christ's Gospel, if you estimate the teachings by their spirit and, most of all, by their fruits. In that respect it is of life, of power to obey and to develop in the life of God. If ever we need to feel the great burden of God's world upon our hearts, it is in times like these. Let us guard ourselves from any feeling of revulsion against the whole Empire of China. True, the offence of the Cross has not ceased; but racial antipathy, the policy of the mailed fist, and political aims on the part of Roman Catholic missions have been causes of trouble. Who shall forecast the issue? We shall certainly not hasten the reign of peace by suppressing proclamation of the love of God; and the States of Christendom must have learned that lesson by this time.

Rev. H. E. Fox (C.M.S.) said that the Church must learn more and more, that there is than Great Britain. We must get rid of a limited outlook for our own sakes. There can be no reflex blessing unless we are communicating blessing to others.

Some of the newspapers attribute the trouble in China to the presence there of missionaries; but if that land had been fully evangelized, recent horrors would not have happened. During the Indian mutiny, not a single native Christian joined the rebels. Experiences in Uganda also afford proof of the value of missionary influence; and the same fact is clearly traceable in the history of the abolition of slavery in that land. The Gospel is good for the nations: let us give it to them, for they cannot do without it.

In the Concert Hall, Mr. Chas. Waters, President of the London Council, presided over a large and enthusiastic gathering.

Dr. Pugh spoke on "The Missionary Outlook at Home." He said the great problem which increasingly forces itself upon the attention of all Christian workers, is what shall be done with the great mass of toilers in our great cities who are outside all the influences of our churches.

Bishop Arnett, of Wilberforce, Ohio, was announced to speak at this meeting, but in his absence Dr. Maltbie Babcock, of New York, who had not arrived in time to fulfil his morning engagement, was an acceptable substitute. Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, of the L.M.S., was the other speaker. Mr. Thompson is a statesman in the world of missions, and his contribution to the subject was impressive and instructive in a high degree.

SUNDAY, JULY 22.

The Needy at Our Door (Luke xvi. 19-31).

THERE is no harm in wealth if it is used, not for ostentation and display, or for our selfish enjoyment, but for the sake of others. It was too bad that the rich man should take no notice of the beggar, who probably met his eye every time he passed in and out of his palace. He was hungry, or he would not have desired to be fed with the leavings of the rich man's table; he was sick, or the dogs would not have come to lick his sores. There are many such around us, and if each great house would take one poor one under its care; if every rich man would care for one beggar; if every well-to-do family would concern itself about the needs of some poor one within its reach, a great step would be taken towards the solution of the problems which are rending society. Beware, young friends, of living amid great schemes which promise universal amelioration of the conditions of men, but do not touch individual cases. I would rather a hundred times that you should attempt to help one human life than that you should be on twenty committees, and rush from one to another in a constant buzz of excitement. Committees may serve a good purpose in encouraging the timid and inexperienced to define their work, but they must not take the place of individual exertion.

It is important of course not to give to every beggar who thrusts his hand across your path; often those who are most insistent are least deserving, and it would not be wise to begin giving money promiscuously, but surely in every life there are cases of poverty and need, about which there can be no doubt or hesitation—the sick servant, or the family of some young girl who has come into your domestic service, the charwoman, the washerwoman. We look at the external, God at the heart. Wherever there is a Lazarus hidden beneath his sores and rags, we may well help him; or if there is some poor beggar whom our loving-kindness can transform into a Lazarus, him we may help, but we must guard against helping those who are lazy and careless, and like the evil soil that turns sun and dew to pernicious weeds.

What a difference there was between the burial of the two! Much is said of the funeral cortège which followed the rich man; nothing of the interment of the pauper; but when the one was in Gehenna, the other was in the bosom of Abraham, which, to the Jews, was the essence of heaven. The poor in this world are often rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which God hath promised to them that love Him. Learn to measure men by the worth of their character, and not by the worth of their means. A man is worth not simply the money he has in the bank, but the purity, virtue, sweetness, and strength of his inner life.

Remember what Christ said of that great gulf fixed. Do not believe the teaching of the present day, which would have you think that a bridge now spans it, of which Christ knew nothing. Remember He said that there was no passage from the one place to the other. They that are unholy and filthy at death, remain so. In that world of woe, memory does its unhindered work. Here we are distracted, and we are able to flee from the voice which perpetually bids us remember; there memory will constantly speak to us of the past, of its failure and sin, of its offences against God and man. What a striking testimony the Lord gives of the power of the Word of God! Men think that conversion would naturally follow the resurrection of one from the dead, but when Lazarus did rise from the dead that startling fact only hastened the Lord's death. No, it is not the sheeted spectre from the grave which will truly arrest and save men, but the Word of God, through which the Holy Spirit speaks. The Lord said that Moses and the prophets had truth enough to bring men to repentance and faith, how much more must that be the case, when, to the Old Testament, has been added the New—the Gospels and Epistles with the words of Jesus, and the solemn warning of the Epistle to the Hebrews, of the Book of Jude, and of the Book of Revelation. C.E. NOTES.

There is so great hope of Christian Endeavour growth in the Philippine Islands that it has been necessary to appoint a superintendent of C.E. work. The United States Marine Society has also been founded in the Islands.

In 1894 there were two societies in Germany, to-day there are 168, with 3,228 active and 781 associate members. A German firm supplied the Convention Ladies' Dormitory with hand-glasses at one-twentieth of their original price, on hearing there was to be a German rally and German headquarters.

Dr. Clark tells of excellent Christian Endeavour meetings held in Pekin, when Major Congar, U.S.A. Minister Plenipotentiary to China, presided. The report told of five Endeavour Societies in Pekin, with the hope of great additions to their number. The members of these societies will need all our prayers at the present moment. The North China Convention was held at Tientsin, when several missions were represented.

Under the auspices of the Edinburgh and District Christian Endeavour Union, an interesting and successful conference was held at Penicuik on Saturday, 7th inst., the subject being "The Work of Visitation." PICTURE to yourself a bare little room at the top of one of those dreary blocks of buildings misnamed model dwellings. From the windows you could look down into the court which lay enclosed at the bottom, as deep and dark as a well. No sunshine got down there, except in the height of summer when the sun stood directly above the court.

But here, on the sixth floor, a patch of sunlight travelled across the discoloured wall on every bright afternoon, and sometimes at sunset there was quite a transfiguration of the dingy place. To-day, however, the raw chill of January filled the room, and defied the handful of fire in the grate. Beside the fire sat a man dejected and dirty, his face buried in his hands, heedless of the children playing on the bare unwashed floor.

"Farver, w'ere's Freddy?" asked Nance for the fourth time. "My dolly do want mendin'! 'Er sawdust is gettin' everywhere!" But she wept on uncomforted.

"Oh, Freddy, Freddy!" she cried as he entered some time after, burying her head against him, with a fresh access of weeping. "Lizer's broke my dolly; she's deader than last time you mended 'er!"

"Her 'cad's comed off," said Lizer, briefly. "Can't yer fix it?"

"Give us a look," said Freddy, cheerfully, taking the doll in his hands. Nance, exhausted, left off crying, and let one dim eye emerge to watch the proceedings.

"Why, it's all right, Nance," he said gently. "We'll 'ave 'er fixed up in no time."

Freddy, the eldest, was the idol of the family. Since the children were left motherless two years ago, Freddy had done everything for them. He was a slight boy of nine, with a sallow skin and fair fluffy hair, and big eyes that looked very blue in his colourless face. He was known down in the court as the "Little Aingel," and those blue eyes had an irresistible appeal about them. It was wonderful what an influence this small boy had, and what a lot of work he got through in a day.

Freddy washed his small sisters with care, and, as it was Saturday night, put the hair of the two elder ones in curl papers, with what skill he might, according to his mother's injunctions. "Look after 'em, Freddy, and curl their 'air of a Saturd'y night!" was one of the last things he remembered her saying as she lay pale and dying, her thin hands laid on the children asleep beside her in the one bed the room boasted. He often dreamed of her still.

At last they were all tucked in safely, and Freddy took his cap and a tiny paper packet off the mantelpiece. "Go to sleep, young 'uns. I'm jus' goin' acrost to see Nell Pyne a minnit, 'cos she's sick, and if I don't fin' yer snorin' when I gets back, yer knows what!"

"Yer 'aven't kissed us, Fred," murmured Nance.

"Nor I 'aven't!" he said, returning promptly. "I don't arf do this job."

He kissed them in turns, and they clung round his neck with fervour, Nance claiming to be the last.

"Yer arms is thin, Nance! I can feel the bones of 'em when yer 'ug me up like that," said Freddy, looking at her with some concern, when he was released. "Now go to sleep—sharp!"

The Lovely Sunbeam.

Catch the sunbeam—keep it
Do not let it go;
Make its rays abiding,
Flitting to and fro.
When the days are cloudy,
It will lend its sheen;
Light, and joy, and gladness,
Spreading o'er the scene.

Catch the sunbeam—keep it!
Let it never stray;
In the family circle,
Let it e'er have sway.
Let no angry moment
E'er its brightness mar.
Let the sunbeam, shining,
Banish strife afar.

Catch the sunbeam—keep it!
'Tis a beam from heaven,
Whence, not only brightness,
But all good is given;
Precious, loving sunbeam,
Never flit away,
Cheering, helping, gladening,
Ever near me stay!

International S.S. Lessons.

July 29, 1900.

The Transfiguration.—Luke ix. 28-36.

Golden Text.—"This is my beloved Son . . . hear Him."—Luke ix. 35.

Introduction.

THE transfiguration took place on a mountain (28), so did one of the three temptations of the devil (Luke iv. 5); the crucifixion was on a hill called Calvary (Luke xxiii. 33). (See other events on mountain tops.) The lesson can well be divided up into

THE Human / Holy THREE Heavenly VOICE.

Key to Blackboard Plan.—It was a mountain of prayer (28); we have often read how Christ many times went up into a mountain for that purpose. The law was represented by Moses. The phrophets were represented by Elijah, and the Gospel by the Lord Jesus Christ; He was the chief One, and it was of Him the heavenly voice spoke.

1.—The Human Three.

The three disciples, Peter, James, and John, were the same three who went into the house of Jairus with Christ when He raised to life the little daughter. They went with Him, too, in the Garden of Gethsemane (Mark xiv. 32), nearer than any of the others. Once in a house, once in a garden, now on a high mountain alone with Jesus (Mark ix. 2) "by themselves," (Mark xvii. 1) "apart." These three men have been called the "pillars of the Church" (see Gal. ii. 9). (33) Peter, ever ready to do something, wants to build, "not knowing what he said." They were human, these three disciples. "They slept" (32); "they were afraid" (34). Matthew tells us Jesus touched them, and said, "Be not afraid." See the cloud of Divine presence in Ex. xxxiii. 9; 1 Kings viii. 10, 11; Num. ix. 15-23, &c.

2.—The Holy Three.

Another trio, but how different. These three had all fasted forty days and forty nights. At death, one (Moses) God buried (Deut. xxxiv. 5, 6); the second (Elijah) God took to heaven without death (2 Kings ii. 11); the third (Jesus Christ) God raised from the dead (Acts ii. 23, 24). Each one of these three represented the three divisions of the Bible. The Law: Moses; the Prophets: Elijah; the Gospel: Jesus Christ (See Mal. iv. 4-6).

Christ is the chief of the three. His face as the sun (Matt. xvii. 2); his raiment as the light, white and glistering, white as snow. What is glory? This is (32). It was a glimpse of his real glory which the disciples saw, and which was hidden or veiled as He walked this earth (Psa. civ. 2; Hab. iii. 4; John i. 14; Rev. i. 16. See also the angel with heaven's glory. Matt. xxviii. 3).

The Heavenly Voice.

Moses, Elias, and Christ, talked about the final act in the great Redemption-Plan (v. 31), and at the end is God the Father's voice and presence to show his approval of his Son's work. "My beloved Son, well pleasing," (John xii. 28: Luke iii. 22). Three times did God thus testify to Christ's life here on earth. (35) The two added words "Hear Him" must come home to us all, we do well to listen to the voice of the Good Shepherd and obey.

"This is my beloved Son" (Psa. ii. 7).

"In whom I am well pleased" (Isa. xlii. 1).

"Hear ye Him" (Deut. xviii. 15). (33) "It is good to be here." Yes, indeed it is; to be alone with Jesus is always good (36); and we can if we will often be alone with Him, do we value enough this great privilege?

A Needed Witness.

STREAMING down from the Marble Arch come tens of thousands of Sunday cyclists of both sexes, some with tennis rackets, others with golfing implements, singly and in groups, in some cases batches of over forty. At the corner of Shepherd's Bush Green the road divides to Uxbridge on the right, to Kew and Richmond on the left. For the past two Sundays we have stood with a large printed banner at this junction, and as these teeming masses stream by we have pointed with our Bibles to the large text "Beware, ye that forget God," whilst underneath in bold type is the word "Eternity." The reverse side of the banner reads "Prepare to meet thy God." Our experience has been most interesting and I believe good results will be seen.

Mr. Wild, secretary of Y.M.C.A., and our own young men are helping in this matter, and I write this in order that others may copy, and thus bear witness for God in these days of desecration of the Lord's Day.

The banner and printed matter costs less than six shillings. The usefulness and blessedness of the work more than repays one for standing and bearing the cross before your neighbours and friends.

Shall be glad to hear of all the main thoroughfares bearing witness to God and his Word.

The Indian Famine.

NOTES FROM WORKERS

WHILE the news which tells of the advent of heavier and more general rains renders the outlook somewhat brighter, it must be remembered that a considerable period must elapse before the people will be able to support themselves. They are without cattle, implements, or seed corn. Meantime we are receiving many communications from missionaries, all of which remind us of the devastating character of the visitations of famine and cholera.

Rev. W. MULLIGAN (Irish Presbyterian Mission), of Jhalod, Panch Mahals, writes:—"Kindly convey to your readers our thanks for the help they sent. We are working in perhaps the worst part of the famine-stricken districts—among the jungle tribes. Relief works were opened, but the people, unaccustomed to work, could only earn the penal minimum wage, which means for each man about the grain rations allowed in Ladysmith at the end of the siege, without the horseflesh. The Bhils, the principal tribe in these parts, are addicted to drink, so at the best of times they are only half nourished. In the present famine they are DYING IN THOUSANDS.

The people are so emaciated that they cannot stand before the dreadful visitation of cholera. The horror of it is beyond description. When the rain comes relief camps will be broken up, as the people could not live with only a bamboo mat to cover a family. If they return to their homes, there is nothing to eat, no cattle, no implements, no seed to sow, and in many cases the houses were pulled down and the material sold for food. The misery will be dreadful."

PANDITA RAMABAI has issued her annual report of the work at Mukti School and Mission, from which it appears that 300 girls, rescued from the famine of 1897, have received regular secular and Christian instruction. Five hundred and eighty girls in the Mukti Home and sixty in the "Kripa Sadan" (Home of Grace, the Rescue Home), are being trained to lead a useful Christian life. In all, there are nearly 750 girls under training. Referring to the present famine, Pandita Ramabai writes: "The fertile country of Gujerat was never so dry and destitute as it looks now. Large herds of hungry and thirsty cattle move about like armies of ghosts. I have never seen such a ghastly sight in my life. They have left, and fall down dead at any moment. I have passed trains upon trains loaded with cowhides. Piles of bones of dead animals and of men and women can be seen near railway stations. In some Native States, young widows are being enticed away by wicked people and sold to sin, and the infirm people cannot do anything to save their own lives. I have visited Poor Houses and seen men, women and children dying of hunger on highways and byeways. Their ghastly appearance, their dumb appeal—oh, those pitiful eyes which speak volumes!—haunt me day and night, and the appealing voices, the agonized cries and the hopeless expressions are all so burnt down into my heart that I cannot but speak a few words for them. I have already deserted wives and girls from the present famine, and shall not refuse to take a larger number if necessary."

A description by Miss LILIAN E. MARKS of work at Ajmere, reads:—"Up to date, 143 orphans and widows have been saved from starvation. We have several Christian families working on relief work on our premises, and will take others. How our hearts ache for the starving ones! No pen can exaggerate the story of their sufferings. Children are beaten and turned from their homes, timid wives are thrust out with two or three children clinging to their skirts, and with baby in arms. Fathers often leave their families in destitution and to certain death to seek food for themselves. Oh, the hundreds of homeless, naked, starving ones! A living skeleton was brought to us two weeks ago that had lain by the roadside, sick and naked, without a morsel of food for eight days. We despaired of her life, but she is now so improved that she looks like a different creature. This brief report forbids mention of many other like cases. Roman Catholics, Hindus, and Mohammedans stand ready to seize the girls, the latter two to use them for immoral purposes."

Hungering for the Word.

IN a long and interesting letter, the Rev. Dr. Andrew Moody of Budapest, tells of a community of believers in Southern Hungary, who urgently petition that the New Testament be translated into their native tongue, which they described as Paulican or Palityan. Investigation proved that they represented a colony which had come over from Bulgaria a century and a half ago, numbering now some 20,000 souls.

In response to their request, the National Bible Society of Scotland arranged for the preparation of a careful translation of the Gospel of John, and issued 10,000 copies. It has since been discovered that these people are related by tongue to the Paulicians located near Philippopolis, and these have also received the translation. Dr. Moody writes that pressing requests now reach him from the Hungarian Paulicans for the whole New Testament in their own tongue. Messrs. Pejov and Trankalov write as follows:—

Reverend Sir, whom we have in our hearts,—The 200 parts which you sent to us are about sold out, and we perceive herein the grace of God that the hearts of the people are drawn very much towards the publication, and the desire to have the whole New Testament finds expression, and we are asked when it may be expected that we shall have the whole. We give the assurance that if we ask and knock it will be obtained. For ourselves, and in the Name of the Lord, we beg and entreat you to proceed to the translation of the whole that we may gain the people, although the priests proclaim that the little book is not to be bought, inasmuch as it is poison and will poison the people; and one man, on hearing what the priest said, put his copy into the fire and another brought his copy back. So we entreat you again, be so kind as to translate the whole. For what has been done already we give thanks to God, and to you times without number unceasingly, and we send now the price of the 200 copies, and beg you to send us by return of post 200 more.

Dr. Moody adds: "I trust that their desire may be speedily fulfilled, and I shall be glad to receive contributions." His address is Rudolf Quai, 8, Budapest.

Work in North Italy.

A GOOD work on unsectarian lines is being prosecuted at Pinerolo, in the province of Turin, by Signor Spiro Lopresti and helpers.

The work embraces a Home of Rest for Christians and Christian workers, which is also a kind of "spiritual hospital," open alike for such as can, and for such as cannot, afford to pay. Since its opening, some fifty persons have been admitted. The length of their stay, depending on their needs, varies from two or three weeks to several months.

Gospel work among Protestants and Roman Catholics is also vigorously carried on, and special meetings for the deepening of spiritual life are held. An occasional paper, "The Evangelical Gleaner," is published, advocating spiritual religion and Christian unity, as opposed to party spirit. A very important branch of the work is the free distribution of Scriptures and tracts.

Signor Lopresti is anxious to start a reading room and Gospel Hall for the soldiery of Pinerolo, where there is a permanent garrison of at least 1,000, and where nothing of the kind exists, but lack of funds prevent. The average expenses of carrying on these and other agencies are, at least, £300 a year. Christians interested in evangelical effort in Italy are helping the Lord's work.

Communications may be addressed to Signor S. Lopresti, B.A., B.Sc., S. Secondo di Pinerolo, Province of Turin, Italy.

Soldiers in South Africa.

WRITING from the Soldiers' Home, Springfontein, Orange River Colony, under date June 13, Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Osborn-Howe say:—"Since we came to this place, which we did with the first troops, we have been kept busy, feeding famished men—those who went up weeks ago, strong and healthy—with sunken cheeks and hollow eyes. The sick are entrained at Bloemfontein about 10 a.m.; they reach here about 5 p.m. in a collapsed condition. They have, in many cases, been turned out of hospital before they were really fit to be moved (do not blame the Medical Corps; they could not help themselves, for WORSE CASES HAD TO BE TAKEN IN).

They were weak, famished, and not able, in many cases, to sit up. Our staff has worked day and night. The trains nearly always run late. It is dark when they come, but our workers are ready. Two sets of men, two carrying a big urn of soup, and one a lamp, proceed to either end of the train.

"'Soup! soup!' Eager faces peer out. 'Get your canteens ready.' The flickering light falls on faces that make us cry out from the depth of our hearts. Quickly the two sets pass along the train, meeting in the middle, Following these are our lady-helpers (if the train is not too late). They tell of Him who fed the body and healed the soul. We have been able to feed thousands, and are continuing the good work. We get a case of 'bully beef' and one of pea-soup from the supply department, sheep heads and ox feet from the Government contractor, a gift here and there, and love does the rest. Yes, it's hard work, but oh, the joy of it.

"Our marquee here is crowded every night. The hospital is visited daily, the trains going up are met, and the same work (except the soup kitchen) carried on at our seven other Homes."

Open Doors in Behar.

MISS E. S. POYNTER writes from Durbhanga, Behar, India:—

"There have been from time to time in your paper allusions to the spiritual destitution and needs of Behar, one of the most populous and least evangelized districts of India. We feel, indeed, here that we are in a neglected district, with no outward spiritual help. The dense ignorance of the people, combined with their willingness to hear, makes us thank God that He has permitted us to be the pioneers to the women of this part, who are lying in darkness and the shadow of death.

"It is only within the last six months that the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission has (in answer to the prayers of some of God's children here, who have grieved over the neglected field) sent two ladies to Durkbanga, trusting that the Lord who called would open the way and provide the means. We feel that He has indeed sent his angel on before us, and prepared our way, and as we go in and out amongst the many valleys, and find that the people have never before heard Christ's name, or of his Love, and Free Salvation, we long that many more might share our joy. There are over 80,000 souls in this town; and in the district up to the borders of Nepal, and down to the banks of the Ganges, how many millions?

"We are at present living in a native house, from which the work cannot be extended, as it might, and should be—we can obtain land and build a house for £600, which our committee do not see their way to give at present. Would anyone help in this way, and thus enable us to go forward? We have at present no plague or famine to contend with, but on all sides there is the hopeless sickness of sin, and famine of the word and knowlege of God. Any particulars of the work or further details, I shall be glad to give."

The finance secretary of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission is Mr. J. C. Andrews, 2, Adelphi Terrace, W.C.

Progress at Djemaa.

AFTER a serious illness last summer, and seven months' convalescence in Switzerland, during which time I received many cheering accounts from my dear friend, Miss Cox, I returned on February 1 to find very much to rejoice the heart.

During my absence a charming little hall for the Kabyle women and girls had sprung into existence, which will, we doubt not, prove a great blessing; already it has drawn many of our down-trodden sisters within sound of the Gospel, for those who came to bring stones for the building in many cases joined the weekly meeting, now amounting to sixty members.

It was gratifying to get such a hearty welcome as greeted my return among them; one after another gently rose and placed in my lap the oranges and eggs that had been brought for the occasion.

When speaking a few words to tell them of the perfect peace I had in Jesus when my life was despaired of, they listened as I have never had the joy of seeing women listen at Djemâa before. God has been working in their midst, and the order, quietness, and attention are remarkable. Many can repeat portions of Scripture, and one sees that their interest has at last been aroused.

It is the same in the little girls' class, twenty-eight of whom come. The singing of the children does much credit to Mdme. Rolland's teaching. In this, as in other departments of the work, the words came to me, "Cast thy bread, &c.," for I see signs of a work of God going on in hearts that were touched two years ago, but which had seemed to have lost interest.

The shepherd boys' Wednesday class surprised me as much as the womens'. Last year they were so unruly that we wondered if we could continue with them; but they also have improved, some of them showing signs of a change of heart. Some of the most troublesome have become "helpers" in the Sunday morning meeting, and bring along quite a number of lads whom they keep in order. The training of these is not easy, and they need much patience.

Perhaps the most encouraging sign in the work is the interest the older converts are taking in the meetings, &c. A. and S. are valuable helpers in the lads' and boys' classes by their testimony, teaching, and example. Several of the converts who made such a happy party here in the winter are now dispersed at work in different places; two are servants in the English Consul's house in Algiers.—Yours, &c.,

(Miss) K. S. Smith.

Peace and the Paris Exhibition.

THE committee of the Peace Society, believing that the Paris Exhibition presents a unique opportunity for reaching the whole of the civilised world, is desirous of diffusing sound views on questions of peace and war, and other matters that last year occupied the Hague Conference. It is proposed to distribute literature, carefully and judiciously prepared in the French language by capable writers. The literature will set forth the economic and political evils of war, the blessings of peace, the practicability and desirability of arbitration as a means of settling international disputes, the lessons of history as showing the evil results of war and militarism, and the necessity of peace for true national prosperity and progress; the ethical questions involved in war and peace; the Christian ideal, the application of that ideal to actual life, &c. The committee hope to arrange for meetings in buildings conveniently situated, several of which have already been placed at its disposal. Communications for the treasurer, Mr. Walter Hazell, may be addressed to the office of the Society, 47, New Broad Street, London, E.C.

Necessitous Ministers.—At the annual meeting of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Poor Ministers' Clothing Society, the report for the year was presented, showing that fifty-six pastors and their families, in poor country districts, had been provided with useful articles of wearing apparel. Friends having left-off garments will render good service to needy ministers by forwarding them to the hon. sec. of the society, Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, who will be glad to send the annual report on application.

Notes from New York.

TO-DAY, the all-absorbing subject of interest is the fearful loss of life at Hoboken on Saturday, especially on the ships that were burnt. I crossed the river on a ferryboat when the Saale, the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, and the Bremen were burning. The Saale presented a fearful spectacle with all her upper works blazing furiously. None of us on the ferryboat, however, thought of the likelihood of there being any passengers on board. The worst that we feared was that a few stevedores or longshoremen might have been entrapped. It seems, however, that many passengers were on board.

A writer in one of the afternoon papers to-day says that he saw a lady in a state-room who met death with prayer on her lips and in perfect calm. He says that she was the bravest woman he ever saw, and his great regret was that he could do nothing to help her. She would probably be one of a Christian Endeavour party that was to go on the Saale. The New York delegation were to go on the Maine, another of the ships that were destroyed.

Just about the time that this terrible fire broke out, our great Christian sailor, Rear-Admiral John W. Philip, died of heart disease at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, of which he was commandant. He is probably the first naval officer in history to be described as "a faithful servant of God" in an official despatch—and that despatch written by a Cabinet Minister. In reply to the telegram announcing his death, the Secretary of the Navy, the Hon. John D. Long, wired: "I am inexpressibly shocked to hear of the death of Admiral Philip, a faithful servant of God and of his country. He was one of the true heroes of the American Navy. See that every honour is done him."

He had seen more sea service than any other officer of his grade, and at the battle of Santiago, in 1898, he commanded the battleship Texas. When the Almirante Oquendo was run ashore and surrendered to the Texas, our men began to cheer; but (then) Captain Philip cried out to them, "Don't cheer, boys, the poor fellows are dying!" After the battle the bugle sounded "All hands on deck," and when officers and men had assembled Captain Philip said: "I wish to make confession that I have implicit faith in God and in the officers and crew of the Texas, but my faith in you is secondary only to my faith in God. We have seen what He has done for us, in allowing us to achieve so great a victory, and I want to ask you all, or at least every man who has no scruples, to uncover his head with me and silently offer a word of thanks to God for his goodness toward us all."

A curious item of news comes from Kentucky. At Frankfort, the State capital of Kentucky, where the political situation has been somewhat acute, the inside steel doors to the cash and bond boxes in the State Treasurer's vaults resisted the efforts of experts for three days. At last a message was sent to the penitentiary asking for the services of a professional burglar who was serving a term for safe-blowing. He did the work desired in thirty minutes! Roger Martin.

Among the Pariahs.

IN a recent communication, Rev. K. R. Gopalah Aiyar, Methodist Episcopal Mission, Kodambakam, Madras, writes: "The work of evangelization among the much-oppressed and depressed classes of Pariahs in four villages, near the city of Madras, is prospering, under Divine guidance. Since January last I have had fourteen conversions, and our membership now amounts to fifty souls. Converted Pariahs are subjected to bitter persecutions, occasioned by Hindu landowners. False cases are concocted, false evidence is purchased, to afflict the children of God. Famine has reduced some of our people to a sad predicament. Wages are low, and rice sells very dear. I solicit prayer on behalf of the Lord's work at this place, and I shall be thankful if Christian friends in England will supply me with God's Word, either in English or in vernaculars, also tracts, &c., for free distribution among the educated Hindus, and nominal Christians.

Scottish Notes.

WHEN holding his annual Conventicle, on Friday, 6th inst., in the Palace grounds at Linlithgow, Pastor Jacob Primmer was the subject of a wanton assault. He was earnestly calling attention to the serious inroads which Popish practices are making in the Church of Scotland, when, all of a sudden, a bystander who had been making himself disagreeable, rushed forward and with his clenched fist dealt the speaker a heavy blow on the right ear. Mr. Primmer was knocked down, and rolled over on the grassy knoll on which he had been standing. The assailant proved to be an Irish Roman Catholic, a miner, who was at once arrested by the police in attendance. The incident occasioned a good deal of excitement among the spectators. Mr. Primmer, however, resumed his address, and appeared little the worse for the assault, which he said was just another of the arguments resorted to by poor deluded Papists. Resolutions were afterwards adopted expressing strong disapproval of the ritualistic and other practices to which attention had been called.

Mr. John Currie (evangelist and pastor of Inspector Street Mission, Montreal) is now on a visit to Scotland after an absence of three years. He has just commenced a mission in Islay, which has been fitly called the capital of Whiskydom. It is Mr. Currie's intention to continue the meetings in various parts of the island for a month.

Bishop Dowden presided on Thursday, 12th inst., at the opening of a Church Army Labour Home in Edinburgh, when Colonel MacHardy (Chairman of Prison Commissioners) congratulated those in charge on having taken an important step for the prevention of crime.

The Glasgow police are finding it a serious task to deal with the Sunday drinking clubs which are so much on the increase among working men. In the case of the one at Springburn, to which we have already called attention, several arrests were made on the charge of breach of the Public-houses Act.

In the Maryhill district the police are also thoroughly on the alert, a large proportion of the prosecutions for drunkenness and disorderliness being connected with the local club. It is believed that the firm action which is being taken will do much to restrict the evil.

Missionary circles received a severe shock last week when the news was received of the death of Dr. John Whitehouse, who had been on the medical staff of the United Presbyterian Mission at Ajmere, Rajputana, for nearly eight years. During recent months he has been kept specially busy in connection with the distribution of famine relief and the rescue of destitute orphans; and cholera, which had appeared among the children under his care, carried him off on the eve of his well-earned furlough.

Great satisfaction was felt all over the country on Monday of last week, when it became known that the Foreign Mission Secretary of the United Presbyterian Church (Rev. James Buchanan), had received a telegram, dated Shanghai, July 8, to the following effect, "Mukden church, hospitals, houses, destroyed. Missionaries safe.—Webster." The story of the work of grace in Manchuria thus interrupted, has probably no equal in the annals of modern foreign missions. The writer has heard a member of the committee declare that no analogy short of Pentecost can be fittingly placed alongside the great wave of spiritual awakening which has swept over that country during recent years.

Mr. Quarrier reports that twenty-one children were received at the Orphan Homes last month, and that the large family circle is steadily increasing. Twelve hundred boys and girls have been taken in companies of 120 for an outing at the sea-shore, introducing an element of variety into their lives which they much enjoyed.

The circle of evangelistic workers at Dunoon has been weakened by the leaving of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Cooper—who have stood in the forefront for the last ten or eleven years—to take up work among the soldiers at Cairo.

The Church and the Public-House.

PERHAPS no more notable meeting for the advancement of the cause of temperance in this or any other land has been held within the decade than that which was convened at Exeter Hall on Friday evening. The card of invitation issued by Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS, who presided, recited that "the rightful attitude of the Christian Church toward the drink traffic" would be considered. The meeting was called primarily to hear Dr. J. Q. A. HENRY, of New York, speak on work of the New York Anti-Saloon League, of which he is in charge. The meeting proved a most auspicious and happy event, auguring much of good for the days to come.

The Scriptures were read, and prayer offered by Rev. F. B. MEYER. Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS opened the topic of the evening, and appealing to some of the physical as well as moral stalwarts on the platform, he said: "God and manhood are on our side."

Mr. B. BROOMHALL presented letters of greeting from the Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord Kinnaird, Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., Mr. Robert Scott, and others.

Dr. HENRY then said: The American Anti-Saloon League was organized seven years ago by Dr. Russell. It has already spread into thirty-four States and territories, where it is fully organized, and has 175 men and women, 125 of them ministers of the Gospel, who are giving their whole time to the work. Ohio, for example, held 13,000 meetings in its various local branches last year, and 700,000 letters were written to voters giving the record of candidates for office. It is essentially a federation of the churches, which are God's ordained instruments for the extinction of evil and the promotion of all good. It aims to mobilize the Christian ballot, which, in America, amounts to 5,000,000, as against 2,000,000 purchasable votes. If the Church is right, the bar-room is wrong. They and it belongs to a loyal Christendom to say it and mean it, in the name of Jesus Christ, the saloon, the bar-room, MUST GO! To this end we organize to meet organization, and beat the enemy on their own ground, state, district, town, hamlet, home—all are watched and subserved. Ten or more men at a time are thrown into a given place, and the drink traffic is put in a state of siege, and veritably invested by the forces of good. Four hundred towns have voted out the saloon in Ohio, 300 in Minnesota; aroused public sentiment is putting Christian men in office.

The plans of operation are:—1. Agitation. Pulpit, tent, open-air, and every legitimate agency to inform the people of the true state of things. 2. Enforcement. Take the laws you have and see that they are administered according to the oath of office. 3. Legislation. We shall get better laws when we have better lawmakers. 4. Finance. Here especially do we succeed. By a careful system of signed quarterly payments we supply the sinews of war. 5. The Women. These have no vote, but they have—the voters. They can influence the decision, and when, as in America of late, the virtuous womanhood of the land declares itself, it is registered at the ballot and in public office.

At the close of Dr. Henry's vigorous address, the Chairman proposed a resolution, demanding that all Christian men and women should seriously and prayerfully consider the solemn obligations resting upon them to do their utmost to rescue those who are already the victims of the traffic from their degradation and misery, and to remove the temptations that abound for leading others to ruin; also that the attitude of the Christian Church towards the drink traffic should be one of deliberate and uncompromising hostility.

Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH-THOMAS, M.A., in seconding the resolution, said the key to the situation lies with the Church. Let ours be a fifth gospel—the Acts—deeds tell.

Dr. GEORGE HANSON pleaded for more practical means of dealing with the question; some definite plan, such as outlined by Dr. Henry, should be adopted. Political pusillanimity has been the bane of the hour; 160,000 licensed bar-rooms number 160,000 political instruments which politicians use for their personal designs. Oh for a conscience to discard and denounce such places!

Rev. ISAAC F. ROW (India) spoke of the terrible effects of alcohol on the natives. "Whisky did it" has been the confession at more than one execution out there.

Rev. J. P. GLEDSTONE compared the United States with Great Britain respecting intemperance. If Dr. Henry has reason to be so earnest on the drink evil in his country, how ought we to feel towards the worse condition of things in England?

Mr. T. A. DENNY, Dr. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, and Mr. HENRY VARLEY, spoke earnest and heartfelt words, and urged the importance of Christians taking a definite stand for the suppression of the public-house and its innumerable evils.

Dr. HENRY received many congratulations at the close of the meeting from those who have been inspired by his zeal in the cause he so ably advocates. He sailed for New York on Saturday.

Temperance Demonstration at the Crystal Palace.

THE breakfast to the Temperance Mayors and Provosts of the United Kingdom, which has come to be an annual fixture, was given on Wednesday last at the Crystal Palace, by Mr. ARNOLD F. HILLS, president of the National United Temperance Council. Among the speakers were the DEAN OF HEREFORD, Mr. JOHN WILSON, M.P., and the LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN. During the day meetings were held by representatives of various temperance organizations, and there were choral concerts by provincial choirs, and a procession of teetotal societies. A public meeting was held on the terrace in the evening, under the presidency of of Mr. FRANK DYMOND. Rev. J. TOLEFREE PARR said that the attitude of the Christian Churches should be one of distinct antagonism to the drink trade, by which they annually lost 40,000 members, including office-bearers and ministers. Dr. R. F. HORTON contended that the failure of Parliament to pass the Bill prohibiting the sale of liquor to children, was nothing short of a disaster. That measure had been recommended by the whole of the Royal Commissioners except two publicans and two brewers. He feared the explanation was that the Government were afraid to touch the liquor question even in the gentlest way. Lord Rosebery's prophecy had already come true—the liquor trade had obtained control of the people of England.

Hop-Pickers in Kent.

WE hope shortly to be busy among the hop-pickers in the Weald of Kent, and would desire to remind our friends that we need and value their prayers, their sympathy, and their help in this work. Fourteen missionaries were employed last year during the month of September. Their labours covered a district some thirty miles in extent. The hop gardens were visited daily, the missionaries going from bin to bin, speaking personally to each picker about the Lord Jesus Christ. In this way, the late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon said, "the hop-pickers hear more of the Gospel than they do all the rest of the year."

Many cases of blessing have resulted from these labours in years gone by, and notably so in those of last year. The missionaries went preaching through the hop district, the Lord working with them, with signs following.

We are hoping to send a large number of missionaries this year; we are erecting a hop-pickers' shelter at Curtisden, Goudhurst, at a cost of £70. By the good hand of the Lord this shelter is paid for before it is erected, but it will need fitting up. This shelter will be a "Home" for the hoppers, and we trust that within its walls many will seek the Saviour. Gospel meetings, Bible readings, and Sunday-school services will be held. Help may be sent through Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon, Westwood, Norwood, or to myself,

Goudhurst, Kent. (Rev.) J. J. KENDON.

Race Course Mission.—In connection with Goodwood races, July 31-August 3, meetings will be held nightly at the Market Cross, in addition to those on the course. Christian workers in the district who may be able to assist should communicate with Mr. O. L. Heatley, St. James' Hall, Royal Road, Kennington Park, S.E.

In Prison and Out.

FOR more than three years the Church Army has, with the consent of the Prison Commissioners, and the hearty co-operation of the Governors and Chaplains, conducted missions in all our convict prisons, and in most of the fifty-six local prisons throughout the whole country. During that period, some thousands of men, lads, and women have heard the plain, simple Gospel story, and many of these have been led to accept Christ.

A few months since, I conducted a mission in a convict prison where, amongst the 700 men present, was one undergoing a long sentence. He was a Lancashire man, and had been impressed by the kindly counsel given him by the Governor and the Chaplain. During the mission, he, in his cell, gave himself to Christ. He was taken ill, and to one near by his bedside, he said, "Thank God the mission was held." Those proved to be his last words. During that same mission, a gang of convicts appointed one of their number to thank the missioner for coming amongst them.

A kindly word, a verse of Scripture, prayer in the prison cell, has again and again been blessed by God to the winning of souls. We keep in touch with these men by writing to them from time to time, and many letters are received in answer. One writes:—

I need hardly say how gladly we would welcome you amongst us again if possible, even for so short a time. I firmly believe there was not one amongst us but expressed regret at your leaving. As to the Mission, I am as certain as that I am writing this that it has been the turning point in the lives of a good many of us here. For myself, I can safely say that it has done me good; and when this is over I hope, on returning to the outside world, by God's help and strength, to continue in the right way.

May I thank those readers of THE CHRISTIAN who have helped the work by their prayers and gifts. We have just been made by the Home Office a Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society, with a request to visit the convict prisons once every six weeks. This will mean a splendid door of usefulness open to us. Help to carry on this work should be marked, Church Army Prison Work, and sent to Rev. W. Carlile, 130, Edgware Road, W.

Church Army Prison Missioner.

East London Tabernacle Orphan Homes.

FOUNDER'S DAY, in connection with the work among orphan children initiated by Rev. Archibald G. Brown during his pastorate at the East London Tabernacle, was celebrated on Thursday last, in the grounds of Harley College. A large and interested congregation came together. After Mr. HENRY VARLEY had offered prayer, the story of the inception of the Home was told by Pastor ARCHIBALD G. BROWN, who said that he was led to commence the work by a promise made to a dying woman, that he would care for her boy after she had passed away. The speaker, after telling how the number of lads increased and a home for girls also became necessary, touched upon the honourable career of some of the lads who had passed through the Home. He made special reference to some who had been sent to Canada, and who have done well. Mr. Brown also called to the platform a bright young sailor who was present, as an instance of the fruitful character of the work. Cordial words were added by Rev. J. ROBERTSON, of Glasgow, who is shortly to commence six months' work at the Tabernacle; and by Dr. HARRY GUINNESS, who gave a characteristic address, pleading in the behalf of the orphans.

It should be mentioned that when Mr. Brown resigned the pastorate the administration and financial responsibility were taken over by the Church. The worshippers were not able to render sufficient pecuniary support, and the committee are, in consequence, largely dependent upon public support. The treasurer is Mr. A. Walters, Orphan Homes, 1 and 2, Harley Street, Bow Road, E.

Irish Notes.

REVS. R. C. HALLOWES and J. W. Harrison, the rector and curate respectively of Arklow, have received rather rough treatment from the police. On the occasion of a political meeting in the town, they were kept shut up in the police station for several hours because they would not give an undertaking not to preach on the streets, although they have been accustomed to preach regularly on the streets of Arklow for a long time without opposition. It is said that Rev. Mr. Hallowes intends to bring the matter into a court of law.

Rev. Dr. Healy, Roman Catholic Bishop of Clonfert, has been appointed coadjutor bishop to Cardinal Moran, of Australia, and starts for his new appointment immediately.

In Dublin, a man called Ruckley, who is a Protestant, but whose deceased wife was a Roman Catholic, and whose daughters were placed, as he stated, contrary to his wishes and knowledge in a Roman Catholic Industrial School, has been awarded the custody of the children. The matter has aroused a great deal of public attention.

The Ards Sunday School Teachers' Convention has just met in Cloughley, co. Down, and there was a large attendance. A suitable and earnest address was delivered by Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, and papers were read by Mr. Hugh Ritchie and Rev. H. F. Kirker. Several teachers also took part in the proceedings, which were most helpful and stimulating.

The members of the Northern Presbytery of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, have just organized at Portrush a new congregation. Some time ago a new church manse and schools were erected in the town by Mr. Samuel Paton, and endowed also by him, and now the congregation has been formally organized with Rev. J. A. Stewart as moderator for the time being.

Prayer on the Battlefield.

ON Sunday week, at Kingstown Congregational Church, Rev. H. Whitfield Watson read a communication just received from Mr. J. Emerson Neilly, special correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, whose letters written from Mafeking at the time of the siege were so full of interest. Mr. Neilly, who is a member of the Congregational Church at Kingstown, writes as follows from Capetown, under date of June 12:

"Will you please thank your congregation, on behalf of the Mafeking garrison, now providentially free, for that they specially supplicated for them when praying for her Majesty's troops in the field. Many a time when in the hospital wards, or watching in the trenches on Sunday, I heard the phrase 'They're praying for us at home now,' and during the hours in Mafeking which synchronised with Church time in Britain our men were full of thoughts of the worshippers who they felt were thinking of them.

"When all was over, when the relief came, and the column marched in at the moment when surrender through starvation seemed all too possible, the people, one and all, breathed a heartfelt, 'Thank God!' And when, next day, a thanksgiving service was held beside the little cemetery, where so many of our best and bravest lie, the townspeople turned up to a man, and, believe me, the thanks were fervent and the Te Deum hearty."

The National Refuges.

ON Thursday last the Countess of Jersey opened a Sale of Work at Sudbury Hall Girls' Home, Wembley, one of the ten institutions belonging to the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, of which society the Earl of Jersey, G.C.B., is president. The proceedings were enlivened by the excellent brass band of the Arethusa training ship, which played in the extensive garden of the Home. Several novel features were introduced, including a procession of children, and an exhibition of musical drill. As an indication of their deep interest in the children of the National Refuges, it may be mentioned that the Earl and Countess of Jersey have generously invited 600 of the boys and girls of the Society, including the Arethusa sailor boys, to spend the day at his lordship's beautiful park at Osterley, Isleworth, on Friday, 20th inst. The latter occasion is an annual one, and looked forward to with the utmost interest by the children, for whom the Earl and Countess of Jersey provide a sumptuous entertainment.

Mr. Henry Varley's Farewell.

THE gathering at the noon prayer meeting at Aldersgate Street, on Monday last, afforded an opportunity for some parting words from Mr. Henry Varley, prior to his departure for Melbourne.

After prayer had been offered by Pastor Frank White, Mr. Varley read Luke xxi. 23-28, which he made the foundation for stimulating appeals and farewell counsels. He reviewed the political situation in the East in its relation to the fulfilment of the times of the Gentiles, and urged the necessity of retaining, amid disturbing and portentous events, a calm confidence in Divine wisdom, and of heeding the important words, "Occupy till I come." Mr. Varley encouraged his hearers to greater efforts in the interests of the Kingdom, and referred to his recent evangelistic experiences in London tent work, as well as in gatherings in many American cities, as evidencing the readiness of the masses to accept the Gospel. In the United States Mr. Varley had found a general revulsion against the influence of the Welhausen school of criticism, together with a thirst for the old truths. He felt that this was a fitting time for a general advance against evil in every shape and form. In the course of a few personal references, Mr. Varley said that he had been preaching the Gospel for forty-seven years, and desired that the residue of his days, as the earlier, should be given to the work of evangelization. His home was in Melbourne, to which city he was bound by many ties, but he hoped to return to England in January next to take part in the simultaneous mission which is being arranged by the National Free Church Council. In conclusion, Mr. Varley dealt with the position of affairs in China, recapitulating the salient facts with regard to Britain's complicity in the opium traffic, and quoting anti-European feeling shown by the Chinese, as well as the horrors of the opium dens of Melbourne, as instances in which, as a nation, we are reaping what we have sown.

Subsequent to the address, the large assembly sang, with much feeling, "God be with you till we meet again," and the chairman, Mr. R. C. Morgan, commended Mr. and Mrs. Varley, in prayer, to the protecting care of the Almighty.

Japanese Sailors in England.

MANY friends who have shared with Miss McLean the joy of ministering to the needs of Japanese sailors in this country will be glad to learn of the warm-hearted manner in which her services have been recognized.

Miss McLean was recently the recipient of a handsome and useful present, and an address as follows:—"Admiral Marquis Saigo, president of the Imperial Naval Club, is gratified to express his hearty thanks to Miss McLean for her sincere hospitality bestowed upon the men of the Imperial Japanese Navy, who were sent out almost successively of late years to England, with view of taking home our newly-built ships, and shall be pleased if she would kindly accept a little present, consisting of studs and brooches, the former specially carved by Mr. Miteunaga, and the latter by Mr. Seimei."

Miss McLean's address is—Japanese Christian Institute, Tilbury Docks, Essex.

Personalia.

Mr. John Currie, well known on both sides of the Atlantic as an evangelist, is at present in Scotland. His address is 16, Whitevale Street, Dennistoun, Glasgow.

Rev. Carey Bonner has accepted the invitation of the Council of the Sunday School Union to become its general secretary. He will commence his duties early in September.

We regret to hear that Rev. W. Cuff, president of the Baptist Union, is in a very weak condition. It is feared that he will be unable to resume his ministerial duties at Shoreditch until September.

Revs. Dr. Fairbairn, Dr. Maclaren, and Dr. Parker have accepted invitations to be present at the inauguration of the union of the Free Church and United Presbyterian Church of Scotland in October.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis has so far improved in health that he has been able to undertake some evangelistic work. A recent visit to West End, Southampton, was made a blessing to many hearers.

Mr. Robert Caldwell, secretary of the Zambesi Industrial Mission, is passing through a severe and dangerous illness. A friend requests that prayer be made to God, graciously to lay his healing hand upon the sufferer.

Mr. A. S. Lamb, for many years a well-known missionary in North Africa (Kabylia), having settled in London, is desirous of finding regular service in evangelical work. His address is 11, Foulser Road, Upper Tooting, S.W.

About Books.

"THE NATIVE RACES AND THE WAR."

MRS. JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER has just issued under the above title, a calm, clear, and consistent story of South African affairs, chiefly with reference to the native races. (Gay & Bird.) This necessitates, however, a review of the annexation and retrocession of the Transvaal. In 1877 it was in a state of apparently hopeless anarchy, and on the eve of bankruptcy. Under British rule it entered upon an era of phenomenal prosperity and better treatment of the natives.

The progress of events from 1881 to the present time is little understood by the great majority of our own people, and utterly misrepresented on the Continent of Europe. It is here dispassionately set forth by continual reference to historical documents, and authenticated by quotations from the writings and speeches of men of character and position of whom Great Britain may be justly proud. We have found the story so absorbing that we could not lay it down until we had read it through, and we warmly commend it to all who wish to form a righteous opinion of the relations between this country and the Transvaal, and of both to the native races. We do not hesitate to say that a transparently honest and unprejudiced account is here given, such as does not exist in the same space elsewhere. Parents owe it to their children to give them a true conception of this great national question, and they cannot do so in any better way than by inducing them to read this faithful record of these stirring events.

Cassell's Pictorial Guide to the Clyde (1s.) is embellished with coloured and other illustrations, and will prove of real service to tourists and travellers.

The International Lesson Pocket Notes—July to December—prepared by Frank Spooner, B.A., is a useful publication. (6d. nett. Sunday School Union.)

Eleanor's Hero, by Evelyn Everett Green. A delightful story of modern life, which cannot fail to prove pleasurable reading to young people. (3s. 6d. Sunday School Union.)

Rev. Isaac Levinson's little work, The Story of my Wanderings in the Land of my Fathers, is now in its third edition. The pages are fully illustrated, and will well repay the devout reader. (1s. 6d. A. Holness).

Songs of Two Homes, by Maria Bell, is a choice little volume. The author died just a year ago, and her poems have been published by a loving sister. Many will be thankful to both. (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

Two series of Lent Lectures by the late Rev G. E. Broade, M.A., have just been published in a small volume.—The Sixfold Trial of Our Lord; and The Prayers of Christ. (2s. 9d. Elliot Stock). There is thought and direction in the pages.

Bread for the Bairns, by Rev. Henry F. Mercer, is a collection of notes and outlines for children's addresses. The book is interleaved with plain paper, so that the worker may enlarge his store of material. (1s. nett, paper. H. R. Allenson.)

Of the House of Chloe, by Ellis Marston, is appropriately described as a tale for the times. It is a telling exposure, by narrative and dialogue, of the theory held by those who advocate the practice of vivisection as being essential to the advance of medical and surgical knowledge. (4s. Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.)

Papers for the Parsonage, by Two Clergymen (Elliot Stock) is a series of short articles on large subjects There is philosophy for "the ordinary reader," theological discussion for "the million." The pages are untechnical and independent, constructive in trend, and calculated to help thoughtful people—both in the parsonage and out.

Rev. Wm. Newman Hall, chairman of the Congregational Union of Ireland, gives us an attractive volume, entitled Cameos of Christ: Brief Studies in the Life of "Our Only Master." (2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) Nine in number, the studies relate to great Gospel incidents, and the treatment is characterised by freshness and force.

Mrs. Humphry's Century Invalid Cookery Book is more than a collection of recipes, it conveys much scientific information concerning the value of foods. Temperance readers will not agree with even the occasional introduction of alcoholic; but, on the whole, the book should prove an admirable guide and reference book. (1s. T. Fisher Unwin.)

Mr. E. Nister, 28, Paternoster Row, has issued a Birthday Text Book, entitled In His Steps. Quotations from the works of Rev. C. M. Sheldon, with verses of Scripture, are given for every day in the year (1s.). For the most part, the excerpts bear upon Christian work and service.

Mr. C. J. Thynne has issued a fourth edition (1s. nett) of Brownlow North's practical exposition, The Rich Man and Lazarus. The many lessons of a solemn portion of our Lord's teaching are here set forth in a singularly striking manner and to very serious purpose. Another popular edition is Romanism, Ritualism, and Revelation: Eight Lectures, by Rev. William McCaw (1s. nett).

Sermons for Home Reading is a volume which will be welcome in many a home. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) The preachers include Drs. J. Monro Gibson, G. S. Barrett, and W. Irvin, C. Silvester Horne, M.A., J. G. Greenhough, M.A., D. C. Macgregor, M.A., G. H. C. Macgregor, M.A., and G. B. Johnson. The discourses are twenty-one in number, and the type is bold and clear.

The Apostle of the North, by Egerton R. Young, tells the story of Rev. James Evans, a Yorkshire lad who seventy years ago went as missionary to the Indians of Canada. William Case, Peter Jacobs, and other worthies have a place in the narrative, which is one of extraordinary interest, as illustrating Christian devotion and heroism. There is more than a dash of romance in the story. (3s. 6d. Marshall Bros.).

A volume of devotional readings from the writings, published and unpublished, of Dr. G. H. Wilkinson, bishop of St. Andrews, has been compiled by Rev. J. H. Burn, B.D., with the title, For Quiet Moments (2s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.). In substance the book is beautiful, alike in thought and expression. Here and there, however, sacramental teaching is presented, which seriously qualifies the usefulness of the book.

The Church of England Zenana Missionary Society have issued another of their interesting records of missionary efforts. Under Canvas is an ably-written and admirably illustrated account of recent itinerations in the Punjab, which will be read with delight by all who follow in sympathy and spirit those who are seeking to evangelize India's population. (Marshall Brothers; C.E.Z.M.S., 27, Chancery lane, W.C.)

The "Famous Scots" series includes some biographies of great value. A recent addition is The Erskines: Ebenezer and Ralph, by A. R. MacEwen. (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier). The story of the Secession is replete with interest and instruction, and it is here retold in an eminently readable manner. The pages deal with men of whom the author truthfully says:—"It was their unaffected goodness, and their love for the living Christ, that impressed their nearest friends, and secured for them what is better than fame."

The records of old churches deliver many an instructive message to modern Christians. Then, again, the story of past struggles, narrated in the particular as distinguished from the general, has a charm and fascination all its own. Among recent publications of this order, taking us back to Puritan times, we know of none more interesting than Memorials of Fetter Lane Congregational Church, London: Founded 1660, removed to Leyton 1894, rebuilt 1900. The story is told by Arthur Pye-Smith, and there are some welcome illustrations, including several portraits of ministers of bygone days. (2s. Warren Hall & Lovitt, 88 and 90, Camden Road, N.W.

The Religious Tract Society have undertaken to publish the Official Report of the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, held in New York in the Spring. The committee, consisting of literary experts, have spared no efforts to make the report a readable book, and as little like the conventional report as possible. For purposes of reference it will prove of great value. It will be published in two 8vo. volumes, printed in clear type. All delegates, missionaries and friends who are interested in missionary work in Great Britain and on the Continent, will be allowed to subscribe for the two volumes at a cost of only 4s. On and after August 1, the price for the two volumes will be raised to 6s. nett. Names and addresses (together with the subscription price) should be sent to the secretaries of the Religious Tract Society, 56, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

Some POEMS, written by James Maxwell, and suggested "by the scenes and associations, changes and vicissitudes of life," have been gathered together in a chaste booklet. (6d. Strain and Sons, Belfast.)

A "Popular Protestant Catechism" has been prepared by Rev. Charles Neil, M.A., entitled THE CHURCH. (1d. Protestant Reformation Society.) The pages set forth wholesome teaching on an important subject.

A useful little book is GOD'S MARK: Have I Missed It? By H. Tracy. (6d. Jarrold & Sons). It aims to illustrate sin, and by Scripture quotation and attractive diagrams to show the way of salvation.

TWILIGHT TO DAWN is a volume of poems by Lewis Longfield (T. Weston, 53, Paternoster Row). One of the principal pieces describes the siege of Samaria. The lines breathe Christian faith, hope, and love.

Mr. George S. Aspinall has set to music the patriotic song, "Britain's Glory." The proceeds of the sale of this edition, which is published for the National Bazaar, Kensington, will be devoted to the War Funds. (1s. Houghton & Co., 39, Great Marlborough Street, W.)

Evangelistic.

London Tent Campaign.

THE past week has been one of encouragement in the work of the London Tent Campaign. At the Sunday services the meetings were crowded, and in some cases hundreds were standing outside unable to find admittance, but quietly listening. None, however sceptical as to evangelistic effort, can fail to feel the mighty impulse of Christian enthusiasm manifested in these gatherings. To say that hundreds are being arrested and won for Christ is but to reiterate what has already been stated; yet we feel that we rob God of his glory if we do not give Him the praise for the work He is doing. Remarkable cases of conversion are transpiring of drunkards, blasphemers, infidels, and of backsliders, some of whom, in years gone by, have even preached the Word of Light to others.

One young lady said she "had never attended a religious service in her life, and had only heard of Christ as one might hear of Shakespeare." It is to be feared she is only one of thousands who spend their Sundays in card playing, excursions, and visiting, and have no care for spiritual things. We are glad to know that thousands of cyclists who pass the tents are arrested by the singing, and some are induced to enter.

We have a letter from a young woman, in which she says, "I am so very happy since I have given myself to Jesus, and I want to win others to Him." Although but young, she had given way to drink to the extent of two bottles of brandy per week. She said, "I felt that I was too bad to be saved, but the Lord heard my cry."

It is cheering to observe that a large number of the workers in the tents this year are those who were brought to the Lord last year. Mr. HENRY VARLEY, at the Central Noon Prayer Meeting at Aldersgate Street on Monday last, expressed his pleasure at having been enabled to take part in the campaign, adding that there were many evidences in it of the work of the Spirit of God. Mr. Varley expressed his hope that the ministers and Christian workers in all parts of London would see and embrace this opportunity for reaching the masses.

G. R. W.

Edinburgh Castle.

During the past six weeks Dr. J. Q. A. HENRY has been conducting services at the Edinburgh Castle. With gratitude we record the fact that this visit, like its annual forerunners, has been laden with blessing. God's people have been refreshed and strengthened, while many profess to have passed from death unto life. We deeply regret that Dr. Henry was unable to remain with us longer, but his duties as Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League in New York State demanded his presence in America. Our people wish him a loving God-speed. Dr. Henry's brother-in-law, Rev. J. W. WEDDELL, of Chicago, follows him at the Edinburgh Castle for the next three weeks.

WALTER NOTMAN, Superintendent.

A mission, which it is proposed to continue for three months, has been commenced at Great Oakley, near Harwich, in connection with the Primitive Methodists. Mr. T. F. SMITH is conducting the mission, assisted by a band of workers. The gatherings have been impressive, the Gospel message being earnestly delivered and attentively received.

Mr. D. PERRY, of the Ebenezer Bible Carriage and Tent, sends news of a month's gatherings at King's Thorne, Ross, and neighbourhood. Both in the adults' and young people's meetings, numbers have sought the Saviour. The week-night meetings have been well attended, and on Sundays the tent has been crowded. The final meeting was one long to be remembered.

Mr. JOHN ELLIOTT has concluded a series of tent meetings at Bristol. The power of God has been manifest, and some have sought the Saviour. In addition to the usual evening gatherings, services for children were conducted by various friends. Mr. Elliott also visited the Orphan Homes, and addressed the children, who are so lovingly cared for by Mr. James Wright and Mr. Bergin, with a devoted band of Christian workers, in succession to the late George Miller, whose power and influence for good are still felt. The tent is to remain on Ashley Downs, and a number of local preachers are to take part, including Mr. F. S. Arnot.

Speaking at the noon prayer meeting at Aldersgate Street on Monday last, Mr. W. R. LANE gave a short account of a mission now in progress at Reigate, in connection with the work of the Friends in that town. An afternoon meeting in the open air attracted the attention of many who were not in the habit of paying regard to religious matters, and while there was occasional interruption, the Gospel message was, at times, quietly listened to. On Sunday evening last, subsequent to an indoor meeting, an open-air gathering was held, in the grounds of the premises, Mr. ARTHUR DANN also taking part, and a solemn impression was made. Some hundreds of people listened intently, and a number sought the Saviour. We have mentioned that the last time an open-air meeting had been held on the ground was in the days of George Fox, who spoke to the people on this spot. Mr. CHARLES COOK has prepared a Gospel banner, which he holds outside his dwelling at Shepherd's Bush, in order to reach Sunday cyclists.

Requests for Prayer.

Earnest prayer requested for a mission at Dymock, Glos.

For a Primitive Methodist Mission at Great Oakley, Essex, to be held until the end of September.

That God will guide the committee in their appointment of a successor to Signor Calvi, as manager of the Home for Ex-priests in Rome, leading them to the man of his own choice. Also for the widow and four children now bereft of their only earthly support and solace.

Request for Praise.

For the Holy Spirit's blessing in the refreshment of God's people, and several hopeful cases of conversion, in connection with tent mission near Convoy, Co. Donegal, conducted by Mr. A. S. Pearson, Evangelist.

A well-attended Sunday Bible class for young women has been carried on for several years, as well as prayer union, evangelistic and social meetings. The Association is doing a useful work among the young girls of the city. Visitation in the factories and workrooms is systematically carried on, and many young women are brought under good influences. It is found necessary to provide a new building. The cost will be £2,800, of which £2,000 is still to be raised. The new premises, which will afford much needed accommodation, are to be ready at the end of October.

Obituary.

MRS. M. B. FULLER.

THE death is announced of Mrs. M. B. Fuller, the well-known American missionary in India, who passed away at Bombay on June 2. She was the wife of Rev. M. B. Fuller, of the Christian Missionary Alliance, and had long been esteemed for her devotion and the consistency of her Christian character. Mrs. Fuller was the author of a number of books on experimental religion, and also on social matters in India. A series of articles from her pen on "The Wrongs of Indian Womanhood," which appeared last year in the Bombay Guardian, and aroused considerable attention, are shortly to be published in book form.

SIGNOR CALVI, ROME.

News has reached us of the death of Signor Calvi, manager of the Home for ex-priests in Rome. An ex-priest himself, he bore much for the sake of the Gospel, having even been obliged, many years ago, to flee from his country on account of persecution. It was with a heart full of the deepest interest in the trials and difficulties of other ex-priests that in April of last year, he undertook the post which he has occupied for only fourteen months, and in which he glorified God by the consistency of his daily life. His illness was one of great suffering, especially during his last moments, but not a murmur escaped him, the name of Jesus being constantly on his lips.

The Y.M.C.A.

IN connection with the Ilford Association, a meeting to create a fund for the erection of buildings on a comprehensive scale, was held in the Ilford Reading Room on Thursday last. There was a good attendance. Mr. William McCall presided, supported by Dr. Barnardo, Councillor Weeden, and other friends. Temporary premises have been secured, and there is promise of a prosperous future for the Association.

The annual report of the Calcutta Association gives a vivid account of many useful undertakings in the interests of young men. The Central Association and its branches appear to be making substantial progress. Foremost stands the spiritual work. Attendance at the religious meetings has been somewhat small, but the personal work has been very encouraging. During the year numbers of young men have found their way to the Association, seeking and finding help. Several members are valuable helpers as singers and speakers at the open-air meetings, and they themselves conduct Hindustani street-preaching and a Sunday-school. The Sunday afternoon Bible Class for Christians has been well attended.

Memorial stones of a new and greatly needed building at Abergavenny, Mon., were laid last week. A sketch will appear in our next.

The new Association at Colne has secured suitable rooms in a good position, which were formally opened on July 10, when address were delivered by Rev. C. E. Little and Mr. A. K. Yapp, the travelling secretary for Lancashire.

The Teignmouth Association has recently acquired suitable premises in a central position, and the adaptation is now being carried forward, numbers of the members co-operating and themselves undertaking different parts of the work—plumbing, painting, carpentering, &c. The formal opening will take place on the 25th inst.

Mr. J. C. Marsh, general secretary of the Association at Totterdown, which has recently erected a well-appointed building for its work, has been appointed travelling officer for the western district, which office he will hold in addition to that at Totterdown.

Reaching the Villages.—In connection with "Counties Evangelization" some successful missions throughout Somerset and neighbouring counties are being held. So neglected are many of the villages that the Gospel is hardly known, and the glorious news of a finished work and a free salvation to "whosoever will" comes as a strange story. One villager remarked: "For fifty years we have lived here, and have never before had these things explained to us." House-to-house visitation has been a fruitful branch of service, and has given opportunities for leading troubled souls into peace. The address of the treasurer, Mr. Henry W. Case, is 11, Cotham Road, Bristol.

Church of England.

A sad accident happened at Brighton on Monday last, when owing to the overturning of a yacht, three members of a mothers' meeting belonging to St. John's Church, Drury Lane, were drowned.

The Bishop of Marlborough, whose appointment to the Deanery of Exeter has been approved by the Queen, has only recently resigned the office of Suffragan Bishop for West London. Dr. Earle is seventy-two years of age, and his health has been a good deal broken by his labours in the London diocese.

A minute passed at the last general committee meeting of the C.M.S., "reminds the supporters of the Society that as the increased expenditure now reported on is the result of the large additions in late years to the missionary staff, there is a loud call and great encouragement for continuance in believing prayer that the Lord of the Harvest will graciously provide the means needed for the maintenance of the messengers whom He has sent into the mission field. 'Ask the Lord, and tell his people.'"

A few years since, Viscount Portman placed at the disposal of the Church Army, for aggressive evangelistic work in the West End, the church formerly known as Brunswick Chapel, Upper Berkeley Street, W. There are Bible classes, prayer meetings, &c., almost every night, while the Sunday evening congregation often numbers 700 or 800.

An appeal is being made in connection with the fund for the purchase of the freehold of Portman Chapel, with a view to vesting the patronage in a permanent body of Evangelical trustees. The ground landlord, Lord Portman, has promised to give an endowment of £3,000, provided the full purchase money of £8,000 is raised and paid to the trustees of the Portman Settlement. The offer of sale, which is made conditional upon the site and building being conveyed direct to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, only holds good to the end of the present month.

Congregational.

Dr. Parker has agreed to preach the opening sermon of the London campaign in connection with the forthcoming simultaneous mission organized by the National Free Church Council, to be held all over the country. The London mission is fixed for January, and Dr. Parker's sermon will be preached at the Guildhall.

The centenary of the church at Hadham has been celebrated. It was also the twenty-first anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. T. Greig. Rev. D. Burford Hooke conducted services at Little and Much Hadham. At the former Rev. G. S. Barrett, D.D., also preached to a large company. At a public meeting the pastor gave a short outline of the hundred years' history.

The recent meetings of the Welsh Congregational Union, at Potmadoc, were largely attended. The missionary meeting was particularly popular, Rev. Hopkyn Rees, who, with Mrs. Rees, had only just arrived from China, giving an address. The Lord's Supper was partaken of with deep solemnity by about 900 persons. This was a most impressive service. There were not many dry eyes in the congregation during the observance. The chairman of the union presided, and was assisted by some of the senior ministers.

Hope Park Church, Edinburgh, has held its anniversary services (the twenty-fourth since the opening of the building. Rev. John Wemyss, pastor, preached in the forenoon. In the afternoon the pulpit was occupied by Dr. John Smith, of Broughton Place U.P. Church. Preaching from Rom. xvi. 2, Dr. Smith gave an epitome of the chapter, and demonstrated the duty laid upon Christians of the present day to emulate the workers of the primitive Roman Church in receiving their brethren "as becometh saints."

Resignations.—Rev. J. Naylor, St. Austell; Rev. W. Hewgill, Farnworth.

Calls (accepted).—Rev. W. A. Simcox, Blackburn, to Bishop's Castle, Salop; Rev. W. Cuthbertson, Duxford, to West Cowes; Rev. David Caird, Morningside Church, Edinburgh, to King Street, Luton.

Baptist.

Mr. Frank H. Smith, of the Pastors' College, has accepted an invitation to become assistant minister of Baptist Church at High Street, Ilford, in association with Rev. J. Parker, M.A. Mr. Smith expects to commence his ministry at the beginning of September.

After a sermon upon "Your Will for God," in Cavendish Church, Ramsgate (Pastor T. Hancocks), on Sunday night, three believers were baptized. It was announced that of £4,235, the total cost of the new schools, only £920 remained to be raised. It is hoped that the schools will be opened free of debt on September 18.

In connection with the good work at Appledore, Devon, it is found necessary to renovate the chapel; and, as the resources of the congregation, which is composed mainly of the working class, have been exhausted in the erection of Sunday schools, a wider appeal is made for help. The pastor is Rev. D. Harris, Baptist Church, Appledore, North Devon.

The church at Stratford New Town Tabernacle, Edith Road, which was only formed six months ago, made its first thankoffering on Wednesday last, when £28 was contributed. A meeting was afterwards held, when addresses were delivered by Revs. J. Bradford, of Leytonstone (who presided), G. T. Bailey (Leyton), and G. T. Ennals (Upminster).

The pastor and officers of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, have issued a further appeal, in which they say that the "renewed Tabernacle" is to be opened on September 19, but they adhere to the late Mr. Spurgeon's principle that "the uttermost farthing must first be paid." At a reception held on July 4 by Mrs. Spurgeon gifts were received to the amount of £2,800, and it is intended to raise the small balance yet remaining in the interval between now and the opening.

A correspondent writes that in front of Harcourt Chapel, Dublin (Pastor H. D. Brown), passages from the Scriptures, inscribed in some form of enamel, are exhibited, and are read by large numbers of passers-by. One was, "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin;" and the one now shown is, "Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Our correspondent suggests that others may feel led to adopt this method of proclaiming Gospel truths.

Calls (accepted).—Mr. Joseph Beaupré, of the Pastors' College (late of South Africa), to the three churches at Wrexham, Holt, and Brymbo (North Wales).

Methodist.

Rev. Dr. C. M. Sheldon has accepted an invitation to preach in St. James' Hall, Manchester, on Sunday, July 29. The services are in connection with the Wesleyan Mission.

The number of Wesleyan Bands of Hope has now reached 4,730, with 440,180 members; the adult temperance societies number 1,564, with 90,678 members, an increase of 3,287 on the Connexional year.

Wesley Central Hall, Portsmouth, an important Methodist extension, has been formally opened. Revs. Hugh Price Hughes and H. T. Meakin, and Mr. R. W. Perks took part. The new hall provides accommodation for 1,000 persons.

The superintendent of the Primitive Methodist Mission at Clapton has secured from the General Committee approval of the plans for the Home of Rest which he has been so anxious to erect at Southend-on-Sea. It is to provide accommodation for fifty of London's poor. The entire cost, including freehold and furnishing, is estimated to be £3,000, while from the rental of two shops in front some £60 per annum is expected.

There is a steady inflow of payments to the Wesleyan Twentieth Century Fund. The largest remittances include: Chislehurst, £4,103; Southport (Mornington Road), £3,491; Bradford (Manningham), £2,700; Stockport (Trinity), £2,527; Birmingham (Wesley), £2,480; London (Brixton Hill), £2,200; Grimsby (George Street), £2,050; Eccles, £2,164. Upwards of fifty other circuits have remitted amounts of between £1,000 and £2,000.

The forty-fourth annual assembly of the United Methodist Free Churches was held last week at Manchester. Rev. F. Galpin, of Clitheroe, was elected president. The retiring president, Rev. J. C. Brewitt, stated that the Connexional committee had sent telegrams to China in order that their brethren and sisters there should feel they had the sympathy of the denomination in their present trials. Rev. H. T. Chapman, missionary secretary, said they had instructed the missionaries to go, if necessary, to Japan.

The prosperity of the Wesleyan Soldiers' Homes on Salisbury Plain has become almost an embarrassment. The new building at Bulford is crowded daily. In one day last week £16 15s. 8d. was taken at the bar, and as much as £14 was in one day paid into the Homes' Savings Bank. A Branch Home has been opened in the village of Amesbury, whither the men stroll from the camp in the evening, and another is to be opened at Bulford, in order to compete with the public-house there.

Presbyterian.

The Westbourne Grove congregation have decided to build a new church for Rev. Johnston Ross at a cost of not less than £10,000.

Rev. William Patterson, recently settled in Dr. Pierson's Church, Philadelphia, will preach next Lord's Day, July 22, in Camden Road Church (Rev. Dr. Thornton's), at 11 a.m., and in Rev. Dr. Hall's Church, Colebrooke Row, at 6.30 p.m.

The effort to raise 60,000 crowns for church extension is not being allowed to interfere with the ordinary work of the church. Up to June 30 the sum of £6,370 had been received this year for the synodical schemes of the church, as compared with £5,536 for the corresponding period last year.

Dr. John Watson preaches the 238th anniversary sermon at Aston Tyrrold, near Didcot, Berks, on the afternoon of Monday, the 23rd inst. So many people from the whole countryside, from the surrounding towns, and from London, propose attending, that it will be necessary to hold the services in the open air.

Bow Road Church, E., has been reopened after re-decoration, and the placing of a new organ and pulpit in the church. In the morning, Rev. Dr. McEwan, of Clapham, preached from 2 Cor. v. 16. Rev. J. Grierson, minister of the church, preached in the evening, and delivered an appropriate sermon from 2 Kings iii. 15. There were good congregations.

A gift of £1,000 has been received from Mr. Robert A. McLean for mission work in China. In forwarding it, the donor said that "if ever there was a time when the missionaries in China should feel that they have the support of the people at home, it is now, when Chinese ideals are actively and aggressively pitted against Christianity and Western civilization."

In the Scottish Church, in Crown Court, Covent Garden, London, on Sunday week, the monthly Gaelic service was conducted by Rev. James Macdonald, of Dornoch. The Northern Weekly says:—"The large congregation on Sunday afternoon included an auld wife of 'aichty-eicht' and young men fresh from Inverness, and all listened to the preacher's discourse with interest. Mr. Macdonald said it was a great pleasure to him to meet so many of his countrymen and countrywomen in London, and they shared the pleasure as they sat in the stiff, high pews, singing the old psalms in the old tongue to the old tunes."

Resignation.—Rev. W. N. Macdonald, St. Stephen's Church, Sunderland.

Society of Friends.

A series of Gospel tent meetings has been held at Almeley Wootton, and although the weather was very unfavourable, the evenings being wet and cold, large numbers gathered to hear the earnest addresses of Ellwood Brockbank and William Baker. The services of these Friends have been much appreciated, and many have been helped and strengthened.

Fallen Asleep.

Aged forty-eight, Rev. J. BENNEWORTH, superintendent of Jarrow Wesleyan Circuit. He died suddenly in a railway station after hurrying to catch a train. He had preached at Heburn the previous evening with more than his wonted fervour.—Rev. W. S. BAKER, for thirty-eight years rector of Eversholt, aged seventy-two.—Rev. A. H. GORTON, rector of Neen, Solars, Shropshire, aged fifty.—Rev. EDWARD RODGERS, for thirty-five years vicar of St. Luke's, Carlton Road, Nottingham.—At Sydney, N.S.W., on May 19, Mrs. J. Miller Ross, widow of the late Rev. J. M. Ross, who was for many years the secretary of the Sustentation Fund of the Presbyterian Church of England, and afterwards general agent of the Presbyterian Church of New South Wales.—Friends of Berks and Oxon Quarterly Meeting have sustained a great loss in the death of their clerk, JOHN MESSER, which took place at his residence, Danbury, Reading, on July 6, at the age of sixty-six.—At Eastbourne, Rev. E. W. FOLEY, in his ninety-first year. Mr. Foley was a staunch Evangelical and a strong supporter of the C.M.S.—Rev. RICHARD DOWSE, dean of Clonmacnoise, and for twenty-nine years rector of Tyrrellspass parish.—At Raffrey, Crossgar, co. Down, Mr. JAS. NORWOOD, a Presbyterian elder and active Sunday school scholar.

Lavender Bag Mission.—The secretary of this Mission, Miss E. Alice Puckle, The Hollonds, Langton, Tunbridge Wells, appeals for boxes or parcels of lavender to fill small muslin bags for sick soldiers and others in hospitals. Last year some thousands of these bags, with text cards attached, were sent to Africa, India, Gibraltar, as well as hospitals in England, where they are always eagerly received.

Notes & Comments

THIS week we conclude our report of the C.E. Convention. The commencement of Keswick will be found on pp. 22, 23.

One of the priceless benefits of the C.E. movement is the proof it has afforded that a special "gift" is not necessary in order to be able to give a public testimony to one's faith. A correspondent rightly points out that this erroneous idea is at the root of much foolish and needless diffidence in the church. He instances the case of a man, who on his return from America held a large audience almost spellbound for an hour when he spoke about what he had seen, but who before this had never addressed an assembly. He could have done the same in speaking of his inner spiritual experience had he exercized his faculties to do so. "I believed, therefore have I spoken" is a text that, if acted upon, would often unfold rich treasures of living faith and spiritual insight in the Divine Word in people who, from a mistaken modesty or foolish nervousness, are silent all their lives. The Spirit is promised to all, and when He takes of the things of Christ and gives them unto us, it is at our peril that we "damp down" the sacred fire.

Great interest centres in the coming Zionist Congress, which will begin in the Metropolis on August 13. Most of the chief Jewish leaders will attend, and, doubtless, other important questions will be dealt with along with the primary one of the return of the Jews to the Holy Land, the renewal of the persecutions throughout a large portion of Europe having led to a very heavy outlay on the part of the Union. From a recent interview, it would appear, however, that Dr. Gaster, the head of the oldest Jewish community in England, and the founder of the English Zionist Federation, is not in favour of any extensive emigration to Palestine just now, as he does not consider the time politically favourable, owing chiefly to the Continental jealousy of England.

We hold for our next issue a deeply-interesting letter received from Pastor Fr. Coillard, of the Barotsi Land Mission, on the Upper Zambesi. Our beloved friend has to tell of joys and sorrows in his great work. He and his associates are, however, "ready for either." He says:—

> We firmly believe that these dark days are the forerunners of times of great blessing, and that through these deep waters of affliction the King still leads us to victory. It is the painful pruning season. "Every branch that beareth fruit He cleanseth, He pruneth, that it may bring forth more fruit." That abundance of fruit, permanent fruit, is still in expectation, it is true. All that we can say is that the king, the chiefs, the people generally, are all well disposed towards the Gospel. The meetings and the schools are well attended, but conversions are rare. Pray for us, that in our own lives, in our ministry in this country, our fruit may be more, nay exceedingly abundant.

Much ground for thought will be found in the cry for retribution and vengeance against China, when it is borne in mind that in that development of trade, of which we boast so much, England has during the past five years supplied to that Eastern Empire 190 field and position guns, with over 60,000 rounds of ammunition, and 297 machine guns, with 4,228,400 rounds; that Germany has been doing likewise, and that we both have been teaching the Chinese the use of them. What force do such figures as these give to the plea for the Christianizing of our commerce?

If the opinions of magistrates and judges respecting drink as a parent of crime could be engraved on the heart and conscience of the nation, temperance reform would not lag behind so lamentably. The latest deliverance on this question is by Mr. Justice Channell, in addressing the grand jury at Manchester. Speaking of the charges before him, he said:

> Many of these cases arose from drink—the one preventible cause of crime which exists at present to a serious extent. Anything that would assist in making people sober would largely diminish the work of the judges and juries at assizes.

It is not too much to say that in a sober England the occupation of many magistrates, judges, and lawyers would be gone. Drink is an enemy that not only steals away men's brains, but their morals as well, by inflaming the passions and paralyzing their will. All the crimes wrought by drink are in the strictest sense preventible.

A noteworthy feature in the discussion of questions affecting commercial morality is the readiness of the man whose business is above reproach to applaud the proposed sacrifice for conscience' sake of his neighbour who is less fortunate than himself. We are bound to urge that he whose business or method is one upon which Divine approval cannot rest should "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," and trust that all needful things shall "be added unto" him. But it is possible to violate the spirit of this precept even in a distinctively religious or moral business, and men must be careful, while they urge another to remove the mote that is in his eye, that there is no beam in their own. Else may moral counsels degenerate into mere Pharisaism and merit its condemnation. And let all who are in a clean business humbly thank God that it is so.

The problem of when and how far to limit individual liberty for the sake of the individual himself and of the community, is a very difficult one; but Lord Salisbury's dictum in Parliament last week is scarcely likely to commend itself to ecclesiastical reformers. He said:—

> If A chooses to tell his secrets to B, nothing you can put in the statute book will prevent him from doing it.

These words seem harmless and self-evident in themselves; but they assume a different aspect when we find that they are put forth as an argument for declining to suppress the Confessional in the English Church. The question is not one of private relationship, but of a public institution, and whether the State Church shall shelter under its ægis practices which in the Roman Church have been productive of such widespread and insidious evil. No one can or desires to interfere with any man's right privately to confess his sins to his spiritual adviser, if he think fit; but to permit a public Confessional to be erected in a parish church is quite another thing.

The present confusion of opinion and judgment as to the relations of the Anglican Church to the State was singularly illustrated recently in the debate in the House of Lords, where the Primate and the Prime Minister jointly advocated patience in suppressing lawlessness, and "quiet and steady perseverance"; and the latter openly avowed that the question was not one of "political jurisdiction"; while the Standard, in a leading article, stated that, if the Low and the High parties are to continue together in the same Church it can only be with the help of the State, and the strict enforcement of the law against those who violate it. The incompatibility of the positions of the two parties is clear to all who can read between the lines, and realize the "true inwardness" of the Sacerdotal movement; but both parties seem to find a kind of comfort in the sense of an outward unity, behind which the battle between the Roman and the Reformed theology is fast coming to its climax.

The Church Review has gone a step further, and in a recent issue, referring to the question of the genuflexions of "the priest," alludes not merely to "the Mass," but also to "the reserved Host." The same High Church journal professes to recognise the pressing temptation to which clergy and laity of "the local English Church" are exposed in these days, to make an end of the whole weary strife by seeking refuge in Rome, and, strange as it may seem, deprecates such a course, although > there may, indeed, as has been said to us, be a feeling of joy and rest in knowing, for the first time in one's life, that one is the subject of a bishop of the same religion as oneself, but it is not a feeling which one has any necessary right to expect even in the Holy Catholic Church.

Mr. Arthur Galton's concluding paper in the current number of the National Review, dealing with his experiences within the Roman Catholic body, should not be without effect upon weak-minded persons who are hovering upon the brink. Mr. Galton, however, does admit that the pervert may still find some mediæval practices for his comfort.

> Though indulgences are no longer sold, they can be earned with ease and frequency, and the centuries of remission, piled up by some anxious and fervent persons, are really overwhelming. . . . The mediæval traffic in Masses not only continues, but has been adapted to the latest methods of finance. The authorized charge in England is five shillings a Mass, and Masses paid for at that rate can be transferred to poorer ecclesiatics on the Continent, who are glad to undertake them for one or two francs each. The difference, minus the cost of transmission, stays with the original recipient.

Strong, however, as is Mr. Galton's indictment against the body he has now been led to leave, he finds the extreme High Church party no less misleading:—

> I will only say in conclusion that, so far as effects on mind and character go, I see little difference between the system and theology of the Vatican and that imitation of it which is being spread among us, even more insidiously, by the Laterans and Anglican Mediævalists.

There can be little doubt that a strong pessimistic feeling in regard to the lot of the "submerged tenth" in our large cities is traceable to the popularity of what has been designated as "the East End novel." In such books, as a rule, the noble work being done for the spiritual and temporal welfare of the poor is either ignored altogether or dealt with in a contemptuous spirit. An emotional appreciation of poverty may not be without its due value, but it is of quite third-rate importance in comparison with the efforts of those who are, however modestly, labouring to alleviate the distress. A writer in the Edinburgh Review said, some time ago, the counsel which comes from the hearts of the emotional reformers requires to be vigorously controlled and modified by other people's heads.

The Prince of Wales expressed a very general feeling when, in speaking at the opening of the new Union Buildings at Ladywell, he commended the care which had been exercised by the guardians in the arrangement of the provision for the aged, whereby a sense of home-comfort has been ensured to the inmates, and whereby also the ideas and habits usually associated with the workhouse have, as much as possible, been abolished.

To substitute a "home of rest" for the deserving aged poor for the much-detested old-fashioned "workhouse" is one of the best ways of dealing with the insistent problem of pauperism, and of fulfilling our obligation to the poor, whom we have with us always.

The great importance of holding appropriate Evangelical services at the principal tourist centres of the Continent is growing more and more apparent as the stream of holiday makers yearly increases. The Free Church Council is thus well advised in arranging for such services, at which tourists may enjoy the privilege of worshipping in the form to which they have grown accustomed, and of hearing able and earnest preaching of the Word. The mind is peculiarly sensitive to religious appeal in such beautiful surroundings, and in a mood so detached from the absorbing cares of life; and the rapid multiplication of these preaching centres, which is going on, is a most desirable thing. Not its least benefit is the chance of practical reunion which it gives to representatives of the Free Churches in a form that is sure to deepen the sense of Christian brotherhood at home as well as abroad.

The complaints made at a gathering of country ministers that Free Churchmen on their annual holiday so seldom encourage the hearts of the village pastors by attendance at their services unquestionably has a solid basis of truth in it. At the same time, there is another side to the case. Something is to be said in favour of a change of religious as well as physical atmosphere; and even if Nonconformists occasionally attend the parish church services when away from home, or those at the chapel of another denomination than their own, there is no doubt a freshness of spiritual feeling aroused, as well as a call to realize the wider brotherhood of Christian people of various ecclesiastical opinions. On the whole, by a little unselfish thought and arrangement, both these possible courses could be combined. The heart of the village pastor would be cheered to see the Free Churchmen of the towns in his congregation even once on a Sunday; and the other part of the day might be profitably spent in listening to a preacher of another denomination.

The following passage from a paper by Dr. Robertson Nicoll at a ministerial gathering, dealing with the question of a supposed continuation of the process of revelation, since the close of the New Testament Canon, puts the case happily, and, at the same time, conclusively:—

There are those who contend that revelation is not closed, that it is still going on. What they mean is that the knowledge of God given in the New Testament is being continually illustrated and verified by the experience of the Church. But that is not to say that new knowledge has been given. If anything new has been added to our knowledge of the Kingdom of God, what is it? Put it into words and see whether it cannot be found better expressed in the New Testament. So far as it is true it is all drawn out of that book, which remains the perfect test and arbiter. We can have no further knowledge of God than the knowledge given in revelation. The new revelation will come with the appearance of Christ our Life in glory.

It is in the unfolding of the inexhaustible meaning of the New Testament revelation, not in attempting to supplement it, that religious teachers fulfil their true function.

The question has been raised, What is the reason that mission-halls are so often shut up on a Sunday morning, especially while the public-house is open at certain hours? Is it impossible to get the more respectable members of the working classes (to say no more) to get up early enough to attend a bright, hearty, helpful, religious service? We hear of an experiment in adult Sunday schools in the Midlands and elsewhere, which is attended by large numbers as early as 7 a.m. This proves the possibility of getting at the right kind of people if once the right note is struck, and their sympathies properly enlisted. Here is room for an interesting and most useful religious experiment. It would mean much thought and prayer for guidance into the right path, and afterwards of hard and steady work; but there are great possibilities in the idea.

Many are the cruelties perpetrated in the name of fashion. Some of the most beautiful of God's creatures are slain and worn as ornaments, or their feathers taken from them alive to grace the charms of fashionable beauty. It is not always that women who know the agonies involved in procuring their decorations are thereby impelled to deny themselves; but it is well that the facts should be made known. Lately tortoiseshell has come largely to the front for all sorts of trinkets, and the horrible cost at which it is obtained will be a surprise to many. The shell is obtained from the Maldive Islands, and the process by which it is procured is incredibly cruel, the natives taking the shell from the live turtle by covering it with burning charcoal, which causes the shell to curl upwards, this being then taken off with a knife and flattened out between boards. The turtle is then forced back into the sea to recuperate, and the process is often repeated with the same creature.

Jesus.

Many names are dear, but his is dearer;
How it grows more dear as time goes on,
Many friends are near, but he is nearer,
Always what we want and all our own.

Jesus! Jesus! let us ever say it
Softly to ourselves as some sweet spell;
Jesus! Jesus! humbled spirit, lay it
On thy heart and it will make thee well.

Blankenburg Conference. — The fifteenth Alliance Conference will be held August 27 to 31. The general subject will be "From Death unto Life," and the speakers will include Dr. Baedeker, Count Andreas Bernstorff, Rev. Campbell Morgan, Prediger Eckert, Dr. Grattan Guinness, Pastor Jellinghaus, Pastor Damman, Colonel Von Knobelsdorff, Dr. Lepsius, Rev. F. B. Meyer, and Pastor Stockmayer. Friends desiring accommodation should write before August 10 to Mr. E. F. Hoyer, Allianzhaus, Blankenburg, Thuringia, Germany.

Conventions—and After.

THE Christian Endeavour Convention—the greatest congregation of Christians probably that this country has ever seen—is over; Keswick is now in full session; to be followed immediately by the Students' Conference at Matlock. Here are three great factors of our British religious life, of which account must be taken by Christian and worldling alike. That each imparts its own measure of inspiration to those to whom it ministers, is certain; and while with some this may prove more or less ephemeral, yet the practical effect upon the world at large should be very real and tangible. From so much sowing an abundant harvest should spring.

It has been asked, Does the outcome of so vast a concourse as that witnessed last week at the Alexandra Palace justify the prodigious expense and labour involved? Probably not, were such an occasion of frequent occurrence; but it is no small advantage that Christian workers should be occasionally cheered, in the midst of much discouragement, by the assurance that in their war against sin; and that a callous or scoffing world should be made to feel that a mighty spiritual force is in its midst which it cannot afford to ignore, and that the children of God are not such a few and feeble folk as it is sometimes assumed. These are the immediate results, but others more far-reaching must follow. Not only for a week en masse, but throughout the year, in scattered units or groups, are these forces dwelling with us; and if displayed materializes into action great spiritual results may be anticipated.

Nothing is more hopeful than the banding together of earnest young souls like the Endeavourers "for Christ and the Church"; and while more "established" Christians may be disposed to discount their enthusiasm or cavil at their pledge, yet there is nothing of which the churches stand more in need, next to the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, than this bright glowing warmth of spiritual love. Be it theirs therefore to fan it into a flame, to guide it into

of service, rather than to damp it down with criticism or even "faint praise."

Those whose hearts are touched with love for souls will be the very salt of the earth; and so long as statistics prove the comparative rarity of conversions among persons of maturer years, we dare not raise a finger to check the stream of Christian life among boys and girls, young men and maidens, whether among Endeavourers, or students, or those who seek a closer walk with God at Keswick or elsewhere.

What would not many give to feel again the throb of simple fervent love that characterized their early Christian experience? May we too catch some of the inspiration from these glad hearts and bright happy faces, glowing with the joy of the Lord which is their strength. And as the years roll on and the generations pass, may these forces combine for the cleansing of our national life, for the restriction of the drink curse, for the curtailment of incentives to vice, and for the pulling down of Satan's strongholds, in whatever form they may appear. Then shall Endeavour spell achievement; study, mastery; and the search after holiness, the grace of God outpoured.

IT is time that the British public should be informed as to the methods by which public funds are employed in Ireland to secure the upbringing of the children in the doctrines of the Church of Rome. For many years a regular system has been in vogue whereby children have been brought before the magistrates on trumped-up charges of begging, and have been committed to industrial schools, where they are kept under Romish influence at the ratepayers' expense.

So flagrant had these instances of practical kidnapping become, that in 1898 the present Chief Secretary for Ireland issued a circular to the magistrates in Ireland drawing attention to the matter, and pointing out that the Act was being strained by the committal of children in such a manner and on such charges. The effect of the "circular" has been to diminish these cases to such an extent that an agitation has been set on foot by the Roman Press and clergy to obtain the withdrawal of the obnoxious restriction.

No effort has been spared to induce the Chief Secretary to cancel his action, but hitherto all these efforts have happily been in vain. We trust that the hands of the Chief Secretary may be strengthened by the publicity given recently to a striking instance of the methods to which we have referred. In the Dublin Court of Queen's Bench, on June 12, an application was made on behalf of William Ruckley for an order of habeas corpus to deliver to his custody his two children, Mary and Jane, who, since November 10, 1897, had been inmates of the Roman Catholic Industrial School at Merrion, co. Dublin.

From the report of the case which appeared in the Dublin Daily Express for June 13, it appears that Ruckley is a Protestant, who was married to a Roman Catholic; that while he was in hospital in November, 1897, his children were taken away from home and placed in the Industrial School on a charge of begging, which was brought under the following circumstances:—A woman met the children, and told them that if they asked her for a penny she would give them one each to buy sweets. The children fell into the trap, and were accordingly charged as beggars and committed, on the application of this woman and of a man who swore that he was the father!

When the father came out of hospital his wife would not tell him what had become of the children; but he learned their whereabouts from neighbours, and made every effort to obtain possession of them, but in vain. Not only had he been deprived of his children, but he was compelled to pay a shilling a week towards their maintenance, until, finding out more of the facts of the case, he had declined to continue the payment. He now brought the action for the custody of his children, his wife having died in 1898. The Court granted a conditional order for certiorari to quash the magistrate's convictions, and also a conditional order of habeas corpus returnable within a week.

The conditional order was not made absolute without an elaborate attempt by the Romish party to throw discredit on the father's statements; but the case was brought to a successful issue on July 11, when the Judge passed some very severe strictures on the fraud which had been perpetrated, professed his belief that the father had been personated when the children were charged before the magistrate, whose conviction must be quashed, and ordered the writ of habeas corpus to be returned on July 13. Accordingly, on that day the children were brought into court and delivered over to the father's custody. The course of events is very fully recorded in the Dublin Daily Express for June 13, July 5, 12, 13.

The facts thus brought to light constitute, we venture to think, a serious scandal, showing, as they do, that a father, whose children are stolen from him and brought up in a faith and under influences which he does not approve, can only regain possession of his own children by the costly process of an application, involving the employment of counsel and repeated appearances in the Queen's Bench. The hardship is aggravated by the fact that the applicant was a working man. He has, however, done an important public service in exposing a system which is a disgrace to any civilized community, and which the Chief Secretary's circular has fortunately done much to overthrow.

The Papal Church and China.

By Rev. ALEX. ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

THE Italian Press in some quarters brings a serious charge against the Papal Church with reference to China, holding it, in fact, largely responsible for the insurrections and outrages now going on in that country. One paper says: "The system of political interference that lies at the foundation of all Papal propaganda is exactly that which irritates the Chinese people."

The Vatican organs, of course, indignantly deny the charge, and they say that it is nothing less than infamous to attribute any share of these disturbances and massacres to the Papal missions. And yet, when one comes to look into the matter, one sees that the serious charge put forth is well sustained by proof. The fact is that Papal agents, through the action of the French minister in China, have obtained an official position that enables them to confer enormous benefits on Chinese who become Roman Catholics, and to inflict corresponding losses on those who will not come over to them. A writer says:

> Perhaps the most successful missionary church in China is the Roman Catholic, the native converts of which number more than those of all the other denominations combined. This success is due to the rights conferred upon the representatives of the Roman Catholic Church by French treaties, which provide that priests shall have the rank of Viceroys.

Now a Viceroy represents a king, and in China he ranks next to the Emperor. He has an access to those in authority that Consuls have not. Romish priests there are allowed the position and authority of the highest Mandarins.

> They travel with all the splendour of Mandarins of high rank. . . . This gives Catholic missionaries both civil and social rights which enable them to protect the interests of their people from encroachment. In cases where it is necessary they also arm their followers for defence from molestation, their treaty rights giving them the privilege.

Now, how do the priests behave? Rev. W. O. Ellerich, of Chefoo, says:—

> Their business really is to look after lawsuits, and the training they possess is not so much in being able to expound the Scriptures, of which they are very ignorant, but to carry on a lawsuit successfully before the Chinese officials. . . . The foreign priest will back up the case before the native officials, and, if he refuses, threaten him with the power of the country.

Rev. F. M. Royal writes:—

> Bishops and priests are allowed the authority of a magistrate or mandarin; they sit in judgment in the case of a convert . . . and practically control the decision.

Another missionary says that priests—> are not what we would regard as evangelists, as they do but little, if any, preaching, except to set forth the advantages—and these political rather than spiritual—of becoming members of the Roman Catholic Church.

There we are weak, and the reason is apparent:

> Unscrupulous men have joined the Romanists in thousands here this year. In Shantung ten thousand persons have been baptized, and the Romanists claim twenty thousand adherents in four districts. This policy is deliberately carried out all over China.

And what is the result? This, to quote Rev. F. M. Royal:—

> It is generally believed that the favouritism thus allowed is the cause of very much of the prejudice amongst the Chinese against Christians, and even of the Boxer outbreak.

Again, according to Rev. W. O. Ellerich, of Chefoo:—

> In the first place, historically considered, I would regard the Roman Catholic missions and their propaganda as one of the main active causes of the disturbed conditions of the country, whereby the missionary work of Protestant churches has been seriously interfered with. It is an opinion that wherever Roman Catholics are found in China there, sooner or later, disturbances are sure to arise. The only parts of this province which have been exempt from disturbances are those sections where there are no Roman Catholics.

When Sir Rutherford Alcock was on his way to China, and was at the British Embassy at Rome, the Pope sent for him, asking him amongst other things why it was that the Chinese persecuted the Roman Catholic priests. Sir Rutherford answered, "It is because of their assumption of political power." Wherever they go, Roman Catholic priests intrigue politically and cause disturbances. Here in Italy the Papacy is simply a political conspiracy.

Lord Salisbury must have had this in his head when he said:—

> Just look at this Chinese matter. Have you observed that all the people slaughtered are Christians? Do you believe that they are slaughtered simply because the Chinese dislike their religion? There is no nation in the world so indifferent on the subject of religion as the Chinese. It is because they and other nations have got the idea that missionary work is a mere instrument of the secular government, in order to achieve the object it has in view.

Whilst the idea in regard to Protestant missionaries is false, it is unhappily too true in regard to Papal missionaries. And in China the nation that chiefly benefits is France, the great infidel bulwark of the Papacy, but for whom the Pope would not be in Rome the torment of Italy to-day.

The charge then against the Papacy in regard to Chinese disturbances is a serious one, but one that the unbroken testimony of an army of Protestant missionaries sustains. Indeed, Rev. Isaac Taylor, of Pekin University, says plainly:—"The Catholic priests are the cause of the trouble," and goes on to say that the secret societies of the Boxers were created to resist the injustice of the priests in favouring their converts in the law courts, and the word means "Peace and righteousness to be secured by force."

The Husbandman.

God sows his fields with precious grain,
That must in cold and darkness lie
Until the Lord shall come again
In power and glory from on high.
Then shall the seed in weakness sown,
Bear fruit in beauty like his own.

A little while the grave receives
The precious dust of friends we love,
But absent spirits, faith believes,
Are present with the Lord above,
Waiting till Christ shall claim his own,
And reap the harvest He has sown.

Miss Child, of the Welcome Home, Canning Town, is contemplating a much-needed improvement and extension of premises, for which there is now a favourable opportunity. Five hundred pounds have been promised; £1,000 will be needed. We shall be glad to know that friends are coming to her aid by prayer and contributions.

Temperance Pleas.

By JOAN WYNCOTE.

I.—TEMPERANCE RESTAURANTS AND BANK HOLIDAYS.

IN fighting intemperance it is well to consider some of the ways in which we can lead our weak brothers and sisters out of temptation. It is easy to descant on the evils of drink; intemperate people know them as well as we to whom this terrible evil is no temptation. Many persons do not mean to be intemperate, but under certain circumstances they lose self-control, and yield to temptations that we who are strong should always be on the look out to avert.

Why, for instance, are so many of the excellent cheap temperance restaurants in London closed on Bank holidays? Of course, in many parts of the city they are not required; but they are badly needed in localities near museums, picture galleries, and other places of public resort. People who would frequent them are forced to go to public-houses for refreshments; and thus many are tempted to take stimulants who would not have done so if temperance restaurants had been available; until, when night comes, they return to their homes intoxicated, having entirely spoiled what would otherwise have been a healthy, happy holiday.

Naturally, the employés in these establishments need and deserve rest and recreation as well as others; another day would not be quite the same to them. Parents, children, sweethearts, relatives and friends of all grades meet together to enjoy a day's pleasure and each other's society, probably in a more enjoyable way than they do on any other days in the year. When one considers the hard-working staff who would be deprived of their well-earned holiday if the restaurants were opened, it must be acknowledged that

A SERIOUS DIFFICULTY IS ENCOUNTERED.

Could voluntary workers be obtained to take the place of the regular assistants? Many women of leisure might be found to give their time in such a cause; but the companies would naturally be very chary about employing totally inexperienced workers even for a day. Still, it is work that could be easily learned, and a very little training or instruction beforehand would suffice. Substitutes for other workers (such as bakers, confectioners, &c.) would scarcely be so necessary, as by working a few hours' overtime it might be possible to prepare enough food for two days.

Again, the companies would not care to accept unpaid labour, nor would it be right that they should receive a whole day's profits without having paid anything for them. To prevent this, the company could either pay the value of the day's wages to some temperance society, or the ladies accept the wages and give the money to whatever good cause they pleased.

WHAT SOME OF THE COMPANIES THINK.

Messrs. Lockhart do open their restaurants on Bank holidays in all likely districts. Their own employés do the work, and obtain another day off duty in lieu of the one they give up.

Mr. Pearce, Managing Director of "Pearce and Plenty" and the "British Tea Table," gave me a very patient hearing as I laid the necessities of the case before him. He is an ardent worker for temperance, and said that both he and his companies had long felt the need for this in the West of London; but he confessed the greatest drawback to be the taking away the holiday from employés, as another day would scarcely be compensation to them, for reasons which I have mentioned. But he totally vetoed the idea of voluntary workers, though I begged he would authorize me to collect and have trained a band of helpers before August, giving one of their restaurants over to our care for the day as an experiment.

Mr. Pearce said no company would ever consent to such a scheme. He has, however, already named the subject to his fellow-directors, and intends bringing the matter very thoroughly before them. When practical business people see the necessity for a thing, they generally manage to overcome the difficulties connected with it, so we may hope very shortly to see some of his restaurants opened in such locations as are needed on Bank holidays.

Mr. Eden, the secretary of the Aerated Bread Company, asked me to write to his directors, which I did, and received the following reply:

Dear Madam,—The directors have asked me to thank you for your letter.

While much in agreement with you, they regret to say the opening of depôts on Bank holidays is not an easy matter, as doing so entails work on all departments; but the acceptance of outside assistance, however kindly offered, would be quite impracticable.—Yours faithfully, T. Eden, Secretary.

Meantime, it is the duty of all interested in temperance to do everything in their power to ensure that the supply of temperance beverages should far wherever pleasure-seekers resort, whether on Bank holidays or at other times.

A very decent Yorkshire collier once said, with reference to his little son, who, in spite of careful training both at home and at school, was very untruthful: "Our Johnny has been taught to speak the truth; but I'm sorry to say he'd rather tell lies, and until he has got into some very serious trouble through it I'm afraid he'll continue to do so." Now, I am not pleading so much for the people who would rather get drunk on Bank holidays, and who, like Johnny, require sterner discipline, but for those who would rather keep sober, were sufficient facilities provided.

If calling public attention to the urgent necessity for these reforms may hasten the time of their accomplishment, or cause some to think of more practical solutions than my own whereby the difficulties may be overcome, I shall not have written in vain. Especially I hope this may meet the eye of some smaller proprietors who will make the experiment on August 6 next.

Christ's Army.

DEDICATED TO CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOURERS.

March along, triumphant army,
Forward press with joyful song;
Promises of glorious victories,
Should your triumph notes prolong.
Christ has triumphed, He will triumph,
Everywhere o'er sin and shame;
Everywhere the powers of darkness,
Dread to hear the Victor's name.

Soon shall tremble earthly bulwarks,
Raised by Satan's utmost skill;
Soon the Christian standard waving
O'er their ruins on the hill—
Waving all the world over,
Oh, the bright, the glorious day,
When the nations all rejoicing,
Shall to Christ their homage pay!

Speed the time all ye his ransomed,
Up! and join the glorious fray;
Do not linger! Be ye instant!
Christ your Captain leads the way.
Clutch the sword, the Word—his Spirit,
Whetted, keen, and glittering bright;
Watch and pray until He bids thee
Wield it in his strength and might.

Don the armour He provides thee
'Gainst the weapons of the foe;
Heed his least commands and do them—
Love and energy aglow.
Live to spread the Saviour's kingdom,
Whilst a breath of life remains;
Till the peoples all surrender,
And acknowledge, Jesus reigns.

Naples Sailors' Rest.—The work among sailors maintained in connection with the Naples Rest is of a varied and useful character. Mr. Stephen Burrowes forwards statistics which go to show that at the missions of three institutions large numbers of sailors, of many nationalities, especially British, have come under good influences. The Gospel services have been largely attended, and some thousands of persons have taken the the temperance pledge. Bibles and tracts have been widely distributed, and colporteurs travel in several ports. The work is seriously crippled for want of funds. Mr. Burrowes' address is 7 Vico 2 del Piliero, Naples.

Prof. White's Bible School.

THE course of Bible study under the direction of Prof. W. W. White terminated with Friday's lecture at the Queen's Hall. There was a fair attendance, and the lecturer's discourse was followed with the keenest possible attention. In dealing with the Epistle to the Hebrews, Prof. White spoke of its relation to the entire Scriptures. The Bible was composed of books reproduced in divers ways, and while each book is independent of the others, in the sense of having a plan and purpose of its own, we find a unity and order throughout, both in the Old and New Testaments. In the Old Testament the Jews were told they should not lift up any tool upon the altar, and Jesus Christ suggested that no human effort could make his sacrifice more acceptable. "Neither shalt thou go up by steps unto mine altar." God wants us to go where the altar is brought down to us. He knows we cannot lift ourselves. Other religions say we must go away and do something for God. Christianity says, God comes all the way to us, and does everything for us.

Passing on to speak of inspiration, the lecturer remarked that while all Scripture is profitable, it is not all equally profitable. There are certain portions more essential than others, but if we look at it as a whole, we shall find that there has been a Designer, guiding those through whom He spoke.

The Epistle to the Hebrews shows the superiority of the Christian to the Jewish dispensation. In the first chapter, Christ is shown to be better than angels—superior in nature and

SUPERIOR IN MINISTRY.

In the second chapter the writer refers to Him as being made a little lower than the angels—taking upon Himself not the nature of angels, but the nature of man. In the third chapter this Son of God is introduced as better than Moses. The fourth chapter reveals Christ as better than Joshua in providing a perfect, eternal rest, instead of the imperfect, transitory rest provided for the Jews by Joshua. "There remaineth, therefore, a rest to the people of God." The word "remaineth" means that it is to come in the future. In the fifth chapter Aaron is introduced, but Christ's priesthood is superior to the Aaronic, in its office and nature. Mention is made of Abraham in the sixth chapter, and the promises of God to him are repeated for our encouragement. In the seventh, Jesus Christ is shown to be a priest after the order of Melchisedek. In the eighth chapter we are struck by the expression, "We have such an High Priest," which is the chief point of the Epistle. In the ninth and tenth chapters we have the word "conscience" used four times, and the blood of Christ is pronounced available for all who will come to Him. God and the soul of man are in direct relationship with each other. We have not to ask others as to the course we should pursue. Let no man be father confessor to us. We have to go to God with our sins, and rejoice in the liberty and access to Him we have.

St. John speaks of Christ as Prophet; in Hebrews He is a Priest, and in Revelation we read of Him as King. History has proved that it was not safe for anyone to hold two of these offices. Only the Son of God could combine and sustain the three offices of prophet, priest, and king. In the last three chapters the writer pauses to utter many exhortations to take heed what is said, each time with a momentum which has been gathering force through the book.

In closing, Dr. White reverted to the chief point of the epistle—"We have such an High Priest." Many are living on the wrong side of the cross. We are too much disposed to talk about the historic childhood of Christ. Although there was nothing in his life unworthy of imitation, the way we should go back to Christ must be through the cross. Jesus Christ offered Himself once for all to bring us to God. At his departure from earth, He declared it was expedient that He should go away, promising to send the Comforter, who should not return for a time only, but abide always.

THE LATE

Miss Harriet Davies,

OF SOUTHPORT.

MISS HARRIET DAVIES, formerly of "Berachah," Southport, departed on June 21 to be for ever with her Lord and Master, whom she had so long and faithfully served. She died at Smithills Hall, Bolton, Lancashire, after a few days' illness, during which she gave a glorious and vivid testimony to the presence of the Lord Jesus, and to the joy of so soon being with Him.

Harriet Davies was brought to the Lord in her happy girlhood. When only fifteen years of age she was in the habit of speaking to her mother's tenants of the love of Jesus, and of reading the Word of God to those who were sick or aged. A few years later there was a spiritual revival in her native place, and during that period anxious souls sought her, and she helped them to find peace in Jesus in her own home.

Thus did the Lord own and bless his child's labour of love, giving her a happy, quiet service for Him in her mother's house and in the Sunday-school, until He called her to enter upon a wider sphere of labour.

Miss Davies's first public address was delivered under peculiar circumstances. She had promised to give a Bible lesson to a class of young women in a Sunday school which she visited occasionally. On her arrival she found that the news of her coming had spread abroad. People who knew her had come in numbers from the neighbouring villages to listen to her words, and the minister had caused an unexpected congregation to assemble in the chapel. She trembled inwardly when this was made known to her, for she feared to address so large a gathering.

"I will pray for you, Miss Davies," the minister said to her as he led her forward.

In a few minutes all her agitation vanished; she forgot her audience as her spirit quickly realized the presence of the Master of assemblies. Those who listened to her sweet voice, and looked upon also realized that the Lord Jesus was present in their midst, for several souls found peace through believing on Him before the service closed.

From the days of her youth Harriet Davies possessed that indescribable beauty of countenance which moved those who saw her, and who listened to the teaching of the dear old saint in her declining years, to exclaim, "A look at her face makes me think of heaven!"

Shortly afterwards Miss Davies removed to London, being impelled to work amongst the Jews. Frail and delicate from childhood, she soon broke down in health, and was obliged to give up her Christian work and spend the greater part of her time in health resorts, vainly seeking for physical restoration. She was pronounced incurable by her doctors. They could do but little even to ameliorate her sufferings.

Again changing her place of residence, she took up her abode in Liverpool, where she soon became deeply interested in the spiritual welfare of sea-faring men. When her health permitted her to do so, she loved to visit the Sea-Boys' Home. Being occasionally brought into contact with many sailors, Miss Davies felt deeply the necessity of urging these men and lads to become total abstainers; and she organized a society which became known amongst them as "The Temperance Lifeboat Crew." Hundreds of sea-faring men signed the pledge, and a few were induced to renounce tobacco also.

It was about this period of her life that Miss Davies became the recipient of a further spiritual blessing than she had hitherto enjoyed; for the Holy Spirit now opened her eyes to see that it was her privilege as a child of God to be delivered from the power of sin; and also to be made, through grace, "a clean vessel" for the Master's use made meet. Therefore she definitely accepted and received the indwelling Christ as her sanctification. Joy and peace in the Lord had long been her portion; but now she began to realize what it is to be possessed by the peace of God which flows like a river. Her influence for good also increased in proportion to the increase of divine joy and blessedness in her own soul.

Disease and weakness had crippled her for long years in the work of the Lord; but her heart was in his work, and when she had possessed a little strength "she had done what she could."

Having also believed that God was willing to heal and restore her to health and strength, she sought out those who had a like faith to anoint her with oil in the name of the Lord, and to offer unto God the prayer of faith for her deliverance. She was prayed over, and God heard and answered prayer, for He healed her of the sickness and disease which had long held her body in captivity. She now opened her house for meetings, and many congregated there who received blessing from God.

In one of these gatherings Miss Davies met and formed a friendship with Mrs. F. W. Staveley, of Seaforth. Their friendship soon developed into a close and tender tie; for they had passed through similar spiritual experiences, and both ladies had been healed of apparently incurable physical maladies. They soon became fellow-workers, and began to speak to the public of the power of the name of Jesus.

In the summer of 1883, Miss Davies and Mrs. Staveley, with several other workers, were instrumental in opening a Faith Home in Great George's Square, Liverpool. Their own purpose in the work was simply this—that holy living should be taught to Christian people. Some of the friends with whom they had associated themselves were more especially led to speak of "Divine healing." The Liverpool "Bethshan" flourished. People were blessed there, both in spirit, soul, and body.

MANY SICK AND SUFFERING

persons were healed of the Lord in the Home. Their labours were signally owned of the Lord in bringing unawakened souls to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ, and also in bringing a multitude of weak believers to rely steadfastly on the Lord, and consequently to receive from Him, through grace, the new life in Christ Jesus which gladdens and strengthens and upholds the Christian believer during the days of his earthly pilgrimage. They were also remarkably used of God in offering "the prayer of faith" for numbers of sick persons who have publicly testified to their physical healing through faith in Christ—God's answer to the prayer of faith offered on their behalf.

In the course of their labours, God laid it upon the hearts of the two ladies to open a house in Southport for the benefit of sick ones and persons desiring to receive spiritual help. The two friends called the new centre of their public ministry "Berachah," or the House of Blessing; and truly the gracious results which have been the fruit of their work in Southport have witnessed through successive years to the appropriateness of the name given to the Home. "Berachah" has been for many years, and still continues to be, where Christian workers congregate, that they may occasionally spend a few days in each other's society, to enjoy the "communion of saints," and to wait together upon the Lord, ere they return to their own homes, and various spheres of Christian work, encouraged and "strengthened with power by his Spirit in the inner man."

The work of God lives and flourishes, though his workers are removed. Only a few short weeks ago Miss Davies returned from London in the company of dear friends who had kindly invited her to spend a quiet season with them in their beautiful country house. Surrounded by the pleasant trees and lovely flowers, which were always a delight to her; surrounded also by loving hearts, whose Christian friendship brightened the last weeks of her useful and beautiful life, dear Harriet Davies, after a long life of beneficent service, on June 21, passed away, to be for ever with the Lord.

One who conversed with her shortly before her departure, said, "She blessed us, and told us how she loved us. She said she was going home to Jesus." Another friend said to us, "She passed away unconsciously. She never saw death." How pleasant a thing it is to mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for "the end of that man is peace" (Psa. xxxvii. 37).

IN MEMORIAM.

The saintly face, the honoured form,
Of one our hearts revered,
Is in the presence of the King
She loved, and served, and feared;
With tender love we speak of her,
For still we seem to see
Her radiant face reflect the glow
Of Christ-like charity!

HARRIETTE S. BAINBRIDGE.

Y.M.C.A.—A new mission room has been erected in Ashcombe Park Road, Weston-super-Mare, a locality hitherto without a place of worship. Mr. Henry Harrison, who for many years has been identified with the local Y.M.C.A., has volunteered to conduct the services, which are to be on church lines. Mr. Harrison has a Bible class of 200, and in his new capacity will doubtless receive sympathy and encouragement from those with whom he has laboured.

American Visitors at Aldersgate Y.M.C.A.—The company at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. noon prayer meeting on Monday had the pleasure of listening to two singers from America—Professor Weedon and Mr. Peter Billhorn. The meeting was of a hearty and inspiring character, and the Gospel songs, fervently rendered by the two singers, called forth responses of praise and gladness from many hearts. The address was given by Rev. G. TURNER, of Sutton, who dwelt upon occurrences of the word "worthy," drawing helpful and instructive lessons from the parable of the centurion. God puts value into the man who acknowledges his own unworthiness. When Christ beholds his people walking worthy of Him, He sees of the travail of his soul and is satisfied. Justification by faith is the starting point, but the goal is to walk worthy of Christ. Several brief testimonies followed bearing upon the progress of the tent campaign, and the happy and hearty gathering terminated with the singing by Mr. Peter Billhorn of "Peace, sweet peace, the gift of God's love."

SUNDAY, July 29. Prov. xvi.

"THE ways of a man" will serve us as the motto around which most of this chapter will cluster (2). We justify them to ourselves, and think they must necessarily be right; yet how liable we are to self-deception. Only God can weigh the spirit; and it is the attitude of the will and choice, the purity of the motive and intention, which are all-important.

Let us commit our works and ways to God (3). It is of no use worrying over them, else we become paralyzed and powerless. Do what you have to do as well as you can at the moment; then leave the results with God, and go your way. He will put right the mistakes and compensate for the failures.

Let us ever seek to please the Lord (7). We please Him when we fear Him and depart from evil; by equal and just dealings (11), by speaking righteously; and his good pleasure is life and as the clouds of the late rain (15).

When we have devised our ways, we must look up, that God may prosper them (9). Note, the right way is always the way of humility and lowliness (18, 19). Because a way lies straight before us, we cannot be sure it is right; it may end in death; hence our daily need of the Holy Spirit, and above all to beware of the violent men who wait to entice us in wrong ways (19). Let us keep the way of righteousness till we are old and greyheaded, so shall our heads be encircled with a crown of glory, till we exchange the silver crown of grey hairs for the golden crown which Jesus has prepared.

Speech is so constantly the main burden of the Proverbs. Evidently the wise men of those days thought more of the necessity not only of refraining from the wrong and foolish speech, but of cultivating wise, good, and wholesome words. Strife and contention, quarrelling and dispute, will spoil the best dinner that was ever cooked (1). Lips can be wicked and mischievous, and they attract those whose nature is predisposed to evil (4). Let us take care what we say about poor men, whatever their poverty consists in, because God is always listening; above all, don't murmur at your own poverty, lest you reproach Him, who allots each man's condition of life (5). O children of the royal seed, beware of lying lips, and cultivate excellent speech (7).

Above all, take care of the beginning of strife, which is like the trickling of a thread of water through a dyke (14). It is a good thing to cultivate the habit of cheery, kindly speech; it will do more good to people than medicine (22).

Silence is golden. We all talk too much. The largest cistern gets dry if the tap is always running. Spare your words. Listen to what others say before you speak. After they have discussed the matter, you may be able to step in with some wise decision or advice which will settle the matter. "Swift to hear, slow to speak," is a good motto.

What a picture we have in this chapter of the man of the world, who, because he makes his portion in this life, is reckoned to be a fool! What care has he for understanding? His lips are always leading him into quarrels, and he is perpetually asking for vengeance or punishment against his fellows. He loves scandal. The more he talks, the more he heaps for himself hatred and dislike; it is as when the lightest whisper brings down an avalanche on the speaker. He protects himself in the citadel of his wealth; he makes room for himself by gifts. He gets into the society of great men, but they despise him. He fawns on those above him, but is haughty and rough-spoken to his servants and the poor.

To all this is the striking contrast of the God-fearing and righteous man. He does not separate himself, and seek his own desire, but yields to the will of God. His strong tower is not the bulwark of wealth, but the name and character of God; he is perpetually making his way thither, running for protection from all the power and enticements of evil. He is honoured with the honour that God gives, but he is utterly unassuming and humble. He is put in the front rank, not by the amount of his wealth, but by the strength of his purpose and the integrity of his character. He seeks and gets knowledge. He is happy in his home life and in the favour of God. He is unchanging in his friendships, but best of all he knows the Friend of all friends, who laid down his life for his friends, and waits to welcome them in his home.

WEDNESDAY, August 1. Prov. xix.

What shrewd observations on men and things are contained on this page. The differences in climate, country, and century, do not deprive these words of their pertinence to ourselves. The first character in this portrait gallery is the poor man. Some Lazarus is depicted, who, though he walks in his integrity, walks in rags. He hasn't many friends; in fact, when he fell into poverty, the few he had left him. When the poor man cries out for help, his former companions vote him tiresome, and avoid him when they see him coming. But the Lord does not forget those that give to the poor; all such gifts are accounted loans to Himself, to be repaid. A poor man is better than a liar; he can at least have a clear conscience, and does not always live in fear of detection.

The second is the sluggard, who is always beset by sleep, and comes at last to hunger. A striking picture is given of his putting his hand into the dish to help himself, in the Oriental fashion, to food (24; and Matt. xxvi. 23), and being too lazy to withdraw it. His sloth is stronger than appetite.

Then we are introduced to the false witness, with his lies; to the liberal man, who is generous in dispensing his gifts; to the prudent and discreet man of business and affairs; to the foolish son, whose parents are never free from calamity; to the contentious wife; to the irascible man, with his great wrath; to the scorner; and to the godly man, whose supreme thought is the fear of the Lord. Such were men, who filled the markets and the places of public concourse in the old Hebrew Commonwealth, and such are found still in every city of the world. They are thumb-nail sketches, which are of immortal warning and interest. Let us ask that we may be wise because we are good and prudent because we are holy, through the gracious indwelling of the good Spirit of God.

THURSDAY, August 2. Prov. xx.

Study the maxims for Business Life. Do not be slothful in business, lest you come to poverty; there is always a return for honest labour. Always walk in your integrity, and let your word be your bond. Let the bulk be always equal to the sample, and abhor the suggestion of divers prices for the same article, which means that you are prepared to make an illegimate profit at the expense of the ignorance of your customer. It is your duty to do the best for him, reserving to yourself on all sales what is needed for the up-keep of your business, and the payment for your over-sight, &c. Be sincere in your transactions, and don't depreciate an article to get it cheaply; be prepared to give an adequate price; remember the salesman must live. Don't put your hand to any kind of suretyship for a stranger. It is well to make haste slowly—the business which is built up too rapidly often lacks permanence (21). Don't be too quick to bind yourself by solemn engagements and covenants, such as trusteeship, until you have taken time to consider all that will be involved (25).

Study the maxims for Social Life. Beware of strong drink. In commercial and social circles its influence is only deadly. Keep clear of family disputes, and refuse to be made to commit yourself to a side unless you know both sides. Learn to keep secrets which have been confided to you. The child is known by his doings, the glory of young men is strength, the beauty of old men their grey heads. For each age of life there is its peculiar glory; be content to bear fruit according to the season of life in which you find yourself. Don't hesitate in speaking your mind when there is need, for wounds often heal worse evils; but speak the truth in love.

Study the maxims of the Religious Life. Be faithful to your friends and your God. Don't proclaim your kindnesses; let not the right hand know what the left does. Never retaliate! wait on the Lord till He shall interpose to deliver and requite. And always submit your goings to his loving and wise direction. Let the Lord light and maintain within your spirit the burning candle of his love.

FRIDAY, August 3. Prov. xxi.

There are two policies of life; the one has self and the other God for its centre.

The Self Policy. A man justifies himself to himself. He abounds in the sacrifices of religion, but lacks principle. His looks are high, and his heart proud. He is set on getting money, and will not scruple to lie, under the pretext that "business is business," if only he may add to his possessions. In his heart of hearts he has no mercy for his neighbour, who finds no favour in his eyes. He stops his ear at the cry of the poor. He wanders out of the way of understanding. He loves wine and oil, pleasure and sensual indulgence. He is a spendthrift of treasure. He deals in wrath to man and scorn to God. He gives large subscriptions, but does it with an eye to his own aggrandisement. He hardens his face. It may seem hard to attribute all this to the self-poised life, but it is the Divine photograph. May we not say it is a snap-shot of man as he is in his innermost self, before the Spirit of God has regenerated him?

The Godward Policy. Justice and judgment are the attributes of the character which is towards God, or if there is any failure, the heart is instantly sensible of its failure to realize its ideal. There is diligence in business, and deliberation in action, born of absolute trust in God. The heart is pure, the way of life is straightforward, the desire is always for the good of others. The just soul is set on doing justice to others, and finds its joy therein. The soul follows after righteousness and mercy, and finds life and honour. The mouth is kept from evil, and the tongue from guile. Both hands are stretched out to give without sparing to the relief of the poor. And even when wrong is perpetrated there is no thought of vengeance, but an instant committal of all to God.

SATURDAY, August 4. Prov. xxii.

In this chapter, between vv. 16 and 17, the third part of this book begins—"the words of the wise." It is easy to distinguish between the two divisions by the rhythm of the sentences, as well as the thought.

In the first part, our thoughts are specially turned on contrasts of wealth and poverty. Character is better than riches, and the good-will of men preferable to silver and gold. In the presence of God, distinctions between rich and poor vanish. The true wealth lies in humility and the fear of God. Poor Lazarus may lie at the door of Dives, but in the morning of Heaven the poor rule over the rich. Wealth is specially blessed when it is connected with the bountiful eye and prodigal hand. The possession which secures the love and trust of royal and titled persons, is wealth, when these are sordid and worldly; but when they are truly noble, they appreciate most of all purity of heart and grace of lips. You may increase your wealth by oppression, but such wealth does not stay long with its possessor.

As we turn to v. 17, we are introduced to Proverbs collected from different inspired sages. It may be that the collection is due to Solomon himself, but in any case they contain the combined wisdom of the Orient. It becomes us to study this and the following chapters that we may know the certainty of the words of truth, and be able to return them to those who question us.

Five things are inculcated: Take care of the poor; beware of angry and passionate people; do not go surety for debt; be conservative of ancient landmarks, whether of land or doctrine; be diligent in business. Keep your mind always in touch with God, that his Spirit may realize these ideals.

Scottish Notes.

THE Edinburgh Total Abstinence Society has issued an appeal to the public to abstain from offering intoxicating liquor to soldiers returned from foreign service. This practice is at present very common, and constitutes a real danger to the community, being responsible for the ruin of not a few soldiers who had arrived home with a record of sobriety.

On Sabbath of last week (the day on which the telegram was received announcing the Peking massacre), Dr. E. Mackillop was dedicated for service in Manchuria, at a service held in Broughton Place United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh. Dr. John Smith, who presided, called attention to the fact that seven or eight of the provinces of China are now without missionaries, there being no such person at work north of the Yellow River; and pointed out the duty laid on the Church to see that this blank was filled up. In earnest and touching terms he deprecated the widespread cry for vengeance, declaring that the Church, too, has her revenge to claim, and that is to unfurl the banner on which is inscribed "China for Christ."

Glasgow Fair holidays were taken advantage of for special evangelistic efforts in various directions. Mr. Joseph Wright arranged for his usual treat to the children belonging to the various vans on the show ground. In addition to his own earnest commendation of the Saviour, an address was given by Mr. Risk, superintendent of the Slum Mission. Music was provided by the bands of the Salvation Army belonging to the Parkhead district, and a number of other Christian workers lent a hand in the effort. Dr. John Robertson followed the crowds to one popular resort, and an application to the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Company, for leave to hold meetings in Largs Railway Station during the holiday Sabbath, was readily granted.

Interesting illustrations have recently been given in various parts of the country of the solicitude of police authorities to avoid branding men as having been in prison. For instance, two labouring men were convicted at Dundee, on May 30, of breach of the peace. Their cases were continued, and called again this month. One who had been at his work regularly, and had remained sober during the interval, was then dismissed with an admonition, although the offence was so serious that his neighbour, who had not returned to work, was sent to prison for a month.

Arrangements are being made to carry out a special evangelistic effort at Anniesland Mission (Mr. Malcolm Ferguson), Glasgow, during August. Among others who have promised to take part are Messrs. John Climie, W. D. Dunn, and John Robertson.

We understand that instructions have been cabled to Shanghai for all the ladies belonging to the Manchuria Mission of the United Presbyterian Church to return to this country as soon as passages can be secured. Male missionaries whose furloughs are due within a comparatively short period are also desired to accompany them, while the others are left to act according to their combined judgment.

The Dundee Y.M.C.A. finds itself faced with the resignations of its two chief officials. Ex-Provost Moncur (president) has been connected with the association for a long period, and has done much to place it in its present position of influence in the community. Mr. James H. Smith, whose name is widely known among Christian workers, has held the secretaryship for a quarter of a century, having been a director for two years previously. During his recent period of ill-health he has been assisted in the performance of the duties by Mr. William Stewart, who is expected to be his successor. It is also understood that Councillor William Henderson will be nominated in room of Mr. Moncur.

Children's Seaside Services.—Mr. George Bennett, of York, who for twenty years has conducted services for young people at various seaside towns, is holding a mission at Aberystwyth, to be continued for five or six weeks, afterwards resuming the services at Barmouth.

BY the will of the late Mrs. Carlisle, of Enfield House, Belfast, £500 have been left to Carlisle Memorial Church, which was built at a cost of £40,000 by her late husband, in memory of their young son, and £500 to Belfast Central Mission, of which Rev. Dr. Johnson is the superintendent. The total amount of her benefactions reach £2,600.

Mrs. Burtchaell, widow of Rev. Somerset Burtchaell, an Irish missionary to the Jews of Jerusalem, is doing an excellent work among the Jews in Rome. She says that as many as forty Jews often join with her in singing hymns, and listen most attentively to her while she tries to prepare their hearts for the reception of Jesus Christ.

The Twelfth of July Orange celebrations, which have often given rise to a good deal of rowdyism and party feeling in Ireland, have passed over peacefully this year. They have, however, been accompanied by a great deal of drunkenness. It is, however, satisfactory to be able to state that many of the largest and best of the Orange lodges are now worked on temperance lines.

Mr. D. A. Black, general secretary of the Belfast Y.M.C.A., who has spent several months ministering to our soldiers in South Africa, has returned home, and has received from his friends and admirers a most enthusiastic reception.

Presentation to Miss Mason.

WHEN, a few weeks ago, it was proposed to commemorate the seventieth birthday of Miss Charlotte Mason, the superintendent of the Home of Rest, Finchley Road, by making a presentation, there was naturally much misgiving as to the outcome, in view of the constant strain upon public generosity. With so indefatigable a worker as Miss Agnes E. Weston in charge of the movement, its success was assured. Miss Mason herself consented to this being done, on condition that the money received should be devoted to the work; and on Friday afternoon, at the Home of Rest, she had the pleasure of receiving over £570 for that purpose. The gathering was of a happy and hearty character, and the worthy superintendent of the institution received many congratulations on the attainment of her seventieth birthday, as well as the achievement of so much distinct success in connection with this useful organization in the interests of Christian workers. Miss Weston presided, and expressed the pleasure it had been to render any assistance to Miss Mason in her efforts to lighten the burdens of those who are being spent in the ministry of the Gospel.

In acknowledging the gift Miss Mason remarked that it was an answer to prayer, at a moment when there appeared to be cause for anxiety as to the state of the funds. Dr. Monro Gibson and Rev. J. H. Tuckwell spoke words of cheer and encouragement, and expressed the fervent hope that Miss Mason would be long spared to continue her beneficent work.

Several testimonies were given to the value to the Home, and its spiritually invigorating influence; and Miss Weston announced that it was desirable to raise the amount to £600, and the fund would remain open for this purpose.

Through Midland Villages.

IN the course of a record of evangelistic effort in Midland villages, Mr. T. S. Heley writes:

"This season surpasses anything I remember in my twenty-six years' wanderings. We have been into South Oxon besides Bucks and Herts. In one village as early as 9 a.m. we noticed a concern on the faces of the people as we went from house to house, welcomed in to see a sufferer, or lingering to point an anxious one to the Lord Jesus; but when the centre of the village was passed nearly everyone was stirred. Over four years ago our last visit had been paid, and we were told no visitor or Gospel message had reached the village since; but the people had hidden God's Word in their hearts, and when we were recognised they forgot how time had fled.

"'Nobody comes now, they said, to speak to us from the town. They used to do so.' This is a common cry. Those places that were formerly centres of blessing have lost their aggressive love of souls, and so far as these districts are concerned, and I fear many others too, spiritual power is nearly gone.

"Cannot our Y.M.C.A. men and others endeavour to reach these needy places, seeing there is a general lack of speakers in the villages now?"

The Bible Society's New President.

ON Thursday afternoon, July 12, a special meeting of the Committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society was held to welcome the new president, the Marquess of Northampton. The chairman of the Committee, Mr. Caleb R. Kemp, presided; and among the vice-presidents who came to express in brief and felicitous speeches their warmest goodwill were the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Kinnaird, Sir John Kennaway, M.P., President of the Church Missionary Society; Sir George Williams, President of the Y.M.C.A.; Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., Treasurer of the London Missionary Society, and President of the Sunday School Union; Mr. E. Rawlings, Treasurer of the Religious Tract Society; Mr. Robert Barclay, Treasurer; Mr. Henry Morris, Dr. R. N. Cust, Mr. S. W. Silver, and Canon Girdlestone.

Lord Northampton, on taking the chair, spoke with much feeling. He said: "It would be almost foolish on my part to say that I am aware of my own unworthiness of the high honour which you have imposed on me. I recognise to the full the difficulty any man must have in following the footsteps of such men as Lord Shaftesbury and Lord Harrowby. Yours is not an unknown Society, and I think it would be impossible for anyone who has striven to do any work, however humble, towards the spread of Christianity throughout the world to be unaware of the greatest of works which the Bible Society is doing. I know your given to man through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, and containing the promise, and the fulfilment of the promise, of free salvation and eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord; and your object is that that Book shall be placed in the hands of men throughout the world.

"After due consideration and earnest prayer, I came to the conclusion that, you who belong to this Society having asked that I should be your chief, it would be craven-hearted on my part, and unfaithful and disbelieving, if I gave any other answer than that of hearty acceptance. And now I can rejoice with all my heart and soul at being a participator with you in the work. I firmly believe that the sin of this world can only be mitigated by the Gospel of Jesus Christ. I further believe that the misery which we all feel around us, even in this favoured country, can only be alleviated and relieved also by the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour. I believe that the Bible can alone work miracles. And therefore you will understand that, believing that, I do indeed rejoice to have some part in the work which you are doing in spreading the Gospel message throughout all lands, and bringing even into the darkest corners of the world the illuminating light of God's own Word and message.

"My loving sympathy has been always with the Society of which I am now president. I have always prayed for the Bible Society, together with other societies, which I believe to be doing God's own work in this land and elsewhere. I shall continue to pray for it, and I shall also pray that my time as president may be used by me so that the good work of the Society may be increasingly blessed and may prosper, and that whatever I may do may be done only by his direction and his guidance. It is in that spirit that I am here to-day as your president."

A Baptist Home of Rest.

THE Council of the Baptist Union have received and accepted an offer of a Home of Rest for ministers, missionaries, and Christian workers from Mrs. J. A. Spurgeon, the widow of the late Dr. Spurgeon.

The institution is founded in memory of Dr. Spurgeon, and a great number of friends have contributed towards it as an expression of their respect and affection for him. It is proposed to hand it over to the Baptist Union entirely free from debt, and furnished. The Home, which is a spacious and attractive building, is situated in Arundel Terrace, Kemp Town, Brighton, on the sea front, and close to Sussex Gardens, to which visitors will have access.

Brighton has many powerful attractions, and especially to the weary and jaded its air has wonderful curative properties. The opening ceremony is to be in September, and it is hoped that Dr. Clifford, Dr. Pierson, and Rev. F. B. Meyer, will be present and take part. The Home is now ready for visitors, and applications for terms may be made, at once, to Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, 19, Furnival Street, London, E.C. Miss Bush, late of Miss Mason's House of Rest, Eastbourne, has been appointed matron.

Kilburn Protestant Evangelical School and Mission.—New buildings were opened on Monday afternoon by Dr. Monro Gibson. Addresses were delivered by Rev. H. E. Stone, Madame Antoinette Sterling, and Rev. D. Foster.

Mr. Booker T. Washington.

AMONG those announced to take part in the Pan-African Conference at Westminster this week is one who has justly won for himself the reputation of being a leader of his race.

Born of slave parents, in 1857 or 1858, on a plantation in Virginia, Booker T. Washington knew little of home-comfort. The mother's face, sweet as it was to her baby, did not bend over a dainty cradle, or cradle of any kind. Wrapped in rags, he learned to sleep on the dirty floor of a one-room cabin; and if dreams visited him, they were as sweet to him as to the well-born boy. The morning of freedom dawned. What a fresh breeze it brought to the coloured man and woman! Free, free! The unwonted sound caused tears and laughter to mingle; but it also caused the stumbling of many, who, unprepared for a freeman's privileges and duties, mistook freedom for licence.

Young Washington's family removed to West Virginia. Here, while working for his mother's support, the boy heard one day of General Armstrong's school, and at once decided to find his way to Hampton, Virginia. After saving enough money, as he thought, to undertake the journey, he started out to seek that wonderful blessing called education. He walked a portion of the distance, then travelled by stage-coach and cars until he reached the city of Richmond. Here he found all his money was spent and no friend to take him in. Until midnight he walked about the city, tired, discouraged, exhausted; at last, he crawled under a sidewalk and slept soundly. On waking up the next morning, and finding himself near a ship that was unloading pig-iron, he applied to the captain for work and got it. By spending the nights under the side-walk, he earned in a little time enough money to continue his journey. On reaching Hampton he had a surplus of 50c. in his pocket, and was kindly received by General Armstrong, a great benefactor of the negro race.

"At Hampton," says Mr. Washington, when talking of that time, "I found buildings, instructors, industries, provided by the generous; in other words, the chance for me to work for my education. While here, I resolved, if God permitted me to finish the course of study, I would enter the far South, the Black Belt of the Gulf States, and give my life to providing, as best I could, the same kind of chance for self-help for the youth of my race as I had found ready for me at Hampton."

Has Mr. Washington attained to his youthful aspirations? The history of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute best answers this question.

There are people at the little town, Tuskegee, Ala., who remember the arrival of a quiet, unassuming, coloured man in the early part of the year 1881. He came for the purpose of establishing a school for the coloured youth. His first efforts culminated in a rented shanty church, one teacher and thirty pupils. Nineteen years have elapsed since this humble beginning was made.

The institution now has 300,000dols. worth of property, with no mortgage; forty-five buildings, nearly all erected with student labour; 2,267 acres of land, eighty-eight officers, and an attendance of students exceeding 1,100 in the two years past. The students come from nearly all the states and territories, and from Cuba, Porto Rico, Africa, and the British colonies. Thousands apply for admission who have to be turned away because of lack of accommodation.

Tuskegee, as a school, is the practical expression of its president's conviction that the great masses of the negro race need a system of education which shall enable them to hold on to the fundamental employments, without which no people can hope to win a permanent place either of respectability, wealth, or power. For this reason instruction in twenty-six industries, largely of the South, is given, in connection with thorough normal and religious training, as follows: Agriculture, blacksmithing, brick masonry, carpentry, carriage trimming, cooking, dairying, drawing (achitectural, freehand, and mechanical), plain sewing, housekeeping, harness-making, plastering, plumbing, printing, saw-milling, horticulture, laundrying, machinery, mattress-making, millinery, nurse training, painting, shoemaking, stock-raising, tailoring, tinning, and wheelwrighting. There is also an efficient Bible-training department.

In connection with the agricultural department, special prominence has been given to all forms of work concerning the cultivation of the soil. About 85 per cent. of the coloured people live in the country, and it is the aim of Tuskegee to raise efficient farmers who would diffuse their knowledge among their uneducated brethren, and so become teachers in their turn. Already a large proportion of the graduates have wrought marvellous results in some sections of the South, into which they have gone as lights into the darkness.

Mr. Booker T. Washington himself takes every possible step for the enlightening of his race. Yearly conferences are held at Tuskegee in the month of February, attended by many coloured people from different parts of the country, at which difficulties and problems of the coloured man are discussed in a commonsense way, and practical advice is given in citizenship worthy of the name, "American and Christian."

MR. BOOKER T. WASHINGTON.
From Photograph by Messrs. Russell and Sons, 17, Baker Street, London, W.

Mrs. Booker T. Washington is a worthy helpmate of her husband, full of energy and perseverance in the difficult task of trying to lift up the women to a true conception of their purpose in life.

In September, 1898, Tuskegee received the visit of President McKinley, accompanied by his Cabinet. In the presence of the Governor of Alabama, the State Legislature and other distinguished persons, the Chief Magistrate of the American nation paid a special tribute to Booker T. Washington's genius, enthusiasm, and enterprise, which had made this truly philanthropic work possible from its inception.

Principal Washington finds his hardest work in the effort to raise funds to meet the increased needs consequent upon its rapid growth.

Many students go to Tuskegee without means. They enter the night-school, that is, work during the day and spend two hours in study each night for two years, at the end of which time they have earned enough to enable them to enter the day-schools. In this way they learn a trade and receive an education at the same time.

Mr. Washington's book, recently published, "The Future of the American Negro," is in the main a collection of papers written at different times and on different occasions, but all bearing upon the all-important subject, "The Race Problem," and as such, is interesting and instructive.

The Indian Famine.

CONTINUOUS GIFTS.

IN his letter to the Lord Mayor of London, Lord Curzon compared the famine of 1897, and the present famine—up to the middle of May in each year—briefly as follows:—

1. Famine area in 1897, 205,000 square miles.
   " " 1900, 417,000 " "
   Nearly one-quarter of the Indian Empire.
2. Population of Famine area in 1897, 40,000,000.
   " " 1900, 54,000,000.
3. Persons in receipt of Government relief in 1897, 3,800,000.
   Persons in receipt of Government relief in 1900, 5,600,000.
   (Now over 6,000,000.)

In other words—the famine area is doubled, the famine population is one-third more—and those in receipt of Government relief are nearly one-half more. But, sad to say, Great Britain's charitable contributions have decreased by nearly one-half, the figures being — 1897, £700,000; 1900, £370,000.

Possibly some may say "Rain has already fallen and more will come soon, and then it will be all right." Unfortunately this view is more hopeful than correct. Rain may fall in abundance, but it will avail little to the small cultivator whose cattle are already dead, whose agricultural implements are already sold (to buy food), and whose future crops are heavily mortgaged to the money-lender, whilst he himself is wasted and weakened by months of famine diet.

We all know that the membership of our various churches and chapels consists very largely of those who although they cannot give much at any one time, yet if they had the opportunity could give a few pence, or even a shilling, a week regularly for two or three months. In many cases these amounts, or even larger ones, could be given, "without practically feeling the loss;" but perhaps this is not precisely the Bible idea of giving. If we realize anything of what Christ has done for us, shall we not follow the advice once given—Won't you give till you feel it?

I hope I shall not be considered officious or interfering if I suggest, for the consideration of the clergy and ministers and responsible laymen, that in each place of worship a box (or boxes) be put up marked (say) "Indian Famine Weekly Contributions," for the next three months. It is estimated by Rev. Dennis Osborne of Poona that in 1897 4,000,000 perished as the direct result of the famine. As we put in our weekly contributions may we, as it were, hear our Saviour say, "They need not depart (in death), give ye them to eat."

Kendal. T. Crewdson Wilson.

Writing from Ahmedabad, Gujarat, Rev. Dr. G. P. Taylor says:—"We have now in the compound round the Mission House over 150 of the very poor, many of whom, when they first came to us, were indeed pitiable objects. We shall probably find it necessary to keep and feed until October, when we trust the new crops may have ripened."

A further communication from Miss Lilian E. Marks, of Ajmere, says: "The suffering will not be abated until the next crops come. God has used us to rescue and find Christian homes for 1,542 orphans and widows. We are now feeding 500 daily—women, children, and disabled men. Grain shops have been opened, where those who are yet able to purchase for their food can purchase grain cheaply."

"LONDON, 1900."

THE great C.E. Convention is now a thing of memory; but we are persuaded that its influence will spread through the continents during the coming months. The meetings were very largely attended, and many helpful things were said; moreover, methods were explained and illustrated, and these will, for many months, be read off the note-books of delegates, and presented at weekly gatherings as "Convention Echoes."

In our last issue we were compelled to leave over a reference to the several conferences held by Rev. C. M. SHELDON.

Numbers of people proceeded direct from the great meetings in the Concert Hall and Tent Endeavour, manifesting their interest in a forgetfulness of lunch. Mr. Sheldon occupied the platform alone, and asked for any questions bearing upon practical life. The first had relation to the work of his own society in civic life. In reply, he told of the last mayoral contest at Topeka, when the Endeavourers held a mass meeting, discovered that they controlled 1,000 votes, and then secured the nomination of a temperance candidate and his subsequent election. Other questions had relation to the helpfulness of the C.E. Society to the Church, methods of C.E. work, Sunday labour, smoking, the use of fermented wine at Communion, pew rents, &c.

Denominational Rallies.

Christian Endeavour is interdenominational, and not undenominational in its activities. Every society is urged to a constant loyalty to the local church and denomination. Very properly, then, denominational rallies had their place in the Convention programme. The young folk gathered around their own known leaders in the various appointed centres, and their fidelity to the C.E. principle was manifested in the hearty and enthusiastic manner in which these meetings were sustained.

PRINCIPLES, METHODS, AIMS.

Rev. D. F. MACKENZIE, of the Scottish National Union, conveyed the hearty greetings of C.E. Societies in the far Highlands, and delivered an address on "Our Principles." In them, said he, there is nothing mysterious, but they are an effort to translate the precepts of Christ into the language of every-day life, and to adorn his doctrine in all things. The first and supreme rule is "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Endeavourers do not claim to be the only people who are loyal to Christ. The specialty of C.E. is that holy enthusiasm may find scope for activity in the service of the Church of Jesus Christ. Our organization, said he, does not exist as an end in itself, but stands for service to the Master, through the respective denominations with which members are connected.

Rev. JAMES ALLEN, President of the Irish National Union, spoke on "Our Methods," and Rev. H. SMITH, of Hanley, dealt with some of "Our Aims." The organization seeks to get our youth into the shape of who are joyful, gentle, and self-controlled, with a tender conscience and stern sense of right and wrong, and a very high ideal of truth. Endeavourers are taught to put off the old man, but not to put on the old woman. It is desired that they may carry Christian principles and sweetness into life, business, and home.

The Day of Rest.

A rally for the consideration of the Necessity and Sanctity of the Day of Rest, gathered a goodly company, in spite of several other meetings going on at the same time. Rev. J. E. ROBERTS, of the British Council, presided, and said that England owes much to her Sabbath, but was in considerable danger from its desecration. The streets of our cities, and especially of the avenues leading to the suburbs, were crowded with so-called bonâ fide travellers, or more correctly bonâ fide tipplers. The central, underlying idea of the Sabbath, as given in Scripture, is that of a holy day, which is more than a day of rest. "The Sabbath was made for man; therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath. Addresses were also delivered by Rev. J. W. HATHAWAY, D.D., of New York, and Rev. R. F. HORTON, D.D.

The World's Union.

This is an organization within Endeavour, the object of which is to plant and supervise the Society's work in countries not able to sustain and promote the work themselves. Dr. CLARK presided over a meeting of its members on Monday afternoon, and gave an interesting sketch of his travels in Japan and China. He said there were 1,500 delegates at the latter Convention, and they listened, though often they could not understand the dialect; but they could catch the spirit of the meeting. Altogether in those countries—notwithstanding the present peril—C.E. had a most wonderful opportunity in the century so soon to dawn.

Revs. HARADA, of Japan; EATON, of Mexico; GULICK, of Spain; MERLE-D'AUBIGNE, of France; and Mr. J. E. RANDALL, of Jamaica, also spoke briefly of the work in their respective lands. The meeting then elected the officers of the Union as follows:—President, Dr. Clark; treasurer, Mr. Shand (of Boston); secretary, Mr. Willis Baer.

TUESDAY.

A key-note for the day was struck on Tuesday morning in a few helpful words from Miss E. M. WEATHERLEY, of the British National Council, at the "Quiet Hour" in Tent Endeavour. The speaker referred to the promise that the God of peace shall bruise Satan under our feet. We may claim this for ourselves, and take from the God of patience, consolation, hope and peace, the measure of these graces that we need amid the difficulties, temptations and sorrows of our lives. Rev. F. B. MEYER added some timely counsels for quietness of spirit in the stirring circumstances of the Convention.

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

The Concert Hall speedily filled for the morning session devoted to "Demonstrations of World-wide Endeavour."

The President's address was the principal item on the programme. Dr. CLARK was received with loving enthusiasm, and his words were listened to with profound attention. It was desirable, he said, sometimes during this Convention, to set forth the world-wide principles of a world-wide movement. Having completed within the past week a third journey round the world, he would present deductions attested by the hall-mark of experience in many lands. The essentials of the movement are founded in principles touching universal truths, in faith, hope, and charity. These principles are confession of Christ, service for Him, fellowship with his people, and loyalty to his church. If you would have your local society flourish, I pray you, said the speaker, give earnest heed to these things. The covenant is a device to secure frequent and regular confession of Christ, and it leads to familiarity with the Word of God. The consecration meeting is another means of making confession doubly sure and doubly sacred. On the ships of the United States Navy, among the rude islanders of the South Seas and elsewhere, our covenant is kept, and constant confession secures a good society of Christian Endeavour. One of the reasons for the weakness of our faith (which is so much purer and more rational than that of other nations), is found in our slowness as a people to confess it. The society was not made for its committees, but the latter for the former, to promote constant Christian effort. From the beginning, the C.E. body has been marked by systematized, ORGANIZED INDIVIDUAL SERVICE.

Fellowship is an essential feature of C.E., and is not a matter of zones and latitudes, as demonstrated by this Convention. It is expressed in different ways, but is always the same fellowship. The varied greetings in his journeys were more than personal, and represented the fellowship of the cause. As he had gone round the world again and again, he had heard the gentle word of fellowship from millions of Endeavourers—"Peace, peace."

Another essential feature of C.E. is fidelity to individual church connection; for the organization cannot and does not exist merely for itself. A true society of C.E. must live for Christ and the church. Its confession of love is for Christ the Head, its service is for the church his bride; its fellowship is possible only because its loyalty is unquestionable. In city or country, in Christian land or mission field, in Europe, Asia, Africa, or America, it is everywhere the same. Christian Endeavourers must not be held responsible for every weakness among young Christians, which the society is doing its best to remedy, but cannot wholly overcome.

WE ARE MEASURED BY OUR IDEALS, and any failure fully to reach them is accounted blameworthy. But it is far more blameworthy to have no ideals, and never to strive after them. Critics, cease your carping and sneering, raise your own ideals still higher, and take hold with us to help us realise them. Confession of our love of Christ, proof of it by service for Him, fellowship with those who love Him, and fidelity to our own regiment in which we fight for Him, are natural and basal principles. Neither is a matter of expediency; and it is found in every continent that no other roots are vital to the [illegible] These principles make necessary the pledge and consecration meetings, justify the systematic work of the committees, explain our unexampled conventions, and reveal the reason of the rapid growth of Christian Endeavour in all the world. These principles are not for the world-wide movement alone. The same principle of gravitation applies to the thistledown fluttering to the earth, and to the planet whirling through space. Your local society cannot grow strong and healthy, and fulfil unless it stands four-square for these principles. After going around the world we come back to our own soul's threshold. Hold to these fundamentals, exemplify them in your societies, and your own lives; and abundant as have been the blessings of God during the last twenty years, the next twenty will far surpass them. Hold to these principles, and you will understand more and more of Paul's superlative, his "exceedingly abundantly," when, in the fulness of his life of service, he ascribed all to Christ, crying out, "Unto Him be glory in the Church and in Christ Jesus, unto all generations for ever."

ITS GOD-GIVEN MISSION

THE ANNUAL REPORT

was read by Mr. John Willis Baer. He said: "God may come and seals may go, and boundary lines be held in dispute, but palsied be the hand and mute the tongue that should again suggest strife and bloodshed between America and Great Britain." It was with the utmost confidence of meeting with approval he proposed that here and now the delegates from England, Scotland, Wales, Canada, Australia, and the United States stand and sing one verse each of "America" and "God Save the Queen"; and then let every nation, tribe, and tongue raise their hearts in song to the King of kings and Lord of lords by singing one verse of "Blest be the tie that binds." China, poor, bleeding, storm-wrecked, was the first foreign country to take from the United States the C.E. seed; and while the growth has been slow, comparatively, China to-day has not less than 148 societies. Here the distracted country was commended to God in silent prayer by the meeting. Continuing his report, Mr. Baer stated that the total enrolment in this C.E. organization of interdenominational, international, and inter-racial brotherhood "for Christ and the Church," is 59,712 local societies, with a total membership of 3,500,000.

As a closing feature of the meeting, half an hour was devoted to testimonies to the progress and adaptation of C.E. in all parts of the world, including Spain, France, Germany, Natal, Geneva, New Zealand, China, India, and places in the United Kingdom.

Ministers' Meeting.

One of the features of the Convention was the large number of ministers present. Many of these responded to an invitation to attend a special meeting to consider "The Minister's Responsibility and Care for the Young." Rev. H. Montgomery, M.A. presided, and having shown how false religions manifest no care for humanity at its most dependent age, he pointed out that Christ takes the little one to Himself and says, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." In this age the devil is doing his best for the blighting of young life, but it still remains true that youth is more plastic and susceptible to the influences of religion than maturer age. The man doing the best work for God is the one working for the salvation of he young.

Dr. Floyd Tomkins, of Philadelphia, spoke in place of Bishop Walters, who had not yet arrived. He referred to the minister's consciousness of his limitation, of his realizing the importance of this work, though feeling utterly unfitted for it. The keen perception of the children, their quick detection of the unreal and insincere, make it necessary for a man to be at his very best in dealing with them. Notwithstanding all difficulty, the speaker contended that no man could succeed in the ministry who did not seek to build up his Sunday-school. He was his own Sunday-school superintendent, and had been for years. They should all go to their Sunday-school at least. They should talk with and pray for the children by name, and they would then find them very responsive.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson, ex-President of the Wesleyan Conference, followed with an address full of wise sayings and happy suggestions. As all admitted the responsibility, the need was to know how this paramount duty might be discharged. They had whose grace alone saves and perfects character. The general impression that if you want goodness go to Christ, and if you want light to the philosophers, might well be corrected. Christ was the greatest of teachers, and the young might well be led to the New Testament to study of Him. But character is greater than intelligence, and they must bring the young to understand Him, that they may become like Him, and it was a most blessed encouragement in the work that the children understand Him so readily and well. If the little ones are not brought to Christ, it will mean disaster, for the nearest way to the golden age is through the young. In dealing with the young, the less said about their being young the better. The great facts to be presented are facts independent of youth or years. Again, workers should not compel belief. Respect freedom, or the result may be the driving to the other extreme. Show the reasonableness, beauty, majesty and glory of religion. Get before the young people's mind the magnanimousness of the Christian faith; keep to the front the austerity of religion; do not hide the cross with roses. Young men like difficulty, and true character springs out of noble limitation and self-denial. The flowers of life are the blossoms of the crown of thorns. And to do all this, the minister must be at his best. Preach the poor sermon at conference, assembly, &c., but give the children the best.

The Temperance Demonstration, in the Great Central Hall, drew an audience numbering about 7,000. Rev. J. Tolefree Parr presided; and in his opening address said the temperance attitude of the C.E. is an enlightened, intense, and determined antagonism to the trade in every shape and form. The liquor "boss" of American politics has invaded England; the proletariat is drugged on the polling day; and, at the bidding of Bung, the present Government has flouted the children's charter (cries of "Shame!"). The cuckoo cry was non-interference with the liberty of the subject. It is a question, however, not of liberty but of licence; the one is from God, and the other is of the devil. In this great moral issue, the Churches are united to throttle the traffic and save the country. Again and again has declaring for righteousness, beaten down vested interests. The women, the Church, and the power of God are on our side.

A strong appeal was made by Rev. Paul Strayer, of Baltimore, U.S.A., on behalf of the children who, through parental indifference and the state of the law, have not "half a chance" as they grow up, to become meet for the kingdom of heaven. The use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage is bad, because you are a Christian; for you represent Jesus Christ in his work of saving men from all evil.

Much enthusiasm marked the uprising of Canon Barker to address the audience. He regarded this World's Convention as one of the bright spots amid the encircling gloom. Abroad are wars, pestilence, and famine—sad tokens of the disfavour of heaven—with massacres the like of which were never seen since the days of the French terror and the horrors of Cawnpore. At home there is this great drink curse, and that other evil which makes us blush for civilization and Christianity. We are told, too, that the ethics of Christianity are no longer workable in a world like ours. It is an infinite satisfaction, therefore, to find hundreds of thousands gathered together to express the principle of love and brotherhood. There is no remedy for our troubles save the Gospel and teaching of Christ. Our security is not in vast armies and fleets, but in the Christian temper, moral lives, and religious convictions of the people. An upheld by the State, is the greatest crime of the nineteenth century; and a drinking nation must be a poverty-stricken one. There is no Christian Endeavour so great as the effort to overthrow this vast tyranny. It would be a real blessing if it could be said that this World's Convention started a strong, thoughtful, enthusiastic movement against the drink curse of this land and of all lands. You are making history. Some future historian, studying the files of the daily papers, will tell how 10,000 men and women assembled here, and resolved before God, never to rest until they had purged the land from this poisonous thing. Make your enthusiasm practical by, first, uniting together in a common aspiration to heaven for strength in a high resolve. God works by law; and law not only coerces, but it educates. It is you who make the law. Any adverse Parliament, however overborne by numbers, must at once change its attitude when the whole Christian community of England is determined that this evil thing shall cease to be. You will have another opportunity of making your voice heard, in a year or two at most.

earnestly and deeply, and let every Christian man feel as if, under God, he held in his hand the destiny of the country.

Mr. C. Wakeley, secretary of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union, brought to this Convention the hearty greetings of his youthful constituency. The upgrowth of junior members to replenish the ranks of both organizations is a hopeful outlook. The question is not, How long have you been an abstainer? but it is, What are you doing for the cause?

It would be a large effort of the imagination, said Rev. John McNeill, to look upon him as Lady Henry Somerset, who had been announced to address the meeting, but was not present. Total abstinence had carried him far round the world, and had enabled him to do, in God's name and for his cause, many a hard day's work. To the undecided upon this question, he would say that a man may have all the grace between this world and glory, but he had better not touch intoxicating liquor. There is a great deal of talking among "the unemployed" at Westminster, and but little that touches this terrible question.

PENTECOSTAL POWER.

Four great meetings were held in the evening with "Pentecostal Power" as their subject. Every inch of available space within and around Tent Mizpah was occupied by an eager crowd. Rev. James Mursell presided, and maintained that Pentecostal power is not mechanical but vital. It is God in the soul. Now that the incarnate Christ has ascended on high, another incarnation becomes possible—the incarnation of the Holy Spirit in the life of the believer.

Rev. Dr. Frackleton, of Brisbane, spoke on "The Provision of Power." He defined power as activity manifesting itself in various forms, and Pentecostal power as that which purifies and regenerates life. The same power which gave life in the first instance must give new life in regeneration. The Holy Spirit comes into the human to make it holy.

Dr. Handley Moule, of Cambridge, followed, on the "Possession of Power." Having read Acts i. 8, he spoke of Pentecostal power as the supreme equipment for the life of witnessing—divine capacity for being good. It is for everyone who has come to Jesus, and has touched the hem of his garment. If joined to Him, we must be of one Spirit with Him, possessed by Him for his service. This gift may be received through faith. Let us fix our minds on the promise of the text. The impact of Pentecostal power may vary in its method of manifestation. We have but to lean upon the promise that the Father would give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him. Of course there are conditions attached. The vessel must be cleansed. We must not seek this blessing that we may seem better than others, but that men may be led to look beyond us to God. Pentecostal power will not lift above the ordinary circumstances and duties of life. It will rather into them. It means being sweet at home; true to our word; attentive to all good; quickened into great attentiveness lest they become a means of stumbling, a "rock of offence." In conclusion, he said, Pentecostal power must be a stream ever running in and running out from the life—"a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN gave the last address, upon the "Application of Pentecostal Power." When he appealed to those who definitely committed themselves to the dominance of the Holy Spirit, large numbers stood; and it is safe to say that many went home to live a new life in the power of the Spirit of God.

In the Concert Hall, the importance of the topic was emphasized by the chairman, Rev. E. J. GILCHRIST. He pointed out that men are efficient for Christian work just in the measure in which they possess the Spirit of God; and are inefficient so far as that Spirit is absent from their hearts and lives. It is not so much the possession of gifts that we need to-day, nor new machinery; but what we do require is that power which spiritualizes the gift.

Rev. W. PATTERSON, of Toronto, spoke of

THE PROVISION THAT IS MADE

for Pentecostal power. Where there is life, said he, there is power. A man may be physically and intellectually alive; but if he be spiritually dead, he is absolutely helpless in the spiritual world. Without the life of the Christ of God we are helpless in forwarding the Kingdom of God. No man can dishonour the Son of God and get this life. In giving life, the Spirit works through the Atonement.

Three things are essential to this power: First, food of a substantial kind—that is, the Word of God inspired by the Spirit. Then there is the spiritual atmosphere in fellowship with God and communion with the saints. Men may live in a bad atmosphere and still live, but they are not healthy; and that is the difference between worldly and spiritual Christians. Exercise unto godliness is also necessary; and this should take the form of useful activities. If these things be found in us, growth must follow. Given life in possession, and these means will strengthen it unto abundance; so that we shall say, "I joyed when they said unto me. Let us go up into the house of the Lord."

POWER IN POSSESSION

was expounded by Rev. Dr. AUDLEY ROSS (Newcastle-on-Tyne). By Pentecostal power is meant the power of the Spirit so taking possession of men that those who hear are constrained to repent, believe, and receive the grace of God. Can we possess that power? If so, in what way? When the Spirit uses us, it is not as dead or passive instruments, but as men alive unto God through Christ. What is it that differentiates one class of workers from another? Is it due to the arbitrary works of the Spirit, or to some defect in character on the part of the worker? Our Lord and his Apostles teach that the Spirit is the perennial fountain from which all who will may draw full supplies. A barrier may exist in personal relationship to the Lord Jesus Christ, but if we give Him the chief place in thought, affection, and activity, we shall prove the power of the Spirit. Being born again, men are made but they will not receive the Divine enduement in full power until every facet of their being receives the beams that radiate from the living Christ. There is no enduement of the Spirit for service, apart from willingness to receive Him for the personal life. Our time and pastime, our every personal relationship being yielded to Him, we shall go forth to our spiritual work potent with the power of heaven. Prayer is a channel of reception.

It is possible to have the Spirit, and yet to see no conversions among men. "Jesus could there do no mighty works, because of their unbelief." There is a limit beyond which the blessing of the Spirit cannot come to men. Such experiences should not discourage, but may well lead us to feel our absolute dependence upon God the Holy Spirit. We may lose the gift by some self-indulgence or sin. Let us see to it that the flame of enthusiasm is not due merely to youthful ardour and association, but that it is kindled at the altar of the Cross, and fed and nurtured by the holy oil of God's Spirit through communion with our Lord, and unto the salvation of the world.

Rev. Dr. FLOYD TOMKINS, Philadelphia, dealt with power in its application. From a wrong feeling of diffidence regarding our own weakness, we may refuse to yield to the leadings of the Spirit. God's Spirit will also leave us if we do not leave the sins which He points out to us. A church filled with the power of God is a place where the people are concerned with God and not with themselves; and in all such cases outsiders will be drawn into saving association with the people of God.

WEDNESDAY.

To a closely-packed company of eager listeners gathered in the Concert Hall, on Wednesday morning, were delivered by five leaders of as many denominations. The opening prayer was voiced by a coloured brother, Bishop WALTERS, of New Jersey. Speaking from the chair, Rev. Dr. CLARK said that, in some respects, this was the most significant meeting in all the Convention. From early days various denominations had spoken through eminent representatives, stating what they found in the movement adapted to their peculiar tenets or forms of work; and each speaker had seemed to find something in the C.E. exactly in accord with the genius of his denomination. With the Presbyterian, it was the covenant pledge; with the Congregationalist, scope for initiative; with the Baptist, the Word of God, as the only rule of faith and practice; and with the Episcopalian, Christian nurture in youthful days.

MESSAGES OF THE CHURCHES

The first counsel in the speech of Rev. J. G. GREENHOUGH, ex-president of the Baptist Union, was: Do not be afraid to stand alone; do not climb down before opposition, want of sympathy, or even persecution. Baptists had been accustomed to such a position in the past; but men have learned more charity than their fathers knew, even if they have not more faith and courage. At times Endeavourers will be obliged although they had the weight of numbers now. In the midst of this vast mass of fervour, your hearts are ready to sing and dance for joy because you are Christians; but there are occasions when you will be tempted, at any rate, to blush on that account. The young life of England and America is not all following the Master's step; although never before were there such bright young lives engaged in the Lord's battles.

Be yourselves, and not mere echoes and imitators of others. We cannot follow the Lord far if we always go with the fashion, be it good or bad. Young people go in flocks, and old people too. Every youth of fifteen smokes, unless he is an Endeavourer. In the effort to be, all of us, preachers, missionaries, and apostles, there may be too great a run upon the best things. The apostles served an apprenticeship as disciples. They did a little thinking before they began to talk; and if imitation be needed, we must go in for it in that way. Get the convictions which are your own. When conformity is the fashion, strike out a better and diviner fashion of your own.

If you would be furnished for every good work, know your Bible well. Our fathers were where we have a hundred. In the vulgar sense, the Bible has never been a hundredth part so popular as the music-hall song or the latest novel of the season; and yet the Bible is more read than any hundred best books that you can put together. Read the Bible, and not merely quote it; get to know it well by earnest, prayerful study.

Our chairman might say, with regard to C.E., "I write no new commandment unto you." It is all summed up in the one word Christ: obedience to Him, following Him, trying to get his rule established in your own heart first, and then in all the scenes about you. If it means that, it is as old as Christian belief; and the oldest among us has served an apprenticeship to the same thing, in the ranks with you. We are thankful to have so much strength enlisted in the noble army; and we pray that the oldest veteran and the youngest recruit may be kept faithful and valiant until Christ gives them the crown.

REV. HUGH PRICE-HUGHES brought a cordial welcome and greeting from 12,000 young London Methodists of the Wesley Guild.

This Convention is a glorious sign of the times, but there is a hard struggle before us; and, in face of the embattled hosts of selfishness and wickedness, we must keep together, or we shall be defeated every one. Four evils we must attack with might and main; first, the liquor trade (loud and continued applause); then, social vice, which often selects as its chief victims the children and teachers in our Sunday schools. The time has fully come to turn out of public life every rascal of the male sex who seeks his pleasure in the misery and degradation of women. A third evil which has reached portentious growth on both sides of the Atlantic is gambling; and the man who indulges in it is nothing better than a common thief, unfit for respectable society.

Last, and greatest of all, is

THE DREADFULNESS OF WAR.

Without taking the extreme Quaker position, no man has a greater horror and detestation of war than myself, or prays more earnestly for the Divine millennium which will destroy it for ever. Under God, nothing will do more to hasten that blessed consummation than the establishment of a bond of union between the two great sections of the English-speaking world. To my kinsmen from beyond the sea, I say, Let us stand together, all the world over, for truth, freedom, and peace.

Virgil said of men who won a boat-race, They were able to do it because they thought themselves able. You young people to whom the twentieth century belongs, you are able, if you have the faith, heroism, devotion, and self-sacrifice which Christ will give you by his spirit, to destroy the strongholds of evil, and hasten the day when every knee shall bow at the name of Christ.

On behalf of many living in the neighbourhood, welcomed those attending the Convention, and assured them of his sympathy in all their labours. I make no apology, said he, for speaking personally the message of one who has striven longer than most of you to be a Christian in some degree, and who hopes that you may make further progress than he has done upon the same road.

My message is concerned with the nature of your endeavour, which necessarily expresses itself in practical forms. You think of yourselves as an army going forth to battle; and it is in this direction that I sometimes check myself. We wish for peace, but how frequently do we use language about the most sacred things which is framed in terms remote indeed from peace? It is eternally true that we shall be judged more by our temper than by our objects; and what we feel, what we are, is more important than what we struggle for or attain.

By nothing which we say in our several spheres can we influence the causes which make war to prevail in the world; and our opinions will not affect any statesman or modify any object of our national ambition, unless we proceed from the very beginning to cultivate

A PACIFIC TEMPER.

Do the apostles of peace never use incendiary language about the things next to their hearts, at election times? Is their language always moderate and gentle? In our struggles against evil, do we so speak that our moderation may be known unto all men? There is a certain insincerity in those who abuse politicians for words which tend to war, when, in smaller matters, the objectors appeal in inflammatory language to the evil rather than the better motives of human nature.

The history of the Church is a continual going back to the Lord Jesus Christ. Religion tends to deteriorate in the hands of the multitude. To make his temper ours must be the constant aim of all who strive to do good in his Name. Take care of your temper, and your energies will take care of themselves.

Rev. Dr. Parker said: I want the Christian Endeavourers of America to nominate Dr. Clark and Mr. Sheldon to the highest offices in the American State.

TAKE NO NOTICE

of what the men themselves say. Christian men should be at the head of things. Godly character is more, under many circumstances, than political sagacity. The nomination of these brethren could not be carried into effect just now; but you would gain an impulse, the end of which cannot be foreseen. You ought to insist upon it that Christ, in the persons of two of his humble and trustworthy servants, shall be felt as the supreme factor in one of the supreme countries of the world. Be right, and go ahead—that is my message to you, whether the world accepts it or resents it.

A man comes into my vestry and says, "I am a High Churchman." So am I. No church can be too high for me, in noble ambition, and continual aspiration for the Spirit of Christ. Another says, "I belong to the Low Church." So do I. No church can be low enough for me if it means going down to people for the express purpose of lifting them up. "I," says a third good friend, "am a Baptist." So am I. You cannot have too much baptism if you are baptized with the Holy Spirit and with fire. There is not an ecclesiastical "ism" under heaven that I would get myself wet through for. I would represent here simply the temper, disposition, and character of Christ.

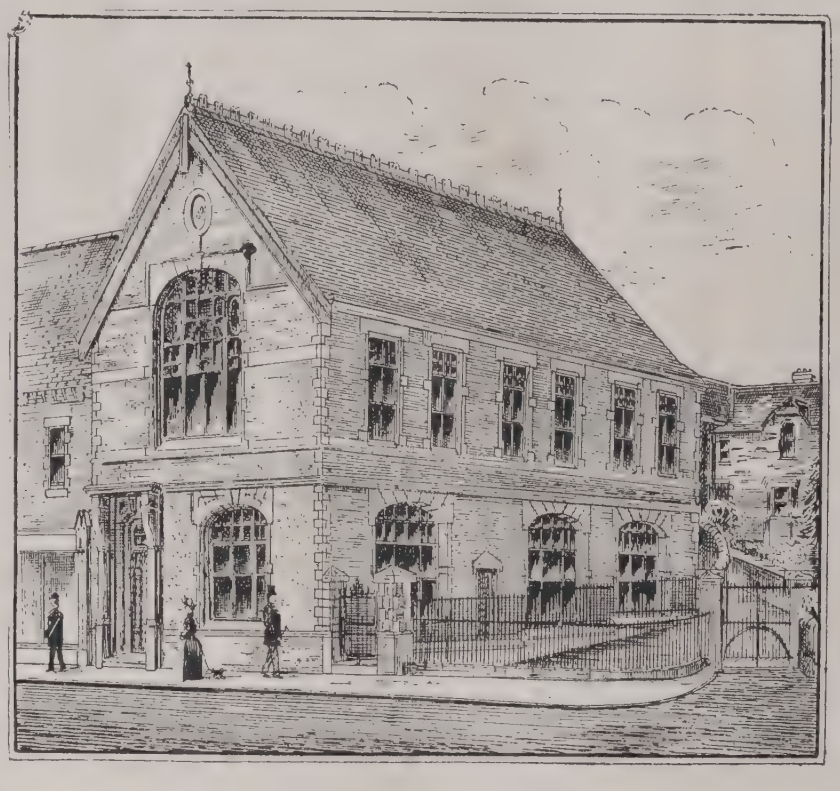
The antithesis of Endeavourer is devourer; and I will not be a party to compromise; you must be either the one or the other. Ezekiel shows us an allegorical lion waiting to devour a child as soon as it is born. That is the policy of the devil, who always takes the easy course—that of destruction. I will undertake, under certain conditions, to blow this building, which took so long to build, into atoms in five minutes. There is nothing so easy as destruction. But the Endeavourer undertakes the hard work of building things into temple shape; he is a creator, an edifier, a supporter. Have nothing to do with the destroyer; join the man who would make the world better, in the name of the Christ. Our Lord was conqueror before the battle began, being slain from before the foundation of the world; therefore the end is assured. All who have been faithful shall be gathered to receive the Morning Star; but the faithless shall be dashed into pieces, like a potter's vessel.

The last address was delivered by Rev. W. Watson, of Trinity Presbyterian Church, Birkenhead. He asked: What is the meaning of this Convention for the Church, and for the world? For the Church, it is a serious thing to live and to do its work to-day. This is an age of cities with their distinctive evils; but our faith in Christ and the cities must nerve us, in all our public life, to translate Christian truth into earnest and sustained practical duties. We have to contend with the growth of the democratic spirit which seeks unregulated freedom of action. Then there is, in many parts of our land, decay of reverence, of devoutness, and of calm confidence in the ultimate supremacy of the Gospel. I know of no remedy for this other than a heightened conception of personal Christian character, and an intensified belief in the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The only way to kill an atmosphere is to infuse a new spirit into the churches, homes, and cities in which we live.

At the same hour another remarkable service was going forward in the Central Hall.

A JUNIOR RALLY—

consisting of a cantata entitled "Comrades," prepared for the occasion—was given by some 1,000 Junior Endeavourers, assisted by an adult choir, 100 choristers each from Stockwell and Dr. Barnardo's Orphanages. Rev. Carey Bonner, who had composed the music, had charge of the entire service. National Rallies were held on Wednesday afternoon at the respective American, Australasian, Canadian, French, and German headquarters.



ABERGAVENNY Y.M.C.A. BUILDINGS.

The Annual Meeting of Christian Endeavour Union of

GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND

was held in the Concert Hall, under the presidency of Rev. F. B. Meyer.

Rev. W. Knight Chaplin gave a brief extract from his report (which will be shortly published). He said 696 new societies had been formed during the year. Of these, 148 were Junior Societies, 614 of them were in England, 24 in Scotland, 38 in Ireland, and 20 in Wales.

The Treasurer's report showed a balance in hand on March 31, of £484 9s. 9d. The election of President then took place, and Rev. J. D. Lamont, of Dublin, was unanimously and enthusiastically elected. Mr. Meyer then vacated the chair, and the new President briefly addressed the gathering. He did not expect to do as much as his predecessor, but would do his best. Six members of the General Council were then elected or re-elected: Revs. W. Knight Chaplin, J. Brown Morgan, J. D. Lamont, and E. Abbott, Miss Vivian and Mr. E. Cadbury.

ROLL CALL SERVICE.

The World's Convention always closes with a Roll Call of the nations. In the Central Hall this was conducted by Dr. Clark. Responses were given by representatives from Australasia, Canada, United States, West Indies, Mexico, South Africa, Egypt, China, India, Germany, Spain, France, Switzerland, Turkey, Samoa, Japan, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, and England. Very interesting were many of the responses.

The closing words were delivered by Rev. John Smith, D.D., of Edinburgh. He said nothing could have produced this marvellous Convention but the magnetism of Jesus Christ. The large world movements were significant of the times, but no one so remarkable as this. The great objective is beyond the organization. C.E. is a means to an end and not the end. Organization must be kept in the dust, that Christ may have the pre-eminence and glory. With the singing of a hymn, and the benediction, the great Convention closed.

Y.M.C.A., Abergavenny, Mon.

A FEW years after the Y.M.C.A. was founded by Mr. (now Sir George) Williams, I left my native town, Abergavenny, Mon., to begin life in the great city. I attended the Y.M.C.A. meetings, and became profoundly interested in its beneficent work. Abergavenny has doubled its size and its population since then, but there are scarcely a dozen people left who knew me in those days, or whom I remember.

It has been a great joy to me to see during the past eight-and-twenty years a Y.M.C.A. grow up in the town "which owes its prosperity and success to the steady and which has been made on the original lines laid down by the founder of the movement." This branch was initiated by three or four Christian men, led by Mr. Thomas Tomkins, and it has become an important factor in the religious life of the town and neighbourhood, influencing for good young men who have gone to other lands to preach the Gospel, or are doing Christian work at home.

It may be described as a model Y.M.C.A. It has a Bible class of 100 members, which may be doubled in the new building, of which were laid on Thursday, July 5, by myself, Mr. W. A. Baker, and his son, Mr. J. E. Baker, of Newport, Mr. George Davies, president of the Association and architect of the building and, Mr. W. H. Charles, each of whom addressed the assembled crowd.

The hon. secretary, Mr. Beavan, writes me "The building now being erected has been already consecrated by years of earnest prayer. It is not too much to state that every stone and brick has been saturated with prayer.

"The fact is that the structure (which I hope will stand until He comes) will be to God's faithfulness touching the prayers of his own. I am more glad to see stone being placed upon stone than I can express. The building of a palace for myself could never afford me the same joy."

In the evening an enthusiastic meeting followed in the Town Hall.

A sketch of the building is here given. It will cost, when finished, £1,700, toward which £1,050 has been raised by the indefatigable generosity and toil of the members, chiefly working men. Other friends have given liberally, but there remains ample scope for further kindness of a similar character.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

In place of our usual story or article this week, I think many of my young friends will like to read about the Christian Endeavourers at the Alexandra Palace, on the preceding pages. No doubt parents will describe the gatherings to the younger ones.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, JULY 29.

CUMBERERS OF THE GROUND (Luke xiii. 6-9).

WHY the fig-tree should be planted in the vineyard is not stated, but probably to emphasize the fact that every condition was favourable to its fruit-bearing. Where could situation or richness of soil combine better than there? But when the proprietor came seeking fruit there was none? Why was there none? It is well worth our inquiring, because God comes to seek fruit in us. The death of his Son, the gift of his Spirit, the great blessings of justification, regeneration, and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit are ours with the specific object of securing fruit; and if this fails all fails. God's one desire is that we should bear fruit for Him, for whom we are "dressed" (Heb. vi. 7, 8; John xv. 2, 5, 8, 16). We sometimes seem to think that it is enough to be saved from hell; it is not enough for God. This is only the beginning of his work. Would the fruit-grower be content with bringing a tree into a good position, so as to be content even if the fruit were awanting? No; we have been saved, that we should bear fruit. And the fruit which God seeks is enumerated in Gal. v. 22. (Note there that the word fruit is in the singular. Not fruits, but fruit; as though all the graces there enumerated were but different aspects and phases of the one essential product of Christian holiness, or perfected love.)

The absence of fruit in our lives cannot be attributed to God. He has done everything to make us fruitful (Isa. v.). Nor to our circumstances—they have been continued with exquisite wisdom so that, however little we think it, each of us is placed precisely in that position in which we can be the best we are capable of being. Nor to our lack of power—for when we were born again, the germ of the Christ life was implanted in our hearts, and we were grafted into Him, so that fruit-bearing would have been quite natural and easy. Nor to our being neglected—because we are the objects of God's unwearied care; He is the Husbandman; his knife prunes, his sun and air and dew nourish, his care removes blight and insect growth.

Why then are we so wanting in fruit-bearing? Ah! the fault is in ourselves. Perhaps there is something which does for us what the taproot does for the fruit-tree. The taproot is a strong root, which moors the tree in the soil and goes deep. It differs greatly from the lighter tentacles which spread about the subsoil, seeking nourishment. The taproot drains away the vigour of the plant, and every fruit-gardener cuts it away. Perhaps there is some hidden sin which is draining away our vitality.

The Mediator pleads. We must not think that there is any conflict in the Divine nature, or that the Lord Jesus is personified by the Gardener, whilst God the Father is the Proprietor. Far be such a thought! God is One, and He is Love. But we learn that whereas justice and ordinary commonsense demand that fruitless trees should be removed, because they do not fulfil their mission, and because they occupy ground which might be better employed—yet there is another consideration in the mind of the Husbandman, namely mercy. He suffers long; unwilling that any should perish. The presence of this other consideration is put graphically by the introduction of the vine-dresser. Yes, mercy pleads for us. We are spared though someone else might fill our place better. In the meanwhile, every effort is being put forth on God's part. To dig around is to loosen our hold on the world. To manure is to introduce fruit-bearing power into our life by the gift of the Holy Spirit. Oh, that we who have been so highly favoured, even as Israel was, may not like Israel abuse our privileges, and like Israel be cut down. After the three years of our Lord's ministry the unfruitful tree was felled.

C.E. NOTES.

Dr. Clark has now proceeded on his way to C.E. Conventions to be held in France, Germany, and Spain. The prayers of his many friends will go with him in this ceaseless labour for Christ.

The Fifth National Convention has lately been held in Hawaii. The Convention theme was embodied, "Behold I set before thee an open door." A stanza of the Convention hymn reads as follows:

"Hawaii's land is fair,
Rich are the gifts we share,
This is our earnest prayer,
O Lord of Light,
That in a noble band
We may join heart and hand,
Till all Hawaii's land
Stands for the right."

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

JULY 23 TO 28.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.)

FAR from exhibiting any signs of decline, the spirit of interest and expectancy which is manifested with regard to the annual gatherings at Keswick would seem to increase in fervency as the years go by. The twenty-sixth Convention has opened with rich promise of blessing; there is ground for great thankfulness, not only in the large audiences and helpful utterances, but in the desire, which finds general expression in the prayer meetings, to delve deeper into the things of God, and to live more perfectly according to the Divine will. "My soul, wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from Him."

Keswick, beautiful for situation in its quiet valley amid the rugged Cumbrian mountains, is always an attraction to the tourist, even apart from its wealth of literary and historical association; we may therefore find encouragement from the fact that the throngs who have practically "occupied" the charming town have been drawn, not so much by the superb panoramas of Derwentwater and Bassenthwaite, not by sentimental interest in Wordsworth and Coleridge and Southey, but, in the apt words of Mr. Robert Wilson in convening the assembly, by the prospect of "gathering together knowing no other bond of union whereby a foretaste of the day, not far distant, when his redeemed ones shall joyfully stand before Him, 'when He shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe.'"

Many of the travellers to Keswick were mindful to witness for the Master en route. It is not too much to say that, throughout the chief centres of traffic, powerful sermons were preached by the spiritual conduct and kindly bearing of the Lord's people, while many a town was aroused by the strains of sacred song from the trainloads of cheerful pilgrims. Among the visitors there were, of course, many familiar faces; prominent workers in the home and foreign fields were present in large numbers; but one of the chief features of the Convention, it was admitted on all sides, was the influx of many who were attending for the first time.

Saturday dawned stormily. Skiddaw was hidden in mist, and, on the lake, the wavelets fretted into froth against the Friar's Crag. Umbrellas and mackintoshes were in general request, and the parties who had sought out sequestered nooks for Bible study beat a retreat homewards. A short time before 7.30 p.m., the hour fixed for the preliminary prayer-meeting, the sky cleared, and the gathering was largely atttended. Mr. Robert Wilson was able to take the chair at the outset, and to give a few words of invitation and encouragement, his place being subsequently taken by Mr. Albert Head. Malachi iii. 16 and 17 was read, and Pastor George Soltau engaged in prayer, after which Rev. Evan H. Hopkins gave an incisive address, answering his own question, "For what have we come to Keswick?"

The speaker, defining various motives for attendance, referred to the familiar instance of the man who attended one of Mr. Moody's meetings in order to look at the chairs. He was a chair-maker, who had heard that in the Agricultural Hall at Islington there were and who accordingly went to see what was, to him, a source of profound interest. There God met with him. God is better to us than our motives deserve.

Some had come to the Convention, Mr. Hopkins went on to say, in order to get stimulative thoughts; some to put forward the claims of their good work and enlist sympathy and help; others to obtain striking illustrations with which to replenish their exhausted note-books and use later on in their own spheres. All these motives were desirable in themselves, yet they would prove insufficient unless there was a desire to answer satisfactorily the two questions which Christ put: "What wilt thou that I should do unto thee?" (Mark x. 51), and "Believe ye that I am able to do this?" (Matt. ix. 28).

It is possible, the speaker pointed out, to be sound in doctrine but far from sound in walk and experience. Christ desires that we shall be controlled and guided by Him. When a pilot comes on board a ship, the captain knows that he has come, not to teach navigation, but to through all dangerous channels. So Christ comes to be the pilot of our lives. Not that our personality is set aside, for when Paul said, "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me," he did not cease to exist, but he ceased to be the centre of his own life. The "I" centre was superseded. Christ has not only something to show us, but something to do for us. We do not go to Him as students to examine his miracles, but as needy ones, to become his miracles.

Mr. Hopkins made a pathetic reference to the late Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, recalling how the departed minister consecrated himself fully to the Lord, and proceeded to describe Keswick as intended not only, and chiefly, for Bible readings, but as a Pool of Bethesda, where souls that are living, but yet suffering from spiritual maladies, might be healed. In conclusion, the speaker urged his hearers to seek an enlarged faith, and prayed that the Holy Ghost might teach them to expect and to get great things from the Lord.

THE SUNDAY SERVICES

were, as usual, of a varied character. There was a large attendance at the early prayer meeting in the Convention tent. Mr. Albert Head presided, and Rev. J. R. Macpherson, of Dingwall, gave a stimulating address. At St. John's Church, Rev. John Harford-Battersby was the morning preacher. Basing his remarks on 1 John i. 2 and 4, he examined the root causes of joyless lives, describing some phases of human joy, and showing how, ultimately, everything proves insufficient to satisfy the soul's need, apart from union with Christ. We see how joyful little children are in the exercise of the physical powers of life which are dawning within them, and, as youth develops into manhood or womanhood, new forms of joy—in study, in human affection, in art—are experienced, all resulting from the same cause as that which operates in the child, the use of powers which God has given. The highest development of the race, however, is not found in these things. Apart from Christ, dissatisfaction creeps in, and the heart owns to a sense of disappointment. The individual has stopped short of full stature. Alive to all else, he is dead to the things of the Spirit. He needs life in Christ before he can find the spring of true joy.

Describing the new life in Christ, the speaker said it is a life of love. Every moment of Christ's existence upon the earth was lived in the sunshine of the love of the Father. Love shone from the Saviour's eyes, and vibrated in every tone of his voice. When his enemies reviled Him, it was by love that he vanquished them, blessing those who cursed Him, and praying forgiveness for those who crucified Him. He so far exceeded all human conceptions of love that John was moved to write, "We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." This life, again, is a life of purity. The life which Christ manifested, seen against of human existence, drew humble hearts to Him. It was also a life of joy. We think of Jesus as the man of sorrows; but, except when the dark shadow of our guilt was upon his heart, how could the life of Him who abode in the love of God be otherwise than full of joy?

The preacher went on to declare that it was the privilege of all God's children to have, in the strength of Christ, victory over sin. There may be lapses and failures to "abide" in Him; but this life of joy is for all, "that your joy may be full." It is a joy which wells up within the heart. In conclusion, Mr. Harford-Battersby emphasized the contrast between this life of trust and happiness and that which many Christian's lead. He specified various classes of the dissatisfied who might be amongst his hearers, and made a glowing appeal to them, sore and defeated, oppressed with a sense of drudgery, to allow the Son of God to enter and control their hearts and lives.

Rev. Evan H. Hopkins was announced for St. John's at night. At the Congregational Chapel Dr. Harry Guinness preached, morning and evening, as did Pastor George Soltau, at the Drill Hall, in connection with the Primitive Methodist body, while Rev. John Brash occupied the pulpit for the Wesleyans. The arrangements for the in the tent embraced addresses, morning and evening, by Dr. A. T. Pierson; while in the afternoon Mr. J. W. C. Fegan conducted the evangelistic service. The chief topic of Mr. Fegan's address was Jesus Christ as "The Door." The afternoon was very warm; but the speaker's comments, salted with humour and anecdotal reminiscences, also his earnest appeals, held the audience to the close. Many of the young people present appeared to be deeply impressed. The usual service for children followed.

Mr. W. B. Sloan presided at the evening meeting in the tent. After referring to the reception of a telegram which conveyed the news of the peril of Miss Hopwood, a well-known worker in the Chinese mission field, and her party, he called upon Mr. Albert Head to offer prayer on behalf of the endangered lives. Subsequently Dr. A. T. Pierson gave a luminous address, full of Bible teaching, founded on the words in John i. 29 and 36, "Behold the Lamb of God." Dr. Pierson remarked at the outset upon what might be termed "the structural law of Scripture." Although the Bible includes many books, written by various authors at divers times, it is found to be one consistent body of truth, just as a building in Perpendicular Gothic, for instance, bears traces of the same order of architecture throughout, from corner stone to the uttermost spire. Bearing this thought in mind, it is instructive to note the occasions upon which the title, "The Lamb of God," is used in Scripture, and to observe the gradual unfolding and development of God's plan and purpose in connection therewith. The first reference to a lamb is in Gen. iv. 4, from which verse we may gather that the acceptance of the offering was not unconnected with the choice of a lamb. Turning to Ex. xii., we find something added. In Genesis there was no mention of the lamb being slain, but now the WHOLE ASSEMBLY SHALL KILL IT.

It is to be slain, and that, too, as a collective act (either a lamb or a kid; both have the same typical significance). Blood is to be put on the side and upper posts of the door, but not on the threshold, to be profaned by being trampled under foot (comp. Heb. x. 29). The day of passing-over in virtue of the blood was to be a memorial of redemption, and it was now that the people began their march to the Land of Promise.

Dr. Pierson next considered Lev. xvi., and the Day of Atonement. Here we realize the significance of the fact that no difference was make in Ex. xii. between a lamb and a kid. From the goat, let go in the wilderness, the speaker drew a number of stimulating lessons regarding the putting away of sin. The thought seems to be that, not only is sin banished from God's sight, but its power is broken. A dog or a horse might have found their way back to their former home or stable, but the goat has no instinct to return. Passing on to consider Isa. liii., the speaker pointed out that nowhere else in the Bible do we find so much concerning the doctrine of vicarious sacrifice. "He was wounded for our transgressions;" "the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all;" and "he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter," &c.

Thus, beginning with Abel's offering; then taking Exodus, where the lamb is slain by the people; next studying Leviticus, with the double ceremony of the slain goat and the goat led away (exemplifying two aspects of Christ's atonement), we go on to Isaiah, where the vicarious sacrifice of the Saviour is so fully shown.

In the short space of time that remained available, Dr. Pierson turned to the New Testament, and especially the words quoted in the opening, from John i. 29 and 36, noting the similarity of thought between Christ "bearing away the sin of the world" and the bearing away of sin in Leviticus (xvi. 22). The condition upon which this blessing of having our sin borne from us is to be secured by a receptive "beholding" of the Lamb of God, and, as we cannot long behold a moving object unless we follow it, we come to whithersoever He goeth.

After brief references to Acts viii., with its quotation from Isa. liii., Dr. Pierson pointed out the importance of the passage 1 Peter i. 17 seq., which (written to believers as sojourners, who are but tarrying over night, and need no permanent abode) speaks of the lamb without blemish, and brings out great truths respecting the Lamb of God in the way of expiation and atonement. In conclusion, Dr. Pierson traced the references to the Lamb in the book of Revelation, observing, inter alia, that the Lamb is the temple (xxi. 22), and the temple stands for worship. God alone is to be worshipped, and that without intermediary. Again, the Lamb is on the throne (xxii. 3), and there we may be associated with Him (Rev. iii. 21). But, if we would be with Him in the city, our names must be in his Book of Life (xxi. 27). Taking up this latter point in its relation to the unconverted, Dr. Pierson—after dwelling on the unspeakable sublimity and simplicity which are found side by side in these scriptural passages concerning the Lamb—made a strong appeal for immediate surrender to the Saviour's claims, and concluded the meeting with prayer.

PRAYER FOR IRELAND.

According to custom, the early morning prayer-meeting on Monday was devoted to intercession on behalf of Ireland. Captain Tottenham, presided; and at his suggestion, several written requests for prayer regarding specific objects affecting the progress of the Gospel in Ireland were formulated, and forwarded to the table. These were presented before the throne of grace by Professor Mackintosh, Revs. Canon Daunt, W. R. Budd, and other friends. The occasion was one of spiritual refreshment and encouragement.

THE OPENING GATHERING of the Convention, in the tent on Monday evening, was attended by an overflowing audience.

Mr. Robert Wilson occupied the chair. He called for a season of silent waiting upon God, and subsequently gave out the familiar hymn, "Oh, the voice of tender mercy," after which Dr. Elder Cumming led the assembly in prayer, pleading, with emotion, for rich revival blessing upon all the varied meetings of the Convention.

Next, Rev. Evan H. Hopkins conveyed words of greeting and fellowship, characteristically warm and spiritual, from Rev. Charles A. Fox, who is debarred by dangerous illness from making his usual journey to Keswick. Mr. Hopkins went on to read John xv. 1-14, and to engage in prayer that those who had come up to the Convention might have their hearts prepared to receive and that all present might be brought to experience the indwelling power of the Holy Ghost.

The address was given by Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who founded some instructive remarks on Joshua i. 2 and iv. 10 (last clause). He pointed out that just so long as Moses lived, Israel was unable to enter into Canaan, so that the removal of the law-giver, however great a loss it might appear to entail, was in reality a good thing for the people, since the unbelieving generation had passed away, and Moses was the only obstacle to the possession of the promised land. Picturing the life of the people in the wilderness, the Prebendary applied many lessons therefrom to the spiritual experience of his hearers, asking why so many lived, as regards their inner life, almost at starving point, and urging them to consider how they could be delivered from a distressful life, and brought into harmony with the will of God. He called upon them to "rise and go over this Jordan."

The effect of the transfer into Canaan was next considered. Many of the children of Israel could recall Egypt and the taskmaster's whip, the round of labour rewarded only by a little indulgence of the flesh, in garlic and leeks and cucumbers. The years in the wilderness could not be regarded as a satisfactory life; although the people were delivered from Egyptian bondage and were fed with manna, their condition of existence was poor—finding its parallel in the wearisome life of many believers to-day. How, then, the children of Israel must have rejoiced, in spite of the sorrow consequent on their leader's death! how the note must have sounded in a pæan of joy, "Arise, and go over this Jordan!" Under the

the people believed that God meant them to be abundantly blessed. Yet there were conditions. They were to realize that God called them forward. They were to sanctify themselves—not merely to go through a ceremonial cleansing, but to yield themselves to God's service. They were to accept Joshua as leader, rendering him implicit obedience.

The speaker went on to describe in further detail the circumstances under which Israel passed into the "land flowing with milk and honey," and to point out that when Joshua's end came he said, "not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake concerning you." "Which things," said the speaker, referring to to these experiences of Israel, "are an allegory."

It is one thing to make profession; another thing to take possession. In conclusion, the Prebendary pictured individual members of the audience alleging various infirmities which prevented them from entering into the enjoyment of the fulfilment of God's promises, and went on to describe such as living a "Kadesh Barnea" life. One melancholy result of this is found in the lamentable fact that the children of professing Christians largely abandon the religion of their parents, since they find in it neither liberty nor power. Those Israelites who entered into Canaan became the representatives of Jehovah to the surrounding nations; and so the present day heathen may see in those who live the victorious life, the representatives and

AMBASSADORS OF THE LORD.

The speaker's final words were spoken with deep feeling, and he earnestly engaged in prayer that it might be said of that Keswick audience, that they "hasted and passed over."

In the Pavilion, Capt. Tottenham was chairman. After prayer and praise, he read John xx. 11-18, deducing therefrom the lesson that the blessing for which we look at this Convention, comes to us individually, through a fuller revelation of the Lord Jesus Christ, to hearts prepared. The address was by Rev. F. S. Webster, and was founded upon Isa. xlviii. 18, "O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea." God's voice has come to us during the past year; to the nation in the troubles abroad; and to this Convention, in the decease of the beloved G. H. C. Macgregor. We are expected to maintain the attitude of hearkening unto God with close attention, careful remembrance, and loyal obedience. Peace can never be divorced from righteousness; and, as the sea speaks to us of Divine judgment, our righteousness comes from that judgment which was poured out in the atoning sacrifice of Christ. The ocean has much to say to us concerning God's controlling and abundant power in our life's conflict, the stimulation of our spiritual activities, and nature's example to us in her voice of praise. The simple condition of hearkening to God's commandments will bring us the blessing, not at the close of the Convention, but at its very beginning.

The Children of the Papacy.

THE animation now being displayed by Rome is a desperate attempt to regain a discredited authority over the human conscience. Rome's cry, like that of the demons of old, is, "Let us alone!" But, the Lord be praised, this request is not granted. Men and women, with the martyr spirit and cast in heroic mould, are not only witnessing against error, but are carrying war into the enemy's camp.

Christian travellers who do not leave behind them their interest in the Lord's work when they put on their holiday attire, sometimes cheer and help such lonely workers, and more might do so, doubtless, if they knew where to find them. All the world knows of Pisa, with its leaning tower and other objects of attraction, and a stream of English and American travellers passes through it annually; but how few ever look in upon the Carruthers Evangelical Institute! And yet here, and at Cisanello and San Michele (as readers of The Christian well know) a lonely woman has been at work for nearly thirty years, until now between 400 and 500 children and young people are gathered under Protestant teaching and influence.

A lady of culture, forced to reside abroad on account of the feebleness of her health, yearning over the souls of the poor children of the Papacy, Miss Carruthers has consecrated her time and strength and property to this great work. She saw that to effect her purpose she would need to place herself under the protection of the Government. In her schools for boys, girls, and infants, she wisely combines with Bible teaching the subjects of an elementary education. The Protestants are "a mass of impostors," said a ribald dialogue, recited by three young girls in the presence of the Archbishop of Pisa last year. "The English misse bribes her pupils with English sovereigns and Italian francs," said this slanderous effusion. But the Italian Government has conferred upon "the English misse" the gold medal of merit, and expressed its respect and admiration for her work.

Miss Carruthers is at present on a brief visit to England, and will be happy, so far as time and strength permit, to attend drawing-room and other meetings, and tell her deeply interesting story. With the unselfish devotion which has characterized all her efforts, she has, of her own free will, placed all the school property in trust to secure its permanent employment in the work so dear to her heart. Further information may be had from Rev. John Tuckwell, 32, Sarre Road, West Hampstead, N.W.

Penny Stories.—Those who have proved the utility of "Horner's Penny Stories" will be glad to know that most of the authors who made the stories famous are now writing for Mr. John Bateman, who had the management of "Horner's" until they passed into the hands of another publishing house. He is bringing out the "Grace Pettman Stories," of which three numbers have been issued. They are full of Gospel truth, as well as literary interest, and will, we trust, direct many a careless reader to serious thoughts of life and eternity. They may be obtained from 27, Paternoster Square, E.C., and of most booksellers.

Northfield in Conference.

SUMMER at Northfield and no D. L. Moody does, indeed, seem out of keeping. Yet from his silent resting-place on Round Top, as well as from the various seminary buildings, come forceful assurances that he "being dead, yet speaketh."

The Conferences are assembling as in former years, with no less earnestness of expectancy, no less seriousness of purpose, no less definiteness of realization. The students in hundreds have come and gone—young men from June 29 to July 8, young women July 13 to 23—and in point of numbers and importance of institutions represented, these gathering have been the largest ever held in Northfield. The meetings were marked by a deep spiritual interest, and impressed those attending them as successful in every particular.

The speakers appointed for the first included: Bishop J. H. Vincent, Kansas; Rev. R. A. Torrey, Chicago; Rev. Dyson Hague, Toronto; Dr. C. E. Jefferson and Mr. Robert E. Speer, New York; Rev. Dr. Jacob Chamberlain, India; Dr. Wm. Ashmore, China; and Rev. John G. Paton, New Hebrides. Mr. John R. Mott to preside, and Prof. D. B. Towner to lead the singing.

The ladies were addressed by Dr. Scofield, Northfield; Mr. Robert E. Speer; Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin, D.D., Brooklyn; Mrs. Margaret Sangster, New York; Dr. Pauline Root, India; Mrs. Montgomery, Rochester, N.Y.; Dr. Jacob Chamberlain, India; Dr. John G. Paton, New Hebrides; Miss Effie K. Price; Miss Mary L. Babcock; Miss Bertha Condé, and other Y.W.C.A. leaders.

The "Northfield," having been nearly doubled in size and capacity, now forms an imposing hotel for the reception of visitors. Provision is made for the Y.M.C.A. camp to remain pitched right through the summer till September, where employés of city business houses and others (whether members of the Y.M.C.A. or not) may combine spiritual privilege with hearty recreation. While at liberty to attend the meetings or not, they are made welcome to all. Situated on the mountain side, in a grove known as "Cathedral Pines," about half a mile from the village, the Camp is thus within easy walking distance to the other centres of interest, and yet affords absolute retirement. Walks, drives, a swimming float on the Connecticut River, boating, tennis courts and base ball field are included in the attractions, from a physical point of view.

On August 2, commences the General Christian Conference for the twenty-first time, and applications for rooms have come in earlier and faster than ever. All this goes to show that it was not merely the personality of Mr. Moody, but the presence of the Holy Spirit that have made these notable gatherings what they are.

The speakers expected at the Conference are Revs. F. B. Meyer and G. Campbell Morgan, London; William Newman Hall, Dublin; C. I. Scofield, D.D., Northfield; Peyton Hoge, D.D., Louisville, Ky.; T. S. Hamlin, D.D., Washington; J. F. Carson, D.D., Brooklyn; Wilton Merle Smith, D.D., New York; Dr. R. A. Torrey, Chicago; H. C. Mabie, D.D., Boston; Mr. R. E. Speer, New York; and others. Mr. William H. Stanes, Nilgris Hills, India, will conduct special meetings for children. Music will be in charge of Messrs. Ira D. Sankey and George C. Stebbins, assisted by Mr. F. H. Jacobs.

In his circular invitation, Mr. W. R. Moody says:

In recent years the burden of my father's prayer has been for a general revival. The answer to these prayers is being realized with the close of the century, and the reports of widespread blessing are but an earnest of still greater tidings. "I know how much better it would be for me to go, but I believe we are on the eve of another revival like that of '57, and I want to have a hand in it," were the words with which he answered the summons to withdraw from active work last fall. God seemingly gave his servant a prophetic vision of the conquests of the Cross in the beginning of the twentieth century before taking him to be with Himself. To the human leader of former years has been awarded the fulness of joy in the presence of his Master; to us who remain is given the privilege of continuing in active service.

In preparation for this work Christians are feeling the need of spiritual blessings upon themselves individually and upon their churches. To wait upon God for such blessing is the purpose of this Conference, and the prayers of Christians are earnestly requested in behalf of this object—not only of those who attend the Conference, but of all who sympathize with its purpose and desire the extension of God's kingdom.

No human agency can account for the results of these gatherings; and although keenly missing father's presence this year, it is with confident assurance in the same source of unfailing strength in whom he ever relied that I extend a cordial invitation to Christians to meet at Northfield, Mass., as formerly.

Mr. Moody's Life.

WE are glad to say that several generous friends have purchased copies of this book for presentation to ministers and others. In one case 600 copies have been so distributed; in two other cases 100 copies; and in several instances smaller quantities have been circulated for the benefit of workers who could not otherwise have obtained them.

One gentleman accompanied his gift with a note in the following terms: "Feeling anxious to bring before the ministers in C—— a copy of the official authorized life of the late D. L. Moody, believing that it is calculated to promote the revival of spiritual life and of Gospel endeavour, which we all feel to be so essential, I send for your acceptance copy of this work, trusting the perusal of the same would be very much blessed. With every good wish, &c."

Mr. Josiah Spiers, the well-known worker among the young, writes: "I have finished reading the Life of Mr. Moody, and as soon as others have had the same privilege, hope to read it all through again. Oh what a delightful treat I have had! I thought that I knew something of the great evangelist before, but find out that it was only a very meagre and superficial knowledge that I had of the man and his grand work. Before I knew him at all, I followed him in several of his earlier campaigns, holding children's missions in York, Newcastle, Shields, Edinburgh, Leith, Glasgow, and Dundee, but I think the first time I met him was in Dublin.

"How easy it was to speak to the children in these places shortly after the great awakenings at Moody's meetings! And at many of them we had very large gatherings, and hundreds at each place were dealt with in the after meetings. In those seven cities alone I have just been reckoning up that we dealt personally with about 4,500 young people, many of whom are devoted workers of the Master to-day.

"The son, whom I remember well as a little boy, has indeed done his work splendidly, and produced a book that will live and work in countless lives, I should think, to the very end of time. May it be read by hundreds of thousands."

Mr. Sankey's Visit.

MR. IRA D. SANKEY expects to leave America on August 25, and to be in London the second week in September, after a few days spent in Ireland. A great public welcome meeting will be held (D.V.) in Exeter Hall on Thursday, Sept. 13, under the auspices of the London Evangelistic Singers' Union, and an influential committee, this being also the Silver Jubilee celebration of the London Choirs formed by Mr. Sankey in 1875. Those who desire to be present are asked to keep this date open.

A special practice meeting has been arranged for Saturday, August 18, at 7.30, in No. 3 Room, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, to practise hymns selected by Mr. Sankey from his new book, "Gospel Hymns and Sacred Songs." All members of the Singers' Union, and all who were members of Mr. Sankey's choirs on his previous visits to London with the late D. L. Moody, are invited to attend. Books will be provided. Other rehearsals will follow.

Mr. Sankey has expressed a special desire to meet in September the old friends who sang with him in 1875 and 1883-84. Will all such, even if already members of the Union, kindly send their names and addresses as soon as possible to the Hon. Secretary, Mr. H. Beaton, 54, Leigh Road, Highbury, London, N. Some may even be inclined to come up from the country for such a unique occasion.

Notes from New York.

ON June 22 a bronze tablet to the memory of Jonathan Edwards was unveiled in the First Church of Christ at Northampton, Mass., where that eminent divine served as colleague pastor and pastor from 1727 to 1750. The tablet represents him addressing his people, the figure being two-thirds life size. The tablet was unveiled by the oldest living descendant of Edwards, and the exercises included greetings from Yale where Edwards was graduated, and taught in 1723, and from Princetown, of which college he was made president in 1758.

Last Saturday, Rev. A. Lambert, formerly a Redemptorist priest, but now an ordained elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church, went to Porto Rico from here with Rev. Charles W. Drees, D.D., to engage in mission work there. Dr. Drees is the superintendent of all the operations of the Methodist Episcopal Church on the island. An interesting item connected with Mr. Lambert's departure, however, is that the Paulist Fathers here have once more exemplified the tactics of the Roman Catholic Church with regard to priests who leave it. Mr. Lambert was converted at Christ's Mission conducted by Rev. James A. O'Connor (himself formerly a Catholic priest), in 1894. A year later he went as a missionary to Jamaica, and a little while after his departure there came to the mission building Catholic papers from both Maine and Texas, saying that he was insane and had been placed in an asylum. The Maine paper bore the date of the very day when Mr. Lambert sailed for Jamaica.

Last week, a few days before the day when Mr. Lambert was to leave here for Porto Rico Pastor O'Connor received a communication from a gentleman in Vancouver, B.C., saying that in a letter published there as having been received from a Paulist Father in New York the statement was made that Mr. Lambert had been "reconciled" to the church. Under the circumstances, few more damaging statements could be made, and Pastor O'Connor sent two friends at different times to Father Deshon the Superior of the Paulists here, to inquire if he had written the letter; but they only received evasive replies from him. Then a lawyer, who is a relative of the celebrated Dr. Döllinger, of Old Catholic fame, went with Mr. Lambert to confront Father Deshon with the fact that Mr. Lambert was still a Protestant and an active one at that. The Paulist Superior seemed surprised to see Mr. Lambert, and virtually admitted that the Vancouver letter might have been written from there, though he said he "knew no more about it than the man in the moon." As Father Deshon poses as a great light among the Paulists, whose special mission it is to convert Protestants, he is likely to have good reason in the near future to wish he had left Father Lambert to go his way to Porto Rico in peace. ROGER MARTIN.

New York, July 8.

From Mrs. D. L. Moody.

MRS. D. L. MOODY writes us that Major Whittle has returned from Clifton Springs to Northfield, to the house of his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Moody. The Major, we grieve to say, is very ill, being unable at present to use either hands or arms. No evangelist of our time did his work more thoroughly, and it has been truly said of him that there were no confessions of Christ from which there were fewer backsliders than those under his preaching. Many who love him will pray for him in his present weak condition.

Mrs. Moody adds: "We shall look eagerly for news from South Africa; and with you and many others look very anxiously to China. Several of our Seminary girls are missionaries in China; one of them visited us last summer here. She and some others were in Peking. I hope you will remember the meetings here and especially the August Conference. Please pray that my son, Mr. W. R. Moody, may be guided."

International S.S. Lesson.

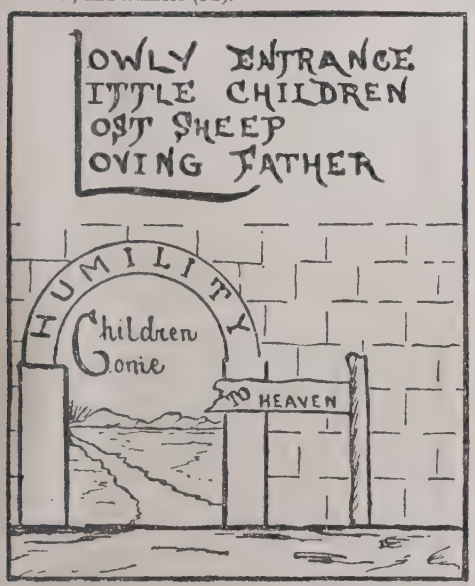
August 5, 1900.

Jesus and the Children (Matt. xviii. 1-14).

Golden Text: "Suffer the little children to come unto Me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God" (Mark x. 14).

Introduction.

Mark ix. 33 tells how the disciples had been disputing about who should be the greatest among them; they had yet to learn (Matt. xviii. 1) that "the greatest" is "little" (2). All who would enter the kingdom of heaven must be willing to be little—that is, little in their own sight, childlike (not childish), obedient, and humble (34).



Key to Blackboard Plan.—Entrance to Heaven's Path is by the gate of Humility; the traveller to Zion must take the child's place, and he shall hear the call, "Children, old and young, come, come, come."

1.—Lowly Entrance.

Very low is the entrance into the kingdom (3), and why? Because we have to leave all sorts of things behind, and if the entrance was high we might think we could take these things in too. The bundle of pride, the box of selfishness, and all other luggage of sin must go, you will have to stoop as it is, and you certainly will find no room to get through if you take any bundles with you (4).

If an eye, a foot, a hand, make you do wrong (8-9), you must be willing to part even with them to gain the heavenly kingdom (Matt. v. 29). The soul is more precious than all the parts of the body (3). Converted=changed. To be Christ-like, and He was humble (Phil. ii. 7-8). Therefore see James iv. 10, and Is. lvii. 15.

2.—Little Children.

Seven times does the word "little" occur.

1. We are to become as little children (3).
2. We are to love little children (5).
3. We are to deal gently with little children (6).
4. We must give little children their right place (10), and so on (Matt. x. 42; Mark ix. 36).

A natural child is trustful, truthful, obedient, pure, gentle, hopeful, humble. A Christian life is a glorified childhood.

3.—Lost Sheep.

Tell the story (12, 13) in the words of Sankey's hymn.

"There were ninety and nine that safely lay
In the shelter of the fold,
But one was out on the hills away,
Far off from the streets of gold—
Away on the mountains wild and bare,
Away from the tender Shepherd's care."

John x. will show all about the fold, and how the sheep can be safe. Tell of the favourite picture, "The Good Shepherd," with the little lamb in his arms, and the other sheep walking by his side.

4.—Loving Father.

How God loves the children (14), the young people. He would not have one perish (John iii. 16; Jonah iv. 11). God cared for 120,000 tiny children. Find other places in the Old Testament of how God took notice of little ones. Hagar's son, Moses, &c.

Russian Exiles.—It is painful to note, in face of the statements which have appeared in regard to the alleged abolition of the punishment of banishment to Siberia, that, unfortunately, the exemptions do not include those noble sufferers for conscience sake whose numbers are so strikingly large in Russia.

Points and Outlines.

Sunday Religion.

Luke ix. 23.

Among persons professing religion, may be found the following types:—(1) Those who are religious in one place (the church), but not in another (the outside world); (2) Those who are religious in words but not in works; (3) Those who are religious when it pays, but not otherwise. We should be as religious in bargains as in worship; in storm as in sunshine. Real religion involves self-denial; following Christ may take us far from our own wishes and inclinations.

The Cloud of Glory.

In the Wilderness (Ex. xvi. 10). It is seen where grace found him (Deut. xxxii. 10); love led him (Ps. cvi. 9); mercy fed him (Deut. viii. 16).

In the Temple (1 Kings viii. 10, 12); where there is no room for sin (1 John iii. 4; 2 Cor. vi. 16); no room for Satan (Matt. iv. 10); no room for self (Gal. ii. 20).

On the Mountain (Luke ix. 34, 35) where there was the glory of his countenance (v. 29); the glory of his company (v. 30); the glory of his command (v. 35). H. R. Francis.

Christ All and in All.

(Col. iii. 11.)

1. Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ (Acts xvi. 31).
2. Live Christ (Phil. i. 21).
3. Preach Christ (2 Cor. iv. 5).
4. Be determined to know nothing but Christ (1 Cor. ii. 2).
5. Have the mind of Christ (1 Cor. ii. 16).
6. Abide in Christ (1 John ii. 28).
7. Suffer for Christ (1 Peter iv. 13, 14, 16).
8. Confess Christ (Rom. x. 9; 1 Tim. vi. 12, 13).
9. Wait for Christ (2 Thess. iii. 5: 1 Thess. i. 10).
10. We must all appear before Christ (2 Cor. 5, 10).
11. We shall be rewarded by Christ (Rev. vii. 9-17).
12. For ever with Christ (Phil. i. 23; 1 Thess. iv. 17). J. P. Coster.

The Blood of Sprinkling.

What a voice there is in the Atonement!—a voice which pleads for holiness and love, for justice and grace, for truth and mercy. "See that ye refuse not Him that speaketh." If you take away the blood of sprinkling from the Gospel, you have silenced it. It has no voice, if this be gone. "Oh," they say, "the Gospel has lost its power!" What wonder, when they have made it a dumb Gospel! If ever there should come a wretched day when all our pulpits shall be full of modern thought, and the old doctrine of a substitutionary sacrifice shall be exploded, then will there remain no word of comfort for the guilty or hope for the despairing. Hushed will be for ever those silver notes which now console the living and cheer the dying; a dumb spirit will possess this sullen world, and no voice of joy will break the blank silence of despair. The Gospel speaks through the propitiation for sin, and if that be denied, it speaketh no more. C. H. Spurgeon.

The Evangelical Alliance Quarterly for July (1d. Morgan & Scott), has many features worthy of notice. The illustrated life sketch of the Fräulien Von Weling forms a fitting memento of this strong, warm-hearted servant of God. The story of the Reform Movement in China, and an article by Count Bernstorff on "Conventions in Germany," will repay careful perusal.

In Lambeth Dust-Yards. -Miss Reid, 33, Keildon Road, New Wandsworth, S.W., writes: "For the past two years a quiet work has been carried on among the women employed in the dust-yards in Commercial Road, Lambeth. A crêche is very much needed in this district for the babies, to which they could be sent while their mothers are at work in the yards. At present the children have to be left with neighbours. Gifts of old cradles, baby clothes, toys, furniture, or money will be thankfully received."

Christian Warders and Attendants.—The Christian Union for Social Service, in issuing an appeal for Christian warders and attendants, emphasizes the desirability and necessity of providing training institutions for those who desire, in Christ's name, to devote their life to the care and reform of prisoners. At the Lingfield Colony there are special opportunities for training such men. There are now fifty men in the Colony, chiefly from workhouses, and in addition to the experience and discipline gained by their direction and guardianship, instruction will be given on the duties required from warders and attendants in prisons and asylums. Further particulars may be obtained from the resident director, Rev. J. L. Brooks, The Homestead, Lingfield, Surrey.

Evangelistic.

The Tent Campaign.

NOTWITHSTANDING the almost tropical weather during the past week the attendance in the tents has been remarkably good.

The work of conversion goes on almost without a break. It is no uncommon thing for thirty or forty persons to come out definitely on the Lord's side at one service.

From the tents at Shepherd's Bush, Fulham, Brixton, Forest Gate, and other places, come tidings of sinners saved and backsliders restored. From Brixton we hear of a drunkard of twenty years' standing, in delirium tremens one Sunday, and sitting at the foot of Jesus the next.

At Walthamstow, a man who was formerly a preacher, but fell through drink, has been restored. A Christian man brought his wife—a Roman Catholic—to the service. She was convicted of sin, and surrendered to the sinner's Friend.

At Shepherd's Bush, a brother and sister came and knelt at the front of the platform, seeking the Saviour. The brother had been a temperance advocate for sixteen years, but always felt that he wanted something more.

Veteran workers on every hand say that they have never known such a seeking of the Lord on the part of the masses. We are almost afraid to tell all we could of the wonderful work God is doing, lest it should be met with unbelief, and the Holy Spirit grieved. Tents are being opened at Woolwich, Enfield, Wandsworth, and other places. S. L.

Situation of Tents.—Fulham, New King's Road; Brixton, Canterbury Road, near Brixton Station; Walthamstow, Hoe Street; Willesden Green, Church End; Woolwich, Plumstead Marshes, near station; Enfield Town, Baker Street; Shepherd's Bush, near Bush Hotel; Wandsworth, South Street and Buckhold Road; Lewisham, Weir Side Road, High Street, Lewisham.

A correspondent who has been impressed with the work of the branch of the Evangelistic Mission at Brighton, writes:—"Mr. H. Hurditch has gathered around him a circle of earnest and thoughtful people. Services are held on Sunday, open-air work is carried on, there is a promising Sunday school, and on Thursday evenings Mr. Hurditch holds bright little meetings in the Athenæum Hall, which are usually well attended. Personal visitation also forms another valuable factor in the evangelistic efforts. Mr. Hurditch's desire is to secure permanent premises where the work of the mission could be more vigorously prosecuted, and where all the agencies which circle round a Christian community could be initiated."

Obituary.

MRS. H. M. MATHESON.

MANY will hear with sorrow that Agnes Ann, widow of the late Hugh Mackay Matheson, fell asleep on Saturday last. Mrs. Matheson has reached her seventieth year, and died at Little Scatwell, Ross-shire.

MRS. A. N. SOMERVILLE, GLASGOW.

It is with regret we have to record the death of Mrs. A. N. Somerville, Glasgow, the beloved widow of Dr. A. N. Somerville, late pastor of Free Anderston Church. Seeking to make herself of no reputation, it was her constant joy to render service to her partner in his ministry, for which she will long be remembered and loved. We hope to give further particulars of this departed servant of God in an early issue.

REV. J. L. RENTOUL, WISHAW.

Much regret is felt by a wide circle in Ireland at the death of Rev. John L. Rentoul, of Wishaw. Deceased, who has died in the prime of life, belonged to a ministerial family in the Presbyterian Church. His father was the late Rev. John L. Rentoul, of Ballymoney, and his brother, Rev. Jas. Rentoul, of Dromore. Like nearly all the members of the family to which he belonged, Mr. Rentoul was an able and popular preacher. He was also a faithful and devoted minister and pastor. His first charge was Lisburn, from which he removed to Sunderland, and from there to Wishaw, in Scotland. At each church he gathered around him a large congregation, by whom he was deeply beloved.

REV. J. MANTON SMITH.

The death occurred on Tuesday of last week of Rev. J. Manton Smith, at his residence in Northampton. It was only in December last he was able partially to resume his engagements, after a long illness, which resulted in the removal of his left leg. Having returned home after a mission in London, only a few weeks ago in a very enfeebled condition, it soon became evident he was suffering from Bright's disease. On Saturday week he lapsed into a state of unconsciousness, and shortly after noon on the following Tuesday he passed away. His numerous friends will be saddened by the news of his death, and many, we doubt not, will remember in prayer the bereaved widow and sorrowing children. We hope to give a portrait of our departed brother in a future issue, with sketch from the pen of his associate in Gospel work, Rev. W. Y. Fullerton, of Leicester.

REV. J. GORDON WATT, M.A.

The death is announced of Rev. J. Gordon Watt, who a few months ago was appointed editorial superintendent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in succession to Dr. W. Wright. Mr. Watt was an Aberdonian, and born in the "granite city" in 1868, so that he was still comparatively a young man. After receiving his early education at the Free Church Normal School and the Grammar School, he graduated at Aberdeen University in 1889, with first-class honours in mathematics, carrying off the Town Council Gold Medal. Entering at Mansfield College, he had a brilliant career at the University of Oxford, and held both the Pusey and Ellerton Hebrew Scholarship, and the Denyer and Johnson Theological Scholarship. He subsequently studied as a Dr. Williams' Divinity Scholar at the Universities of Marburg and Berlin. Some six years ago Mr. Watt began work in the Bible House, and in 1896 he was appointed one of the principal secretaries as colleague of Rev. J. Sharp, M.A. Mr. Watt fell ill simultaneously with his appointment as editorial superintendent. He was a deacon of the Highgate Congregational Church, and well known as an energetic and enthusiastic worker, especially in the missionary cause.

About Books.

DR. HANDLEY MOULE ON EPHESIANS.

BY his volume, entitled Ephesian Studies: Expository Readings on the Epistle of Saint Paul to the Ephesians, Prof. Handley Moule completes a series of studies upon the epistles associated with the First Roman Imprisonment of the Apostle to the Gentiles. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.) As in dealing with the Epistles to Philippi, Colossæ, and Philemon, so also with this to Ephesus (or rather Asia), Dr. Moule aims to exhibit something of the treasures of "edification, exhortation, and comfort," with which the marvellous document is filled. Leaving the more systematic treatment which others have followed, he has given us what others have commonly failed to supply—sound exegesis leading up to, and combined with, practical application. The historical and critical could each have engaged Dr. Moule's earnest attention; but his purpose was spiritual rather than intellectual, and as a consequence we have in this book (and indeed in the entire series) much that is beautiful as well as stimulating, precious as well as instructive. The pages abound in facts and views well digested; and are calculated to assist devotional meditation on the part of thoughtful readers. Moreover, as they present a careful rendering of the sacred text, together with valuable notes, explanatory and illustrative, they should not be overlooked by any who pretend to an acquaintance with scholarly Christian literature.

THE MESSAGES OF THE BIBLE.

WHETHER aiming to unfold the teaching or to apply the lessons of the Bible, we do well in the first place to acquaint ourselves with the general material and its primary meaning. In other words, we shall be most sure of arriving at the true spiritual meaning of Scripture if we first come to an understanding of its literal message.

This important principle lies at the base of a great undertaking, of which three sectional volumes have already appeared. With the general title, "The Messages of the Bible," the work is to extend to twelve volumes, which will cover the entire Old and New Testament Scriptures. The general editors are—Frank K. Saunders, Ph.D., Woolsey Professor of Biblical Literature in Yale University; and Charles F. Kent, Ph.D., Professor of Biblical Literature and History in Brown University.

The parts already out are—The Messages of the Earlier Prophets—Amos, Hosea, Isaiah (i. to xxxix.), Micah, Nahum, Zephaniah, Jeremiah, Habakkuk (by the General Editors); The Messages of the Later Prophets—Ezekiel, Obadiah, Isaiah (xl. to lxvi.), Haggai, Zechariah, Joel, Jonah, Malachi (by the General Editors); and The Messages of Paul—Thessalonians, Galatians, Corinthians, Romans, Colossians, Philemon, Ephesians, and Philippians (by Professor G. B. Stevens, D.D., Ph.D., Dwight Professor of Systematic Theology in Yale University). The last named is the eleventh volume of the series; the others are the first two in order.

The plan of this great work furnishes the maximum of exegetical guidance in the minimum of words. The "messages" are arranged in the order of time; analyzed and provided with sectional headings and marginal connections; and the various books are freely rendered in paraphrase. There is also introductory matter; but there is an utter absence of that wordiness and length of treatment by which some teachers obscure their meaning or are prone to weight their instructions.

It will be obvious that such work as this may be done in more ways than one. The scholars who have put the results of years of investigation and thought into these pages, evidently accept much that goes by the name of Higher Criticism, although they conduct no set discussions on the subject. They have, nevertheless, given us volumes that occupy a place all their own in helpful suggestion for the exposition of Scripture. (3s. 6d. each. James Clarke & Co.)

Hints on the Conduct of Business—public and private, by Sir Courtenay Boyle, K.C.B., secretary to the Board of Trade. (Macmillan & Co.) These pages are singularly practical, and might with profit be read both by principals and agents in commercial as well as public life.

A truly useful handbook to place in the hands of young teachers and Biblical students is The Bible: Its Trial and Triumph. Dr. J. Philip vigorously protests against new theories, which undermine the positive evidence of the inspiration of both Old and New Testaments and their Divine authority. The writer is naturally sanguine as to the Bible's final triumph. (2s. Marshall Brothers.)

Nuru, the Shepherd Boy, by Rev. Arthur Le Feuvre, of the C.M.S., Bengal, depicts in a vivid way the every-day life of a Hindu shepherd boy. It is from the pen of one who has spent years in preaching the Gospel to the heathen. (1s. Religious Tract Society.)

Rev. W. H. Carslaw is following up his edition of "The Scots Worthies," with monographs on typical "Heroes of the Covenant." He begins with a choice little volume, Life and Times of William Guthrie, M.A., minister of Fenwick. (1s. 6d. nett. Alex. Gardner). This is the Guthrie whom John Owen described as "one of the greatest divines that ever wrote." Mr. Carslaw gives a welcome epitome of Guthrie's book "The Christian's Great Interest," so frequently referred to by Dr. Andrew Bonar in his published diary, in connection with the work of grace in his own soul.

Home in Heathenland: Sketches of Missionary Life and Work in British Central Africa. By George Aitken. (1s. G. A. W. Fraser, 10, Belmont Street, Aberdeen). The author of this deeply interesting little book was formerly a member of the Free Church Livingstonia Mission, and is now engaged in mission work near Glasgow. Among the marvellous work done by modern missions, the progress of the Livingstonia Mission has been unique, for in a quarter-century the great heart of the dark land has been opened up, and the foundation laid for future development. Mr. Aitken's simple narrative has a touch of the romantic about it; there are excellent illustrations, also portraits of Mrs. George Aitken and Mr. James H. Aitken (the author's wife and brother), who both died on the field.

THE PENNY BOOK OF DAILY DEVOTION is a publication which may prove helpful in some circles. It has been compiled for the Century National Prayer Union, and for general use, by the Editor of The Quiver. (Cassell & Co.)

Two valuable additions to the "Excellent Women" series are—MRS. SEWELL, the well known writer; and ELIZABETH GILBERT, the worker among the blind. Both are from the practised pen of Mrs. Gorges. (1d. each. Religious Tract Society.)

Mr. E. Kaufmann, 5 and 6, Paternoster Square, E.C., has issued a tasteful condolence card entitled OUR LIVING DEAD. The lines enclosed are by Adelina Fermi, the ruling idea being that expressed by the Lord Himself, "All live unto Him" (Luke xx. 38).

The leaflet, GOD NEVER MAKES A MISTAKE, by Pastor T. L. Johnson, has reached its fourth edition (1s. per 100). GOD KNOWS ALL ABOUT IT is a short poem by the same writer (6d. per 100. Sutton & Co., Boscombe; or the Author, "Liberia," Boscombe, Bournemouth).

A NEW C.E. BADGE.—Christian Endeavourers will welcome the new badge and emblem, which is made in American rolled gold, in the form of lapel buttons (2s. 6d.), brooches (2s. 6d.), and breast-pins (1s. 6d.); chased, 6d. extra. (C. E. Harris, Winter Gardens, Blackpool.)

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton will publish immediately THE ORIGIN OF THE ANGLO-BOER WAR REVEALED, a work which is likely to create the liveliest interest and discussion, especially as, although written by a Transvaal burgher, it upholds and vindicates British policy. The author is Mr. C. H. Thomas, formerly a prominent burgher of the Orange Free State, and until recently, one of the best known citizens of Belfast in the Transvaal.

Church Notes.

Rev. G. E. Butt (Primitive Methodist), of Aliwal North, is conducting missionary services in various parts of the country. His narrative of experiences during the war awakens much interest.

The Great Central Railway Company has leased a site at a nominal rent to the Primitive Methodist church at Neasden. An iron building will be erected, and the cause will be attached to the Kilburn Circuit.

Rev. A. H. Drysdale and Mr. Grant Paton, of Liverpool, have been appointed delegates to represent the English Presbyterian Synod at the Waldensian Synod, to be held in September in La Tour.

It is proposed, in connection with the Baptist Church of Melbourne Hall, Leicester, to make a special effort to celebrate the entrance upon the new century by raising £4,000 for the extension of the work of the church. The amount already promised reaches £3,700.

Under the auspices of the Colonial and Continental Church Society, Rev. S. M. Stewart and a lay worker are hoping soon to go to Ungava, to take the Gospel to Esquimaux living there in conditions of heathen degradation.

The Congregational church at Dorking has just been reopened after renovation, costing £300. The services were conducted by Rev. J. P. Gledstone, of Streatham, and collections amounting to £10 were taken for the Indian Famine Fund.

The Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's have appointed Rev William Ewart B. Barter, at present Curate-in-Charge of Grosvenor Chapel, and formerly Rector of Hanwell, to the vicarage of Edmonton, vacant by the removal of Rev. R. S. Gregory to Much Hadham.

Rev. Charles Garrett's successor in the Wesleyan Mission, at Liverpool, is Rev. Joseph Jackson, who has had experience of such work under Rev. Peter Thompson. Rev. Arthur Wood, who had been designated for Liverpool, is appointed to the new Bow and Poplar Mission.

The new Baptist chapel at Bishop's Stortford (Rev. W. Walker) has been opened. A devotional service was conducted by Pastor H. E. Stone, of St. John's Wood, who preached on the words (2 Chron. vi. 35); "Then hear Thou from the heavens their supplication and maintain their cause." In the public meeting which was subsequently held, Revs. W. Bampton Taylor, H. E. Stone, and J. R. Wood, took part.

Fallen Asleep.

At Edinburgh, Rev. JAMES MERTER DUNLOP, for many years minister of Pollokshaws United Presbyterian Church. Since his retiral Mr. Dunlop had lived in Edinburgh.—Mr. GEORGE GIDDINS, of Islington, for over thirty years a member of Union Chapel, Islington.—Rev. JAMES HILL, M.A., minister of Bourke Street Church, Sydney. As an active worker in connection with the affairs of the New South Wales Congregational Union, Mr. Hill was at all times highly appreciated by his ministerial brethren. In 1886 he held the office of chairman.—Mr. HENRY STUART OGLETHORPE, solicitor, and member of a well-known Wesleyan family of Lancaster.

Notes & Comments

THE civilized world was struck dumb with horror at the news that on Sunday evening the King of Italy had fallen by the hand of an Anarchist assassin. It will be long before his country will be ruled by a better, a kinder, or a more sympathetic monarch than King Humbert. He was one who pre-eminently interested himself in the affairs of his people, and made the conditions of life of the working-classes a special subject of solicitude. Twice in years gone by he had narrowly escaped assassination, but his noble qualities had so endeared him to his subjects that all thoughts of danger had long since passed away, and no special precautions of protection were taken as he fearlessly went forth to the prize distribution which proved the last act of his life. His bereaved relatives and country will be assured of the heartfelt sympathy of all right thinking persons the world over, led by our own ever-sympathetic Queen.

Since the above lines were penned, our gracious Sovereign has herself suffered bereavement in the death of her second son, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg. The "Sailor Prince," as he had been familiarly called, succumbed to heart paralysis on Monday night, at the age of fifty-six. Her Majesty and the Royal Family will share the widespead and loyal sympathy of the people at this especially trying time.

Early in the history of the South African War there were general calls to prayer and intercession among the churches for its speedy cessation, and earnest gatherings were held in many places. Though the struggle still continues, and valuable lives are daily lost in battle and from disease, these calls seem to have fallen into almost entire silence. The long tragedy drags on side by side with the newer and still darker horrors in China, and demonstrate the utter inability of earthly governments, even the most civilized, to avert bloodshed among the nations. The surrender of five thousand Boers, reported on Monday, seems to bring the end nearer. Christian people and churches surely should be fervent in their intercession for the restoration of peace and concord. The kingdom of heaven should "suffer violence" at the hands of its true citizens that God's will may be done on earth, and that wars should cease to the ends of it.

The opinions of unconverted Chinamen about the value of missionary work in their country has suddenly assumed a curious importance in the eyes of some of our daily journals. The other day the Express published a strange interview with a "distinguished" Chinese doctor, who accused the missionaries of wilfully interfering with the course of native justice, and so of preparing the way for the Boxer trouble. Later we read in the same journal a statement by the Chinese Consul-General at New York containing these astounding words:—

> There are 6,000,000 of these professing Christians of all sects among my countrymen, and I do not believe 600, or, for that matter, even sixty, of them are sincere in their profession or the better for their protestations. . . . There is great rivalry among missionaries to get my countrymen into their churches. Some of them even pay people a regular salary per month for attending the missions.

These unjust assertions travel far and wide, and while they give pain to many of the vast friends of missions, they help to keep many others away from all sympathy with the work of evangelising the world.

Some thoughtful words from the general secretary to the North China Mission define the true spirit in which we ought to regard matters in that huge empire. Referring to a letter from one of the Christians in Pekin, saying, "if such a thing should happen you would feel at home that lives had not been given in vain," the secretary adds:—

> It is in this spirit that brave men and women have given their lives, or are still living their lives, for China; and these lives throw a beautiful light upon the question of Christian missions, which seems to present to some so great a difficulty. It may not be unwise in this connection, for the comfort of loyal hearts, to look back upon the Indian Mutiny, and then to look on to what Christianity is now doing for India.

As we go to press, we learn with deep sorrow of the murder of several workers of the China Inland Mission. Definite particulars and full details are awaited with much anxiety from the provinces of Shan-si, Chih-li, and Ho-nan.

A friend of the late Lady Salisbury made the following confession:

> The first time I saw her she scarcely looked at me, and I went away and disliked her for seven years. The second time I had a similar experience, and disliked her for seven years more. The third time I met her alone, had a two hours' talk with her, and loved her for ever after.

It was fortunate that these two friends had so good an opportunity of correcting first impressions. Our opinion of other people affects all our intercourse with them; and yet it is the few who take an honest care to form a righteous judgment of others. It should be one of our Christian aims to depend on something better than chance impressions, in a matter which affects the welfare of the world so profoundly.

One of the signs of Christ's witnesses is that they prophesy clothed in sackcloth—they go forth unto Him without the camp, bearing his reproach. Another sign is that they torment them that dwell upon the earth, men of the earth, who have their portion in this life. God is with them to avenge the fatherless and the oppressed, that the man of the earth may no more oppress (Rev. xi.; Ps. x.).

For five years the conviction has been growing and increasing that men who love God and their country must be more aggressive against the drink iniquity. On Sunday night week two Christian men in passing a suburban public house observed a little boy just as high as the counter and a girl of fourteen or fifteen, getting jugs of beer. The men stood at the door and bombarded the crowd inside with red-hot shot from the Bible armoury: "Look not upon the wine," &c.; "Whatsoever a man soweth," &c.; "God so loved the world," &c. Two things impressed them: That the Spirit helped them, and that He gave effect to the missiles. An assault of this kind honours God in his Word, and strikes the publican and the drinkers hard, in a vulnerable part—their conscience. And this is the way to salvation.

Those who only visit beautiful scenery once a year, often envy those that live continually in it, and think how happy they must be to pass their time amid such imposing sights. There are, of course, people who never lose their sense of the beauty by which they are surrounded. But for the most part the inhabitants of charming countries are not very conscious of their charm. Their sense of beauty is dulled by familiarity. The same is true of many spiritually. We live under the shadow, and in the inspiring atmosphere, of Christian truth. The great varieties of revealed religion are ever with us. And yet how few there are who retain anything like a sense of the privilege, the glory, the uplifting influence of these realities of the soul! Surrounded by the mountains of God, and within sight of the Eternal City, most of us live the lives of dullards, and at last mourn the lost zest and stir of our early Christian experience, which are ours no longer.

And yet the remedy for this state of things is ready to hand. If we would regain the sense of natural beauty we must go forth to woo nature as lovers. We must till the soil, and climb the mountains, and explore the valleys. Then the familiar will become new again, and we shall be filled with the old thrill with which we first opened our eyes on the loveliness of sea, and air, and sky. And if we would regain our old sense of the wonderful grace of God in his Gospel, we must re-conquer our commonplaces, and live over again the neglected, worn-out truths that have dropped out of our lives. The soul cannot live upon its memories; it must have fresh food, and renew its youth with perpetual draughts of the ever-flowing stream. To those who thus replenish their spiritual lives at the fountains head, familiarity can only deepen their sources of peace and satisfaction. Instead of "walking in a vain show," they will move in a land ever unfolding beauty and joy.

There can be little doubt, unhappily, that a revival of clericalism is threatened both in France and Italy. The indications are many and they are unmistakable. One reason for this is, that (in France especially) parents have been rudely awakened to the fact that Freethinking has wrought alarming havoc in the lives of their children. The moral tone has been of late years seriously lowered, and the very life of the nation is threatened. Once more, then, the people are disposed to turn to the priests, not that they respect them or believe their dogmas, but they think the morals of their children will be safer if directed by religious people, and Roman Catholicism is the only religion known to the majority of the French people.

Rome is, of course, alive to the situation, and is playing her game accordingly. Always the enemy of education, she is now, however, adapting herself to the modern spirit by seeking to compete with the Government schools. Some of her cleverest preachers—such as the late Père Didon and his successor, Père Feuillette — have abandoned the pulpit for the desk of the schoolmaster. The early training of the French officers of war is largely in the hands of the Jesuits, and with them it is always the Church first. It is very noticeable in the city of Rome itself, that the young students for the priesthood being trained at the College of the Propaganda are a distinctly superior race of men, intellectually, than were their predecessors. Rome is, without doubt, abandoning her ancient policy of keeping the people in ignorance. She is now fighting with modern weapons, and she evidently means to further her interests in that way.

For let it never be forgotten that the objective of all Roman Catholic enterprise is the restoration of the temporal power. The Pope, who sulks in his beautiful palace, is always the "poor prisoner of the Vatican," according to Catholic notions, and the King of Italy is a "usurper." It is extremely significant that when Padre Agostino, the liberal-minded and half-Protestant Franciscan monk, captured Rome a few years ago by his wonderful preaching, the populace went mad over him; but the Papal authorities promptly suppressed him when he ventured publicly to invoke Divine blessing upon the King of Italy. This year a Padre Thedosio preached in the same Church of St. Carlo a violent series of sermons directed against the Government and the King. The police, however, interfered, and closed the mouth of this firebrand preacher in the midst of his diatribes. The students also, in great force, made a public demonstration against him. But the Catholic authorities whine about the "poor martyr." It is not at all likely that the temporal power will be restored to the Pope. It might, however, be a merciful thing if it were, for the reaction would soon be so violent that the Popes would for ever have to leave Rome. But at first the papal rule would be terrible.

In a very noteworthy passage in one of his published sermons, Rev. Dr. Maclaren pointed out that the direction to "commit thy way unto the Lord" is "a word for all life, not only for its great occasions," for the small occasions of every hour, as for the high dividing points "when all the slopes below are wreathed in mist."

Looking to the mysterious way in which the greatest events in our lives have the knack of growing out of the smallest, looking to the power of habit to make any action of the mind almost instinctive, it is of far more importance that we should become accustomed to apply this precept of seeking guidance from God to the million trifles than to the two or three decisions which, at the time of making them, we know to be weighty. If we have not learned the habit of committing the daily-recurring monotonous steps to Him, we shall find it very hard to seek his help when we come to a fork in the road.

By the threatened strike on the Great Eastern Railway, 8,000 men and their families would be affected, to say nothing of the public. The fact illustrates the need, we have so often urged, for a Board of Conciliation, with supreme powers, to deal with such disputes. In the face of so many rival and conflicting statements, it is difficult for outsiders to arrive at a right judgment. On the line in question, it is affirmed that "the porter has to work twelve hours a day and seven days a week for 14s." The wonder is that there are working men members of the Sunday League and other associations who wish to see the Sabbath secularised, overlooking the fact that the result in the case of the toiler could only be seven days' work for six days' wages.

It is startling to hear that even in these days of growing liberty and leisure for the employed, the Early Closing Association is being bombarded with appeals for help in districts where shops are open from 8 a.m. till 9 and 10 p.m., and till midnight on Saturdays. This is a disgraceful state of things, and makes a rational use of life, and the proper care of health impossible for those who are thus overweighted with long hours and hard toil. It is to be feared that among the tradesmen guilty of this oppression there are not a few who are members of Christian churches. Many say they cannot help themselves, as they cannot move without the co-operation of their neighbours. But they can show that their sympathies are with their overworked employés, and take a leading hand in altering a state of things which is so harmful. And the Christian public generally can do still more by bringing legitimate pressure to bear on their tradesmen to join heartily in this needed reform.

Results of Missions.

WE do not remember, since the great revival days of forty years ago, a time when evangelistic missions were so widespread as now. This is especially the case since the Free Church Council has entered so warmly into them, with the result that the churches are but few in which their value is not recognised.

The coming winter is to see a marked development in special endeavour to win souls for Christ, and to quicken the spiritual life of the churches themselves. Added to, and, as we hope, preparing the way for, this great simultaneous movement throughout the country, we have the chain of Gospel tents encircling outer London, and in which the Word is attended with marked encouragement and blessing.

But there are many good people—sincere Christians themselves—who express doubts as to the lasting results of such special efforts, particularly when conducted on an abnormally large scale. Even so earnest a man as Rev. Newman Hall expressed his disappointment in regard to the lasting fruits of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's London Mission in 1875; but his objections were exhaustively met by Mr. David McLaren, J.P., of Putney, who, after protracted investigations, published an article in Messrs. Nelson's Christian Monthly (now out of print), in which he succinctly set forth the decisions at which he had arrived.

The question is not an ephemeral one; ever and anon the old objections are resuscitated with a view to discourage similar work in the present day; and the matter is worthy of the earnest consideration in view of the proposed simultaneous mission in London and provinces, which is planned for the New Year.

Mr. McLaren went to considerable pains to ascertain the views of representative ministers and others in Scotland, Ireland, and London eighteen months after Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit to our shores, and found that the large majority gratefully reported permanent accessions to their membership, and expressed earnest desire that the evangelists would "come again."

That all the professed converts did not stand is not surprising, seeing that the varieties of ground on which the seed was sown were as numerous as in the days when our Lord spoke the parable of the Sower. But the general testimony was that the proportion compared well in the ministerial experience with other special efforts, and better than most.

One of Mr. Newman Hall's chief points itself afforded an explanation as to why his membership in 1875 did not show an unusual increase. He said:

During a revival the conversion of sinners is specially aimed at in preaching. Should not this be the habitual aim of every preacher? Not omitting the instruction of the Church, should not this be an element in every sermon?

Should not the Gospel trumpet sound the notes, "Repent!" "Believe!" week by week? If the regular week-day prayer meeting were crowded by church members, earnestly seeking Divine blessing on the ordinary instrumentality; if all professors felt their responsibility to be workers, not waiting for a revival to bring in the hundreds, but each trying to save individuals; if the pew preached as well as the pulpit, vindicating the doctrine propounded in words, by purity and probity and benevolence of life; if, instead of waiting for an occasional torrent, more advantage were taken of the rain that daily falls, the dew that nightly distils—might we not have a revival all the year round?

Exactly. Where such conditions exist it is not uncommon to find, as in his church, that the annual admissions to membership are so considerable that a "mission" does not materially increase them. But in how many churches do such conditions obtain? In all too few, we fear.

Of course, all missions are not conducted with equal wisdom. There is an injudicious tendency on the part of some evangelists to minimise the patient all-the-year-round endeavour of the minister on behalf of his congregation. This creates naturally a suspicion, not to say jealousy, on the part of the minister and his flock. The evangelist surmises that the people are constantly urged to develop a spiritual life into which some of them have never yet been born. Birth must precede growth, and this fact does not always find emphasis in the pulpit; on the other hand, forgiveness of sins is but the starting point of Christian experience, and this needs equal emphasis in the missioner's teaching. An adjustment of the balance of these truths would do much to bridge the gulf that has sometimes existed between the views of pastors and evangelists. Let a brotherly understanding be arrived at between the two before a mission commences, and we shall hear less of criticism during its progress and of scepticism as to results when it is over.

Another point of first importance is the following up of the mission alike by minister and people. Bible-instruction classes should be carried on for some time, to which the attendance of all professed converts should be sought. Lady Ann Campbell wrote to Mr. McLaren at the time above referred to:—

I have the names of about 160 who professed to receive Jesus Christ for salvation; besides which several backsliders and wavering Christians were spoken to.

For eighteen months I kept up a correspondence with the converts, and now and then saw and conversed with many of them. With very few exceptions I found the Spirit's work to have been deep and abiding; in many cases leading to earnest service, which God is blessing.

Nor was her ladyship alone in this service of love; we knew many workers who similarly consecrated time and pen to words of earnest counsel; and they found fruit which others missed.

The appalling indifference to the claims of Christ evidenced by the masses, and the sad deadness and worldliness to be found within the Church itself, are surely sufficient call for an aroused enthusiasm on the part of all who profess and call themselves Christians, if by any means they may save some. This was Mr. Moody's motto. His life and work attest how well he carried it into effect.

Keswick—1900.

CERTAINLY this has been one of the best Conventions we have ever had. The Tent has been crowded to its furthest extremity, a thick rim of people standing all around the seats. The Pavilion has been filled, and a smaller tent, the Drill Hall, and the Victoria Hall have all been requisitioned in addition. It seems as though all the world has been represented, many delegates of the recent C.E. Convention having travelled from London to attend this. One feature of the Convention has been the large number of Presbyterian ministers. The U.P.'s, Established Church and Free Church, had each a clergy-house, where fifteen to twenty ministers in each case lived together for the week.

Every morning not less than 200 clergymen and ministers have met in special gatherings addressed by the Convention speakers. It is a growing feature of the Conventions, that clusters of workers should take a house together for the week. In one case, a number of Manchester mill-girls have taken two or three houses between them, under the superintendence of Christian ladies. It is difficult to suggest any better way of doing good, than for people who know the worth of this Convention to make up parties, the expense falling on each person being reduced to a minimum. I came across one case in which a Christian lady had brought up nine or ten young people with her from the congregation to which she belonged.

Several times loving and pathetic reference was made to the

through his distressing malady, and to the premature (as it seems to us) removal of Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor. This was especially the case when Dr. Handley Moule spoke in the Pavilion, and said that the last time he was there, he was followed by his beloved friend, now with God—a memory which had made that Pavilion sacred ground to him. In a wonderful manner Mr. Macgregor's place seemed supplied by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, who appeared for the first time on the Keswick platform. His accession was hailed on every hand, and his searching and brilliant addresses made a great impression. He left early in the week for America. Dr. Pierson also has been in great request. He is always welcome to a Keswick audience. But perhaps the greatest impression was made by the addresses on Thursday and Friday, by Rev. Charles Inwood, who evidently spoke under the pressure of great emotion, as he declared the presence and power of the Holy Spirit to be within the reach of every believer, and pressed the reception of this greatest gift upon his hearers.

THE SCENE WHICH FOLLOWED

his address in the Tent on Thursday has seldom been paralleled—such great numbers rose to testify their reception of the Spirit. Prebendary Webb-Peploe has also been in great force, and the Rev. Hubert Brooke's four Bible Readings on the Book of Leviticus were more than ever appreciated.

It is difficult, so close to the Convention, to tell the precise keynote. Some say it has been the Convention of Practical Details, because some of the speakers have been so particular and minute in urging the application of "Keswick" principles to the commonplaces of daily life. In two of my addresses I was specially led to this by a breakfast talk in which I had taken part with a number of well-known London ministers, who had asserted that in their experience Keswick people professed more, but were less consistent to what they professed, than others in their congregations. I felt then, as I am sure now, that my brethren had passed a somewhat hasty and superficial judgment on the effect of Keswick teaching. But it suggested the necessity of uniting the teaching of the Epistles and the power of the Holy Ghost with the Sermon on the Mount.

One of the interesting side episodes of the week has been the engaging, by a number of young men, of the Wesleyan Chapel, where a continuous prayer-meeting has been held all day from morning to night, and through two half-nights. The flow of intercessory prayer has never ceased, and to this must be attributed much of the marvellous blessing which has descended. They have proved God, and He

HAS OPENED THE WINDOWS OF HEAVEN.

The missionary meeting of Saturday morning reached high-water mark. It was impressively led by Mr. Eugene Stock, assisted by Mr. Walter Sloan, who brought the distressing tidings that six of their stations had been looted, and three missionaries, with their wives and families, were adrift, they know not where. Very special prayer was made for the preservation of the 2,800 missionaries in various parts of China, and that God would overrule the events transpiring there for his glory. Addresses were given by Mrs. Howard Taylor, Mr. Stanley Smith, Rev. Donald Fraser, and several others; and one would judge that a very handsome offering was made.

The Convention is over, but its effect is only beginning. There has been another throb of the mighty heart of the Church. The life-blood is being forced to the extremities of the body of Christ. The effect of the high tide here will be to send an undulation up to every mission station in the remotest parts of the great missionary world. F. B. Meyer.

From Pastor Coillard.

AS you have from time to time so kindly taken some notice of our mission, would you allow me to avail myself of that family tie and solidarity which you have created between your readers in all parts of the world, and through The Christian earnestly appeal to them and request their intercessory pleadings for us at the Throne of Grace?

It is not yet a year, as you know, since we crossed the Zambesi with that expedition which I was so happy to lead of seventeen new workers, young and full of sacred fire. The sounds of our hymn of consecration:

Prends, O Jesus, prends ma vie

had hardly died out in the desert, when it pleased the Lord to take us at our word, and accept the sacrifice. By that new grave which we so unexpectedly found at Sesheke, in which lay our beloved sister, Mdme. Louis Jalla, we had soon to dig another one for Mdme. Bouchet, the youngest and the brightest of the whole party.

A few months later it was the strongest of all who fell down, our worthy brother, Mons. Rittener, an earnest Christian and a most skilful worker, whose place at our Industrial School it will be difficult to fill. We were hardly recovering from these shocks, when Mdme. Martin, the young, energetic, bright, and loving wife of one of our artisans, was also taken away from us, after a lingering illness for whose fatal issue we were not prepared.

Indeed, sickness in various forms has, since our arrival in the country, raged among us, sparing no one, and it has thinned our ranks too. As I write, Mons. and Mdme. Adolphe Jalla, with shattered health, are journeying homeward on furlough. They take with them the widow and the infant child of Mons. Rittener; but they were preceded by Mons. and Mdme. Lemue, who, after a few months of hopeless trial to live and to work in this climate, were also compelled to return to Europe.

Nor is this all, alas! Among those still on the field Mdme. R——, Mr. M——, your own countryman, our amiable young Brother B——, and others show alarming symptoms of disorders which may prove fatal, or may compel them to leave this deadly land and return home at the shortest notice.

It is with a feeling of dismay that we, who are still holding on, often struggling with fever, look at each other, and ask ourselves, "Whose turn shall it be next?"

Our anxiety is not only for the Lord's work in Barotsi Land, but for those dear friends at home, who had so cheerfully made great sacrifices for the DEVELOPMENT OF THIS MISSION.

Is it all for naught? Will they be discouraged? Will they have for the King's business in these parts enthusiasm, and in the work itself faith enough to carry them through that wave of sorrow? O beloved! the perfume was not lost when it was poured on the feet of the Lord Jesus! No.

As for ourselves, I confess, we are troubled and depressed, but not altogether discouraged (2 Cor. iv. 8, 9). These dispensations of God—to us so very mysterious—throw a veil of great solemnity over the Zambesi life and work. It seems as if the light of eternity had burst upon us with a reality never experienced before.

In circumstances so grave we all felt the need of closer fellowship, and an extraordinary Conference was convened at Lealuyi at the beginning of February. The meetings were characterized by more than usual harmony, and a spirit of prayer, brotherly love and earnestness. To each and all it was a season of great blessing, and comfort, never to be forgotten. We acknowledged that we had much to praise the Lord for. The foundation of a new station had already been decided. Now, under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Mann, we had a new one at Mabumbu, with a sort of English school with twelve or fifteen pupils. Sefula is re-occupied, and rising from its ruins, with a medical doctor and a contemplated hospital, and with an industrial school with fifteen apprentices. And to assert our utmost confidence in Him whose we are, and whom we serve, as well as in our co-workers at home, we have resolved shortly to open a new station—the tenth on the list, practically the eighth—in the Barotsi Valley. We firmly believe that are the forerunners of the times of great blessing, and that through the deep waters of affliction the King still leads us to victory. When at Gideon's appeal 32,000 flew to arms, the Lord chose only a handful of 300. But the victory was none the less sure and easily won. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, says the Lord of Hosts."

Yes, to us it is the painful pruning season. "Every branch that beareth fruit He cleanseth, He pruneth, that it may bring forth more fruit." That abundance of fruit—permanent fruit—is still in expectation, it is true. All that we can say is that the king, the chiefs, the people generally, are all well disposed towards the Gospel. The meetings and the schools are well attended, but conversions are rare.

Pray for us, dear Christian friends, that in our own lives, in our ministry in this country, our fruit may be more, nay exceedingly abundant. At present the lamentable war which is spreading desolation and sorrow through South Africa, has isolated us. The last and only news we had were from The Times of November 24. What dreadful shedding of blood already! And what has happened since then? I abstain from reflections—it is too sad. Oh, for the coming of the King, the Prince of peace, whose right it is to reign! Day by Day.

SUNDAY, Aug. 5. Prov. xxiii.

THIS is mainly a chapter of prohibitions. We are put on our watch against the indulgence of appetite, whether in the direction of gluttony, of covetousness, of indolence, or of drunkenness. It seems as though the wise men of the past canvassed every avenue towards passion, saying, "No road! No admittance here!" The Bible is full of such warnings, which are intended to make the way of transgressors hard. We must not think that the ground of these prohibitions is an unreasoning caprice. They are founded in the love of God. It is because He loves us so much, that He puts us on our guard against things which are really detrimental, and which we should be the first to forego, if we loved ourselves with as real and deep a love as his. God knows that yielding to the imperious dictates of passion ruins the moral life, the peace of the heart, the strength and energy of the soul, and He warns us against them for our own sake. Oh! do not look on God as delighting in depriving you of things you like for arbitrary reasons, but for the deepest reasons, the cogency of which you would be the first to acknowledge, if you knew all.

Let us not place ourselves at the mercy of outside things. There may be no harm in some of them, but even in that case it is not well to depend on them too absolutely. There may be insidious harm in others, and we need to watch and pray against becoming entangled in their snare. The best policy of life is to be in the fear of God all the day long, always bathed in the thought of his holy presence, always testing every act and purpose by the thought of its relation to Him. "All the day!" It is not impossible—for He said that He would be with us all the days. Yes, and there will be a reward which will not disappoint.

MONDAY, Aug. 6. Prov. xxiv.

The burden of this chapter is evil men, that we may not envy them, or desire to be with them. They devise to do evil, their thoughts are full of sin, they lay wait against the habitation of the righteous, they are overthrown by calamity.

In contrast to these, the Divine wisdom is magnified. It is the foundation of a strong and useful life. The building of which the wise man speaks in the earlier part of the chapter, may be compared to character, which rises, day by day, by our practice of the dictates of conscience and the commands of Christ; and the chambers of which become filled, as life progresses, with the precious and pleasant riches of holiness. How is the house of your life progressing, friend? Is it built of gold, silver, and precious stones, or of wood, hay, and stubble? Is it filled with treasure or rubbish? Are its chambers adorned with crowds of noble and heaven-born thoughts, or with the rabble rout of satyrs?

Let us be careful to use our strength for the relief of those that are being carried away unto death. We have no right to hide ourselves from their miseries, to pass by them with averted looks, or to profess ignorance of their necessity. The Gospel is full of condemnation, not only of those who have done evil, but of those who have not done good—the priest and Levite that passed on the other side, the man who hid the Lord's money in the ground, the virgins that had no oil in their lamps. To miss your opportunity, to fall short of the occasion, to pass by the case of need, when this is deliberate and intentional on your part, is reckoned as sin. We all need a baptism of the spirit—of love, that we may not bear false witness against our neighbour, or take advantage of him, but set our hearts to comfort those that are overthrown by calamity.

TUESDAY, August 7. Prov. xxv.

The quiet soul is an inestimable gift. Let us ask God to make us willing to stand in the background, and to be content to wait until the Feastmaster says, Come up higher. Those that abase themselves, who are willing to wait and endure, who can possess their souls in patience, are those who ultimately shall stand with princes. It is a hard lesson. We are naturally so impulsive. We catch up the cudgels to defend ourselves so vehemently, and go hastily forth to strive. Oh, that Christ would give his own patience, that we also may be willing to stand as sheep before our shearers, not opening our mouth, leaving our vindication with God! The one condition of the quiet modest soul is to live in the will of God, and to be content with whatever place his wisdom assigns.

Let us be faithful to our Lord, who sends us on his errands, so shall we refresh his soul, and be to Him as the cold of snow in the time of harvest. We do not want to be unfaithful to the confidence which Jesus puts in us, lest we be to Him as a foot out of joint.

As to the delicacies and delights of earth (the honey referred to in vv. 16 and 27), it is very difficult to eat only in moderation and what is sufficient. It is very pleasant to be glorified by our fellows, to listen to their "Well done," to feast on their praise, but the soul cannot grow strong thereby. Honey was not permitted to be offered in the sacrifices of the Temple, and we should be careful not to minister words of fulsome flattery or luscious compliment in the service we render to God or man. The harder thing is to give bread to enemies and water to the thirsty souls of those that hate us. But to forbear ministering honey to our friends, and to be careful to minister to our foes, is our equal duty.

WEDNESDAY, August 8. Prov. xxvi.

The chapter of fools. The fool is a man without religion, without the just discretion and judgment which religion brings, who lives for himself, whose horizon is limited by the circumference of his own thoughts and indulgence. It is not seemly that such men should be put in places of honour. They deserve to be answered according to their folly, and to be smitten with many stripes. Utterly unreliable, those that depend on the fool cut their own feet. His words hang loose, and pierce the hand. The fool is like the dog that returns to his vomit, for his repentance is short-lived, and he goes back to his sin. There is little hope of bringing him to reason and real reformation.

What wise maxims are here! Keep out of strife in which you have no personal concern (v. 17). Have nothing to do, even in your lightest hours, with deceit, or backbiting (v. 20, 21). Beware of the temptation to pass on scandal (22). See to it that you do not cover a wicked heart by fervent expressions (v. 23). Beware of those that speak fair (v. 25). Remember that those who start avalanches may find their own homes overwhelmed by them (v. 27).

Such things were said by the wise men of old, and they deserve careful study. But after all, those who have learnt that Jesus Christ is their wisdom, and who are abiding in Him, will almost naturally be kept from making the mistake against which these proverbs warn us, and will be led to the opposite graces. Those who are ignobly born may need to study books of court manners, but those who are royal born naturally fall into courtly ways. Those, therefore, who are partakers of the Divine nature, and who live according to their high origin, will naturally exemplify the conduct indicated by these precepts.

THURSDAY, August 9. Prov. xxvii.

Our relations to our fellow-men, next to our relations to God, make our life. There is nothing so precious as friendship; no one of us can afford to live without a friend. Nor do we desire merely hidden love; we long for the expression of friendship. More than we know, Jesus longs for it, and when He smites us, let us always remember that the wounds are the results of his faithfulness. It is because we are so dear to Him that He is able to rebuke us. Oh, the sweetness of a man's friend, it is as ointment and perfume to the heart (v. 8). Let us be careful not to forsake a friend, especially if he be an old friend of many years' standing. At the same time, we shall probably keep our friends longest if we remember the warning of v. 14. Mutual intercourse between friend and friend tends to the sharpening of each, and so we say:—Choose your friends wisely, cling to them tenaciously, make much of them, be true to them, and through them learn the friendship of God.

There is no satisfaction apart from God. So deep is man's heart, it is like Sheol and Abaddon, the regions of the unseen, into which the souls of men are ever pouring (20). They that drink of the water of the wells of this world thirst again, and when, like Alexander, they have conquered worlds, still they long for more. Oh, find the true rest of thy soul in Him who gives water of which one deep draught kills thirst. The appeal for diligence is applicable to those who feed Christ's sheep and lambs. Let us know well their state, and as we care for our Master's pastures and fields, there will be a reward for ourselves.

FRIDAY, August 10. Prov. xxviii.

Notice the various characters that pass across the vista of this chapter. The wicked evading pursuit, and the righteous standing his ground; the princes who ruin the land, and the prudent men who establish the State; the spendthrift who wrings the last penny from the poor; the evil man who understands nothing; and he that is perverse in his ways. Then we have the poor walking in his integrity, the upright, and the righteous. The usurer is contrasted with the pitiful man; the seducer with the perfect man; the coverer of transgressions with the confessor of sin; the man who is laden with blood with him who walks uprightly amid peril; the greedy spirit with the man who puts his trust in God; the beneficent who gives with him who neglects the needy; the wicked ruler with the just man who puts his trust in God. All sorts and conditions of men are here. It is a little world. The chapter abounds in thumb-nail sketches, each of which is outlined with inimitable precision.

With such men we are meeting every day. They throng the market-places and streets. We are often ignorant of their true character. Our superficial glances fail to detect the heart. But God weighs them. They stand before the judgment seat of God, and He pronounces the irrevocable sentence, "Come, ye blessed; depart, ye cursed!" It is a solemn question to ask in which we shall find ourselves. You may depend upon it that we are somewhere in this crowd. Oh, that we may be found in v. 14, 20, or 25.

SATURDAY, August 11. Prov. xxix.

Reproof comes to us from God in many ways. Sometimes he bids us stand back, at other times it comes in the cutting rebuke, sarcastic taunt, or unkind action, all of which are permitted by the wise love of our Father. (19) Let us learn the lesson meekly and give heed.

Righteous men exercise their position to the advantage of the commonwealth. Well may the people rejoice when they are increased. Righteousness is compatible with singing and joy. Let us be happy in our religious life. Those who are right with God are careful for the poor. Let us see to it that we are alert to plead their cause. The righteous life is ultimately successful, and the righteous man shall one day look upon the overthrow of the wicked. May we not ask ourselves whether we are righteous after this sort? To be righteous is to be right-wise, to be properly adjusted with the line and plummet of God; not only accepted in the imputed righteousness of Christ, but personally righteous, because we have learnt to appropriate Jesus Christ, who is made unto us righteousness.

God give us, in these last days, prophets who see visions (v. 18). And when the vision is vouchsafed, may they be delivered from the fear of man which brings a snare (v. 25). O soul! art thou in peril? Does it seem to thee as though thou must be sacrificed to the hatred of men? Put thou thy trust in God (v. 25). There is no safety outside his protecting care. But when God is appealed to by the uplifted eye of a simple faith, He bows the heaven and comes down to deliver the poor soul that flees to Him for refuge.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

JULY 23 TO 28.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONERS.)

God's Poems.

By Rev. Dr. JOHN SMITH.

MY desire, this morning, is to turn your thoughts, not in upon yourselves, but outward upon God. Let us therefore consider four words in Eph. ii. 10, "We are his workmanship." The whole Divine life, the renewed character by which we are to serve God here and in which we are to glorify Him hereafter, is, from beginning to end, a creation of God. A day or two ago I was looking at this text in the original, and was forcibly impressed by one reading of it. The words may be taken to mean that we are God's poem. This thought crystallizes and defines the teaching of the passage in a special way. There is no human creation known to man so great in every respect as a poem. Men write their poems in words; God writes his poem in our characters.

There are three ideas connected with a poem. First, it is a new creation. Then it shows unity in diversity, the author moving to one great end, along many lines. "Paradise Lost" carries us first into the gloom of the place of woe, then into the brightness of Eden; and onward, in alternate light and shade, the poet moves to his goal. In God's poem, too, there is

UNITY OF AIM.

Oh, what a breadth and variety there is in the mighty creation of God, from the beginning, in conversion, to the consummation, in glory! Thirdly, Milton has pointed out that a poem is the spirit of the writer preserved for a life beyond his life; and God's poem is the incarnated Holy Spirit reproduced in human character, that God may continually speak to men through time and through eternity.

See where this creative power of God begins. He found us dead in trespasses and sins, utterly undone; so that the work of redemption had to be of his own infinite grace, moving out from the depths of his own eternity, in a wonderful revelation of his love in Jesus Christ. Everything was accomplished by God, leaving to us only the possibility of receiving. Even that reception was not a power native to our hearts, but was something which He had to awaken within us. Beginning in the depths of our ruin, the great God, by the mighty unveiling of his mercy, has lifted us out of the horrible pit, has brought us into communion, and has carried us forward into a relationship of love and fellowship with Himself in Jesus Christ our Lord. He found me and raised me therefrom by the sheer power of his grace. By nature, I have nothing wherewith I can serve God. I must be continually coming out of myself to Him, receiving every blessing of the new covenant from his own hand. We are his workmanship! "Not of works, lest any man should boast."

If it were possible that the silence between us and the great sealed orb of Mars might be broken, and a message come from an unknown order of beings, the whole civilized world would be hushed in expectation. When I read the New Testament, that is the atmosphere in which I live. The apostle here speaks of the mystery hidden from the ages of the past, and now revealed to us from the seat of the eternal God, beyond all stars and suns. The eternal Jehovah has discovered Himself in the Gospel of his grace, breaking the silence in a counsel of love and of salvation to us unworthy ones who were lying bound hand and foot in the chains of sin. The first aspect of this poem of redemption is the discovery of toward mankind as hell-deserving sinners.

We are not made anew of God, in order to begin a life of struggle toward holiness in our own strength. When I received the mercy of God, taking Christ as the way of God's peace for me, I was quickened together with Him. My life, yielded to and possessed of Christ, is rooted in Him. I am no longer under condemnation, because I am accepted in the Beloved. In Christ, I enjoy every privilege which He enjoys. I am lifted up into heavenly places in Him. God is my Father, as He is his. To me is given by God the Spirit of his Son, to take possession of my whole being, that I may live, work, and witness for Him. In Him I have fellowship with the saints. To what end is the great work carried on? That I may be fitted, according to the gifts given unto me, to take my position among God's servants in glorifying Him and spreading a knowledge of his name throughout the whole world. There is the great sweep of God's poem. This is how He hath wrought, through the working of his power in various ways, to lift us into fellowship with Himself.

"We are God's workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works."

A DYNAMICAL CONCEPTION

of creation is more and more taking possession of men's minds. At the foundation of the universe of living things, God has placed cells, ordered of Him as to number, variety and relation, which, under appointed conditions, shall develop the forces placed within them; hence the wonderful diversity which we see in creation, is produced century by century. God's great poem of redeemed character which He has been writing upon your heart and mine, is toward a special end. He brings us under the great spiritual motive of his own love; He has opened our eyes to see the sinfulness of our own sin; He has led us, in utter helplessness to receive Christ, and, in Him, a new gift of eternal life; He has lifted us into fellowship with Himself and into the gift of the Holy Spirit—oh, that we might have those forces within us, and might be brought into those conditions by which the creation of a holy character, might go right forward to complete triumph in glory!

A young man, who has something of the artistic instinct, has been taught in a bad school, and his ability to paint may be less than nothing. A great painter takes him in hand, seeks to arouse his potentialities, and trains him along the lines which educe every atom of his capacity. Sooner or later, the man stands a finished artist, through the care of his great teacher. Christ has done far more than that. He has planted within us the capacity of life eternal, has brought us under spiritual motives, and into evangelical relations to God the Father, to the Holy Ghost, and to other believers. He is working in us to the development of a holy life, not from our slavish desire, but in the liberty of love. We are lifted up into the fellowship of sons, and Christ has taken us into his own hands. He sees how much we have to unlearn, and how utterly infantile is our conception of holiness. In his own infinite wisdom, He takes us and teaches us here a little and there a little, using the Word of God, the circumstances of Providence, all the forces of the universe; for, seated upon the throne of God, He is given all power in heaven and in earth. If we have learned at all

THE LESSON OF FAITH;

if, in self-emptiness and nothingness, we have come to Christ, have we not realized the greatness of his wonderful school? Have we not discovered how He uses everything in our daily lives, in the trivial circumstances of Providence, to flash upon us a new sense of our sin, a new apprehension of our nothingness, to bring us in humility and self-despair to the feet of God? As we have cast ourselves there, have there not burst upon our eyes new visions of the wisdom and keeping power of his grace? We have been created, in Christ Jesus, unto good works. He has planted new forces within our hearts. He has surrounded us with variety of motive and influence to lead us on in the life of God. These things are in his own hand. He does not leave the work to the inter-action of natural forces; but He is the great Teacher and and are learning of Him. What will make this Convention memorable to us, if we learn the lesson, is renunciation of the last vestige of creature confidence in regard to any power of our own to serve God. Let Him carry out his mighty work by bringing the power of his dying love to bear upon us, giving us to see the resources of the Spirit of God, and making us more and more amenable to such secondary elements of fellowship with the saints for our sanctification.

What is at the end of it all? As I have said, in a poem the writer puts his finest spirit into a great creation for a life beyond life. God's great desire in this mighty work of sanctification is so to build up the image of Christ in us that we shall be his living epistles, known and read of all men. Yielding ourselves in daily surrender to Him, we are coming to a larger use of our own powers, and are learning to see the possibilities that God has sovereignly planted within us. We awake to larger conceptions of our place and work in the world, as the poem becomes framed over against us in God's kingdom. Throwing ourselves into the service given us of God, our character is more and more developed; so that, even amid our unworthiness, we are poems, in the measure wherein we yield ourselves to God in Christ. The character of our Lord is being reproduced in us. In virtue of we have our special place in the kingdom of God; so that, with our work given us to do, we are, even here and now, carrying forward the Divine purpose. We are "created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." He is creating a consecrated character for a place in his kingdom, and is also creating the place for the character. Nothing is by chance, but everything is part of a great plan.

In a young man, we see the reigning qualities of his nature developing, while the neutral elements fall into a secondary place. We are only at the beginning of God's purposes for us. Let us go on to broaden, deepen, and enrich the measure of God's own Spirit and life, which He has breathed into us in the proportion in which we are yielded unto Him. The development does not end here below; but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever. The image of God will grow within us, and the sphere of our activity will broaden all through eternity.

Reading a translation of an Indian poem, it seemed to me as if I were carried back into the very spirit of a far-off realm, breathing the same atmosphere as the poet breathed, seeing the world upon which he looked, and feeling the passions which surged through his heart. God would so complete his image in us that, wherever the far future may find us in his universe, we may carry the heart of Jesus, the spirit of Christ, to whatever order of beings may be the subjects of our ministry.

Good Works Afore Prepared.

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

"We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God afore prepared that we should walk in them" (Eph. ii. 10, R.V.).

There are two statements in this verse. The one with which Dr. Smith has dealt is that we are God's workmanship; and the other is that the good works in which He would have us to walk are prepared of God for us. First, we have the origin of our Christianity, "his workmanship;" then, the method by which God renders concrete the thought that is in his heart,

"created in Christ Jesus;" and thirdly, the purpose of the creation, good works afore prepared "that we should walk in them." We are not what we are by works, for we are his workmanship. But we are what we are for works, for it is the intention of God that we shall realize all that we are in Christ Jesus, and all that He is in us, through the works of all the days as they come to us. The whole of this letter to the Ephesians may be called the Epistle of Vocation, teaching us that, while we sojourn upon the earth, we are to walk in the light of the heavens.

WORK IN HEAVEN

and upon earth is identical, the only difference being that of measure. My late beloved comrade, George Macgregor, and I are one in service, with this difference: he has entered upon the perfect service of the life beyond, but we still learn to serve amid the limitations of to-day. The work that God has for me to do is to be the poem that tells to men the riches of his grace and the depths of his infinite wisdom. Nothing in me by nature can do that; but when the Holy Spirit gets possession of the temple of my being, then, in spirit, soul and body, I sing anew the song of Divine wisdom, tremblingly and imperfectly, but with growing sweetness and power.

God's purpose for me is that I shall walk in good works; that through each day, from morning to night, my life shall be his poem. While I thus speak in the first person, you will get your own story out of what I say for myself. God would have men and women outside his grace, to catch the music of his infinite love and wisdom from the rhythm, order and beauty of our lives. How am I to secure this? Here the second half of the verse comes in; for the works in which I am to show God's praise are afore prepared by Him. There is no unfitness in the things themselves. We say, If we could get out of this world, we would sing the praise and manifest the glory of God; anywhere out of our present circumstances we could manage to give expression to Divine poetry. Ah, that is the mistake, dear child of God! If you cannot where you are, you cannot voice it anywhere. You remember how Paul, writing to the Philippians, describes what our life should be: "That ye may be blameless and harmless, children of God without blemish." "Ah," you say, "that is what I would be—the poetry of God in human life; but I cannot be that where I am." Listen, the apostle says where we are to be all that, " . . . in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, among whom ye are seen as lights in the world."

In a home where there is no sympathy with you, in an office in a church, it may be, where there is no inclination towards these things, God wants his song sung and his workmanship exhibited. Listen to the comfort of this: when you wake in the morning and face the day, in it is a divinely marked pathway for you, wherein every line of action is mapped out, and all the details of the day are arranged for you, before you come into it. Therein are the "good works which God afore prepared." You say, "Surely that is a fatalism; cannot we get outside of it?" Ah, that getting outside has been the trouble in our life! God had a plan for us; but we thwarted, crossed, and spoiled it. He has had some verse to sing through our lives; but instead of letting it be heard, we have altered its rhyme, rhythm, order, and beauty. Men have not heard the poem of God, because we have not discovered his will for the day, and consequently have not walked in that will.

WHERE MEN ARE OPPOSED TO YOU;

I love to think that God is in to-morrow, getting ready for me. You remember the word in Deuteronomy about his ancient people, stating that He "went before" them. For what purpose? That He might choose them out a place wherein to pitch their tents. I have my plan for to-morrow and the next day, so far as I can see ahead. But there is a programme for me that is steadfast and perfect: and I would be willing at any moment to put mine aside, if it clashes with the other which was "afore prepared." You say, "Surely no one ever had such a trying time as I had yesterday." Every detail of our life is planned and arranged by God. He holds us through trial, darkness, and strain. Why? That, in the midst of them, the poetry of his perfect love, and the music of his infinite wisdom, may sound out upon the men and women by whom we are surrounded.

I am created for the day, and the day is created for me; there is perfect fitness. That is how God tempers the lamb to the wind. We have heard much nonsense about God tempering the wind to the shorn lamb. To begin with, God does not shear lambs. If men do so, they may take the responsibility, and must care for the lambs upon the hillside. But God prepares the lamb for the wind. There is a sense in which the wind is also prepared for the lamb, inasmuch as it strengthens and improves the fleece. In all painful circumstances, God will make his music heard through my life, if I fall into his hand and let Him fashion and mould my character in the days He has afore prepared for me.

What will be the effect upon us of this conception of life? First of all, an effect of responsibility resting upon me every day to discover God's plan for me. Should I be rightly understood if, upon this my first visit to Keswick, I say that other conventions have impressed me with the peril that exists of

SEEKING BLESSING FROM WRONG MOTIVES?

The supreme thing is that I should discover God's will for me, and, at all costs, get into that will. At Northfield three years ago, a man questioned me about the filling of the Spirit, which he desired because his church work was an awful failure. I pointed out that the first result of that blessing might be to take him clean out of the ministry, if God had not put him into it. God used my word, and I had a letter from the man in which he says that, from the day he left the ministry, he won more souls to Christ in six months than during all the nine years he had been in it.

If I am God's workmanship created in Christ Jesus, and if He has a plan for me to-day, I should know it and walk in it. How am I to find it? Ask. That Christians cannot live without prayer is a lesson taught to me with emphasis every day of my life. It is necessary to have set times for prayer; but, beyond that, we must live in the atmosphere of that dependence which hangs upon God every moment, and that waits for light to flash upon the pathway. Oh, the mistakes some of us have made, because

WE RAN BEFORE GOD LED US!

One of the perils threatening us everywhere is that of hurry and rush. There are things—I say it reverently—that God can only say to you and to me when we have shut the door against everyone else. We must give God time to tell his plans for us.

We must use the light that falls upon us. How shall we get it? In Ephesians we read: "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall shine upon thee" (R.V.). Would you know God's will to-day? Ask Him, wait for Him, and the light shall come. Persons tell me that the day is gone when God spake to men as He did to Abraham. Is it not rather the case that men do not listen as Abraham listened, nor obey as he did? If you have an ear, God has a voice; and if you have a surrendered will, God has a plan. To the most weak and trembling child of God who is here this morning, who realizes what he is by the grace and work of God, and desires only to get into the Divine way and will for the day, I would say, ask, wait; and light shall fall upon thee, clearer than the noon day, about the least and minutest detail of your life. We may have light if we will.

When our life is thus surrendered, there is not only the effect of responsibility, but there is that of safety. Oh, the sense of rest that comes when we realize that the last cord is cut that bound us to the old life, and we swing away from the shore into the stream of the Divine will. My brethren, what God is waiting for in England to-day, and all the world over, is men and women in whom He can get all his way. I cannot realize these things by my effort; but I can do so by the cessation of effort, and the abandonment of my whole self to God for good works. Even these I have not to choose; for he chooses and prepares them. I come to the moment of joy or sorrow, of temptation or of triumph—He has prepared it for me and me for it. And if I take my way into that prepared work, in the power of his inworking, then, though I may hardly catch the sound myself, the music of his poetry is sounding out upon other lives; and, even amid the sorrow-stricken age in which we live, men and women are hearing the song of infinite grace and the infinite wisdom of the infinite God—not so much by our speech as by the poem of our lives. May God bring us into his will, at all costs.

Yielded to the Master's Use.

By Rev. Dr. ELDER CUMMING.

"There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves and two small fishes." (John vi. 9).

"He said, Bring them hither to Me." (Matt. xiv. 18).

Jesus Christ longed to give that 5,000 men, with the women and children, a great blessing; and it was dependent upon the surrender to Himself of a single soul. I wonder whether it is so with us here to-night. Does our blessing depend upon surrender, and from whom is it to come? When God would do a great work He does not supersede human instrumentality; He uses it. In order to feed the multitude our Lord asks for something to begin with in this desert place, far up on the slope of the mountain.

First, He makes it abundantly plain that there is no food among the people themselves; He probed that question to the bottom. Then, He offers to one of his disciples in connection with the coming miracle. He begins a conversation with Philip on the very subject, obviously intending to lead him on to something beyond. We see with saddened feeling, that Philip does not understand; and he shuts the door that the Lord began to open. "No," said Philip, "there is neither place nor money to buy. Two hundred pennyworth of bread would not be sufficient to give everyone a very little." So Philip stands aside.

Another disciple volunteers to talk to the Lord about the difficulty. Andrew had knowledge of a little fact which, to others, might mean nothing at all; but he had a habit of fellowship with the Lord, in conversation about this thing or that. So Andrew comes out from the little circle and says, "Master, I saw and spake with a lad who has five barley loaves and two small fishes." It is true that Andrew rather breaks down here—but who would not?—for he adds, "What are they among so many?"

The lad had the simple food of the poor, easily carried—home-made cakes, cooked and dried fish. How did he come to have them? Surely there was behind this the loving care of that her lad might come into contact with the Prophet of Nazareth. Who among us has not been indebted, may be years afterwards, to a mother's prayers? She sends him forth with a small bag of provision for the day; and no doubt part of it had been already consumed by him after he left the house for his long journey. It was concerning what remained that the Lord said to Andrew, "Bring them hither to me."

I do not envy Andrew the errand with which he was entrusted. The Lord's messages are not always the easiest things in the world to give. Sometimes it takes a great deal of faith to ask for things, speaking, as we must do, in the name of the Lord. I can imagine Andrew finding the lad whom he had met. "You are the lad with the five loaves and two small fishes, aren't you?" "Yes," says the boy. "Well, the Master, the Prophet Jesus, wants them; and I am sent to bring them to Him." "How many do you want? If I give you three loaves and one of the fishes, will that do?" Andrew, feeling as awkward as he ever felt in his life, says, "No, my dear lad; Jesus the Prophet wants you to give Him all." "Do you really mean that I am to keep nothing for myself?"—"I do." "What is he going to do with them?"—"I do not know." "Why should I give all and keep nothing?"—

"BECAUSE HE ASKS IT."

Did not some word of the mother now come to the lad's mind? a word expressive of her reverence for Jesus of Nazareth; a word spoken in love and anxiety, but without a moment's thought of the use that should be afterwards made of it. The power of the unseen but ever-blessed Spirit of God touched the heart of that lad. He turned and said, "If Jesus asks, I give all; for myself I keep back nothing."

Then the command goes forth, "Make the men sit down." Of all that great multitude there was not one but sat in his own unnoted place, for they would not have high places to sit upon. In some spot, utterly unseen of anyone, that lad would sit with strange feelings in his heart. How he would marvel when his own turn came! Loaf and fish were put into his hand, and he ate with the strong hunger of a healthy youth, until he could eat no more, saying to himself all the time, "I have eaten of what my mother gave me; but, oh, what a change has taken place!" The Lord could not work that miracle apart from what the lad gave up to Him. He might have worked another miracle, causing the people to find manna on the ground, bringing bread from heaven, or creating it by a word. But the miracle before us, so sublime, stupendous, and blessed, even Jesus Christ, with his omnipotent power, could not work save through

THE SURRENDER MADE BY THAT LAD.

Ah, my dear friends, you who are assembled here to-night, you Christian people, a multitude gathered from so many quarters, coming to this place, circled by the mountains, coming out to hear what God may speak to you—the Lord is sending you a message, each one! It is, "Bring them hither to Me"—the loaves, the fishes, the troubles, the concerns, the longings, the prayers, the unspoken thoughts. Have you anything that Christ wants? Have you anything that He can use? Will you keep it back? Nothing but Christ moved that lad's heart to give. Shall He move your heart to give? Christ asks it; it is for his sake. He asks you to give yourself, your heart, all you have. For what? I know not; but I verily believe that what was made of that youth's gift is nothing so great as that which may be made of your gift by Christ. If you will give your heart, your powers, your thought, your prayer, your life, this night to Christ, however small, mean, and hitherto useless that life has been, I, in my heart, believe that than He did with the lad's loaves and fishes.

I appeal to you—are you willing to let the Lord have what He wants from you? Are you willing to say, "I can deny Thee nothing, Lord, since Thou dost ask it of me?" Make it simply a question of surrendering your whole life into the hands of Christ, ignorant as you are as to what He will do with it, as to how He will use it, and as to the purpose for which He requires it. Say, "Lord, here am I; take me as I am, thine own already, bought with thy blood." He is not a stranger; you know what He can do, what He has done; you know his love and his grace, and what they have made you already. You know how He has delivered you—how death and hell, guilt and punishment of sin are all blotted out through his precious blood "Give me thyself," He says, "that, in time to come, I may use thee as I will."

Oh, let us learn that, as Christ had such an opportunity with the multitude, and as the lad had such an opportunity of giving to the Master, so to-night you have an opportunity which you may never have again. Possibly the Lord may never come so near to your soul as He is at this moment. If you refuse Him, He may never again come so near.

THE MINISTERS' MEETINGS.

The daily gatherings held in the Drill Hall, for the special benefit of ministers attending the Convention, were times of spiritual enlightenment and quickening. Some hundreds of brethren, representing the various denominations, came together each morning in the Drill Hall. On Wednesday morning, Rev. A. Daintree, of Cape Colony, felt led to speak on the question of church finance. He spoke regretfully of such means of raising money as bazaars, and the solicitation of donations from the ungodly. Rev. F. S. Webster dwelt on the importance of seeking and following the guidance of the Holy Spirit, both in preaching and in administrative matters. Rev. F. B. Meyer, who presided, while calling for testimonies as to the question of bazaars, pointed out that anything like debate was, of course, undesirable. Several ministers—Church of England, Congregational, and Baptist—told how they had been enabled, after discarding the idea of a bazaar, to raise considerable sums for church buildings and to pay off debts. A young Free Church minister from Aberdeenshire, after emphasizing the difference between a bazaar with a worldly spirit and a sale of work pure and simple, read part of Acts iv. 34-37, and said that in his district of Scotland, at any rate, the sale of work was initiated and carried out in a spirit of devotion. People who were unable to give money contributed goods or labour, and the sale was one of the brightest occasions of the year.

The Chairman now proceeded to answer various questions which, in response to his previously expressed invitation, had been sent up by ministers who desired information as to the Keswick teaching. This departure proved eminently helpful, and will doubtless be continued in future years, serving as it does to deal with difficulties in a prompt way and to remove any misconceptions. Among other things, Mr. Meyer refuted the notion that sinless perfection was taught. He also treated vigorously a question as to whether there could be such a thing as holiness, apart from consistency in character and walk. Mr. Meyer answered the various queries in a way that afforded much spiritual profit, and concluded by referring to the criticism of the world as to their selfishness or unselfishness in the practical matters of daily life, and by emphasizing the need in all these things for thoughtful devotion to the interests of the Kingdom.

THE YOUNG MEN'S MEETINGS.

These gatherings, which were held in the second tent, were not very well attended at first, as comparatively few were aware of the whereabouts of the location, but as the days went on there was a large accession of interest. Among others who took part, were Revs. E. L. Hamilton, C. Inwood, and S. A. Selwyn. The first meeting was especially notable. Mr. W. B. Sloan, who was the first speaker, gave a forcible address on "My grace is sufficient for thee." He spoke of the conditions under which this assurance was given to Paul, and said that neither the vision on the road to Damascus, nor that in which he "was caught up into Paradise, and heard unspeakable words," sufficed to meet the apostle's need in struggling against the "thorn in the flesh." He required, and he sought fresh aid from God, and the answer came in the words, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

This Mr. Sloan described as the practical application of salvation to the affairs and calls of everyday life. The idea, if not the actual word, "grace" occurs in Hosea xiii. 9, "O Israel, thou has destroyed thyself, but in me is thine help," and tracing this idea of God coming to the assistance of helpless humanity in its lost condition, we find in the New Testament the word "grace" in its fuller light, ever enlarging and deepening in its meaning, even as the speaker had seen a trickling spring in the Scottish moors, so insignificant that it could scarcely be seen or heard, amid the heather, swell and broaden on its way, until it became a great stream able to carry great ships upon its bosom.

Mr. Sloan concluded with a searching appeal to the consciences of his young hearers, pointing out in vivid terms the soul's need of this Divine grace, and showing what victories could be won by grace dwelling within them. Towards the end of Mr. Sloan's address it was evident that only with difficulty could he suppress a deep feeling of emotion, and as he resumed his seat Mr. A. A. Head rose and announced the news that two missionaries in connection with the China Inland Mission (of which, it will be remembered, Mr. Sloan is secretary) had won a martyr's crown. Amid profound silence, Mr. Head asked that any one of the young men present would engage in prayer for the Mission and its workers, and one who has many associations with workers in China did so, although with tears.

The meeting was remarkable for a hallowed sense of God's nearness, and many were deeply affected. Subsequently, Rev. F. S. Webster added a helpful word on Col. iii. 17.

LADIES' MEETINGS.

The Lecture Hall having been too overcrowded, the meetings were held this year in the Pavilion. This altered their character in some degree, for the informality of the meetings in the smaller hall, with its compact audience, could not be kept up, and there could not be the general taking part in prayer which had made the previous occasions a truly family gathering.

Besides mothers and elder ones, there were throngs of young ladies, although the girls' meetings were being held at the same time in the Victoria Hall, and were equally full and equally blessed. The three who were entrusted with their care were Mrs. Bannister, Mrs. Penn Lewis, and Miss Nugent. The first day, after prayer, Mrs. Bannister spoke from John xiii., upon the Work and the Person of Christ. Mrs. Penn Lewis brought an awakening message of warning from Isa. lviii., "Cry aloud, spare not." She showed very forcibly to whom this message was given—not to ordinary followers, but to those who seek Him daily, and delight in doing so, just as we profess to do. It was a very solemn message, given under the awe of one who felt that God had charged her with it.

On Wednesday Mrs. Hatt Noble dwelt on the words on the great High Priest just uttered in the tent. Miss Nugent then gave the message of Rev. C. A. Fox, so sorely missed, to the Convention. From a room of dimness and incessant suffering and deprivation he could yet send word, "In thy Father's House there is 'bread enough and to spare'!" Mrs. Bannister addressed herself specially to the younger ones present, who were asking what the two words meant which were so much used here: "Surrender" and "Consecration." The only way in which Christ could have the full use of us was by his indwelling and his being received and recognized as the Master who had full possession and authority.

Mrs. Penn Lewis added another message of the sword of the Spirit, from Isaiah iv. Solemn appeals followed. One cannot write much of such words. God uses them, and must apply them Himself.

On Thursday, the two messengers sent to us were both from afar, and spoke with great power of the Spirit of God. The first was Miss Trotter, from Algiers, who showed from the history of Rebekah how her whole future life turned on one little act of courtesy. We come to such crises, but we do not know all they involve. May we be ready to obey the promptings of God's Spirit!

Mrs. Howard Taylor followed with a message of grand and glad freedom from Rev. i. 5, in the vision of the glorious Lord. "Unto Him who loveth us (present tense) and hath loosed us (past tense) from our sins."

Miss Nugent spoke on the threefold command "Bring unto Me." Bring our worst to Him as Saviour and Healer (Mark ix). Bring our least to Him as Master (Mat. xiv). Bring our best to Him as King and Sovereign.

Mrs. Penn Lewis closed with words on the Spirit of Life, saying how the call to obedience had rung through all the days, and how the only way to obey was to be possessed with the Spirit of Life—with the very life of the very Risen One Himself.

THE LATE

Rev. J. Manton Smith.

By Rev. W. Y. FULLERTON.

FOR fifteen years I laboured in evangelistic work as the colleague of the beloved brother who went to God on Tuesday, July 17, from his home in Northampton, fifty-six years of age. Men get to know each other in such a length of time, when they are thrown constantly together; and I knew Manton Smith through and through. From my peculiar knowledge of his character and ability, it seems right that I should pay some words of tribute to one who, in his own sphere, has been used of God to do a very notable work.

In his "Stray Leaves from my Life Story," a most readable book, he himself has told us of his early days and experiences: the vicissitudes of his London life, his conversion through the wise and earnest words of the woman who had let him his rooms, and of the early efforts he made in Christian work in the East of London. Here, after some time, he became a member of the East London Tabernacle, then under the ministry of Archibald Brown, and eventually he entered as a student in the Pastors' College, from whence he issued, twenty-five years ago, as C. H. Spurgeon's evangelist.

He is known to the churches by those five-and-twenty years of incessant evangelistic toil—first in company with A. J. Clarke for a year or two, then as my beloved comrade and co-worker for fifteen years, and afterwards alone. During his career, he has engaged in the ministry of the Gospel in every important centre of England, Ireland, and Scotland; in Jersey, in Paris, and in America; and a multitude of souls have been won for Christ through his winning words, and his remarkable gift of song.

His singing was of a singular nature; it could not be called the singing of a trained voice, but it was full and round and popular; and, especially in the earlier years, it had the power of reaching and moving the hearts of men. He needed hymns suitable to his style, and has been in part, as a consequence, responsible for more than one hymn book. His popularity may be gauged by the fact that one of these hymn books has had, I believe, a circulation of over one million copies.

He was not in any sense a great preacher, but then he never pretended to be; he was a winning preacher; he just got up and talked, and the more natural he was, the more effective were his words. The first time I saw him was down in Cambridge in 1875. A meeting for children was announced in the Guildhall, and I was somehow present. Everybody was on the qui vive for some expected speaker; those present prosed on, but suddenly every face lighted up as a fair, ruddy, clear-skinned man stepped on to the platform, having come from some other meeting. He was all smiles, and the smiles were contagious; the children in the meeting fairly beamed as he beamed upon them. Of course, he had his cornet with him, and he handled it dexterously, and then he told one of the Old Testament stories, as only he could. I have never heard a speaker to children with such an art of making the Bible speak again its old histories, or of making tears and smiles chase each other on the faces of the people.

In after years he was wont to exhibit with some natural gratification the beautiful cornet presented to him by Mr. Spurgeon, with its inscription: "With trumpets and sound of cornet let us make a joyful noise before the Lord the King." Others have followed him in the use of this instrument to lead the singing of great crowds, but he was the pioneer.

His winning qualities (Mr. Spurgeon used to say it was as good as a fortnight's holiday to look at his face) sometimes blinded people to the fact of his deep earnestness. He believed in the Gospel with all his heart, and he was a very humble and devoted follower of Jesus Christ. He might have gloried in the fact that there are very few towns in which the announcement of his name would not gather a crowd, that he had the confidence of his brethren in the ministry in an uncommon degree, that he was an intimate friend of the great Tabernacle pastor, and that the results from our missions seemed to abide the test of years. But to the end he was an unassuming disciple of the Great Master, content to exercise his gifts as he had opportunity, and then to come back as if he had done nothing in particular.

A few years ago he had an accident, which necessitated the amputation of one leg. After a long convalescence he had hoped to be permitted to resume his active career, and actually did conduct meetings for some months in various places. When I saw him in May last at Stoke Newington, where he and I were announced to take some meetings unitedly, it was apparent that he was far from well; in the memory of former days it was pathetic to see how his powers had failed. But a few days ago I heard he was very ill with an incurable complaint, and, having already started on a Continental journey, the news now comes of his death.

To multitudes over our own land, and, indeed, over the world, this news will bring a sense of loss; to me it seems to finish a chapter of life's history. To Mrs. Smith, who has ever been one of the most devoted of wives, and to his family of sons and daughters, it must come as a crushing blow; but it is well with the sweet singer of Israel, who now joins in that chorus of the redeemed, for which he has been long practising his part.

The remains of the deceased evangelist were interred in the Northampton General Cemetery. The service was conducted by Rev. Vernon J. Charlesworth, assisted by Rev. F. T. Smythe. There was a large following of friends, among whom was the Mayor of Northampton (Councillor Jeffery). The acquaintance of the latter goes back many years, for he was one of the first Sunday School teachers at Mr. Spurgeon's Orphanage. The letters of sympathy received by the bereaved included tender words from Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon, Sir George Williams, Rev. Archibald G. Brown, and Dr. Pearce Gould.

Friends' Temperance Union.—Mr. John Hilton, president of the Friends' Temperance Union, received numerous and hearty congratulations at a meeting held on Friday evening to commemorate the sixtieth anniversary of his signing the pledge.

Mr. W. M. Oatts' Travels.

DESCRIBING his recent visit to some of the cities in Burmah, Mr. W. M. Oatts writes:—"There are large numbers of our fellow country-men in Rangoon, but few are able to stand against the worldliness and awful vice that abound here, and in most of the great Eastern cities. Many of the large stores bring young men and women to their establishments from the home land. No greater blessing could result to these heathen cities than the sending out of consecrated men and women. But too often there is not much depth of spiritual life, and after a few weeks' residence there comes the sad story of indifference, backsliding, and falling into all forms of vice and sin. My heart has been saddened to see so many who have come out from Christian homes hopelessly indifferent to the things of God. One man who had come out with a bright testimony, led many a young fellow into evil, told me with deep sorrow that the memory of the past two years will haunt him through all eternity, and asked me to advise young men not to come unless they brought Christ with them and lived constantly near to Him.

WENT DOWN IN THREE MONTHS,

"In Rangoon we had the joy of constant fellowship with the devoted missionaries of the American Baptist Union. The land has been possessed by this Union, and nearly 120 agents are at work in different parts of the country. It was our privilege to be present at the 'commencement' exercises of the Theological Seminary at Insein, nine miles out from Rangoon. This 'school of the prophets' was started fifty-five years ago, and over 600 young Karens have been trained and sent out to preach the Gospel. In connection with the Karen churches there are 34,000 members. Each member is expected to contribute two annas (2d.) per year, and this sum is sufficient to pay for the board of the students. The able principals, Dr. Smith and Mr. Thomas, are supported by the home church. At present there are 125 students in residence. The one text book is the Bible, and in this they get a thorough training. Every Saturday during the nine months' session they go out into the neighbouring villages, and preach and sing the Gospel. There are twenty-five missionary volunteers in the college, and when these young men complete their course, they will go out to distant tribes, learn a new language, and carry the Gospel to people who have never heard of Jesus Christ."

Writing from Western Australia, Mr. Oatts says:—"Excepting a few places in the colony the population, numbering 175,000, is very sparse; you can travel for hundreds of miles and see nothing but 'bush.' The majority of the people are 't'othersiders,' that is from the other colonies. It is difficult to meet with a real West Australian, but those who are here keep a strong hand on the reins of government.

Miners get big wages—£4 to £5 per week—but everything is more than double the price we pay at home. Then most of the men have to live in tents, and submit to great inconveniences. The whole atmosphere is charged with gold, shares, sport, gambling, and worse.

"The various Christian denominations are caring for the different places in an earnest manner. In Perth we had a united mission for two weeks, and on the last evening fully sixty persons rose up and gave thanks for blessing received. In Fremantle, at the close of a week's services, forty gave public testimony to good received; in some cases whole families were blessed. At the 'Fields,' services were held in Kalgoorlie and Boulder City. The striking feature of these meetings was the large number of men who were present. As yet, there is little family life; and the men are only now beginning to bring their wives and children, and making homes for them."

Rev. Thomas Allen, D.D.,

PRESIDENT OF THE WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

MORE than forty years ago a young man was leaving a Cheshire farmhouse to enter the Didsbury Wesleyan College, to be trained for the work of the Methodist ministry. His mother, who had been a widow for seventeen years, not without a struggle parted from her only son, who for so long a time had been the solace of her widowhood. "It seems to me," said this Christian mother, "to be the Lord's will that you should leave me; I dare not object. I do not know that I have anything more to say to you, excepting this, that wherever you go and whatever you become, you must always show a genial side towards poor people."

The young man to whom that maternal charge was addressed was THOMAS ALLEN, the newly-elected President of the Wesleyan Conference; and it is to his honour that during a long and distinguished career he has never forgotten his mother's words. It is the testimony of one who knows him well that "his geniality and homeliness have made it easy in all his circuits for the poorest to be in touch with him on all sorts of occasions. The Bolton weavers and the Sheffield grinders never felt that there was any wall of partition, clerical or social, between him and them."

The new President is a product of village Methodism. He was born in 1837 at the Hollyhurst, in the parish of Marbury, in the county of Cheshire. The early traditions of his family were associated with the Congregational form of Church fellowship, and Mr. Allen has ever cultivated the friendliest relations with the members and ministers of the Free Churches. When his grandfather removed to Hollyhurst he discovered that a Sunday evening service was conducted by the Methodists in a cottage not far distant. He joined himself to this "church in a house," and then opened his own house for worship.

It is an interesting picture that Dr. Allen gives of his early religious environment: "My earliest recollections in regard to Divine worship are associated with the house in which I was born. How well I remember the details of the household service; the interest with which I used to carry down the chairs from the bedrooms, and place them in rows across the floor; the book-board which fitted in the back of a chair; the candlestick, which was suspended by a wire from the ceiling; the snuffers, which used, sometimes, to snuff the light out; the chair in front of the clock, occupied by a farm labourer who started the tunes; and the oak-screen by the fire on which the old people used to sit." It was a simple form of service, with no pomp of ceremony, that was conducted in that farm-kitchen, but it is one of the glories of the religion of Christ that the Divine forces that nourish the life of the soul are as freely given to the worshippers in the lonely homestead, as to those who under the fretted vault of the vast cathedral raise the hymn of praise.

In the midst of that little congregation of farmers and labourers sat a thoughtful boy in whom spiritual susceptibilities were early awakened by the Spirit of God. At thirteen, Thomas Allen became a member of the society; at eighteen he came on the plan as a local preacher, and two years later he was accepted as a candidate for the ministry, and entered Didsbury College. His career in the ministry has been one of growing power and popularity. Alike in busy manufacturing centres like Leeds, Sheffield, and Bolton, in suburban circuits regarded as the homes of culture and refinement, like Bristol (Clifton), and Southport (Mornington-road and Trinity), and in metropolitan circuits as diverse as Westminster and Highgate, Dr. Allen has won high regard for the faithfulness and efficiency of his service.

Though three years ago he was called from the circuit life of Methodism, and appointed Governor and Tutor in Pastoral Theology of the Handsworth College, Birmingham, Dr. Allen is essentially a circuit minister. It is inevitable that many of the strongest men in the Methodist ministry drift into departmental office, and it is no matter for surprise that few Presidents of recent years have been identified with the ordinary circuit life of Methodism. It is all the more, therefore, a matter for rejoicing among the rank and file of the ministry, that in raising Dr. Allen to the chair, Methodism has honoured one who for thirty-six years lived among his brethren as a circuit minister, and faced the difficulties and problems of circuit life.

Dr. Allen has received many marks of the confidence of his brethren. In 1887 he was elected a member of the Legal Hundred—the central and official body in which the authority of the Conference is vested. In 1890 he was chosen by the then President to write the Pastoral address to the Methodist Societies. He was one of the English representatives at the last Œcumenical Conference, and during the present year he has attended the great Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America as the delegate of the English Conference. For six years in succession Dr. Allen was the chairman of the Sheffield District, and few Methodist preachers have gained such a high place in the esteem of the people, or made so deep an impression upon the public life of the great cutlery city.

The new President rejoices in a fine physique and vigorous health, traceable in some degree, doubtless, to the healthy surroundings and the country life of that Cheshire farmstead. As a preacher he is deliberate, thoughtful, and impressive. On the platform he displays in no small degree the power of ready adaptation and of sound judgment. His wide reading and broadly-sympathetic mind enable him to deal with many aspects of religious truth and phases of social life with freshness and force. Intensely loyal to the evangel of Christ, he is a keen student of modern movements, and seeks to apply Christian truth to the solution of social problems, and the development of national life. His immediate predecessors in the Chair of the Conference have been brethren distinguished for their attainments and services in various fields. Dr. Allen may not be so widely known beyond the borders of his own church, but he has won the love and esteem of his brethren, who admire his sterling gifts, and his unfailing fidelity, and confidently look to him to sustain most worthily the high traditions of the office he so deservedly fills.

The Wesleyan Conference.

THE 157th Annual Conference of the people called Methodists opened at Burslem on Tuesday, July 24. Rev. F. W. MACDONALD, who has rendered distinguished service to his church by his gifts of ripe wisdom, unbending fidelity to Evangelical truth, and graceful eloquence, retired from the presidential chair, and handed over the symbols of office—including a Bible used by Wesley himself, and all his successors in the chair of the Conference since—to Rev. Thomas Allen, D.D., who was elected the president of the Conference. In his inaugural address, Dr. Allen modestly accepted the honour done to him by his brethren, but disclaimed any consuming ambition for the office of president. The century drawing to a close had been marked by the expansion of England, the progress of our colonies, the increase of freedom, the discoveries of physical science, the application of science to industry, and the advancement of the general knowledge of the world. Though these various elements of progress were largely materialistic in their character, they furnished the Christian Church with magnificent opportunities for the fulfilment of her spiritual mission. The nineteenth century had furnished material facilities for the expansion of the Kingdom of God, and the duty of the Church in the twentieth century would be to use those facilities and bring the influences of Christianity into contact with all races of men throughout the earth. In Methodism the nineteenth century had been the formative period of their Church organization. After the death of Wesley, the united body had been saved in the midst of constitutional controversy, not merely by wise statesmanship, but by the devotional spirit of their leaders. In later times of controversy the same spirit would have prevented strife and actual division. The century that had witnessed division had also witnessed a strong reaction in favour of unity. There were, however, fundamental differences of constitution between the various Methodist bodies, and patent and mechanical schemes of union were impracticable. There was reason to hope that the twentieth century would see the healing of many of the divisions of Christendom, and the Church would be brought nearer the Lord's ideal. In the meantime they must cultivate the spirit of unity.

Referring to his recent visit as the delegate of the Conference to America, he cited with approval the saying of Dean Howson that a man must go to America to realize the power of Methodism. Speaking of the place of Methodism among the churches, Dr. Allen said Methodism, historically, was not a reaction, but a spontaneous outburst of Evangelical life; and it was that life which determined its constitution and its creed. That was the explanation of their catholicity. They had no quarrel with Protestant Episcopacy, with Presbyterianism, or with Congregationalism. They had so much of each in their constitution that they were prepared to be friendly to all. In conclusion, the President struck a triumphant note. They were closing a period of ecclesiastical controversy. They were turning from the preaching and teaching of social ethics to the preaching of Christian doctrine. They were exalting the living Christ above theology. Their circumstances in regard to Christian benevolence and evangelistic enterprise fitted them for a distinct advance on the threshold of the twentieth century. Many of them present would be able to do little more than welcome the new century in the spirit of hope and faith. A living writer had pointed out that, while their national heroes were generally young, the heroes of the Bible were always old. The patriarchs broke forth into poetry on their death-beds. And that was the spirit of the fathers of the Methodist Church.

During the week much routine work incident upon the administration of a great connexion of churches has been transacted. A large number of ministers are retiring this year from the active work. Amongst them are several of the honoured fathers of the Conference. Foremost stands Rev. Charles Garrett, the great temperance leader, who for many years has been the Methodist "Bishop" of Liverpool. The mutual affection existing between him and the late Bishop Ryle received many illustrations in the life of the revered prelate. Testimony was born to the unique service rendered to Methodism by Mr. Garrett during a ministry of more than fifty years. Rev. Joseph Posnett, who has travelled fifty-one years, and in recent years has done remarkable service amongst the artizans of Leicester, also retires, together with Rev. Joseph Bush, an ex-president of the Conference, and chairman for many years of the Nottingham and Derby district. The Wesleyan Foreign Missionary cause must submit to the retirement of the senior secretary, Rev. George W. Olver, B.A., who for fifteen years has rendered devoted service in the Mission House. The Governor of Didsbury College, Rev. Richard Green, whose genial manner and pulpit ability had won the esteem of colleagues and students alike, retired after a ministry of forty-seven years. Many less distinguished brethren, who have rendered no less faithful service, are amongst those who now become supernumeraries.

Happily God raises up a succession of faithful men. On Friday forty-eight young men, who have passed through a period of training at one of the theological institutions, and served a probation of four years in active work, were received as ministers in full connexion. The demands of the circuits for quite outgrow the supply of young men, but eighty-seven candidates for the ministry were accepted. Amongst them were men of varied attainments, but in all cases the Conference insists upon evidences of preaching power and high-toned character.

The custom, inaugurated by Mr. H. Price Hughes, of including an address on some devotional or pastoral topic in the devotional exercises at the opening of the morning sessions, has been followed by Dr. Allen. On Wednesday Dr. Robertson, one of the Irish representatives, gave an impressive address, in which he insisted that the quality of a man's prayers and of a man's work depended upon the quality of his character. Dr. T. B. Stephenson, on the following morning, referring to his retirement from "the Children's Home," said that if God should spare him for some years more, he should desire to spend the time that remained in the ordinary circuit work of his church. No work was so great as that of bringing the souls of men into direct contact with the great evangelical truths. A return to the spirit of the old Evangelicalism was essential. He had found that such preaching not only brought a glow into his own soul, but was more popular with his hearers than any other. He strongly urged the importance of preaching Evangelistic sermons occasionally on Sunday mornings, and dwelt upon the need of the cultivation of the spirit of expectation. Preachers should expect while they were yet speaking that their hearers would decide. An impressive address was also given by Rev. Joseph Nettleton, of Hastings, the venerable Fijian missionary, on the pastoral aspects of the minister's work. The minister should seek to encourage others, and to co-operate with his lay-workers, so that when the time for his removal came the church he left should not be in a state of collapse. Speaking of co-operation in the service of praise Mr. Nettleton said that at the dedication of the temple there were a thousand trumpets, and all the people sang. So should it be to-day. Love must have the first place in the minister's heart, and would lead to hearty and joyful co-operation with all.

Pan-African Conference.

SURELY, never in all history, have black men gathered from all parts of the globe with the object of discussing and improving the condition of their race; and the three-days' Conference of coloured people, held at Westminster Town Hall last week, organized by a committee of the African Association, was not the less important on account of its unique constitution. The various questions affecting native races—their needs, aspirations, views, and objects—were duly considered and discussed.

The proceedings opened on Monday, when, in the absence of the Bishop of London at the commencement, Bishop Alexander Walters, of Jersey City, New York, presided. He referred to the policy of a certain class of Americans who endeavour to keep the negro down. It took 240 years for his complete personal emancipation, and 100 years to attain his standing as a soldier. They could hardly expect, therefore, to get his complete social and political rights in thirty-five years. They had been able to eliminate 45 per cent. of their illiterates, and to-day they represented 735,000,000dols in real estate and personal property. The Chairman also announced that a bureau would be formed in London with the object of influencing legislation on behalf of the coloured races.

The Bishop of London, who arrived later, remarked that the problems with which they were concerned would not settle themselves in a hurry.

THE SENSE OF HUMAN BROTHERHOOD was a real thing, and even that sense, magnificent as it was as an ideal, created very great practical difficulties. A little time ago it was possible to say that, if there were any people on the earth's surface who wanted to be left to themselves, it was best to leave them alone; but it was no longer possible for any race or nation to go on absolutely by itself. Somehow or other the forces of the world would not allow it. The bishop went on to remind his hearers that after all they must look forward in their dealings with other races ultimately to confer on them, and that as soon as possible, some of the benefits of self-government that they themselves enjoyed. The native races might rest assured of the real and deep sympathy of the English people.

In the evening Mr. B. Sylvain read a paper on "the Necessary Concord to be established between Native Races and European Colonists." The writer contended that natives must no longer be considered like serfs, but as an indispensable element for the prosperity of the Colonies.

Re-assembling on Tuesday, the Conference discussed "The Progress of our People in the Light of Current History" Mr. F. S. R. Johnson (ex-Attorney-General of Liberia), claimed for the Africans that they were brave, industrious, and manly, and only wanted time to develop a capacity for self-government.

Some serious grievances were enumerated by Mr. J. E. Quinlan, from St. Lucia, who urged English people to complete they had commenced sixty years ago. Mr. Meyer, a delegate from the Afro-West Indian Literary Society of Edinburgh, and Mr. R. E. Phipps, barrister, Trinidad, made an earnest appeal for justice to be shown towards the black race. Another subject considered was, "Africa, the Sphinx of History in the Light of Unsolved Problems." Mr. D. Tobias claimed that civilization had been commenced by the black men; and Bishop Walters pointed out that they must keep three points in view: (1) To recognise conditions; (2) To ask for simple justice as men; and (3) push to achieve what they desired.

In the afternoon the members of the Conference were invited by the Bishop of London to Fulham Palace, and in the evening several papers were contributed, interspersed with musical selections.

The proceedings on Wednesday were again presided over by Bishop Walters, who briefly recognised the services rendered by white men to the negro cause, both in this country and America.

Mr. G. W. Christian, of Dominica, was the first speaker, and his theme was the coming settlement in South Africa. The Dutch farmer, he said, looked on the negro as a beast of burden, inferior to humanity. Whatever position he might attain to in wealth, character, and intelligence, he was not allowed to own land, or even to be at large without a pass. He could only travel in trains in a part more fit for beasts than men. What was all this but the revival of slavery? In the coming settlement in South Africa the natives would receive very little consideration from the colonists, and if justice was to be done it would be for the Imperial Government to guarantee protection by laws that no local legislature could alter, and no prejudiced judges and juries could pervert.

In the afternoon a report from a committee was read and adopted, providing for the formation, as the outcome of the conference, of a permanent Pan-African Association with its headquarters in London, and branches in various parts of the world. A general meeting of the association will be held every second year, the next being held in the United States, while in 1904 the meeting will take place in the Republic of Hayti. Bishop Walters was elected president. The Emperor Menelik of Abyssinia and the Presidents of Liberia and Hayti were elected honorary members of the association.

The Conference also adopted an address to the nations of the world, setting forth the grievances and claims of the coloured people, which was directed to be forwarded to the various Governments. The address urged that the cloak of Christian missionary enterprise should not be allowed in the future, as so often in the past, to hide the "ruthless economic exploitation and political downfall of less developed nations, whose chief fault has been reliance on the plighted troth of the Christian Church."

In the evening the Conference was addressed by Mr. C. W. French and Rev. H. M. Joseph.

A Revival Reminiscence.

THE fact regarding Mousewald mentioned in The Christian of June 14 (page 9), has recalled circumstances in connection with that parish which have never before been published, but which it may be for the glory of God now to relate.

Just forty years ago I was spending a few days in London, on my way to Scotland, when a lady (wholly unknown to me, and of whom I have never since heard anything) called at my lodging to tell me that her brother had recently sold some property in the parish of Mousewald to my brother, and to beg me to do something for the spiritual enlightenment of the people there.

I told her of my total inability to do anything in the matter, as I was a great invalid at that period of my life; and, besides, I was only going to stay for a few days with my brother on the way to other relatives.

No doubt the lady went away disappointed at the apparent failure of her wish; from that time, however, I made that parish a subject of special prayer. Early in the following spring (1861), after a very long illness in Edinburgh, I was at last well enough to go to my brother in Dumfriesshire, just when the widespread revival in the south of Scotland was taking place, and what was my joyful surprise to hear, the day after my arrival, that the awakening had reached Mousewald, and that, as my informant (who knew nothing of my prayers) said—half Mousewald is converted.

Although profoundly thankful for such tidings, I could do nothing personally in the parish, as I was shortly afterwards seized by the dangerous illness which caused me later in that year to go to Pisa; but through my brother's steward, who was greatly interested in the Revival movement, I was able to get a lending library of good religious books started in Mousewald. May we not believe that the fruits of the Revival in 1861 are still to be seen in the fact that the minister can testify, after nearly forty years, that there is not a single person in his parish addicted to drink!

Students' Summer Conference.

THE choice of Matlock, as the location of the summer camp in connection with the Conference of the Student Volunteer movement, was a happy one. The miniature canvas city stood, beautiful for situation, at the summit of Matlock Bank, commanding a glorious vista of the Derwent valley, with the river winding its serpentine course between the rugged hills of this romantic district.

There was a large attendance of collegians from all parts of the kingdom, the women students being accommodated at Matlock House, a short distance below the brow of the hill. The Conference was held in a capacious tent close to the camp, and the arrangements, which necessarily entailed much labour, were made and carried through with admirable completeness by Mr. Tissington Tatlow

The annual Conferences are now convened, it will be remembered, by the British College Christian Union, which includes the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, and the General College and Theological College departments. The gatherings have been surpassed by none of the preceding conferences in general usefulness. Stimulus was given to religious and social problems were helpfully discussed, and full advantage was taken of the times set apart by the executive for prayer, and "that lonely communion with God which alone can fit us for communion with men." Meetings for groups of colleges—arts, medical, training, &c., were arranged, and in a variety of instances delegations adopted the useful suggestion that the members should meet for prayer and a brief review of the day's message, as to its adaptation to the needs of their particular college.

The Conference commenced on Wednesday of last week, with a brief introductory meeting; and on Thursday, in addition to the usual devotional gatherings of the morning, Professor Wilbert W. White gave a Bible reading on Romans vii. and viii. to the men students; while Miss Richardson, whose incisive utterances had proved so helpful on former occasions, spoke to the women. On the following day a meeting for Bible study was conducted by Mr. H. W. Oldham.

The question of Foreign Missions was considered on Saturday, the first speaker being Rev. W. H. Findlay, of the Wesleyan Missionary Society's work in South India. Mr. Findlay said it was refreshing to find that the student movement refuses to take a narrow view of affairs, but shows in all its conferences and reports that the bound of its aspirations is nothing less than the evangelization of the world. Speaking as a follower of John Wesley, Mr. Findlay recalled the familiar words of the great founder of Methodism: "The world is my parish," and went on to state urgent reasons for a great extension of missionary undertakings abroad. Even from the standpoints of order and civilization, the Christian world cannot afford to leave the heathen in their present position.

THE CHINESE CRISIS

reminds us that the countries of the world, instead of being separated, as of yore, are being drawn into one, and a disease in one limb (i.e., country) affects all. But, taking the question into the higher region of Christian truth, unless India, for example, be won, we shall find that the educated classes of that land will no longer sit quiescent, but will, and indeed are, preparing to attack Christianity itself. We are apt to think that the battles for the existence of Christianity belong to earlier days, and that only minor conquests remain to be won. We may find that to be a delusion. Unless a vigorous native church be raised in India, our Christian peace will be disturbed as we have never dreamed possible, for India is getting ready to fight the West in the realm of intellect, with Western weapons, for the cause of Indian philosophy. India hopes to be, in this sense, the spiritual leader of mankind. In order to realize the possible effects of such a struggle we must realize the Hindu diagnosis that the disease of humanity is ignorance. For a time India believed, with Buddha, that it was suffering, but now there is the return to the old belief. Sin is passed by as a trifling thing, which only becomes important when it leads up to ignorance. The moral sense, therefore, has been dying out for centuries. Here, surely, is a glimpse of the terrible need of the heathen world. It is for students to lead the churches to enlarged views and more vigorous undertakings in connection with missions, and as to their own future, standing in the vestibule of life and considering which of the doors before them they shall open to seek their life's work, the question is not "Must I go abroad?" but "Is it necessary for me to stay at home?" There are and, in view of this, it must be a peremptory command indeed which can keep us at home. Our natural place must be outside this little island, in God's great and needy world.

A deep impression was made by Mr. J. R. Mott, who followed, with a comprehensive review of the condition of the world, and cogent arguments, set forth with point and earnestness, for a general missionary advance. He pointed out, in the first place, the extensive character of the need, and adduced statistics of population in the non-Christian countries of the world, to illustrate the position. It is also intensive. The Epistle to the Romans puts before us what science admits is an unvarnished account of the state of heathen life; and to-day, too, science tells us of millions of human beings, steeped in superstition, idolatry, corruption, and sorrow.

Judged by their fruits, the religious and eclectic systems which combat Christianity are a colossal failure. Mr. Mott admitted to having once entertained a faint hope that these systems might exercise some beneficial influence; but, after exhaustive study in all parts of the world, after conversing with priests and devotees, he finds that a nation without Christ is without hope. Face to face with the blasphemies, and cruelties, and superstitions of heathendom, 15,400 Protestant missionaries concur in this view. These religions fail because they have not God; therefore they cannot satisfy man; therefore they must pass away before the religion of Jesus Christ. Our Master is not going to share the world with Confucius, Buddha, and Mohammed.

HE SHALL REIGN

from sea to sea, and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God. Christ in us, and through us, will meet the need.

Pleading for missionaries, or, rather, stating the case, and leaving his hearers to settle alone with God the question of their future work, Mr. Mott asked, If Christians do not take up the missionary cause, who will? The commands of our Lord are still operative; they are obligatory, not optional. "If my faith is false," said Archbishop Whately, "I am bound to change it, whereas if it be true I am bound to propagate it." The churches need a great objective which will call out the best that is in them; they should find that objective in the evangelization of the world; then they would escape from the atrophy which comes of ease and indulgence and narrowness. If we want to apply to ourselves the blessing of the words, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," then there must be the willingness to "go . . . and teach all nations," for the promise is associated with the extension of Christ's kingdom.

The need is pressing. The forces of evil are not deferring their operations. With deadly vindictiveness, are laying siege, especially to the East. The opium traffic is enslaving millions, eating like a gangrene into the land of life. One cannot describe the effects on the mind caused by viewing this evil in a journey up the Yang-tse. Militarism and commercialism are contending for Japan. Lust and cruelty reign largely in Turkey. To meet these and other manifold evils it is necessary for God's people to work with great intensity while it is day. Mormonism has 1,700 missionaries outside Utah. Ceylon, centuries ago, sent out hundreds of Buddhist priests to subdue Asia to their religion. In Cairo, students from all parts of the Mohammedan world are preparing to go forth to teach the False Prophet. In the realm of scientific effort, the Great Powers have agreed to make an immediate survey of the entire heavens, while in military enterprises, such as the advance from Tientsin, preparations on a vast scale are a matter of course. Yet, when an appeal is made for twenty or thirty or forty thousand Christian Missionary Volunteers in this generation, people say, "it would be too great a drain on the Church."

A further need is that of information. If we would do the will of God, we should know the requirements of man. Finally, one other need is that of intercession. Are more volunteers required? Then, while affording all help and information, we must also pray the Lord of the harvest that He may send forth labourers into his harvest.

There was a large muster at the Conference tent on Sunday afternoon, in spite of the stormy weather. Mr. F. Lenwood, of Mansfield College, Oxford, delivered some suggestive thoughts on the book of Isaiah, in connection with the study of the prophecy by the Bible circles of the various College Unions. Mr. Lenwood said that the book was eminently one to be studied by those who might have to take the lead in Christian work; Isaiah dared to preach about a purity which his people did not want. Attention was directed to chaps. iii. and xxxiii. The former pictures the decadent condition of Judah under Ahaz, where a man should say, "Thou hast clothing, be thou our ruler," the nation having sunk to such a position in the that, if a man had but clothes enough to dress for the part, that would be sufficient to fit him to rule! And any so chosen would draw back. "I will not be a healer; in my house is neither bread nor clothing" (v. 7). The ignorant people, however, were not so much to blame as their leaders. "They which lead thee cause thee to err." The nation is no longer a pastoral one; a feudal order has arisen, and the powerful oppress and rob their dependants, "where wealth accumulates and men decay." Chap. xxxiii. deals with the Assyrian invasion and the deliverance of Jerusalem. In the one chapter, Isaiah stands alone in contending for righteousness; in the other, he has the nation's support in seeking the aid of God. It is given to him to see his work blossom, in the eventide of his life.

Private devotion was the subject dealt with during the first part of Sunday evening. The first speaker, Mr. G. H. Leonard, of Bristol, commented on the common abuse of the saying, "Laborare est orare," and urged the duty of spending time in communion with God, rather than in so much of what the Friends call "creaturely activity." Miss A. M. Wynne Willson, of Somerville College, Oxford, followed, with the thought that, while our lives are we need to remember that Jesus Christ's days, too, were very full. While, however, his days were preceded and followed by nights of prayer, we, on the other hand, endeavour to live the days in Capernaum without the nights on the mountain. Indolence is the form of sin which militates most against private devotion. Miss Willson had found two words in 1 Kings xx. 41, "busy" and "gone." Those words might be written as an epitaph over many college lives. Students are apt to be so "busy" that the work which God gives them to do is left undone, and they are "gone." The speaker dealt with subjects for devotion, e.g., adoration, confession, and intercession, our needs and our beliefs, and not only to say "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth," but "What wilt Thou have me to do?" remembering that prayer and service are the warp and woof of the Christian life.

Mr. H. C. Duncan, of Edinburgh University, subsequently delivered an address on "The Death of Christ," in which he earnestly emphasized fundamental Gospel truths.

The Pavilion Meetings.

THE evening meetings in the Pavilion proved to be of a helpful character. Some hundreds of persons, during the week, made open confession that they sought cleansing by faith. A gracious sense of humbling, in the presence of God, marked most of these services. On Tuesday evening, the addresses dealt largely with the application of spiritual power to the affairs of daily life. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan dwelt on portions of Acts ii. He reviewed the whole argument of Peter as set forth in the chapter (commencing at v. 22), leading up to the climax —that our Lord received in glory the promise of the Holy Ghost, and in the words of the Apostle's address, "hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear." The work of the Holy Spirit, creating the character of Christ in the believer, was set forth in a helpful manner by the speaker.

This message was followed by an address from Rev. F. B. Meyer, which, especially towards the conclusion, took the form of a scathing denunciation of hypocrisy and a loving appeal to the individual conscience. Mr. Meyer, in contending for consistency of walk, directed his utterances especially to any hearers who might profess to show forth Keswick teaching, and yet by selfishness of conduct bring reproach upon the Convention and its efforts in the direction of stimulating spirituality. Mr. Meyer, while observing, illustratively, that the odour of one bad fish in a shop would overcome that of adduced an instance of a wealthy person whose business methods were far from coincident with his high religious professions. With impressive words, the speaker went on to relate one or two unhappy occurrences which showed not only the keenness with which worldly people watch for marks of selfishness in those who profess to follow Christ, but also the discredit which is brought upon the Lord's servants at large, by those who make use of pietistic phrases, "talking Keswick," while their conduct is unequal. A sample case given was that of an individual of this kind who secured for himself the choicest eatables in a dining saloon, to the satisfaction of a couple of non-Christian onlookers who were watching for the outcropping of some form of personal greed.

The after-meeting was a hallowed season. Captain Tottenham, who presided, called for silent prayer, and subsequently several signified an intention to consecrate themselves fully to the Lord.

On Wednesday evening the first speaker was Rev. Dr. John Smith, who gave an address on Heb. ix. 14. He said that one common obstacle to the reception of fulness of Christian life by those who had been brought nigh by the blood, was the idea they entertained, that they must do this or that in order to be pleasing in God's view. We must give high admiration to such for their many good qualities, but their works should be the outcome of, not a substitute for, faith. They neutralize their labours by the notion that they can to God by a power of their own. If this fallacy could be removed, the result would be a large accession to the ranks of fully consecrated people. The way to remove it is by apprehending the grandeur and power of the Almighty's provision. To illustrate the position: Suppose you are at Chamounix, instead of Keswick. You are intending to make the ascent of one of the mountains in the district; you rise early and go out to the front of your hotel before it is light. Ostlers and others are moving about here and there harnessing horses and seeing to their work of preparation by the light of a lantern. You retire indoors for a time, and return to the busy scene at a later period. You now find that the sun has risen, and is pouring its radiance around. What becomes of the lantern light that seemed to be so indispensable? It now appears to be merely a yellow guttering candle which one instinctively extinguishes. So is the contemptible value of men's words, when compared with a light of the Sun of Righteousness.

We have no anonymous sacrifice offered for us. We have to do with a Person, the Son of God. Oh, how He breaks in upon our being! He is an educator. He throws light upon the moral and spiritual being, but He does not rest at teaching. He comes to take our place. We receive in Him the fruits of his great sacrifice. We cannot go so far, in faith, with Christ to go back to our own works. If we yield to Him, He is the great Doer, and we receive everything through Him. Christ attains the crown of perfect obedience. Let us, then, be content to be saved through Him, only and solely. God, who made us new creatures in Jesus Christ, God, the living God, He is ours, and we serve Him, not in the spirit of servants trying to be better, but in the PRIVILEGE AND POWER OF SONSHIP.

Rev. C. Inwood spoke on three verses in 1 John ii. 6, iii. 16, and iv. 11. Referring to the word "ought" (ought himself also so to walk), Mr. Inwood traced its origin to the old Saxon word "owe"—an undischarged obligation. Three such obligations are here presented in (a) walk, (b) sacrifice, and (c) love. What distinguished Christ's walk? It was always along the path of the Father's will. Therein He found his joy, his rest, just as much during the thirty years of patient, holy silence as during the three and a half years of public life. How do we regard God's will? Some associate it with the idea of a prison-house, with gloom and confinement, and an irrepressible desire to get outside it into the sunshine; or they think of it as a working man might think of the factory where he is employed, and where he constantly looks forward to the time when he shall cease from his labours. But we think of it as we do of home, where there is the music of loved voices, where all our needs are met.

Another feature of the walk of the Lord Jesus was that He was ever in dependence on the Holy Spirit. We remember that the Spirit descended on Him at the Jordan, that by the Spirit He was led into, and He returned from the wilderness.

HIS FIRST ADDRESS

began with "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me," and it was by the Spirit that He wrought miracles. In reference to that atoning sacrifice when He laid down his life, it is said that "through the Eternal Spirit He offered Himself without spot to God" (Heb. ix. 14). Throughout his earthly life, the Saviour leaned on the power of the Spirit to do his Father's will, and those who follow Him must walk as He walked. We dare not proclaim these truths but for the fact that the power of the Spirit is always available to enable us to do the will of God, though never to do our own.

The second obligation is that of sacrifice. "We ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." This, too, must be along the lines of God's will. We see so much of self-made sacrifice. People look at the sacrifices of others and rush to copy them, without considering if it be the Lord's will. We have no more right to determine what sacrifice we shall make than we have to decide what service we shall render. Let us think of the sacrifices in the life of Christ. We are not called to offer a sacrifice for the sins of others. That stands unique, and nothing can be added to it. In the presence of Calvary we stand as penitent sinners, to appropriate what Christ purchased. But we are called upon to be willing to sacrifice our earthly prospects and rights, our dignity, our time and ease—in a word, our whole life is to be devoted to him. We recall that, when Gordon had quelled the Tai-ping rebellion, he returned home to England as poor as when he started, save for a gold medal given him by the Emperor of China. On arriving at Plymouth, Gordon read of the keen distress which existed at that time among the silk weavers of Coventry. He had nothing that he could offer to alleviate the suffering except his medal, so he erased the inscription and sent the badge to the relief fund. He told nobody, but in his diary there was found, after his death, an entry to this effect; "After all, this is the secret of bliss—give away your medals!" "Measure thy life by loss."

The third obligation is to love. The measure of our love to others is the measure to bless them. If we feel we must work for them as a cold matter of duty, or if we have any feeling of contempt or repugnance as to their ignorance and debased condition, all our efforts will be wasted. We need a great baptism of love. Let us give ourselves, here and now, entirely to God, praying—

Give me a heart like thine,
Give me a heart like thine.
By thy wonderful power,
By thy grace every hour,
Give me a heart like thine!

Dr. Pierson followed Mr. Inwood with some suggestive thoughts on the same lines. The speaker related, with much feeling, the experience of a lady missionary to Nestorian women in Persia. After visiting the homes of the people, and being sickened by the filth and degradation, she cast herself on the floor of her room before God, crying "My God, I am going home if Thou dost not give me

LOVE FOR THESE PEOPLE."

God answered her prayer, and she became a great power for good. Dr. Pierson also told, with deep emotion, how, while confessing to a congregation that he felt he had not loved them as he ought to have done, the love that he desired came welling into his heart, and blessing followed in the church. "God righted up the balance of my nature and gave me love."

Dr. Pierson concluded with an affectionate invitation to his hearers to seek from God the love which they needed; and the meeting was brought to a close with a time of silent prayer and waiting on God.

The Keswick Mission.

The tent was filled on Wednesday afternoon with friends interested in the various missionary activities which branch out from Keswick into foreign lands. Many missionaries were among the numerous company on the platform. After brief silent prayer, all joined in singing the hymn,

Lord, thy ransomed Church is waking
Out of slumber far and near,
Knowing that the morn is breaking
When the Bridegroom shall appear.

Mr. Wilson read one verse from the second Psalm, "Ask of Me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

After Mr. Head had led in prayer, that the promise above recited may be fulfilled, he read a message from Miss Amy Wilson-Carmichael, testifying that prayer made at Keswick three years ago, just as new work was opening in India, had been answered. Further prayer was now desired under similar circumstances, also for a revival of vital religion among Christians in that land, and for open doors and definite conversions among the heathen. A few moments were devoted to the silent fulfilment of this request.

Rev. J. Harford-Battersby took occasion to mention namely, the necessity to make adequate provision for accommodation of the Convention gatherings in the future. As a certain hall hitherto hired for this purpose may cease to be available, negotiations had commenced for the purchase of land on which a second tent can be erected. The cost of land and incidental expenses will be about £600, with a further £250 for the second tent. The necessary assistance can best be given by promises of definite amounts if the purchase is completed; and these communications should be sent to Mr. Wilson, of Broughton Grange. The owner of the property had been promised a reply in the week following the Convention.

From the general financial statement of the Convention trustees, it appeared that the total income was £1,345 18s. 2d., of which £1,094 9s. 2d. was paid to Mr. Head, treasurer of the Missionary Council, and £251 9s. was handed to other missions by request of the donors.

A third division of Mr. Battersby's duty consisted in reading the fourth annual REPORT OF THE COUNCIL.

This document recognised the great loss which has been suffered in the decease of Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, who was one of the most valuable members of the Council. His visits to Canada in 1893, and to Northfield in 1897 and the following year, were greatly blessed, and the results were deep and far-reaching.

Particulars were given of travels by brethren who had conducted conventions in many lands —East and West. Invitations or requests for help had come from such diverse quarters as Jamaica, Ottawa, and Urumiah, in Persia.

"Good reports continue to come from those supported in the mission field. Their letters tell of difficulties overcome and victories won. Disappointments and repulses are also experienced; but this is no more than we expect, while the power of the enemy is so great and our missionary forces are few and inadequate. Miss Amy Wilson-Carmichael, Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Green, and Miss Eva Carmichael, Dr. G. Whitfield Guinness, Dr. A. C. Hall and Miss Luce (hon.), are respectively at work in Tinnevelly, Pondoland, Honan, Egypt, and North India. Mrs. Ford (née Miss Hodgson) in Honan, Mrs. Joyce (née Miss Brook) about to return to China, and Mrs. Butcher (née Miss Jacob) in Bombay, formerly on our list, still desire to be remembered in our prayers."

Details of expenditure in support of workers and in promoting deputation visits abroad, were given by Mr. A. Head, who made special mention of what has been done to enable missionaries to attend the Keswick Convention. Nearly 200 of these friends were accommodated this year; and they join the Council in hearty thanks to those persons whose liberal contributions have secured a much-appreciated boon. It is hoped to extend the benefit to many more upon the next occasion.

Rev. E. L. Hamilton spoke of things seen and done while visiting Berlin and Dresden, in company with Dr. T. H. White. In the former city attendance at the meetings rapidly grew; and it was a real pleasure

TO FEED HUNGERING SOULS.

At the closing meeting eighty-five persons rose one after another within a short time, and spoke of definite blessing received. There was no time for further individual testimonies, but another eighty rose to their feet in token of the same thing. Pastor Mascher, who has suffered much persecution in Dresden, co-operated in the work of the visiting brethren; and there were evident signs that here, as in other parts of Germany, the people are really hungry for the teaching of God's Word. The pastor says he could arrange for meetings in no less than thirty centres if Christian workers would but come.

Rev. F. Paynter gave some account of a visit to Ceylon and India, undertaken with two objects—first, to speak as God opened the way, of the "more abundant" life of full sanctification; and then to become personally acquainted with some of our missionary brethren, to assure them of the sympathy of friends at home, and to get a deeper insight into their work. It was found that God is accomplishing his gracious purposes by missionary members of the different denominations, and is uniting them together in love. Encouraging meetings of natives and also gatherings of pastors and teachers were addressed in Colombo and Calcutta. In Benares, the awful metropolis of Hinduism in its most repulsive features, a noble band of missionaries connected with various societies, hold in their own houses. Several days were spent in Agra, where, during the last four years, there has been a blessed outpouring of God's Holy Spirit. No less than 400 Mohammedans and Hindus have there been brought to Christ and baptized in his name; and the blessed work is still going on. Amritzar and Lahore afforded happy experiences in Christian fellowship.

The journey to Bombay revealed the presence of continued want and suffering in the famine-stricken district; and the distress must remain until the new crops are gathered in. In Bombay the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. are doing most important work among the English and Eurasians. More workers are sadly needed for the English-speaking people in many of the Indian cities. As Mr. Paynter went from place to place, he felt completely borne up by the prayers of friends at home. He returned to England feeling increased interest in missionary brethren, and rejoicing in the blessed work which God is doing through them.

In a closing address, full of interest, Rev. C. Inwood told how, along many lines, God had answered prayer made in that tent two years ago, in view of the speaker's projected visit to China. It is, said he, a cause of thankfulness, in view of the unforeseen perils now prevailing in the land, that one was permitted to be to the missionaries, and to the people whom they have won for Christ. The manifest guidance of God was experienced in every step of the way. Disappointment in regard to sailing arrangements only issued on the missioner reaching Shanghai nearly a fortnight before he was expected, and, through the temporary presence there of certain missionaries; the way was opened for a short visit to the North of China, that part of the Empire which is now the scene of so much trouble. Meetings held in Tientsin were the occasion for Christian fellowship much needed by missionaries from Manchuria and Mongolia, who were visiting the place just at that time.

In going westward, Mr. Inwood and missionaries accompanying him found it possible to attend the great West China Conference only through a change of mind on the part of Lord Charles Beresford, with regard to steamboat accommodation retained for him. Preservation of health, amid the perils of Chinese epidemics, was another answer to prayer; and the Lord gave his servant the confidence and affection of missionaries wherever he went.

GOD'S HAND WAS SEEN,

too, in the matter of interpretation; and Mr. Inwood mentioned many instances of brotherly love for himself and devotion to God, on the part of native Christians and their Chinese pastors.

News of massacre and wrecking of mission property now brings to mind God's leading as to words of counsel and comfort uttered when there was no anticipation of such widespread trouble, as to the Holy Ghost being the only power by which native believers could glorify God in laying down their lives for Christ.

In conclusion, Mr. Inwood declared that he had returned to England with a new revelation of the corruptness, vileness, and callousness of heathenism, and with strengthened conviction of the uselessness of everything but the Gospel to meet the needs of the poor benighted Chinese. He asked prayer that he might make the largest possible use, to the glory of God and the evangelization of the heathen, of the knowledge thus bestowed.

Free-will offerings in aid of the work were taken in the course of the meeting.

The Cotelingam Brothers were present at an interesting meeting held on Wednesday of last week at the High Barnet Congregational Schoolroom, Rev. E. Jenkins presiding. They are sons of the late Rev. M. Cotelingam, formerly native pastor of the L.M.S. church, Madras. The eldest brother, in an earnest and admirably-worded English address, described the purpose of the tour the brothers are making through Britain, Canada, America and Australasia. They wish to gain knowledge and experience of Christian life and work, which they may utilize in evangelistic tours on their return home. An esteemed correspondent, a returned missionary, writes: "It is pleasing to note the earnest efforts and courageous enterprise of these members of the Indian Church. They may be regarded as a sign of hopeful progress for the coming century. They sang hymns and gave recitations. The youngest played the mandolin with great skill, and sang part of a hymn, the music and words of which he has himself composed. A collection was cheerfully given in aid of the expenses of the tour."

The Indian Famine.

FROM Surat and Southern Gujarat States come tidings of a rainfall sufficient for agricultural purposes, while in Broach cotton sowings are being actively prosecuted. In other districts, however, very little rain has fallen, and cultivation is at a standstill.

Communications from missionaries and other workers continue to reach us, gratefully acknowledging the sympathy and help of friends at home in their efforts to relieve the distress, and describing the scarcely-improved condition of the population in the afflicted areas.

The last consignment of foods (six cases of oat flour from Messrs. A. and R. Scott, of Glasgow) was sent per s.s. City of Dublin. The owners, Messrs. George Smith and Sons, generously taking the cases freight free.

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

Mrs. F. M. Hewlett, Shanti Kothi, Benares, writes:—"I have a school for Hindu girls, whose parents are very poor, and have suffered much from the famine. Many of these girls come to school quite naked, as their parents cannot afford to clothe as well as feed them. Many wives, deserted during this terrible famine, have been rescued from a life of sin and misery."

From Jhalor, Mr. W. Mulligan writes:—"There are here 14,000 workers in one tank (relief work), and over 2,000 in poorhouse and kitchen. All the latter, and about a third of the former, are homeless and almost naked. We shall have frightful mortality when the first heavy rain falls. We have been enabled to give a great deal of help, and save much life."

Dr. J. Murray Mitchell writes to us: "A somewhat remarkable public meeting was held in Bombay on June 27 last. The s.s. Quito had arrived with a large consignment of grain from America, sent to aid in relief of the distress arising from the terrible famine. The prime mover in this philanthropic work was Mr. Louis Klopsch, of New York, who is editor of a paper called the Christian Herald. The grain was the gift of the readers of his paper and others who sympathized with him; and it amounted to 5,000 tons.

"The Governor was not in Bombay, but sent a telegram warmly acknowledging the generous gift. The Chief Justice spoke in the name of the Government, and expressed hearty thanks. Several speakers followed. We content ourselves with quoting a brief report of the speech of a native gentleman—the Hon. N. G. Chandravarkar. The sentiment he expressed is shared by many of his countrymen.

"The Hon. W. Chandravarkar said that, though not a Christian in the popular sense of the word, he assured them that no one had tried to understand and, if possible, be inspired by, the teachings of Jesus Christ more than he had. He had heard of the untiring exertions of the Christian missionaries throughout the famine districts; and he had said to himself and his friends that, in spite of all they sometimes heard, the Spirit of Christ was still alive.

"While our hearts are broken with grief as we read the accounts of the fearful sufferings in the famine-stricken districts, let us not forget that, in the wonder-working providence of God, there may yet be some mitigation of the evil. One result is likely to be the softening of stony prejudice on the part of India, and a belief that the religion which prompts such deeds of kindness cannot be wholly false.

"'By their fruits ye shall know them,' said the Voice divine. The argument of arguments in favour of the truth of Christianity is Christian life—the manifestation of the Spirit of Christ. The suffering natives expected the Indian Government to put forth its utmost efforts to save them from death; and they have not been disappointed. They expected that British Christians—missionaries and others—both in India and at home, would also do their utmost; and they have not been disappointed. But foreign Christians—American missionaries in India and Christians in far America, who have no political connection with India—are hastening to their rescue. Why so? Because, as the Hindu Mr. Chandravarkar says, 'the Spirit of Christ is still alive.'"

Notes from New York.

MR. W. B. MILLAR, of the International Committee of the Y.M.C.A., and Secretary of the Army and Navy branch of that work, has gone to San Francisco to meet the two Y.M.C.A. secretaries who went to the Philippines about two years ago, and established field branches of the Y.M.C.A. and circulating libraries in Manila, Cavité, and other important army stations in the Archipelago. Mr. Millar has gone to receive the reports of these gentlemen and to arrange for additional facilities for the comfort of our soldiers in those islands to which they hope shortly to return.

An interesting report of a canvass of the Fourteenth Assembly District of this city has lately appeared in the organ of the Federation of Churches and Christian Workers, a useful organization that does much excellent work. The population of the district is estimated at about 50,000. The leading nationality was German—38·4 per cent. of the families visited; then Americans, 26·4, and Italians, 10·3. Irish formed 9·5; Hungarians, 5·3; Russians, 3·1. Austrians numbered 195 families, and English 108; and of nationalities with under 100 families there were fifteen. Not one negro family was found by the canvassers. Only 225 of the 10,397 families owned their dwellings. The Hebrews of the district have practically deserted the synagogues, 93·7 being without a regular place of worship, and only 62 per cent. providing for the religious instruction of their children in the synagogues.

According to the New York Outlook, the religious situation at Harvard University is full of hope. This year a new building has been added in the shape of the Phillips Brooks House, which is to be the religious centre of the University. There are reception rooms, libraries, and suites of rooms for different religious societies, among which there is an office for the Student Volunteer Committee. One of the distinctive features of the University are the morning prayers in Appleton Chapel. Attendance at this quarter-hour service is quite voluntary, but usually there are 300 or more students present. The best preachers in the country are selected to carry on these services, who are in residence in turn for purposes of religious intercourse with the students.

Persecution in Persia.

THE Nestorian Christians of Persia are suffering much at the hands of the Greek hierarchy. Deacon Abraham sends us the translation of a letter recently received. It reports the advent of a party of priests, who, by the treachery of a villager, got possession of the church. Thereupon, the inhabitants of the village were called upon to confess the Greek faith or give up all hope of crossing the Araxes into Russia. The point of this threat lies in the fact that during part of the year the people gain their livelihood in Tiflis. Some sixty families gave their names on promises of temporal benefits; but they soon found out the emptiness of the promises and the sacrilegious character of the entire proceedings. It is said that in some such way as this the Russian priests have gained possession of every church in Oroomiah, the Persian Government being too weak to oppose the aggression. Notwithstanding, many of the Nestorians are standing in the old paths—despoiled of everything but their ancient faith and trust in God.

A Remarkable Discovery.—The Vatican is not a likely place for the discovery of Protestant literature, but it is affirmed that several hitherto unknown books, by Martin Luther, have recently been discovered there. They are said to embrace—(1) Two Commentaries on the Romans, written in 1515-16, one of which is a solid doctrinal exposition. (2) Two MSS. containing the Reformer's lectures on the Romans, condensed from his Commentaries. (3) Two similar Commentaries on the Epistle to the Hebrews, on which he lectured in 1517; and other works. These works will be read with intense interest by those fortunate enough to see them; and, though possibly they will add little to our knowledge of Luther's mind, they will doubtless be valuable from a devotional as well as a historical point of view.

Fruit in North Africa.

IN a recent letter from Sousse, Tunisia, Mr. W. G. Pope says:—"Much as we need help ourselves to carry on the Lord's work, we feel the best way to plead our own cause is to plead that of others.

"Our Brother Anfuso, an Italian, converted here three years since, is now a missionary to Italians in South America. Brother Scorsome, another Italian, has been so persecuted and boycotted through the Roman Catholic priests, because of his faithful witnessing and blessing in bringing others to Christ, that he has been obliged to flee to another city. He is now in Sicily, where we believe he will be led into work for God. Another Italian, Brother Bertholdi, still with us, will, we trust, become a colporteur evangelist shortly, as the Lord may supply his need.

"I wish to draw particular attention to our Brother Perrot, a French soldier, led definitely to the Lord whilst here three years since. After leaving military service, he obtained some training in England, and then proved himself a successful evangelist in Paris. The Lord laid very heavily on his heart, his home—Rennes, now famous for its connection with the Dreyfus case. As any who have visited it will witness, it is one of the hardest, most Catholic, and yet most needy places in the whole of France. Brother Perrot needs our prayers, also our material support. He has already been joined by an ex-monk, and blessing has begun with them. His address is, M. Roger Perrot, St. Heliers, Rennes, France."

Miss De Broen's Work.

LAST Sunday week, a unique gathering took place in Miss De Broen's Mission Hall at Belleville in the east end of Paris, when twenty-nine working men belonging to the "Men's Own" from Mr. Charrington's East End Tower Hamlets Mission, visited the hall, and conducted the service. This party were part of a number who this year have visited the Exhibition. The writer was the first to address the gathering, and was followed by several who gave their experience in real East End style, which for heartiness and fervour cannot be exceeded. These earnest speeches were translated by Miss De Broen, and then some of her own converts in return gave theirs. The singing of well-known hymns from Mr. Sankey's collection rang through the building, and the two nations in their own language joined most heartily in praising God.

Miss De Broen assured us that our visit was much appreciated, and had given them quite a "lift up." She is doing a grand work, amid great opposition, in the gay and godless city. Let us pray that God may abundantly bless the speaking of these unexpected voices. Our men greatly enjoyed their visit; everything was so new. One thing was specially impressed upon their minds, and that was, the awfulness of the Continental Sabbath. In their excursions by steamer on the Seine, or by rail, they sang hymns, and on the day we visited the magnificent grounds at Versailles the Welsh choir, who were also visiting it, sang in magnificent style, "Crown Him, crown Him, Lord of all." We followed in our poor way, and repeated the same in English.

We have all returned to our dear native land with new experiences, which will be used in God's service. We feel we have done "what we could" to honour his Name in a country where little seems to be thought of except sin of the vilest kind. God bless every effort put forth by such noble workers as Miss De Broen and her staff! EDWIN H. KERWIN.

Canary Islands—Writing from Tafira, Las Palmas, Mrs. T. Mackwright says:—"God has opened my heart to Spanish lands. This island belongs to the Spanish, and a dry, and parched, and thirsty land it is. We have rejoiced in the conversion of our cook, and of Antonio, and of a schoolmistress, who is lately arrived from Cuba. On Sunday we had ten Spaniards at a service running on over five hours."

With South African Troops.

HAVING gone to South Africa as acting chaplain to the forces, Rev. Howard M. Webb-Peploe has written home deeply-interesting letters on his work. He was privileged to distribute many copies of the Soldiers' New Testament on board the Kildonan Castle, Transport No. 44; so, writing from Port Elizabeth, on June 18, to Mr. Walters (Scripture Gift Mission, 15, Strand, W.C.), he says:—"We had a most successful time on board, and could not help feeling that God was owning and blessing the work in a very remarkable way. We had occasional voluntary services and daily prayers, and when I gave away some of the Testaments one night, after hymn-singing, the men kept running to me to ask for them; and some of them, who had slung their hammocks on deck, jumped out to get a copy. We gave away nearly 400 that night.

"Another time, after a voluntary service on the forecastle, the men were so eager to get copies that they almost injured one another by crowding. I had to refuse to give out any more on several occasions, until they stopped pushing.

A FOOTBALL SCRUM

was nothing to it. We had Bible readings during the week in the captain's cabin, and the Testaments were often seen, for the men carried them about in their tunics. One man told me he had nearly read the whole Testament through between Sunday and the following Friday; and he showed me marks in it, which proved this. Others were seen reading them while lying about on deck: so we know they were not wasted.

"We gave away nearly fourteen hundred Testaments, besides Gospels. We could easily have used more, had we had them, for when they were all gone, some men asked us for copies, saying they had not received them. Some of the Roman Catholics also asked for, and received copies. I am now on the way to Natal, as I received orders to proceed to Durban, and thence to Maritzburg, where I shall get further orders."

In a letter to Mr. Holness, Mr. Webb-Peploe wrote on June 20 from R.M.S. Britannic, transport No. 62, en route for Natal:—"I am so sorry that I could not write sooner to thank you for the splendid parcel of magazines and books which you were good enough to send me for distribution on board the Kildonan Castle. It was a very great help, for we had over 2,600 troops on board, and as they had nothing to read except what we gave them, they were naturally anxious to get anything. The captain had written to a large number of publishers for grants of pamphlets, &c., and many of my friends had sent us parcels, so we were able to give out a lot of good secular literature during the week, and thus show the men that we were their friends and wished to make them happy and comfortable.

"The results of all the services and distribution of literature were most encouraging. We had several cases of conversion, besides who were sorry for the past coldness and neglect being brought in. Altogether we had a splendid time of personal dealing with souls, and many told us they had been converted while on board the ship.

"We cannot attribute this to one cause alone, but it just seemed as if God were using many different means towards the one end; so that during the voyage we were able to enrol 365 personal applicants as members of a Soldiers' Christian Association. Each one had to come up to the captain's cabin to be enrolled, where he received a membership card, and a Special Testament; and this gave us grand opportunities for dealing with the men.

"We have great cause for thankfulness to Almighty God and to all our friends who helped us with literature and their prayers, to bring about this happy work during the nineteen days of the voyage."

Personalia.

Rev. F. B. and Mrs. MEYER have sailed this week by the Teutonic for the Northfield Convention.

Mr. JOHN JACKSON (of the Mission to Lepers) will leave for India in the autumn for a tour of the institutions belonging to the Society, including a visit to the Asylum under the charge of Miss Mary Reed at Chandag.

Rev. Dr. L. W. MUNHALL, the well-known and valued American Evangelist, is expected to arrive in London in a few days. He will devote the month of August to tent work in the metropolis. He hopes to give a series of addresses at the Aldersgate Street noon prayer meeting, beginning on Monday, August 13. He has also arranged to conduct the services for Dr. Barnardo at the Edinburgh Castle during September. Communications should be addressed to him at 14, Queen Square, Bloomsbury, W.C.

Oxford Letter.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

OXFORD wears its long vacation appearance, but there are signs of the presence of numerous visitors in our midst. The grand old Bodleian Library attracts visitors from all parts of the world, not only as sightseers, but as students. Every day may be found there ladies and gentlemen who spend their holidays—at least, in part—in preparing work for next term at college or at school. The writer met a professor from an American university, the other day, a Presbyterian who is utilizing his holiday in this way. Somerville, too, is enlivened just now by "The Girls' Camp," composed of some seventy young ladies who have met for mutual improvement. The Hon. and Rev. Talbot Rice is acting as chaplain, and we hear of the helpful and happy times they are all having. The object of these camps is to bring together those who will be helpful to each other, and there must be many who are thus permanently benefited.

Rev. G. C. Bowring was the speaker at the annual meeting of the St. Peter-le-Bailey Temperance Society, held on Thursday week. He spoke some timely words. Referring to the sale of drink to children, he said he knew a case where a child was being slowly murdered through strong drink; steadily the poison was working out this accursed result. He said there were two things which made it difficult in this country to fight against the evil. One was the national fatalism, the idea that because the evil had come on for so long it must go on. And the other was the selfishness of the great Christian population, especially in the endeavour to set the children free. Mr. Talbot Rice presided, and said that if Parliament could not find time to pass a bill in the interests of little children they would soon find it difficult to know how to vote.

A meeting in connection with the Bi-Centenary of the S.P.G. was held in St. John's College on Thursday, the Bishop of Oxford presiding. There was a large attendance. Canon Josa, for twenty-six years missionary in British Guiana, was the chief speaker. He said that the country was peopled by races from all parts of the world. Descendants of the old African slaves taken there during the time of the slave trade, Indian coolies to the number of 100,000, Chinese and the aboriginal inhabitants who dwell in the interior. Here is encountered one of the difficulties of the work. Speaking of the Chinese population, it was specially pleasing to hear Canon Josa say that the work of the Society had been most fruitful among them. Moreover the Chinese Christian community is self-supporting, an annual sum being sent over to the parent society that the Gospel might be preached to their own countrymen in China. The Bishop spoke some warm words in praise of the work of the C.M.S.

A large party from the Christian Endeavour Convention paid us a visit last week. They were conducted by Mr. English to New Road Chapel, where they were welcomed by Revs. J. Robertson and E. J. Hammond. They were then conducted in sections over the colleges. Those visited had mostly a history more or less in common with the tastes of the party. Lincoln College, once the cradle of Methodism, founded to put down Lollardism; the pulpit used by Wesley, his college rooms, and the meeting place of the "Holy Club;" Balliol, John Wycliffe's College; the Martyrs' Memorial, sacred to the memory of Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer; the Divinity School, where the martyrs were tried for heresy; and Mansfield College, the new Congregational School of Theology, all being visited.

The Liberator Relief Fund.

DEAR SIR,—Kindly allow me to inform our many friends that I am now able to report, with profound joy and devout gratitude, that our heart's desire is, so far, an accomplished fact—the "Liberator" Relief Fund having reached the original estimate of £100,000. The receipts this trying and tragic year, mainly in response to the appeal, entitled "Beleaguered on British Soil," already amount to the noble sum of £7,973 in 3,079 separate gifts.

But since that estimate was made, which, be it remembered, only gives at the rate of a few shillings a week to the most destitute of the thousands of aged and afflicted victims of the great "Liberator" fraud, my committee have been compelled to take on between 300 and 400 more very needy cases. Indeed, some of these are among the most distressing that we have to deal with. As long as they possibly could, they bravely battled with their difficulties, and only applied for relief when driven to do so by stern necessity.

At least another £10,000 must be raised to provide for these additional cases, and I feel every confidence that the generous friends of the Fund will gladly continue to assist in completing this truly Good Samaritan effort.—Yours truly, J. Stockwell Watts.

Scottish Notes.

UNDER the superintendence of Rev. John Renfrew, a number of the agents of the Glasgow City Mission were busy for four weeks prosecuting evangelistic work among the showmen who gathered in the city in connection with the annual Fair. Tracts, text-cards, and New Testaments were distributed, open-air meetings were held, and regular visitation was carried on among the vans. On the Fair Sabbath evening a Gospel meeting in Ferguson's Theatre was largely attended, and other evidence was forthcoming that the travellers appreciated the efforts made to bring them to a knowledge of the truth.

The Toronto Presbyterian Review of July 5 announces that it has been unanimously agreed to offer the Chair of Apologetics at Knox College, Ontario, to Rev. Dr. D. W. Forrest, Skelmorlie, Scotland.

The arguments which Mr. Quarrier and others have been pressing on public attention in connection with the care of consumptives are now bearing fruit in different directions. The Public Health Committee of Edinburgh Town Council propose the setting aside of 100 beds for such patients in a new hospital outside the city, and, as the result of careful inquiry, believe it reasonable to expect that within ten years deaths from this cause might be reduced by 200 per annum. If, however, the number should prove to be 100, the value to the community of each such life (computed at £35 per annum for ten years) is believed to be moderately assessed at £350, which would bring the saving on 100 per annum to £35,000, while the annual outlay is estimated at £5,000, or £50 per bed. All this deals only with the material aspect of the subject; but, in addition, there is the opening of a door of hope to many sufferers among the poorer classes, for whom at present there is no prospect of alleviation.

Several important missions were begun in Glasgow on the Fair Sabbath, and carried on right through the holiday season. After successful missions, conducted in the Mizpah Hall by Mr. John Anderson (with the staff and students of the Bible Training Institute) and Mr. D. M. Bayne, the work was removed to the usual summer quarters in the tent at Cranston Hill. Mr. John Climie was evangelist in charge for the first two weeks, and was able to testify that the Lord continued to set his seal on the preaching of the Word. The open-air services attracted the attention of many, while the usual Sabbath morning work by the riverside was the means of reaching other classes in goodly numbers. Careless ones, as well as others in a state of concern, found their way to the tent, and professed to trust the Saviour. Mr. Climie has now been succeeded by Mr. J. W. Moodie, "the Soldier Evangelist," who has greatly improved in health since his return from South Africa.

Mr. Samuel McKenzie took up the work in Cowcaddens Free Church, where his labours in spring were much blessed. The conditions being favourable, a large part of the time was spent in the open air, where the people showed an unusual readiness to stand and listen to testimony and exhortation. At short meetings inside, the evangelist and his helpers were enabled to bring to a point many of the impressions previously made. Respectable working men and women mingled with the veriest human wrecks; on one evening no fewer than thirteen men were dealt with, and apparently led into the light—most of them artizans. On some of the evenings the composition of the audiences was such that the smell of whisky was almost overpowering. But workers were made glad by what they experienced of the goodness of the Lord among the most hopeless. Mr. McKenzie hopes to complete a month at Cowcaddens, and then to undertake a series of meetings at Keppoch Hill, where also the visit is his second during the current year. Mr. William Thomson, jun., was in charge at the Tent Hall.

Gipsy Mission Society.—During the season large numbers of van-dwellers from the New Forest are engaged in strawberry-picking in parts of Hampshire. The Gipsy Mission Society has had some good meetings among these, organized by Messrs. Baker and Chapman, gipsy missionaries. By means of a free tea and in other ways, the Gospel was brought before them, with, it is hoped, some permanent spiritual result.

Halfpenny Gospels.—Workers in the open air might find the Bible Society's issue of halfpenny Gospels very useful to circulate. I prefer selling them, and hardly remember an open-air meeting last summer in Birmingham, or this summer here, where there have not been purchasers. Some friends with leisure time might mark them with red. Announcing them as the most wonderful halfpenny worth in the world, I urge readers to begin at the beginning, and go on right through the Gospel. "The entrance of thy Word giveth light." John O. Obituary.

REV. PHILIP COLBORNE.

THE death is announced at Tulse Hill of Rev. Philip Colborne, B.A. For a quarter of a century he laboured at Norwich, also for a time at Lozells, Birmingham. A few years ago, Mr. Colborne was associated with the Evangelical Alliance, in the capacity of deputation secretary. Many will mourn his departure.

DR. J. WHITEHOUSE, AJMERE.

Cholera has claimed as its prey a valued representative of the United Presbyterian Mission out in India. On a recent Saturday, Dr. Whitehouse went to Taragarh Hill to spend the Sabbath with his wife and son. Late on the Sunday he complained of not feeling well. Monday morning found him in the fatal grip of cholera, and in the evening he passed away. Always engrossed in the subject of India's evangelization, Dr. Whitehouse had taken over the Ajmere work during Dr. Husband's furlough. In addition to medical and surgical skill of a high order, he was a successful preacher of the Gospel, and had a particularly happy and instructive method of illustrating his sermons. Joining the U.P. Mission in 1892, he made remarkable progress in wielding the tongue of the people, and gave every promise of becoming a vernacular expositor of exceptional power. His first furlough was due next year, and he was already looking forward to see the "old folks," and a brother and sister whom he dearly loved.

REV. HENRY SHARPE, B.D., HAMPSTEAD.

Another gap in the ranks of Protestant and Evangelical Churchmen is caused by the death, at the age of 67, of Rev. Henry Sharpe. A man of natural gift, gentle and unpretentious manner, hopeful, confident, and untiring in his labours, he exerted a powerful spiritual influence over his parishioners in the course of an arduous ministry which was prolonged to thirty-five years in one place. He was a strong supporter of evangelical societies, and his sound advice and wise counsel will be much missed in their committee rooms. He was ordained in 1856 to the curacy of St. John the Baptist's, Peterborough. Two years later he went out to Canada, and became the Incumbent of Holy Trinity, Wolfe's Island, Ontario; and on returning to England in 1864 he again took up a curacy at St. John's, Peterborough. The following year he was appointed to the staff of the London Diocesan Home Mission, and two years later he was placed in charge at the temporary church at Hampstead Fields. In 1872, on the formation of the new parish of Holy Trinity, and on the consecration of the church, he was appointed its first vicar, a position he held until his death. The funeral took place on the 25th ult., when all the curates of the deceased clergyman, with many sorrowing friends, attended to pay a last tribute of loving esteem to their departed vicar.

The Open-Air Mission.

THE seaside work of this mission is now in full swing. Protracted missions are already launched or arranged at Great Yarmouth, Lowestoft, Douglas (Isle of Man), Rhyl, Penzance, Exmouth, Herne Bay, Morecambe, and Torquay, and nearly fifty devoted men of God, including officers of Her Majesty's army, will be engaged in the glorious work of proclaiming a full salvation to the thousands who throng our coasts.

Special favour has again been shown by the Corporation of Great Yarmouth in the use of the "Singers' Ring," and by the Corporation of Penzance. It is most cheering to see these public authorities favouring Gospel work.

We entreat earnest prayer for these great efforts, and shall be deeply grateful for funds to sustain them.

The Life-Boat.

By WILLIAM LUFF.

ONE morning, when at the seaside, I heard a gun fire near the Life-Boat Station, and very soon I saw the men in cork jackets and red caps were getting the boats ready for action.

Soon she was on the beach, and before long an eager crowd had pushed her into the water, where her crew went through the drill usual on such occasions.

Then I thought of the first and best of all Life-Boats, and remembered a text which spoke of it and the wreck to which it came.

"God so loved the world"—that is the wreck—"that He gave his only begotten Son"—He is the Life-Boat—"that whosoever believeth in Him"—these are the people who do "not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16). Now let us take the letters that spell L-i-f-e-B-o-a-t.

L.—That suggests the Life-Boat is large—as large as the wreck; for God "loved the world." At the wreck of the Stella the boats could only take some—the rest had to be left to perish—but of our Life-Boat we can sing:

Millions now are safely landed,
Over on that blissful shore;
Millions more are on their journey,
Yet there's room for millions more.

I.—This gives us the word "Imperishable—not perish." This applies to the Boat, which is as good as ever: "Old, yet ever new," and it also applies to those who are in the Boat, or in Christ: they shall not, cannot, will not perish.

F.—Free is the word here. We have to pay our passage to America—hire a rowing-boat, give so much money to go in a sailing boat; but who thinks of paying to get off a wreck into a life-boat. Christ saves "without money and without price."

E.—Employed to save. Life-boats are not for mere pleasure trips—nor for trading purposes—they are to "rescue the perishing." Christ does not amuse people, nor is his salvation a matter of worldly gain: his business is to seek and to save that which is lost.

Now for our second word, B-o-a-t.

B.—Brought near. The life-boat dry on the shore is no use to the vessel sinking a mile out at sea. Jesus has come to us where we are. As the hymn says: "He has brought salvation near." Turn to Rom. x. 6—11 to see what we mean.

O.—Only one. There are many life-boats on our coasts, and often more than one at a wreck; but our verse tells us the Spiritual Life-Boat is God's "only begotten Son." "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved" (Acts iv. 12).

A.—Always ready. To see if the life-boat was ready was the purpose for which I saw the men called out. Jesus is always ready to save—He is ready just now, whether it is morning, noon or night; rough with temptation, or smooth with pleasure.

Before we give the last word let us repeat the letters we have. L.—Large. I.—Imperishable. F.—Free. E.—Employed to save. B.—Brought near. O.—Only one. A.—Always ready.

T.—To be Trusted. The life-boat may be large and free, brought near and ready, but the lost ones get no benefit until they trust in it. "Whosoever believeth," or trusts, is the person who shall not perish in the shipwreck of the world. The man who fixed the tight-rope for Blondin had his little boy with him to witness one of the performances. "Did you see me walk across with the man on my back?"—"Yes, Mr. Blondin." "Do you think I could carry you across?"—"Yes, Mr. Blondin." "Will you let me try?" The little chap hid himself in his mother's skirts in no time. How many trust Christ to save others, and even believe He could save them!

Will they trust Him to do it now? No, not that!

In a perishing world, with Christ the only Life-Boat, will you trust Him to save you? You know he has saved others. You believe He could save you; but let not faith stop short at this.

Shipwrecked on the sea of life,
Trust the Christian Life-Boat!
Hear the shout above the strife,
Trust the Christian Life-Boat!
Jesus comes! He comes to save!
Trust the Christian Life-Boat!
Sinking in the mighty wave!
Trust the Christian Life-Boat.

Chorus.
Trust Him now! Trust Him now!
Fearless trust the Life-Boat!
Bear along salvation's song!
Trust the Christian Life-Boat.

A Prayer for the Children.

We come to Thee, "Our Father,"
Through Jesus Christ thy Son;
Oh, may thy Name be hallowed,
Thy holy will be done!

We thank Thee for thy mercies,
And, in temptation's hour,
We ask that Thou wilt keep us
By thy almighty power.

May all our sins be pardoned,
And all our needs supplied;
And may thy Holy Spirit
Be evermore our guide.

Oh, may thy Word instruct us—
Its precepts may we love,
And daily wilt Thou fit us
For thy bright home above! C. W.

Notes & Comments

THE indications of a widespread Anarchist plot, revealed by the assassination of the King of Italy, having for its purpose the slaying of other crowned heads, once more unveils the terrible background of malign forces hidden behind the fair seeming of our modern civilization. The philosophy of human nature that can satisfactorily explain such terrible deeds has yet to be found; it is only through the word of revelation that light comes. The springs of our unredeemed nature have been poisoned; there are diabolical influences always ready to seize upon the soul and use it as their instrument. To some extent the restraints of society and of law keep these evil impulses within bounds; but in such fiendish and futile deeds as this we see them breaking bounds, and revelling in their lawlessness. It is impossible to hold very exalted views of humanity apart from the creative power of the Holy Spirit.

The late King of Italy, though a Catholic by profession, on several occasions showed marked kindness to the efforts made to evangelize his subjects. He took a warm personal interest in the work of the Italian Military Church. When the military authorities forbade Luigi Capellini to continue his evangelistic work among the soldiers, Prince Humbert, as commandant at Rome, replied: "Watch, if you fear that under the cloak of religion some political plot is being carried on; but do not forbid soldiers to fulfil the dictates of their conscience." Afterwards, when he became King, he sent for Signor Capellini and knighted him. If the new King will follow in the steps of his father, the cause of Evangelical religion in Italy will not suffer. In that benighted land there is much call for a plain presentation of the Gospel, which vast multitudes have never heard in its simplicity.

A recent writer upon the Chinese Empire recalls the fact that the Chinese are mentioned by a writer of the fourth century as having received the Christian faith, and that the Nestorian Christians had successful missions there in the seventh and eighth centuries, an inscribed pillar surmounted by a cross, commemorative of their work, having been discovered in Northern China. For centuries, however, the effort was abandoned; and about the beginning of the nineteenth century Britain entered the field. The question has been raised by politicians, shall these missions be abandoned? But it does not admit of discussion, and as Rev. A. Loxley has said, the vengeance we must take for the massacres must be "the righteous vengeance of new efforts to win another nation to Christ by the power of the Sword of the Spirit."

In a series of articles on "Women and Drink," in the Examiner, Mr. Fred A. Mackenzie is publishing some instructive facts and summaries drawn from various social grades in typical towns and districts in the kingdom. In last week's article, this able and observant journalist gives a startling picture of the state of things in Manchester among respectable women of the working classes. It is usual for many of the quieter public-houses to open their kitchens for women, where (on Saturday nights especially) scores of maids and matrons, with their marketing half done, are to be found sitting and treating each other in "orthodox style." Others patronise the grocer's license, who would not care to enter a public house. But the most extraordinary aspect of drinking among Manchester women is the free drinking saloons attached to certain licensed houses, where an ostensibly free concert is made an excuse for indulgence in strong drink, to the accompaniment often of doubtful songs, such as would be "hissed off a London music-hall stage when they were at their worst." It is time that a temperance Watch Committee, such has done so much good in Liverpool, should start on the work of demolishing these temptations to drunken women.

The Russian Government has taken the drastic step of suppressing the publican, and has undertaken the production and sale of drink. The change has resulted in a large increase in the public revenue, although that was not the object in view, but rather the regulation and limitation of a traffic which in Russia, as in every other country, is found to be productive of national evils. The Minister of Finance reported that the exclusion of private persons from the trade in drink was absolutely necessary in view of the unsatisfactory position of the question of the traffic, the unscrupulous profit-seekers engaged in it, and "the growth of many abuses injurious to the lower classes." It is noteworthy that at the same time the Government has subsidised the Temperance Societies with a sum of £180,000. Shall we ever have an Administration in England bold enough on the side of righteousness to deal as courageously with the dread traffic in these islands?

Preaching recently at Blackburn, upon the occasion of the ordination of a priest—the only one in that town since the Reformation—the Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford said:

> The sacrifice of the Mass and the sacrifice of the Cross are the same, since the Priest, the Victim, and the Sacrificial Offering are the same—namely, Jesus Christ Himself. They differ, however, in the manner of offering; for Jesus offered Himself on Calvary in his own person—personally he offered Himself in sacrifice—but in the Mass he offers it not personally, but by the ministry of the priest: he stands in his place. . . . We who live in the nineteenth century after it was offered, require continual application of its merits and its satisfaction to our souls, and we become sharers of both in the perpetual sacrifice of the Mass which the priest alone can offer. . . . No parent can covet a higher privilege than that his son should stand at the Altar of God to offer Christ in sacrifice, and by his words, the words of consecration, cause the objective presence of Jesus Christ on the Altar.

And this is the heinous error that is being increasingly preached in Anglican churches also.

The extreme High Churchmen state that they object to the Pope's claim to infallibility, but if their organ may be taken as representative, they are prepared to acknowledge another claim not much less fatal to spiritual and intellectual freedom. The Church Review declares that "the law of the whole Catholic Church cannot err," and that "Holy Scripture must be interpreted by the Church." The conclusion is obvious, and the acceptation of the dogma would, of course, shut the Bible to the laity.

The Church Times, with a conspicuous lack of both justice and charity, is seeking to discount the great Simultaneous Mission arranged for by the Free Church Federation at the beginning of the new century, by asserting that it is to be "an un-Christian attack upon those parishes where there is the most vigorous and wholesome Church life;" and warns its readers that in the vocabulary of Dissenters "to evangelize a county is to persuade its inhabitants to forsake their parish church." As a matter of fact, the Federation has put into the forefront of its programme for the United Mission the statement that there is to be absolutely no sectarian element in its conduct. It is to be a common effort to bring sinners to Christ, and to build up the faith and inspire the zeal of believers to a higher point of devotion. The Free Churches, moreover, make a clear distinction even in their ordinary work between the element of evangelization on the one hand, and that of Church polity on the other. To say that they confound the two is unjust in the extreme.

A genuine conversion makes a man solicitous of the welfare of others, and eager for their salvation. This makes a large call on a man's wisdom and tact, and the well-meant efforts of many young Christians to win others, or to remonstrate with them about their ways, are not always marked by such insight. Some, from a too eager spirit of interference with others' spiritual welfare, after a few failures and rebuffs, fall into permanent discouragement. Both extremes are to be avoided. We are to seek the good of others with patient tact, and also with gentle persistence. Better than rescue are warning and prevention. How often may a wise and loving word, spoken in the nick of time, stop a soul on the very verge of a fatal precipice! George Eliot somewhere says that when the conscience of the race is developed, we shall run as eagerly to prevent a man's or a woman's fall as we should to save a beautiful mantelpiece ornament in danger of coming to the ground and being dashed to pieces. That will be when the constraining love of Christ has had its way in the hearts of his people.

A letter to the Spectator, by Mr. T. B. Horsfall, on the decline in the supply of the clergy, attributes the fact to the indifference of the leaders of the church to the crying social evils of the day—drunkenness, overcrowding, &c. It is doubtful if the charge is true, in the first place, and it is still more doubtful if it explains the fact in question. Far more likely is it that the Ritualist extravagances and sacerdotal assumptions of the clergy, and the wave of Romanism that is fast submerging the Established Church under its fatal flood, is responsible for the small number of young graduates from our Universities who apply for orders. These degenerate movements alienate the best type of young men from the holy work of the ministry, and drive them into other callings.

The amount of good effected by sweet-voiced singers in the Lord's work of evangelization has been incalculable. Many a hard heart has been touched and broken by a hymn or a song that would never be reached (in the first place, at least) by a sermon. All the more pity that so many who are gifted with musical taste and skill should refuse to consecrate their talent. In the Northern News a protest is made against the selfishness of "fair ladies who toss up their heads and stamp their little feet in telling us that they will see us far enough before they run the risk of a week's sore throat," by singing in the outdoor services held at this time of the year in so many places. These services might be made more than doubly successful if able and competent singers gave themselves with heart-felt interest to help. The slight risks attendant on open-air work (a very small risk during the summer) are as nothing compared with the possibilities of good to be achieved.

Mr. G. F. Watts, the celebrated religious painter, has hit upon a happy idea in his presentation of a cloister to the new Postmen's Park, which consists of the churchyard of St. Botolph's, Aldersgate. This cloister provides room for 144 tablets commemorating acts of heroism and self-sacrifice, which will be fixed in as time goes on. At present there are four tablets complete, recording brave deeds done in 1899 by a fitter's labourer, the driver and fireman of the Windsor Express, the stewardess of the Stella, and a policeman. In lieu of meaningless monuments, the mid-day frequenters of this little garden will in time have a galaxy of noble deeds worthy of a memorial which will feed their imagination and rouse their emulation. The records of the world's villainy and cruelty have been written large enough across the pages of history; there is plenty of room for stories of devotion and self-forgetfulness in the interests of others.

Dr. Pye-Smith, in his striking paper before the British Medical Association, boldly challenged the popular notion that nervous diseases are usually the effect of overwork, and even brought his personal professional testimony to support the opposite theory. It is the indolent, the self-indulgent, those without the healthy stimulus of steady employment, who mainly break down under an "attack of the nerves." He advocated not less but more work as a remedy for such cases; and he called on his fellow practitioners to have the courage to deal faithfully with some of their patients who try to escape the healthy responsibilities of life under a pretence of invalidism. This robust teaching from one of our best-informed specialists should do good. It does not touch genuine cases of nerve-exhaustion brought about through over-exertion in business or spiritual work; but it clears away a cloud of false and unhealthy sentiment such as is too common nowadays both as to the origin and the remedy of certain forms of "nerve" troubles.

If many of those whose health suffers, not from overstrain but from lack of employment, realized how they could redeem their lives and make them full of interest and joy, they need not go far to find the panacea of their ills. A certain young lady suffering from ennui, happened to read the story of the delight caused by a present of a doll to a poor sick child, and suddenly conceived the idea of spending her over-abundant leisure in dressing dolls, and presenting them personally to ailing children in a slum. From that day on she never suffered from dulness, but found existence a new thing. There are thousands of well-to-do, but miserable people, who would find relief from their worst troubles if they set about undertaking some of the neglected social and spiritual duties of the world. In carrying help and enlightenment to the poor and the destitute, the ignorant and the afflicted, they would soon forget their woes, and would lighten the burden of the many real workers who now toil under too heavy a share of philanthropic and religious work.

Comparatively few people see the official organ of the Board of Trade, the Labour Gazette, and a painful return, which has just appeared in its pages, may therefore not receive the attention which it deserves. Its figures show that during the month of June last there were no fewer than sixty-seven cases of lead poisoning, seventeen of which occurred in the china and earthenware industry, five deaths resulting; and from another source it appears that during the past two years one doctor alone dealt with nearly 300 such cases in the Potteries, with thirteen deaths, seventeen cases of total and sixty-two of partial loss of sight, nineteen of paralysis, and six of insanity, all due to lead poisoning. Yet, though it is asserted that the evil is in a very great measure preventible, the Government appears to be unwilling to interfere and to deal in a drastic way with the matter. Loss of life and health is permitted to continue year after year with only an occasional perfunctory question in the House, and a drawing-room meeting to raise money for the relief of the sufferers.

The Alpine climber knows that sometimes it is more difficult to descend than to ascend; and it is not unusual to find a similar experience in the spiritual life. There are times when it seems a poor and hard thing to go back from scenes of lofty elevation to the routine and lesser excitements of the daily round of our lives. But it is the Master's will that our toil should be on the lower level, and, as Dr. Westcott has said, in his Revelation of the Risen Lord—

> Perhaps it will be through these that the higher call will come; perhaps no higher call will ever come to us. But our duty is still the same. We cannot tell the value of any particular service, either for society or for our own training. Much must be done at the end of the workman's life, which is a preparation only. The Baptist continued to labour as he had first laboured, though he knew and confessed "I must decrease."

Student Volunteers.

IT is well that the young life of the passing century is coming to the front, and especially that the young men and maidens of the Church of Christ should be throwing their energies into the work of God. And it is still more cheering to find that the educated and cultured classes are taking the lead in this development.

The Conference of the British College Christian Union, which included the Student Volunteer Missionary Union and the General College and Theological College departments, has held last week at Matlock Bank its last Summer Conference of the nineteenth century. About three hundred Christian collegiate young men and women were in attendance at this edified and edifying gathering.

We use these terms advisedly, for we do not remember any series of meetings more free from egotism, professionalism, sectarianism, fanaticism, or excitement; and, on the other hand, more marked by reverence and godly sincerity, fervency of spirit, self-judgment, quiet enthusiasm, suppressed feeling, and enlightened views of Christian life.

There are sufficient signs of the times of an ominous and disastrous character "to make men tremble who never weep," but the assembly of representative young life from all our colleges, in which the most important of all subjects were spoken of and listened to with a frankness, a breadth, and an intensity, worthy of the best times in our past history, weighs heavily on the other side.

Queen Margherita's Prayer

"The great grief of Queen Margherita has found relief in the composition of a prayer, which she has sent to Mgr. Bonomelli, obtaining through him the necessary ecclesiastical approbation for its use throughout the kingdom:

"Queen Margherita will address a personal letter to the Pope thanking His Holiness for his message of sympathy and for the special order to the bishops authorizing them to use in their various dioceses the prayer composed by Her Majesty for the repose of King Humbert's soul and which runs as follows:

"According to thy law, O Saviour, be merciful. Give him peace, as he ever desired justice. Be merciful to him, O Saviour. As he always pardoned all, pardon him the inevitable errors of human nature. O Saviour, as he loved his people, having only one thought—the good of his country—receive him into the glorious land. O Saviour, as he was good until his latest breath, falling a victim to his goodness, give him the eternal crown of martyrdom. O Saviour, he did good in this world, and had resentment towards none. Pardon all who did him wrong. He sacrificed life to duty, to the good of his country, and until his latest breath studied to accomplish his mission. For his red blood which flowed from three wounds, for the works of goodness and justice accomplished in his life, just and merciful Saviour, receive him into thy arms, give him his eternal reward."—Daily Papers.

COULD anything be more pathetic because so wifely, or more painful because so mistaken, than the prayer put forth by the agonized Queen Margherita for her murdered husband? How tenderly we all must sympathize with her burning desire that he may be accepted by the King of Kings, and justified by the Judge of all the earth! It is well that the eyes of this Royal sufferer are turned not to the Virgin Mother, but to her Saviour Son. But she appeals to Him to pardon and reward the assassinated King for the sake of his virtuous character, his blameless life, his works of goodness and justice, and for "his red blood which flowed from three wounds." No word about his sins, except "the inevitable errors of human nature"; no mention of the precious blood of Christ; no righteousness reckoned on account of belief in God, who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead, who was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification. For all that is here prayed Jesus need not have died, nor have his own self borne our sins in his own body on the tree.

How we must mourn that the widowed heart has not found the Husband of her soul in the Christ of God, and has not possessed herself of that exceeding great and precious promise, "And this is the name whereby she shall be called, the Lord our Righteousness." For the wife takes the husband's name.

Let us hope and let us pray that coming to Him, though with a mistaken prayer, she may find salvation through his precious blood, and by Him believe in God, who raised Him from the dead and gave Him glory, that her faith and hope may be in God.

But what shall be said of the ignorance or the wickedness of the Apostasy, under whose teaching such a prayer could be conceived, and from one of whose dignitaries it received ecclesiastical approbation?

Thro' Nature to God.

THE holiday season is upon us, and many of our readers will now be away from home, seeking refreshment, health, and renewed energy by sea or mountain, river or lake. It would be curious and interesting to inquire into the motives that have entered into this modern passion for an annual holiday. Do the mere physical and social incentives sum up the whole case? We think not. People go to scenes of loveliness, and resorts of beauty, with a craving for something better than that which pleases the eye and charms the mind. This craving may be quite instinctive and sub-conscious, but it is probably there, more frequently than not.

Nature is not a palace for the soul of man; she is but an ante-chamber—nay, a porch—leading into a spiritual temple. The dawn and the moonrise, the flush on Alpine snows, and the drifting clouds that robe the everlasting hills, the voice of storms, the depths of midnight sky—these are all prophetic; they thrill us, not for what they are in themselves, but for what they suggest, a Creator whose presence is everywhere, and whom to know is truly to live. "The whole earth is full of Thy glory." Surely we must recognise this as the highest, as well as the most memorable, of all holiday experiences—that we have on our wanderings, and that his presence has been our exceeding great reward.

Nevertheless, it is well to distinguish. There is a class of people who scorn the ordinances of public worship, and who excuse themselves from attending the usual means of grace on the ground that they "can worship better in the great temple of Nature than in houses made with hands." We are persuaded that of those who make this profession, not a tithe are sincere in doing so, and that the remainder, who really do worship God "of a good heart" by the wayside, owe their power to enter into the secret of Nature far more than they imagine to the insight and the training they have received in God's house. The voices of Nature are very much like the gift of tongues in the Early Church—they need to be interpreted in order to be understood. Apart from such interpretation, they have but little uplifting or inspiring influence upon the soul. And this interpretation only comes through the revealed Word, which is the key to the riddle of Nature as well as of the soul. The lights and shadows of the world become a living significant picture, its vague multitudinous voices break into clear language, and the glory of God shines from bush and brake, when once the key to the mystery is given to us. The inner light interprets the outer vision; the true seer is the saint; only those who have found God in Christ can read his message written in the

HIEROGLYPHICS OF EARTH AND SKY.

It follows that we should be careful to take our religion with us on our annual holiday, not leave it at home with our business, as so many do. During these hours of leisure, of sight-seeing, of relaxed energies, let us see to it that we do not forget the artist in the picture. There is One ever near us, who will make our hearts burn within us as we walk toward our Emmaus in the twilight, while He expounds the things concerning Himself that are written everywhere, but which we are slow to understand without his help. A great theologian has said, "Revelation being a communication of Spirit to spirit, the Spirit, and not Nature, must be its only perfect medium. For, although it is indeed the creative Spirit who speaks through Nature to the created spirit, yet Nature, with her inarticulate language, speaks only in an indirect and figurative manner of the eternal power and Godhead of the Creator." It is the Word by whom all things were made, who can alone make clear to us his gracious meaning, hidden from before the foundation of the world.

Missionaries in China.

A PERSONAL NARRATIVE.

A THRILLING story of the escape of his daughter and her friends from Ts'ang-Chow has been received by Mr. C. H. Bartlett, of Bristol. Dealing with events prior to their departure, the writer says:

"It was only last Thursday week, June 7, that we had a letter from Tientsin telling us that things were getting serious, and that two men of the S.P.G. had been killed near Peking, and that the Grants from Lung-an (L.M.S.) had just escaped to Tientsin before their station was burnt down. We were also told that foreign troops were collecting. The letter I tried to send you on the 7th told you we were quite quiet at Ts'ang-Chow, but from that very day the people began to be scared, and all sorts of rumours got about, while Boxers were known to be in the city. There had been a fight at Lu-lin, a place on the canal between Tientsin and Ts'ang-Chow, two engineers being killed. Mr. King advised us not to go north at all. At Pao-Ting-fu was reported, and the people there were in imminent danger. People ceased to come to the hospital, and were afraid to be seen having anything to do with foreigners. The scare increased gradually, and we had two telegrams from people in Tientsin, warning us not to attempt to go that way.

"On Sunday our letters were all returned, and since then the postman has been killed. We wanted to send our courier with them by a roundabout way, and he was going to carry them in the soles of his shoes, in case he was searched; but things got too dangerous, and he was unable to go. A man from the city begged us not to go to chapel on Sunday, so only Mr. Murray went. He had a good meeting, but thought the streets were too quiet. We thought it most likely we should have to flee, but it was not clear how or where, so

WE DECIDED TO WAIT FOR GUIDANCE.

"On Monday a party of men came to see Mr. Murray, a deputation from the magistrate, advising us to make no delay, as there were thousands of Boxers not very far from us, and that they were collecting from the south every day. They said they had a plan for our escape, but did not tell us much then, as it would not be wise to publish our plans. On Tuesday afternoon they and the magistrate's head-man (great swell!) came and said they would send us four carts and an escort of soldiers at twelve o'clock that night. We spent all Tuesday packing away things and a bag to take with us, as we were told we could not take baggage. There was, however, a possibility of our sending away some boxes to Yen-sau for safety, but what we left in the house we had little or no hope of ever seeing again, so you can imagine it was difficult to pack. The women in our house were crying, terribly frightened, and the servants were

SCARED OUT OF THEIR WITS.

A group of men had been watching us all day on Tuesday from a mound outside the compound, but we were not afraid, and even walked about the compound.

"Mr. Murray had made plans for all the Christians to go away to different places; if not, he said he would not go and leave them. Twelve o'clock arrived, and no carts! Time went on, and it was an anxious time, I can tell you. At twenty minutes to two a soldier rushed in, made us put on Chinese clothes, would not let us speak, and hurried us off to the compound gate. He only had two carts, and as we had to take three servants with us it was a fearful squash. He wouldn't let us take anything in the way of baggage. I could not get more than my sun helmet. The compound was crowded with people—soldiers and (we learnt after) Boxers. Five hundred soldiers took us to the Yamen, or rather the camp, where gave us Chinese boots, and also some wine to drink. They and the soldiers were scared out of their wits. The Boxers tried to prevent us crossing the ferry, and we saw lots of them armed in the houses as we came through the city. The 500 soldiers simply took us through the city; only sixteen went with us. We rode 160 li (i.e., about sixty miles), arriving at Chi-Kow about 6 p.m. It is a Chinese port on the coast. We were treated very well there, put up in the General's house, and so on; but we had to feed on Chinese food, with chopsticks, and sleep on Chinese kangs (stone beds), with nothing to cover us. Oh, that food! Muriel and I scarcely ate any, and felt sick on that.

"We had hoped to get off next day in fishing boats to Taku, but the wind didn't suit, so we had to wait. Men were unwilling to go to Taku, so we sent a message for a tug to fetch us. The British Admiral sent one, and, after several delays, we were able to get off at four o'clock on Saturday morning, and had a good trip to H.M.S. Orlando, lying outside Taku. . . . The Admiral has asked Arthur to take charge of Wei-hai-Wei Hospital for a time, so we are all going there as soon as we can."

[Arthur and Muriel are Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Peill, L.M.S. Medical Mission. Mr. Peill is the son of Rev. J. and Mrs. Peill, on furlough from Madagascar—a missionary family.—ED.]

CHINA INLAND MISSION WORKERS.

The news which the China Inland Mission, received, a few days ago, from Shanghai, is of a very disquieting character. A very serious state of things prevails in the provinces of Shan-si, Chih-li, and Ho-nan. In Shan-si, at their mission station of Hsiao-i, two lady missionaries—Miss Emily Whitchurch and Miss E. E. Searell—have lost their lives in a riot there. At Pai-ting Fu, in Chih-li, according to Mr. Stevenson's telegram, all the missionaries have been murdered, and the worst is feared regarding Rev. William Cooper, and Rev. and Mrs. Bagnall.

The three other stations of the Mission in that province have been rioted, and the missionaries have fled into the country.

In Ho-nan five mission stations have been destroyed, the missionaries are reported safe, but where they are is not known certainly. Rev. and Mrs. E. A. Glover, while travelling through the province, evidently en route for the coast, have been robbed, and are not able to proceed. The mission authorities in Shanghai are doing their utmost to secure the safety of the missionaries.

The following is a telegram from Shanghai, received in London, August 4, 3 p.m.:—

"Please inform relatives of missionaries to forward all letters to Shanghai, until further notice.

"Miss C. M. Murray is in Japan; Miss M. Murray has arrived here, all well.

"Members of the Swedish Mission in China have already left their stations, anticipate will arrive within ten days."

Another telegram, also from Shanghai, received in London August 7, 9 a.m., reads:

"The Governor of Cheh-kiang reports five missionaries murdered in K'u-cheo" (Cheh-kiang Province). [This confirms intelligence previously received.]

"We have received no confirmation concerning Ch'ang-shan. The English Consul at Chung-king advises all the missionaries at Chao-tong and Tong-ch'uan (Yünnan Province) to leave.

"Mrs. Squire, Miss Hancock, Miss M. E. Morris, Mr. A. Hammond, Miss Macfarlane, Miss M. C. Brown, the Millers, Bobbys, Gillies, Foucars, Milsums have arrived here safely, all well."

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, August 12. Prov. xxx.

THIS and the next chapter form the Fifth Part of this Book. We have no certain knowledge who these sages were. Agur may have been a public teacher, whilst Ithiel and Ucal were probably two of his disciples. But Agur was evidently a very humble man. He entirely disclaims to be able to discover God, but waits on Him for divine illumination and instruction. The answer to these questions can be given by One only—by Him who quotes them in John iii. 13. Let us, also, account every word of God as pure, and feed on it with eager spiritual hunger, neither adding nor subtracting aught.

What a beautiful prayer for us all is suggested by Agur's words. Let us be simple, humble souls, not affecting great things, nor seeking the portion of the children of this world, but always quiet, contented, and at rest. We are God's little children. He knows what we require for the daily sustenance of spirit, soul, and body; let us leave it with Him to choose for us. There are temptations for every lot, whether to pride or depression; we know not what is best, let us leave all with our Creator and Redeemer.

Agur's words fall into sets of four—four hateful vices (12-14), four rapacious and insatiable demands (15-17), four hidden secrets, illustrating the effrontery and baseness of the adulteress (18-20), four intolerable anomalies (21-23), four cases in which wisdom makes the feeble strong (24-28), four specimens of majestic demeanour (29-31).

How wonderfully the holy heart finds comparisons, everywhere in the world of nature, to set forth its thoughts and aspirations. All the world becomes an open book to those whose hearts are pure. May the Lord give to us this humble and observant spirit, that what things are hidden from the wise and prudent may be revealed to us.

MONDAY, August 13. Prov. xxxi.

Who Lemuel was is unknown. Some think that he was a king in Arabia. But it is a matter of no importance. Enough to know that the Holy Spirit has incorporated his words here, and therefore they are of divine authority. Would that all mothers were as careful to warn their sons against unchastity and intemperance. Constantly I am receiving bitter complaints that young lives were launched into the stormy currents of the world, without one word of direction as to shoals and currents, or one wise loving word as to the true use of the body. Young people must know the laws and mysteries of life, and from whom so wisely and purely as from the mother? Mothers have no right to hand over their children to strangers, whether nurses or tutors, but to train them from the earliest to habits of modesty, purity, self-restraint, and self-respect.

What a portraiture is here of the Hebrew matron! Let every young girl study it, and repeat it. There are such women still, before whom the idle rout of frets and cares cringe down, as the waves knew their Master's presence, and smoothed their foamy crests when He arose; whose hearts are an unfailing fountain of courage and inspiration to the hard-pressed man, who but for them must be worsted in life's battle; whose pure loftiness of spirit, caught from communion with God, breathes a calm rebuke on the beggarly aims and hopes that bulk so largely when we are down upon their level; whose stores of sympathy and experience fill the homespent hours with happy and elevating pleasure; and who send forth husband or brother each morning armed, as the lady armed the knight of old, to fight purely and righteously for the overthrow of wrong, and the deliverance of the oppressed. Though such things are said by one who loves noble women, they are not mistaken or exaggerated. Oh for the grace of Christ to realize every lineament!

TUESDAY, August 14. Eccles. i.

What an invaluable book this is to place in the hands of the young. It must have been in Old Testament times, what Byron's life and poetry have been in ours. It is the experience of a man of the world, worked out to its furthest limit. Here was a case in which youth and beauty, the love of women, and the magnificence of art, consummate genius, and every gift that wealth could bestow, blended in a single human life, and the outcome of it all is the repeated cry, "Vanity of vanities!"

We have first the monotony of life (2-11). It is recorded of a leader of fashion in the last generation, that standing on Richmond Hill, looking down at the river gliding beneath him, he exclaimed, "Ah, how that river wearies me with its perpetual monotony!" What can be more wretched than the experience of many in the highest circles, whose one aim is to kill the time? Ah, the agony of a sated soul, in which the very spring of natural enjoyment seems sapped, and all things are full of weariness.

We have next the Preacher's first experiment (12-18). He set out in quest of wisdom. He would find the philosopher's stone. He would know all that could be known, and become an encyclopædia of knowledge. But from it all he turned back disappointed. Knowledge is not wisdom. The circumference of light only increases that of darkness and mystery. We are as children whose furthest knowledge will be forgotten in the light of maturity, and in the meantime the heart cries out for God.

WEDNESDAY, August 15. Eccles. ii.

The worldling still pursues his quest under the guidance of his own heart (v. 3 R.V.), and his own wisdom (v. 9). The palace is filled with festivity. It rings with laugh and mirth; singing men, jesters, and buffoons, troops of dancers, are summoned regardless of expense. But, ah, how desolate the scene when morning breaks on the trampled flowers of the previous evening!

The king next turns architect. He builds. He is a landscape gardener, and makes parks, gardens, and forests, after his own tastes. It is good to construct. The aptitudes of the creator are strong within us, and crave for indulgence. All the great kings have left their traces in pyramid, city, or palace. But, at the best, these yield but transient delight, when we reflect how many buildings remain whose builders are unknown. Then followed the pleasure of acquisition, to get money in abundance as the sand of the seashore, to be surrounded by hired and purchased servants, to collect treasures of kings and provinces—how much these things have fascinated men, whether Montezuma in the West, or Aurunzeba in the East. But they had no charms for this man, in whose heart was set a hunger for God.

What a terrible despair that is which comes to a man, when he sees that he has nothing to show for all his labour, and the striving of his heart; when the harvest he had planted so sedulously turns to handfuls of black dust, and when the white egg-shell, which he hoped would contain priceless jewels, proves to be empty. The mistake, of course, is that Solomon sought too low. His motto was, "Under the sun"; ours should be, "The throne where Christ sits, brighter than the sun."

THURSDAY, August 16. Eccles. iii.

A time for everything. There is happiness in this. It is good to believe that God who made our nature, contrives somehow an opportunity for the gratification of everything that is really natural and innocent. Our mistake is that we are so impulsive, and find it so difficult to wait our Lord's leisure. The expected hour is sure to strike sooner or later. Let us stand still, as Jesus did; one of his favourite expressions was, Mine hour is not yet come. Yes! sad soul, the time of joys will come for thee. Do, at this moment, its duty; and so thou wilt become able to bear the responsibility, and fulfil the engagement of to-morrow. It is well to keep the eye upon God's clock. The hands move slowly, but they do move, and they will conduct us round the entire range of human experience.

Let us ponder well the teaching of v. 11. "He hath made everything beautiful in its time." There is a beauty even in tears, and separation, and silence. No day ever breaks over our world which has not some elements of beauty in it. Every face has some pleasing feature. Every spot on earth's surface has its intrinsic interest. The beauty may not be very apparent, but it is certainly there, if Christ shall give thee eyes to see. Too often we strain our eyes for a beauty of the landscape in the far distance, and overlook the wayside flowers, the daisies and the king-cups, which solicit a glance, at our feet. Within the heart God hath put "eternity." Oh, see to it that its appetite be satisfied from Him who alone is the eternal bread!

FRIDAY, August 17. Eccles. iv.

"It is a sair world," said Thomas Carlyle, and indeed the burden of it has threatened to crush some of the noblest of the sons of men. Tears flow in rivers; the sighs of broken hearts are like the winds in forest trees; the pain which man inflicts upon his fellow has filled hospital wards and workhouse infirmaries with tortured and agonized frames. How often have the living wished that they were dead, and envied those who had died. The tears that Christ shed on Olivet have been wrung in measure from all who have followed in his steps. What envy and jealousy there are in the world, and how greatly these add to the sum total of human sorrow!

Amid such scenes of earthly anguish, a man needs a friend, one in whom he can perfectly confide, whose soul interfused with his own makes him doubly strong, who will lift him up if he fall, chafe him if he is cold, and succour him if he be withstood. There are not many friends like this. Our best friendships can only go part of the way into the mysteries of life and death, and in the hour of death they pause on the hither side of the river. How good it is to know that there is One who calls us his friends, and whose friendship is patient and enduring, strong, tender, and true.

In v. 14, Solomon supposes a case which absolutely came to pass in the history of Jeroboam, who fled to escape prison and death, to Shishak, king of Egypt, and who returned to be king. How little Solomon thought when he penned these words that they were to become true of his son, and of the widow's child who overthrew his kingdom. We are reminded that none of us are so holy and strong as to be beyond the reach of those evils, which we threaten to others.

SATURDAY, August 18. Eccles. v.

We should do well to ponder the opening exhortations of this chapter, and, whether in public or private prayer, be on our guard not to rush carelessly into the presence of God. Stop for a moment on the threshold of the palace, and bethink thee of thine errand. And when thou goest forth, remember what thou hast said within doors, and be careful to give it effect.

The oppression of the poor, and the wresting of justice, often fills our heart with indignation. But there is something better. To take their cause into the highest court, and plead it there. If thou art the poor man who art wronged, make thine appeal; if thou art the rich man who wrongs, beware. There are compensations in life. The man who has is never content, but envies the poor man his careless sleep. Often at the end of a feverish night, the child of pampered ease hears the labourer whistling as he trudges at dawn to his toil, and envies him. The poor need not feel that there is no makeweight which compensates them for their lack. Frugality, simplicity, humility, have the promise of great blessing in this life, and virtues like these come most naturally to those who lack this world's store.

It will be wise on your part, my friend, to labour all the days of your life, even though by the gift of God you secure a comfortable competence. No men are more miserable, or die earlier, than those who have not sufficient to engross their attention. To labour for our dear ones, for the cause of God, and that we may have wherewith to supply the need of others, this gives zest to life, even to its sundown.

Students in Conference.

THE Students' Conference at Matlock Bank, the opening meetings of which were reported in our last issue, maintained to the close the high level of spiritual helpfulness which was forecast at the inauguration.

The mornings were devoted, primarily, to devotional meetings, after which some important problems of the home and foreign missionary field were dealt with, while the administrative affairs of the movement also received practical consideration. At the first general meeting of the week, the basis of the British College Christian Union was discussed by Mr. F. Lenwood (chairman), and Mr. Tissington Tatlow (secretary). The basis proposed by the executive is "Jesus Christ, Personal Saviour and God." The views expressed, in the course of the discussion which followed, were naturally of a varied character as regarded methods, but it was satisfactory to find, when essentials came to be considered, that the Conference was staunch in its adherence to Gospel truth.

The ripe experience of Mr. John R. Mott was expressed in some clear and direct words, in which he encouraged his hearers to follow Christ fully, reminding them that "our fruitfulness is dependent on Him. We may do many ingenious things, calculated to reflect credit on human organizations, but the work we desire to see done is the work of God. 'Without Me ye can do nothing.'" was the first subject taken on Monday evening. Rev. Alex. Connell, after dwelling briefly on the obvious necessity for enriching the mind with full study of the history and conditions of the country in which it was proposed to labour, went on to say that no form of scholarship is without its uses on the mission field. Not only mental, but mechanical knowledge is a desideratum. The "handy man"—and the handy woman, too—is in demand. Both the keen scent which enables a man to trace a philological root through twenty transformations, and the ability to re-sole a pair of boots, will be useful. Only, there must also be, in any case, a thorough grip of the language which is to be spoken. It was the opinion of a missionary of many years' experience that "half the ill success that is met with in missionary work, is due to an inadequate grasp of the language."

Speaking with special reference to the countries of the East, Mr. Connell observed that, still holding to this basis of all-round equipment, there are three subjects in which the mind may be schooled with peculiar advantage. (1) Science. Not that the missionary is to teach science to the heathen, but a general familiarity with astronomy, with the facts of God's great universe, is bound to prove helpful. (2) The history of the Western world, and of Christianity, in its salient features. The missionary will everywhere find a devouring interest in the land from whence he has come; and, if he has culled from Christian records something of those shining periods in which men stood firm for God in the face of death, he will greatly encourage his hearers, and bring a spirit of deeper zeal into the work. (3) For the lay, as well as the theological missionary, some systematic knowledge of evangelical religion will prove useful, although no text-book but the New Testament should be taken to the heathen. Texts should not be chosen from the Epistles oftener than from the Gospels. The simple, beautiful story of Christ affords facts most likely to convince and convert. It is well, however, to be well acquainted with upon which God has based his Holy Gospel. Mr. Connell added some practical hints as to the value of commencing, immediately on arrival at the sphere of labour, a record of facts and impressions. This should be started within the first fortnight, before losing the power to see with freshness. In conclusion, the speaker said all cannot expect to become paragons of attainment, but all, feeling that they are sharers in God's great redemptive purpose, can feel the necessity, if prayer, effort, and study can accomplish it, to equip themselves for the noblest service to which God can call any of us.

A CALL FOR WORKERS, was next given by Rev. Donald Fraser, of Livingstonia, who is an old president of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union. Mr. Fraser told, with simplicity and force, the story of spiritual awakening among the heathen which from time to time have been recorded in our columns. He recalled many a remarkable fact, and reviewed the present position of affairs in Central Africa, showing how the heathen, forsaking their debasing and savage habits, had come to seek the Lord. The news of the revival spread far and wide. Love began to express itself in missionary effort. One of the last experiences of Mr. Fraser was to visit the hinterland, where he found the people in a deplorable condition of misery. They begged for teachers, and it is in their interest and in behalf, also, of the untouched tribes living in moral and spiritual darkness, who have never heard the Gospel message, that Mr. Fraser is visiting England. His address concluded with a fervent appeal for immediate response to the call of urgent need.

On the following day, Miss Lilian Stevenson, of University College, London, spoke, at the devotional meeting, on "The Greatness of God." The speaker, after showing from a number of passages, in Psa. cxv. and cxxxix. and other parts of Scripture, some of the characteristics of God's greatness, went on to point out that this greatness is exercised on our behalf, especially in the gift of the Son. God incarnate is with us "as one that serveth." In his greatness, too, He chooses us as fellow-workers. We are humbled by his greatness, but it also brings confidence as we remember that He is ready to save at all times, and that his strength is made perfect in our weakness.

"The Lordship of Jesus Christ over every department of life" was considered at the second session of the morning. Miss Richardson, of Westfield College, appealed for a deeper and more practical interest in the drink question. After referring to Bessbrook, the flourishing Ulster town in which there are 4,000 inhabitants and not one public-house, and which was founded by the father of the speaker, Miss Richardson went on to quote telling opinions from leading men — ministers, politicians, doctors, philanthropists, and social and moral reformers —of varied departments of work, witnessing to the ravages of strong drink, which Carlyle had described as "the clearest incarnation of the evil principle than has yet been invented." Dr. Norman Kerr has said that 120,000 people are slain each year through alcohol. Lord Peel's commission, which included twelve brewers and distillers, agreed that the position of affairs constitutes a gigantic evil, and yet when a bill was lately introduced to prevent the sale of liquor to children under the age of sixteen—a weaker law than obtains in many countries—the liquor interest was so strong as to bar it from passing. Miss Richardson urged the duty of individual effort in combating this traffic.

Mr. G. H. Leonard followed with an address on Philanthropy, in which he pointed out that we are in danger, amid many schemes and much labour, to lose sight of the governing principles. Distractions come disguised as duties, and we must remember that love to God must come first in all philanthropic effort. Religion must go before philanthropy, because it is through religion that we come, in the true sense, to love humanity.

The ensuing feature of the Conference was an address from Mr. H. Hofmeyr, who, representing the

was accorded a warm welcome, the audience expressing their esteem by rising in a body. Mr. Hofmeyr described the genesis of the movement in that country, and showed that its growth had been attended by spiritual awakening. A deep impression had been made at the outset—when, humanly speaking, there appeared to be little promise of a revival breaking out—by the conversion of a number of young men, notably two of an ultra-worldly disposition. One of these, a Transvaaler, has been much used in Gospel work. On being taken prisoner by the English, during the present war, and deported to St. Helena, he commenced evangelistic meetings among his fellows, and has been instrumental in forming a Christian Endeavour Society. Mr. Hofmeyr referred to difficulties in the way of religious work which have been created by racial prejudice or result from the disturbed condition of the country; but he looked forward with a hopeful view to re-organization and advance on the conclusion of peace. The progress of

was the subject of a pithy speech by Mr. H. C. Duncan, who described how the Federation of College Christian Unions arose in connection with the Conference held five years since in Sweden. The Federation now includes 1,400 unions in various countries, with 66,000 members. The outlook is, on the whole, promising. As regards Europe, it is likely that work may shortly be established in Russian colleges, while, as an outcome of the Federation Conference now in progress in Paris, it is hoped to commence operations in Italy, and to strengthen those which are in progress in France.

The upheaval in China has necessarily interfered with the movement in that country, and some of the students have sealed their testimony with their blood. Marked progress has been made in Australasia, where only four years since there were but five unions, but where there are now forty-five vigorous societies, with fifty student volunteers, while twelve workers have already gone into the foreign field. In the American universities the movement continues to advance, and their unions appear to secure a more general hold upon the students than is the case in Great Britain. At Yale, for example, he said, of the 2,500 students in residence, no fewer than 1,164 are members of the C.U. Many activities, too, cluster round the movement at Yale, and a fund is raised in support of foreign missions.

"The Holy Spirit," was the subject on which Rev. H. E. Fox, of the C.M.S., spoke at the following morning's devotional meeting. Mr. Fox referred to the common want of a thoughtful recognition of the personality of the Spirit, and went on to urge prayer for the incoming of the Spirit as an abiding power, the only measure of which is, not God's bestowal, but our receptivity. The Spirit does not come to be dormant. His presence cannot be hid. He is to be in our lives. To do without Him, is to fail. Energy without the Holy Ghost makes a great show and is very popular, but it leaves nothing behind. The Spirit will always put Jesus Christ into the foreground—"The Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, He shall testify of Me."

The general gathering which followed, took the form of a discussion of the best methods to adopt in conducting Christian work in colleges. Mr. Mann, of Glasgow University, said that it is not sufficient in college unions to aim at the deepening of spiritual life only; there must be a practical outlet for blessing given, in the form of evangelistic work. Mr. Percival Barnes, of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, in referring to efforts to reach the unconverted, said that while it is necessary to study the various obstacles which seem to hinder men from seeking God, the right use of the knowledge so obtained is the pointing out the strength of the Saviour to enable those who seek Him to be "overcomers." Mr. Jenner, of Magdalen College, Oxford, dealt with the relation of prayer to revival. He also emphasized the value of "following up" individuals and endeavouring to lead them to Christ, and spoke of two dangers: over-eagerness, which might result in rushing forward in advance of God, and the substitution of the activities of the work for the spiritual life on which everything depended.

The evening session was a season of deep spiritual blessing. The first speaker, Miss Gollock, dealing with "Personal Work," said that one warrant for it is found in the Master's words, "Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men." It is God who equips his workers, "I will make you to become." Neither force of character nor natural attractiveness have anything to do with success in the work. It is only in the strength of the Holy Spirit that it can be undertaken at all. The merely by the exercise of a good general influence; there must be the use of rod and net, and the putting forth of effort. A number of qualities are necessary for the work. There must be sympathy—with man and with God, and a deep sense of what "a lost soul" means. A soul is like a house in the centre of an estate, and we must find out by what avenues and gateways we can best reach it. Sympathy must be felt before it is expressed; we must learn the lesson of the Incarnation if we would seek souls aright, remembering that Jesus is the Son of Man as well as the Son of God. Sympathy, however, is likely to lead into the wrong path, if it be exercised only towards man. A Godward sympathy will save us from flinching in giving needed counsel, and will enable us to adopt right views regarding sin. A further requisite is reverence. We must have Reverence (1) for ourselves, never compromising or doing evil that good may come; (2) for others, realizing the value of the individual soul, and showing tenderness, as Christ would; (3) for the mysteries of religion—we believe in the Trinity and in the Incarnation, but can we explain them? (4) For God's Word—let us be prepared to give reasons for its acceptation, but never abandon our own grounds for reverencing it. We do not judge the Word; the Word judges us. Further needs in individual work are Sense of Proportion—at least half the personal difficulties of people are caused by a lack of this sense—and Directness. God wants his fishermen to be willing to go on with infinite patience, following up, it may be, only one soul, but He wants them to be fishermen who ultimately "land their fish," and who labour from first to last to that end.

Mr. H. T. Hodgkin, of St. Thomas' Hospital, gave an equally forcible address on

"INCENTIVES TO PERSONAL WORK."

He appealed especially on behalf of the outwardly unconcerned—who, while affecting a belief in Agnosticism, are often stretching out after God—and called for the exercise of faith, hope, and love in personal dealing with all classes of unconverted students. Mr. Hodgkin depicted the despair of the man "who has done all he knows and yet is conquered by sin," and said that most of all, men need love. It has been said that love is the greatest thing on earth. It is more, it is the greatest thing in heaven, for God is love. We may have the most correct theories and the profoundest convictions, but unless love is the essence of our life, our work will never be really fruitful. If the cry of men in their agony appeals to us, how much more does it move the heart of Jesus Christ? "Lovest thou Me? Feed my sheep."

At the final gathering, held on Thursday evening last, Mr. F. Lenwood and Mr. H. W. Oldham remarked upon some important lessons of the meetings and upon the outlook for the operations of the Union in the various colleges. The remainder of the time was devoted to prayer in behalf of the movement, and praise for the great blessing which so many had received during the Conference.

A Seven Dials Mission.—The twenty-fifth annual report of the Tower Street Mission School, Seven Dials, indicates that every branch of the work has been maintained with encouraging results. The regular attendance of scholars, and the devotion of the staff of teachers, steadily continue. The Band of Hope, Boys' and Girls' Clubs, &c., with their numerous advantages, are heartily appreciated. Possibly few districts in the metropolis offer a finer scope for Christian activity than Seven Dials. The hon. secretary of the Mission School is Mr. Paul Keed, 56, Old Bailey, E.C.

Miss Isabella Head.

THE name of Isabella Head may be known only to a comparatively limited circle, but she affords an example of so much valuable work accomplished in spite of physical weakness, and of a spirit so Christian, that a brief notice of her life and character can hardly fail to be of interest. She was drawn even from girlhood to devote herself to a life of unselfish service in the simplest and most obvious ways that presented themselves. No conceit of personal gifts marred it, nor did feeble health and suffering, which hampered her more or less throughout life, but especially in early womanhood and during her last years, ever lead to self-absorption, or withhold her from labouring steadily on to the full extent of her strength.

Miss Head found her opportunities first and foremost in the home circle, but she early sought a wider range for her activity in various forms of useful work. In particular, she befriended and gave religious instruction to girls in domestic service and other employment. As time went on the care of girls came to be more and more her special work. For several years she taught regularly in, and had a share in the management of, a small orphanage in Paddington, near her own home, in which girls were trained for service. When this institution came to an end, she continued and further developed work of a similar kind. She had long been accustomed to find places for girls brought to her notice, having previously, in some cases, trained them in her father's household. This registry work continued and much increased. One of her intimate friends was engaged in the work of the Factory Helpers' Union, and sent girls to her from the City factories; of these alone she placed about fifty in one year.

For the last ten years of her life she maintained, at her own cost, a Training Home for neglected girls. In connection with this Home she was led to co-operate with rescue workers, receiving cases met with by them where prevention was needed. For several years she kept the supervision in her own hands, and watched over it with constant care. Latterly, when no longer able to give it the amount of attention desirable, she placed it in the hands of an association, though she still took part, as far as she was able, in the management. In this, as in other good works, her self-suppression was remarkable, so that strangers would not have known that she was accepting directions from the committee as to the expenditure of her own money.

To one so taken up with personal efforts for the good of others, it is a small thing to use pecuniary means for the same end. Miss Head gave, with unostentatious generosity, both in support of institutions and for the assistance of individual cases; while she was very simple in her own habits, and even too sparing, her friends sometimes thought, in expenditure which would have been for her own comfort.

Miss Head also took part in an important philanthropic movement. Attention has been widely directed during recent years to the importance, in connection with the problems alike of social purity and of poverty, of providing for the proper education of feeble-minded children. In 1895 a meeting of experts in regard to the subject was held in Miss Head's drawing-room, the outcome of which was the formation of the National Association for Promoting the Welfare of the Feeble-Minded. Physicians who are experts in cases of this kind, Guardians of the Poor, and some well-known public men, have lent their aid to the Society, and through its operations a great impetus has been given to the movement. Many new homes for girls of this class have already been founded, in addition to the very few which already existed, and also three for boys. The question has moreover been brought before boards of guardians, and in many instances they have been induced to place and pay for cases in the homes of the Association. Miss Head from the first was a member of the executive committee and also of the committee for the administration of the homes.

She was interested, as was natural to a person of her intelligence, in the larger social aspects of this as of other labours in which she engaged. But into all her work, as indeed into her relations with others generally, she carried the united to strong good sense. An imperfect idea would be given of the range of her sympathies, were it not also stated that she took an active interest in the regular work of three or four parishes, partly in the East End, where her father's place of business had been, partly in her own neighbourhood, and also in the Foreign Missions of the Church. She especially assisted the Church Missionary Society and the Church of England Zenana Society, and her loss will be mourned in more than one station of the latter.

For the last six winters of her life it became imperative that she should seek a warm climate. They were spent in Italy and Sicily. The summer months brought renewed vitality, and it gave her great satisfaction that, by residing in London during the greater part of them, she was able to be of real use by carrying on the work of others who were absent on their holidays, in the oversight of the Homes for the Feeble-Minded, near London, the investigation of cases to be admitted, and in other ways. One fruit of her travels deserves also to be recorded. She had for a long time been accustomed to find a resource when her brain was weary, or she was secluded by illness, in copying books in Braille type for the blind. While staying in Rome she, with the help of a friend, formed an which was chiefly composed of English ladies resident in Italy. The Queen of Italy became patroness of this Society, and required one of her ladies in waiting to learn to do Braille. Its productions are slowly making their way into the Blind Asylums of Italy.

The close of Miss Head's devoted career came on March 13 last, when she passed away at Naples, in the fifty-ninth year of her age, lamented not only by a wide circle of friends, but by many who had benefited by her useful religious and philanthropic labours.

A Year of Progress.—The agencies which cluster round the parish church of St. Thomas, Lambeth, are varied and numerous. The vicar (Rev. J. B. Barraclough), in the annual report recognises with gratitude the assistance rendered in maintaining so many undertakings in the parish. No branch of the church work has suffered from lack of willing helpers, but in the children's services, Bible-classes, evangelistic and open-air meetings, &c., there have been signs of continued progress and development. The annual report, with statement of the religious and charitable funds, will well repay perusal. Rev. J. B. Barraclough may be addressed, the Vicarage, Westminster Bridge Road, S.W.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.—III.

The Beauty of Holiness.

By Rev. J. B. FIGGIS.

"Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness" (Psa. xxix. 2; xcvi. 9).

"Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, in the beauties of holiness" (Psa. cx. 3).

"Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us; and establish Thou the work of our hands upon us" (Psa. xc. 17).

THE beauty of holiness is the greatest beauty in the universe. Beautiful flowers will fade, sweet music will cease; the fair faces we have loved must be left in the grave, or exchanged for a greater beauty if Jesus comes first. But the beauty of holiness will abide and live on, unchanged, save as it is swallowed up in the glory and beauty of God and of Christ. It is the spiritual beauty of the saints within the veil. Is it not, too, the beauty of the holy angels? God is a Spirit; and the beauty of the Lord our God is therefore the spiritual beauty of holiness. In his Incarnate form, the Lord Jesus Christ may well have had outward loveliness; but his chief beauty was that of the soul and the spirit, the beauty of holiness. It is an animating thought that, in seeking more of Christ and more of the Spirit, we are seeking the beauty of holiness, the very beauty of our God.

The beauty of holiness is the beauty of Truth, and there is and error. There are Christians, lovely in character, who wander in mistaken paths as to the truth of God. They are not beautiful by reason of their error, but in spite of it. There is always a danger that error will warp the character as well as mislead the mind. You who would seek for that which is beautiful, seek first for every truth that God has committed to us in his Holy Word.

The beauty of holiness is the beauty of Goodness. Ah, there is no beauty in that which is evil! We seek not after that which is on the surface, but for that which works from the heart outward, throwing its beauty into the face, the manner, and the whole life.

Most of all would I impress upon you that the beauty of holiness is holiness brought to the degree of the beautiful; for, let it be said, there is some

HOLINESS THAT IS NOT BEAUTIFUL.

Our French neighbours say that the English are good, but they are not amiable. May that which is a saying never be true of any of us. There are some who are righteous, true, upright, and men of integrity; but these qualities are, in them, like the jagged rocks—not covered, as they are here, with moss, ferns, and other beautiful things, but rough, peaked, hard, and harsh. God forbid that our integrity should be of that kind. Others have virtue, but it is one-sided, it is of one kind. Here is a virtue, but some other one is wanting. Now, the beauty of holiness gives us not only the queen, but the virgins which are her companions. All the virtues, graces, and attributes of a noble character; all the powers of a saintly, ay, and of a lovely life—these are to be sought. There are persons who seek virtue, but are not thorough in their search. They are chaste in action, but

WHAT OF THEIR THOUGHTS?

Are they always chaste in reading? They avoid places with aught of the taint of immorality; do they equally shun books that have a touch of the same thing? They abstain from outward pleasures and scenes that might compromise their virtue; do they equally avoid all that is impure and defiling in the public press, in conversation, and in thought? The beauty of holiness will be beautiful in carrying every virtue to its full effect.

Ah, methinks we have known some who did that. There was one, but for whom we should not be meeting here to-day. When he was an undergraduate, the men of Oxford said, "See the man with the Ten Commandments in his face." To the last page of the last chapter of his life, he was holy. It is one of the best addresses I ever get at Keswick, to stand by his grave and think of that life so full of the beauty of holiness, in purity, piety, and Christlike love. It was so with others who have gone to the grave more recently. We think of George Macgregor, and of Henry Sharpe, who is to be laid to rest this very day—men who carried the beauty of which we speak. Would that there were more like them! Oh that, even in this world, we may be something like them now, as they stand in the presence and reflect the glory of the exalted Redeemer.

"Well," you say, "this is not for me; it is far beyond anything that I can ever reach. This virtue, in full range, carried to the point of the beautiful, is utterly and absolutely beyond me." Nay, not if the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us. If God shall come and impart Himself unto us, then may we hope that some of his beauty will be left to show itself even in our little lives. "To the lowly soul, Thyself Thou dost impart." What is the whole doctrine of the Holy Ghost but the elapse of God into the soul? Is it not to us indicative of God descending and condescending, coming into our weakness and vileness, cleansing the vileness and pouring in his purity, peace, love, and grace of every kind? Every communicable attribute found in the Man Christ Jesus, may be so reproduced that the beauty of the Lord our God shall be upon us.

"I have nothing to do, then, but to allow God to descend into my soul." Nay, you do not argue thus about your farms and gardens. I am staying in the house and garden once used by Coleridge—one of the loveliest spots even in this beautiful place. It cannot be there that, as reported, the great man asked a friend to come and see his garden, leading him into where, as he said, "I just let everything take its own way." Are you going to do that with the thorns, weeds, and thistles in your lives? Will you leave even the flowers without cultivation? Nay, learn that this beauty of holiness may be cultivated. Men who are found giving will advance in generosity, and they who constantly forgive will increase in gentleness. Purity will grow when we withdraw ourselves, not only from impure things that are seen, but from such as are heard of and dwelt upon in the mind. In every virtue there may be growth from cultivation of that which is desirable. It is not only the sunshine and rain from heaven that is needed for this. There is the ploughshare and the mattock to be used, the whole work of the husbandman to be done; and

WE ARE GOD'S HUSBANDRY.

The Lord God hath put us into a garden, to plant it and to till it. Let us see that we cultivate the beauty of holiness. Everywhere we have full reason and room for it.

The quotation yesterday of a verse from the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. v. 23, 24) led me to think how strange it must have been to see a Jew leave the House of God and go to his own, in order to be reconciled to his brother. I wonder whether a similar sight has ever been seen here, or nearer your own homes. Let us observe it in the spirit, if not in the letter; so that, at peace with men, we may worship God in the beauty of holiness.

Not only in worship, but in work, should this beauty be seen. Into the day's duty, toil, and labour, there is to be put honest, holy, and loving work. Everything behind the counter, as well as in the pulpit, is to be done in earnestness, devotion, and submission to God. I remember hearing of a Welsh pastor baptizing a shoemaker in the river. As he was about to plunge the man into the water, he said, "Take care, John, that you wax the threads more carefully, that you draw the seams more closely; and that all your work be done more to the glory of the Master to whom you dedicate your life." O brother and sister, let this beauty of holiness

BE SEEN IN OUR WORK.

Let it be so, too, at home. A rush for the holiness of the man whose piety and charity do not begin with his own household! See to it that all things are beautiful, lovely, and loving there. In every sphere this grace is needed and can be shown. Depend upon it, if those who write against Christianity are ever to put down their pens, if doubters are ever to be convinced, and if those who hesitate to come under the folds of this tent are to be gained, there must be the manifestation in us of Christian holiness. We must show that God is with us of a truth; ay, that He is in us, inspiring and influencing us in thought, in life, in heart, and in everything. The least among us may attain to this.

I remember, while in Scotland, being taken through the fine halls of a splendid mansion, until there burst upon us through the windows of Ben Nevis. In my joy, I could but exclaim, "How beautiful!" Just afterwards, in the town where I lived, I went into a humble home, a small and insignificant house in a row of others. As the door was opened, a further one also swung back; and I looked through it upon colours so fresh, and flowers so fair, that there, too, I had to exclaim, "How beautiful!" God grant that in the lowliest life, in the simplest act, in the most secular thing, the beauty of the Lord our God may be upon us, and that He may establish the work of our hands. So shall we not only worship but work for the Lord in the beauty of holiness.

Lessons from Elijah.

By Rev. Dr. A. T. PIERSON.

Turn with me to the First Book of Kings, especially chap. xviii., where we have some aspects of the character and life of Elijah which, I fear, are not ordinarily appreciated. Of his ancestry and posterity we know nothing. His habitual attitude was one of reference to God, preference for God, and deference to the will of God. Elijah headed a dispensation; and that is probably the reason for his association with Moses at the transfiguration. Moses stood for the formation of a nation; Elijah stood for the reformation of a nation. Moses led the people out of Egypt, which represented complicity with evil-doing; Elijah led them out from Baal worship, which represents idolatry. To-day we need an Elijah to sound the trumpet of reformation.

Let us notice some of the characteristics of this remarkable man. First, the eyes of the servant were upon the hand of the Master, to receive God's orders and to do his errands. Then, he was told by God to go and hide himself, and was afterwards told to show himself. It is that prepares us for the manifested life; and the beauty of the Lord our God comes upon us in secret closeting with Himself.

My special object, however, is to call attention to things in that eighteenth chapter, which are eminently instructive for our own day. (1) Here is one man who thinks himself alone as a prophet of God, over against the many who are following the world, the flesh, and the devil. Then we have (2) an altar broken down, and the same built up; (3) a loud cry to a false god, and a deaf ear on his part; (4) the prayer of faith, and the fire that falleth from heaven; (5) the confession of Jehovah, and the slaughter of his foes; (6) another ascending prayer, and a descending flood; and (7) a wicked man's chariot speeding its way to Jezreel, with a humble believer girding up his loins and running ahead of it.

What does it all mean? These things stand for (1) the glory of aloneness with God; (2) holy loyalty to Jehovah; (3) witness for God, before the multitude; (4) the power of holy faith; (5) jealousy for God; (6) Divine authority given to prayer; and (7) holy zeal for God's kingdom. If God gives us these things, shall we not have the beauty of holiness upon us?

Concerning the condition of Israel in those days, we have awful testimony in 1 Kings xvi. 30-33. Ahab, the king, set up the worship of Baal and of the corresponding female deity, Astarte. This worship not only broke the first and second Commandments of God, but it violated every requirement in the first and second tables of the Law, especially those commands which had reference to moral purity. Elijah was raised up to accomplish a great reformation; and he repaired the altar of the Lord which had been broken down. The altar stood for worship, and the

in its construction, aimed at simplicity. When, as we read, Ahaz went to Damascus, he saw there an altar covered with Assyrian images, which led him to substitute an elaborately carved Damascene structure for the plain altar of the Lord in Jerusalem. That is exactly what some are doing to-day in the ornate ritual of artistic and æsthetic worship, so-called, with its magnificent garniture and furniture; and that is what calls attention from God Himself to the rite, the ceremony, and the symbol. There will be no reformation in the modern Church until the broken-down and displaced altar of spiritual worship is rebuilt.

Notice how the people who worshipped Baal, called from morning until noon and from midday unto night, while there was not a voice that answered. Has that any bearing upon us? Yes, to a large extent. Under whatsoever cover we worship Baal, we may cry even unto Jehovah, but there will be no response. "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me." If, in secret or openly, you are a worshipper of this world, turning away from the living God in your heart or life, your prayer to God will bring no answer; you must first put away your idolatry.

I pass on to notice a point which needs special emphasis. Elijah's prayer and the fire that fell from heaven are familiar to us; but there are features in them which, it may be, we have never yet commanded in thought. "The God that answereth by fire, let Him be God." If we trace Old Testament teaching as to from Exodus iv. to the last chapter of Malachi, we shall find it to be consistent. The doctrine of God was that man must build the altar, but must never kindle the fire. When the victim was laid upon the altar, God sent the fire from heaven to consume it. No doubt it was so in the case of Abel's offering, and thus he knew that it was accepted. The Hebrew word for accept, in Psa. xx. 3, means burn to ashes.

When the Tabernacle was opened and the first sacrifice was laid upon the altar, the fire of God came down and consumed it; and the same thing happened at the opening of the Temple. Amid the apostasy of Elijah's day, the fire of God went out, and was not to be rekindled by man; it must come down from above. Hence, as the prophet said, the God that answered by fire was to prove Himself to be God. That is the reason why the sacrifice was drenched with water over and over again. Water cannot quench supernatural fire; so the fire which burnt up that sacrifice and licked up the water, was not of man's kindling, but came down from heaven. Lev. vi. 9-13 teaches that God kindles the holy fire and that man keeps it alive. Therefore, after building the altar, there is no attempt by Elijah to kindle the fire. He simply prays to God to show that Elijah is his servant, and has spoken according to the Divine word.

THE ANSWER COMES

in the consuming of the sacrifice, and the people fall upon their faces, saying, "Jehovah is God."

What is the lesson for us? If the fire of the Holy Ghost declines, do not try to kindle it anew, but call upon God. If, in your heart, the Spirit, as God's living Fire, seems almost gone out, seek not to supply his place with any abundance of external ceremonies, rites, or works. Get down on your face before God, and wait for the fire to be kindled anew from heaven. In individual, social, and church life, the fire of God must be kindled from above.

When the greater apostasy swept over Israel, so that they crucified the Lord of Glory, and the Shekinah departed from the Temple, Jesus Christ teaches his disciples that the fire must be rekindled from above, saying to them, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." And, when the Spirit is given, what does the apostle say?—"Pray without ceasing . . . Quench not the Spirit." Sedulously guard the fires of the Spirit, that they do not go out. If spiritual life is on a low level, do not try to make up for it by something of man's devising, but seek to renew communion with the Spirit of God.

What is man's resource for declining spiritual power in our churches? A better choir, a new structure, a larger organ, a great public orator in place of the minister. Reliance on such things is the devil's device to obscure in the Holy Ghost. There is a tendency all around us to make up for a low level of spiritual life by secular attractions, instead of getting the power of the Spirit back upon us in mighty Pentecostal effusion.

Elijah next gathered together the priests of Baal and slew every one of them. It was a measure of great severity; but, apart from that quality, there is no real love. A great deal of milk and water amiability finds favour in these days. Parents say they love their children too well to punish them; whereas, in neglecting correction, they show that they do not love them enough. Among governments, in courts of law, and with regard to Church discipline, there is far too much laxity. There is always a severity in love. "Behold, therefore, the goodness and severity of God." It is the same law by which the magnetic needle both attracts and repels; and the love of God repels evil, while it attracts good. The Levitical law would not suffer a witch to live, because witches diverted the people from the service of God; and it was for the same reason that the priests of Baal perished.

If you would have the beauty of holiness, bring out the "witches," and put every one of them to death. Make an end of whatsoever disturbs your loyalty and fidelity to God, or prevents you from being entirely surrendered to Him. We must get down on our faces, in humiliation, confession, and renunciation of sin, ere we shall enjoy a great blessing. The very eye that recognises the beauty of holiness, must discover the hatefulness of sin.

The prayer of Elijah brought down the one standing, to us, for light, heat, and energy; the other, for satisfaction, fertility, and beauty. The fire must consume before the water refreshes and invigorates. As Elijah sits with his face between his knees, God sends the welcome cloud, in a shape which recognises man's hand raised in supplication. The secret of these wondrous events was not in the Prophet's perfection, for, in the next chapter, we find him in despondency and despair, beneath the juniper tree, asking God to take his life. This only shows that he was a man of like passions and temptations with ourselves. Nevertheless, he held the key that unlocked the flood-gates of heaven, bringing rain after three and a-half years of drought.

FIRE AND FLOOD—

This whole history teaches us that the man or the woman who has attained to the beauty of holiness, and is living in fellowship with God; who is hidden with Him before appearing to men; who dares, in the reliance of simple faith, to stand with God, though forsaken of all men—such a one holds the key which brings fire and flood from heaven.

IN THE MIDST OF AN APOSTATE AGE,

The chariot of Ahab, with the magnificent steeds harnessed to it—for what does it stand? For all the array of the world's machinery to accomplish great purposes, and make speed therein. But the simple believer who lives in God can outrun it all. Our Lord says that the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light; but He does not say that it should be so. We sometimes think that, in comparison with the world, Christ's Church cannot be expected to accomplish great projects. But when, as believers, we stand where Elijah did, we may defy all the powers and appurtenances of this world to outrun us in our zeal for our beloved Master. We shall gird up our loins, run before the world's chariot, and come first to the goal. If the Church of Jesus Christ could see her privileges and would abide in God, all these worldly projects which sweep around the globe with incredible rapidity, to introduce inventions and discoveries and to accomplish political and other schemes, would be outrun by the Church of Christ, in her zeal to give the Gospel of the Son of God to a dying world.

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES.

Open-air gatherings were held in the Market Place on four evenings of the week, conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane. The large crowds which assembled included many of the townspeople, as well as villagers from the outlying districts. The meetings were often continued until 10 p.m., the majority of the listeners remaining until the close, and being prepared, it seemed, to stay as long as the speakers elected to go on. Many friends rallied to the assistance of the evangelist, among those who took part being Rev. W. H. Hay Aitken, Rev. John Wilson, of Woolwich, Dr. Harry Guinness, and Mr. Hinde, who had lately returned from Gospel work among the soldiers in South Africa, and related some of his experiences at the front. He told some moving incidents, showing how, as the result of tract distribution or the spoken message, several bright young fellows had sought the Lord just prior, as it proved, to meeting their death on the battlefield. Miss Louise Shepard, of New York, sang the Gospel with much acceptance.

The meetings afforded many indications of a real work of grace. At one of them a young fellow admitted with joy that he was converted at Keswick six years ago in a mission held by Mr. Lane. Now he brought two companions with him, one of whom said, "I trusted Christ on Tuesday night in the Market Square;" the other, "I have trusted Him to-night." Sunday (July 29) was a remarkable day. In the morning the workers and friends assembled to the number of 200 or 300 in the Market Place, and, after a short service, formed into four bands, which visiting the alleys, courts, and out-of-the-way places, singing the Gospel, and talking to the people. When this practice was begun a few years ago a certain shyness was shown on the part of the residents, but this year the visiting evangelists and their supporters were received most cordially on all hands. The evangelistic meetings in the tent on Sunday were full of encouragement. After the evening meeting, the congregation marched to the Market Place for the closing gathering. There must have been near a thousand people present—not so much Convention-goers as residents and others. Hymns were sung on the way, and the proceedings took a solemn turn from the outset. Prebendary Webb-Peploe gave incidents connected with his own conversion, and Mr. Fegan also spoke suitable words; after which Mr. Lane presented the Gospel appeal. At length an adjournment was made to the Victoria Hall, and many unconverted men and women acknowledged blessing as a result of the proceedings. In fact, fifteen or sixteen gathered round the platform to be prayed for. The meeting ended in the same solemn spirit as it began. The record of the evangelistic meetings, considered as a whole, should provoke praise to God, for among the cases of conversion were many young men with the promise of life and usefulness still before them.

The Life Work of Gipsy Smith

In November, 1876, a mission was held in a little Methodist Chapel in Cambridge. The only convert was an unknown gipsy youth named Rodney Smith. The mission would be regarded at the time almost as a failure, but it has had great consequences for thousands all over the world, for that youth became the world-famed evangelist of the Free Churches, who is universally known as Gipsy Smith.

The Smith family of gipsies are highly respected in East Anglia, and for years have followed the occupation of chair-caners and basket-makers. His father, Cornelius Smith, was brought to Christ by the sad death of his wife and her youngest child. With two of his brothers he gave his heart to God in a little mission room in London. The three stalwart converted gipsy brothers were soon preaching Christ. They had the joy of leading their aged parents, then seventy years of age to rest upon the promise of God. Gipsy Cornelius Smith is still an active and honoured evangelist in the Eastern Counties.

Twenty-three years ago, on June 25, 1877, young Rodney Smith left his tent, and, inspired with a strange and passionate desire to win his fellows for the Lord, joined Rev. William Booth, the superintendent of the movement then known as the Christian Mission. This work developed into the Salvation Army, with which Gipsy was connected for some years. He laboured during those early years as a Salvation Army officer in various parts of the country, and was at last appointed to Hanley in the Staffordshire Potteries. About this time he married, his wife being a Miss Pennock, of Whitby, who was one of his early converts. They have now a family—two boys and a girl. At Hanley Gipsy severed his connection with the Army, and, backed up by a strong local committee, rented a circus which seated 3,500 people.

Here he laboured for four years, occasionally conducting missions in other parts of the country. During the last months of his Hanley pastorate, he also regularly conducted services in Hull. It was there that Rev. S. F. Collier, the superintendent of the Manchester Wesleyan Mission, first saw him. Soon afterwards Gipsy Smith accepted the invitation of Mr. Collier to go to Manchester as the evangelist of the mission. For two years he worked on the staff of the mission, frequently preaching at the great Central and Free Trade Halls, and became more and more a striking and successful preacher. His fame in the country grew steadily, and he was in great request for special missions, which were held under the auspices of the Manchester Committee.

In 1889 he paid his first visit to America. This necessitated giving up his work in Manchester. He, however, still resides in the city, and is a member of the Methodist Society at the Central Hall. His class leader during the last four years has been Rev. George H. M'Neal, who was converted at one of his early missions at Burnley. He is also a local preacher on the plan, and one of the most devoted helpers of the work. During a recent winter he gave up nearly all his free nights to advocating, up and down the country, with Mr. Collier, the claims of the social and rescue work of the Mission. He is constantly saying that he considers the Manchester Mission to be the best evangelistic work he knows in the world. The Gipsy always considers his connection with Rev. S. F. Collier to have been of untold strength to him in the country. His relations to his own pastor, as he affectionately calls Mr. Collier, have always been of the most helpful character.

Gipsy Smith's first visit to America came about in this wise. His close and intimate friend, Mr. Frank Byron, of Manchester, was travelling in the East, and met two well-known American ministers who were charmed with his account of Gipsy Smith's work in England. They encouraged Mr. Byron to persuade him to visit America, promising their cordial help. After much thought and prayer, Gipsy resolved to cross the Atlantic, and landed in New York, in September, 1889. The greatest and most unlooked-for obstacles at once appeared. One of these ministers suddenly died, and the other had to resign his charge; so that the young evangelist had no friend to help him. He had, however, a large number of letters of recommendation from leading English ministers, which he took to Dr. Clarke, the editor of the Christian Advocate. By him he was introduced to Dr. Prince, who was at that time having a mission at his church in the suburbs. The doctor's greeting was hardly encouraging at first, for after looking at the letters he said, "Well, brother, I guess we don't want you."

The Gipsy, who was perfectly convinced that God had sent him to America, replied, "Well, Dr. Prince, I guess you do want me." The result was that he was invited to conduct services in the church; the place was crowded night after night, and hundreds were converted. Everybody was convinced, after that, that they did need Gipsy Smith. He has visited the United States four times since then, preaching in all the great cities. In Washington he preached in the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal Church, where President McKinley worships. The longest mission he ever conducted was in Boston, where for seven weeks running he preached every night in one church. The papers calculated that in the aggregate 150,000 people attended those services, and the evangelist had the joy of seeing 850 people join the church. He thinks American services are brighter as a whole than our English ones. There is more singing, but the people are not so emotional as in England. Some of the most saintly people he has ever met have lived in the States.

From Photograph by Mr. Arthur Nicholls, 40, Friar Street, Reading.

The American people are a church-going nation, but as a whole are not great on the ethics. Worldliness, as in England, often eats the life out of their Christianity. Gipsy has now thousands of friends in America, and has received many pressing invitations to become resident pastor of important churches there. After his last visit to America, he sailed with his wife to Australia, where he made himself personally acquainted with mission work and the leading workers there, his services being very richly blessed of God.

After several years of unofficial evangelistic work all over the world, in September, 1897, Gipsy Smith became the first evangelist in connection with the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches. On the recommendation of Rev. S. F. Collier and Dr. Henry J. Pope, the Council gladly secured the services of Mr. Smith. The result has far exceeded the most sanguine expectations. United missions have been held in many of the largest towns in the country, and nothing like the success that has attended them in some places has been known since the first great campaign of Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

When Gipsy Smith goes to a town to conduct a mission, he has the united strength and influence of all the Free Churches behind him; and when this immense power has been faithfully used in preparation for the mission, the whole town is often moved, hundreds converted to God, and new faith and hope given to all the churches. The greatest credit is due to the evangelist in that all through his career he has been able to work most cordially with the ministers of all churches, and has had the great and increasing respect and admiration of all Christian workers. He has occupied the pulpits of Drs. McLaren (Manchester), Whyte (Edinburgh), Clifford (London), Barrett (Norwich), Reith (Glasgow), and many other leading Free Churchmen. He has preached in the leading Wesleyan churches, and is the only layman who has ever taken a Wesleyan Methodist Conference appointment.

Some evangelists have a special hold upon church-going people, and find it difficult to draw the outsiders to the services. Others have the gift of drawing the outsiders, but often fail to edify and instruct regular Christian hearers. The Gipsy not only charms the outsider, but wins the admiration as well of the regular church-goer, although he has usually some pointed things to say early in his mission services to sleepy and indifferent church members. He is always advertised as "Gipsy" Smith. People hear that a gipsy is going to preach, a man who lived the first seventeen years of his life in a tent without education and orthodox culture. The novelty draws them to see and hear him. When he comes into the pulpit or on to the platform, it can be seen at once that he is a bonâ-fide gipsy, and has the complexion and features of his singular, shrewd, and interesting race.

But the rough gipsy life is in the far past, and it is evident at once that the man in the pulpit is a Christian gentleman. There is, however, still about him all the romance and fascination, the simplicity and frankness, the shrewdness and humour, that Borrow has taught us to associate with the Romany race. Mr. Smith is richly endowed by God for his work. His mental gifts are remarkable. Probably the fact that his powers lay dormant when a boy, amid the surroundings of his gipsy life, accounts for much of the freshness with which he deals in the pulpit and platform with the greatest subjects. Although he has never had the advantage of a systematic education, he is now a cultured man. Being quick at observation, he learns much from men as well as from books.

The Gipsy sings the Gospel as well as preaching it. He has taken great care in the training of his voice. By persistent and conscientious study and toil, he has made himself a worker that "needeth not to be ashamed."

The Gipsy has a very simple faith in God and his Gospel of salvation. He feels also the absolute call he has received to bring men to the knowledge of Christ. This is the one purpose of his life. He owes much of his success to this simplicity of purpose and definiteness of aim. When he speaks, the great impression he makes is that he has a burning desire to get people saved. He is further equipped for his work in that he has personally visited various mission fields in England, America, and Australia, and has been in touch with the world's leading evangelists. He was a personal friend of the late Mr. Moody. During the last winter he has conducted missions for the Free Church Council at Grimsby, Bromsgrove, Halifax, Mansfield, Hull, Blackpool, Middlesbro', Bournemouth, Bacup, Taunton, Worthing, Westbourne Park (Dr. John Clifford's), Ramsgate, and other places. He never has had greater crowds and more visible results in his life.

He is looking forward with great expectancy to the Simultaneous Mission which the Free Church Council is arranging for the early weeks of the new year. G. H. McN.

"The Same God."

"Come and hear this, all ye that fear God;" "O magnify the Lord with us, and let us exalt his Name together."

THESE words (quoted from page 29) are the keynote of the sixty-first Report of the George Müller Orphan Houses on Ashley Down, Bristol. The booklet is a new and striking testimony to the faithfulness of God, and will carry encouragement to the hearts of God's children in all parts of the world. For it is, according to its title, "A brief narrative of facts," and readers will perceive that these facts are more telling than ever.

In his opening remarks, Mr. Wright says: "In one respect this display of his revealed character has surpassed that of all the former sixty-six years of its career. I refer to the receipt, on March 24, of a legacy of £18,000 (i.e. £20,000 less legacy duty) to the Orphan Fund.

"This sum exceeded, by about £7,000, the largest amount ever before received in a single payment. It is not, however, the mere largeness of this item that is to be noticed. The timeliness of it is especially instructive. When, some fourteen years ago, the testator was moved by God to insert this bequest in his will, what was then hidden from human ken, was 'naked and open unto the eyes of Him with whom we have to do,' viz., that the year 1900, when this bequest would become payable, would, on account of a most costly war in South Africa, and an unprecedented famine in India, be a year of more than ordinary strain to charitable enterprises dependent, instrumentally, upon freewill offerings. Our Father in heaven foresaw the need of the hundreds of fatherless and motherless ones who, in the year 1900, would, in dependence solely upon his power and mercy, be gathered under the sheltering roofs of the Orphan Houses, or rather under his own sheltering wing, and He took care that even in the time of famine they should be satisfied."

The question used often to be asked, "What will become of the institution after Mr. Müller is gone?" Is not God answering the question Himself? While the fact thus recorded stands out conspicuously in the report, it is not, after all, a solitary Alp in the scenery of the experiences of years. The minor peaks show themselves, and some of them are not of small magnitude either. There was another legacy of £2,700—two amounts above £500, but not over £1,000, three amounts above £200, but not over £500; seven amounts over £100, but not over £200. In addition to these there were hundreds of donations for various amounts from £100, downwards. From all parts of the world the gifts come—gifts in money and in kind—and the circumstances attending or suggesting the gifts are of the most

VARIED AND OFTEN NOVEL CHARACTER.

To select from these is not easy, but here is one of the most remarkable:—

From South Kensington, £1, sent by an orphan formerly under our care, and whom we were under the painful necessity of expelling from the Institution, but who now writes very gratefully, and sends the above donation to its funds.

Here is another:—

From Bovey Tracey, £100. The donor, while in lodgings away from his home, was taken very ill. A servant of Christ, an entire stranger to the sick person, went to lodge in the same house, and was asked to visit the invalid. In conversation the sick gentleman opened his mind to the visitor; told him that he knew he was dying, and that he wished to give, immediately, some money for the help of children; for, though he had none of his own, he loved children. He asked his visitor if he could recommend any Homes or Refuges for such; whereupon the visitor said he could recommend the Ashley Down Orphanage and another institution. A few days after, the above-mentioned donation of £100 came to hand.

One donor sends 5s. in token of gratitude for past mercies during the year, and in particular for deliverance from the habit of smoking, which was a great hindrance to his bodily health and spiritual life. The sum sent was part of the money he would have spent had he continued the habit.

A commercial traveller sends £5, money saved on his journeys by travelling third class.

Thus we might go on indefinitely, but space forbids. Readers of the Report will, however, see for themselves in what an immense variety of ways God influences the minds of people towards the Institution, and what a variety of circumstances become occasions for the bestowment of gifts.

Sixty-six years have passed away since this Institution was founded by the late George Müller, and the novelty of the movement has long since subsided. Yet the work remains and prospers to-day, a spectacle that compels the reverent admiration of thousands who behold in it a standing evidence of the reality of God's providence, and the efficacy of faith and prayer.

While the Orphanage is that which chiefly attracts public attention, it should be noted that the Mission and School work are no insignificant features, and that in many directions these beneficent influences have been successfully exerted during the past year.

"These Forty Years."

HAVING been commenced just forty years ago, the managers of the St. Giles's Christian Mission take the above title for their annual statement, and give a retrospect of the period which has passed since a company of young men founded the work at a prayer-meeting in Chancery Lane. For some time they were discouraged by lack of success, but at last their efforts were so far blessed that they were able to take a hall which was capable of accommodating 400 persons. Then more extended space was needed, and at length the fine old building in Little Wild Street was acquired, and opened by C. H. Spurgeon. Surprising as it may seem, this was once a chapel well attended by a genteel West-End congregation, and at one time even John Howard himself was found among the worshippers.

Until 1877, or during a period of seventeen years, the work was of the quietly aggressive, unostentatious kind. "The Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ was preached at every opportunity as the one remedy for sin, and as the only factor for the complete and permanent uplifting and salvation of the sinful. The adults were reached by house-to-house visitation and by preaching services, in Sunday schools, and the young were warned against the evils of intemperance by the various Bands of Hope."

THE CHILDREN WERE TAUGHT

In 1877 a number of ex-prisoners asked the pertinent, if startling question, "What is the good of preaching—why don't you help us?" Such applicants merited a fair hearing. "We saw the need of immediate action, and, preaching as we did, that there was hope for all, we spared no effort until we proved that there was hope for them. Some old wood was purchased, the men were set to work to chop it; we tested their willingness to labour honestly, and from this small and almost insignificant beginning, we date the commencement of our extensive efforts for the benefit of the better class of discharged prisoners." This service is recognised by a number of Government officials "as being a valuable agency of national importance, doing much to decrease crime." It was found by experience that the most effective way of dealing with discharged prisoners was to begin with them in prison before their freedom was regained. Hence, "the Government consent was obtained for Mr. Wheatley to visit inside the prisons, by which means he was able to go into the cases of the men individually, and to make such arrangements for their future as might be for the best." By such means a man would be the more readily helped at the time of discharge, while impostors, or those who boasted of crime, were the more readily detected.

The success achieved in this department was so encouraging that, after ten years, or in 1887, special attention was directed to friendless juvenile offenders. "We found that the very best thing you can do with a young offender is to prevent his becoming an old criminal, and that when a boy commits his first offence, it is high time for strenuous efforts to be made to stop him in his downward career. Prevention is better than cure." In a word, it was an effort to cut off the supply by

NIPPING CRIME IN THE BUD.

Then there is another dark but still important matter—the effective dealing with homeless and destitute women and girls. Mr. Wheatley remarks that he has never directed very much attention to this branch of the service. "The subject is a painful one, and needs thoughtful handling. Our female workers have heard sad tales of misery, which has led to sin, and of sin which has led to misery; and they endeavour quietly and patiently to lead their erring sisters back to paths of sobriety and usefulness. The 'drink question' enters largely into this matter, and one of the saddest sights which even London can show is that of the recently bright, happy young woman drifting downwards all too swiftly into misery unutterable, dragged lower and lower by the drink habit. A drunken man is a sad sight; a drunken woman is an embodied tragedy." Among the women and children assisted are the wives and families of prisoners, and it is said that in some instances men addicted to evil habits have been so touched by what has been done for their dependents, that, having got through their trouble, they have eventually become reformed characters.

As the quondam chapel in Little Wild Street is the headquarters of the evangelistic work, we are reminded that the congregation "consists of people of all ages, and of various sorts and conditions." Many worshippers are ordinary people attracted to the service, but others are representative classes. There are also over 120 lads from the Boys' Homes, all of whom had "shown a disposition to go the downward road, and they have all been handed over to us by judges, magistrates, or prison officials." There are also present women and girls from another Home, as well as men who are lodged for the time being at Brook Street, Holborn, some of whom may just have been released from penal servitude.

There are Sunday services at several other centres, as well as in the open air; and the success attending all shows that the Gospel is still a power among the poor and the common people.

"Whom ye shall fear."

Whom may the sons of Briton fear—
The famed, the strong, the brave?
Fearless on far-off battle field,
Bold on the ocean wave;

And yet there lurks a subtle pow'r
Within our island home—
A pow'r that Britons well may fear,
Wherever they may roam.

Sons of the valiant, dread thy sin,
Thy quenchless lust of gain,
Thy games of chance that squander gold,
Thy love of pleasures vain.

Know this, we dare not yield full trust
To weapons charged with death,
To mighty ships that plough the deep,
To men in whom is breath.

Remember Rome, what heights she scaled,
And to what depths she fell:
The joys of sin robbed her of might,
Then plunged her into hell.

Ye sons of Briton, love the Christ,
His cross of shame revere;
Turn to thy God, thy Refuge safe,
And then, whom may ye fear!

Keswick Convention.

The Missionary Meeting.

On Saturday morning in "Keswick Week," every part of the Convention Tent was crowded, missionaries being prominent in the great gathering, which also included many who are anxious to go forth in ready obedience to the last great commission of the Master. Mr. Wilson invited to a few moments of silent prayer, and to this succeeded the hearty singing of "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," to the familiar notes of "Miles' Lane." From this point, Mr. Eugene Stock took the conduct of the meeting, first calling upon Mr. W. B. Sloan to lead in prayer. This petition evidently found echo in the hearts of all present, as it recognized the Lord's voice to the Church throughout the world, in current public events of solemn import.

Mr. Albert Head named various former and present representatives of the Keswick Mission in India and China, who are very desirous of continuous prayer on their behalf by friends at home. The Keswick Mission, he said, needs about £1,000 annually; and the envelopes about to be distributed made provision for the allocation of contributions to this and other missions. Reference was also made to special need in connection with the projected purchase of land in Keswick, as mentioned in our report on the Wednesday afternoon meetings.

In order that missionaries present might be prayed for, the Chairman asked that those engaged in the mission field would rise in their places. The number of those who did so was about 100. Some fifty accepted candidates afterwards stood up. The whole of these were earnestly borne up before the throne of grace by Rev. Dr. Moule, who commended them to God for sustenance, guidance, and blessing.

Speaking of Jonah's flight from the presence of the Lord, Mr. Stock said he had that very morning received a letter from one who shirked the missionary call twenty-five years ago, and who testified that he had experienced unhappiness ever since. In contrast to this, take the history of Paul, who heard the Lord's call, and "was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision."

The first of a number of short addresses from missionaries on the platform was given by Miss Bailey, who works among the Jews in Persia. Despite the messages from the Lord, which they had been hearing that week, some persons are disposed to say, Why not take things easy, and "lie down again" (1 Sam. iii. 5)? The question of the Jews is a burning one, and Christian effort should extend to the lands of their dispersion. Persia presents great facilities for such work. There is perfect readiness on the part of the Jews to hear the Word of God; and ten Jewish children were sent to Miss Bailey by their parents for Christian teaching.

After the hymn, "Gather, Lord, thy chosen nation," Mr. Stanley Smith (China) contrasted the popular idea of self-denial with that which is founded in absolute subjection to the Word of God. Mr. Horsley, another missionary from China, pointed out that the way in which some of God's people regard in the mission field, must be grievous to our Lord. A young man who was spoken to upon the point, said that his parents loved him too much to let him go abroad in that way. Surely, in God's sight, they love themselves too much and their son too little.

The crisis in China was the subject of some words from Mr. W. B. Sloan. He counselled the avoidance of extreme feeling, and said that the facts demand definite dealing with God in prayer. It is known that seven stations of the China Inland Mission have been wrecked. At least three of their missionaries, with wives and children, have been driven out of the stations. This is a loud call to prayer, because God alone can succour them in their awful peril, or give them to triumph in death for Christ's sake. None can say what may be the fate of the remaining stations, some 160 in number, scattered throughout the Chinese empire. As far as possible, the Mission is ready to withdraw its lady workers from danger. But to do this for all would mean three months' travelling for some of them; and, in certain cases, the risk attendant upon removal would be greater than if the missionaries stay where they have friends, and exercise faith in God's protecting care.

An intensely fervent and solemn appeal for

in China was here made by Rev. F. B. Meyer. He asked God to send the angels to encamp round about his 2,000 faithful servants in every part of that land. Many were the tears that flowed freely during Mr. Meyer's prayer; and from every lip there came a hearty "Amen" at its close.

Lady representatives of the work of various Missions spoke briefly. Mrs. Harvey had come "from the front" in South Africa, where she worked among the soldiers. At Wellington one night she was returning from a visit to Dr. Murray and his wife, who had been to her living exponents of the Keswick teaching. Passing along, she was saluted with "Guid nicht, woman," by one who proved to be "frae Newton-Stewart." This issued in an introduction next morning to the captain; and, ever since, there had been services for the soldiers, with from 400 to 500 present at each service. The Gospel was accompanied by acts of kindness, doctors of philosophy washing dishes for the soldiers' use, in remembrance of the Lord's words, "I am among you as he that serveth."

Miss Elder Cumming represented the Scotch Mission, though not as a foreign missionary, and further advocacy of the claims of the heathen upon God's people was made by Miss Louise Shepard, of New York. The word foreign, she said, should not be applied to mission work, which has claims upon all who believe in Christ. She prayed that all such may be sent forth with the Gospel, either and prayer, to all the world. Missions are not optional, but are decidedly obligatory. The neighbouring lake was clean, limpid, and fresh, only because it had an outlet; and the Church of Christ will be stagnant and miasmatic unless it provides for the outgoing of Christian life. Let us all remember the question, "How much owest thou to thy Lord?" taking care to pay our honest debts in that respect. It is not everyone that can go abroad with Christ's Gospel; but, having regard to others who are called to that field of labour, we may all "let go" and "help go."

The singing of the hymn, "Lord, thy ransomed Church is waking," afforded opportunity for passing round contribution envelopes, which were afterwards collected and handed to the treasurer. The following note was handed up to the Chairman, and was read by him to the meeting: "As a thank-offering for blessing received here, my dear wife and I feel called upon to undertake the support in the mission-field of some Spirit-filled young man whom our blessed Lord may call, in this big Convention, to go forth in his name."

Short addresses here followed from men missionaries. Dr. Neil told how he came to Keswick seven years ago, thinking that he would never be a missionary; but at the first meeting he attended in the tent he was shown and was moved to go forth in the Master's service. All his relatives tried to hold him back, but he had never found cause to regret his decision.

Rev. W. E. Horley, from the Straits Settlements (Methodist Episcopal Mission) repeated the saying heard years ago in Harley House, that missionaries are the aristocracy of the Church; and he trusted that many would be moved to join them. Speaking among the Chinese in the Malay Archipelago, he had often experienced the presence of Jesus from blessing to the people. In his parish, covering 6,000 square miles, there are hundreds of thousands of Chinese, Malay, and Tamil, and about 350 Europeans. The Government gave them four acres; and, in less than a year, he collected enough to erect a church accommodating 400 persons, the building being paid for by the people on the spot. There is also a mission house, a school, and a gathering of nearly seventy Chinese Christians.

Describing himself as a representative of

AN EIGHTH PART OF THE WORLD,

Rev. Allan Ewbank, of South America, said that with adequate time at his disposal he could give an account of the horrors of that land which would make every Christian who heard it sick at heart. In contrast to that dark picture, however, he told an interesting story concerning a native lad who was likely to die through the bite of a snake. The lad was saved by the missionary sucking his wound; and, though unable to read his Bible, he voluntarily devoted himself to the work of holding forth the Word of Life, according to his ability.

Speaking of his six and a half years' work in India, Rev. J. M. Challis said that his charge had been that of teaching in a school which, under the blessing of God, is bearing glorious fruit in the evangelization of the country, the young men there trained taking important positions under government.

A HOPEFUL WORK

is also seen among the children of Agra, who attend three schools in that city.

A long list of other spheres of missionary labour was rapidly reviewed by the Chairman. He also remarked that Lord Salisbury's speech, no doubt delivered from a good motive, has found its way into Arabic, and, all over the East, is taken as a proof that England's Prime Minister does not favour the sending of missionaries to Mohammedans. Rev. David Wilkinson led in prayer on behalf of the various lands mentioned. After the hymn, "Ho! reapers in the whitened harvest," Rev. Donald Fraser was introduced by the Chairman as one who had been called to the mission field through an address by Robert Wilder at that meeting in 1891. Mr. Fraser gave an interesting sketch of eminently successful missioning in Central Africa. He combated the worldly opinion that "the happy, innocent (?) heathen" should be left to themselves, and showed that, in vast districts, the Gospel has substituted for bloodshed, desolation, slavery and death, the blessed,

PEACEFUL FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

In eloquent terms, Mrs. Howard Taylor, of China, depicted the glories of self-sacrifice, the unutterable privilege of suffering with Christ, and the blessed prospect of sharing his joy. The salvation of the world demands that Christians come to the place of sacrifice and suffering. We must give to God's work until we feel; and not only of that which we can spare, and of those whom we can do without. She recounted her experiences of God's preserving mercy amid a terrible outburst of Chinese fanaticism.

In a brief closing address, Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe referred to the Divine in relation to the redemption of man, his full salvation, and his final glorification. The three "must be's" are these: Ye must be born again, the Son of Man must be lifted up, He must increase; and it is only here upon earth that we may know the privilege of decreasing that Christ may increase.

NECESSITY LAID UPON CHRIST

It was a solemn moment when the Chairman asked that, apart from anything of a mechanical nature, some token should be given by fathers, mothers, and other relatives who had influence with the younger people, of willingness that their dearest ones should go abroad, even to China, if the Lord so requireth, and whenever He might call them out. All over the tent hands were raised in ready response to this appeal.

A parting scripture was given by Mr. Wilson, in the words of 1 Thess. v. 23, "The very God of peace sanctify you"; and, with a few words of prayer and the Benediction by Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe, this three-hour meeting, which had been marked by unflagging interest throughout, came to a close.

A Wild Man Tamed.

I WISH to place on record the story of the spiritual enlightenment of Chontsi, who has been well known as one of the wildest mountain Indians on the Mackenzie River. Besides having been a "medicine man" and conjurer, he is credited with having committed murder and other dark deeds. He has regarded the "missionary," too, as his enemy, and I have more than once had to bear his insult and resist his anger.

Professing to be a Romanist, he has always ridiculed the priests. In fact, his entire demeanour has been that of a strong, wild nature and bad character. But the Holy Spirit has changed this "servant of Satan," and how it came about is briefly told in the following facts:—During 1898-9 I was at Fort Wrigley, a very lonely mission station, and was led to pray definitely and continuously that the Holy Spirit would enlighten and bless the soul of some poor red man. Towards the spring Chontsi visited us, and I was astonished at his readiness to join us in private prayer. I observed something different in his conduct, and others noticed it too.

When departing he called to say he had an important experience to tell me. He showed signs of great tenderness of heart, soft, subdued manner, quiet speech, and simple earnestness which indicated a power within controlling a motive I could not as yet understand.

Subsequently Chontsi related the following touching "experience":—"I was with those Indians last fall, when God suddenly took many by death. I made medicine till I got sick and nearly died too. They thought I was dead. In that sickness my medicine failed. God sent his good Spirit, and I heard a voice saying 'Go to the white man's minister at Wrigley?' I resisted, and tried the conjuring; it failed. I tried to put the priests, crucifix on my body, but felt more sore. Then I put his book on my forehead, but the words seemed crooked. At last I yielded, and came to you. In your house you took me to God in prayer, and afterwards to the bishop. He, knowing what a bad man I had been, received me into the Christian Church."

We have had further evidence that the Holy Spirit has been dealing with this poor red man. W. Spendlove, C.M.S.

A Convert's Letter.

I ONCE received 210 letters in one day from young converts, many of them children, in Newark, New Jersey, America. In time I read them all, and it was a great pleasure to do so. I am going to let you read a letter received from a girl in Montreal, where I held three series of meetings. The last time I was there, I was delighted to find many men and women who testified that they became Christians in our children's meetings many years before. Here is an extract from one written by Annie ——: "I found Christ in your meetings, when you were here before. It was only out of curiosity that I first attended them. I soon felt I needed something the world could not give. At first I tried to quiet my conscience, but I could not rest. They sang, 'I know I am forgiven,' but I could not join in, for I knew it was not true in my case. I felt I would give worlds to be able to sing it. At the inquiry meeting, a girl said to me, 'Are you a Christian?' I said, 'No.'

"'Would you like to be?' 'Yes.' She then spoke so kindly to me, and said, 'Do not rest till you have found peace in believing.'

"I was in great distress, Satan whispered, 'You can never be saved; you are too great a sinner,' Thus for days I was in darkness. The last evening you were here I wept much during the service. I felt it was my own fault I had not been saved before. I saw that Christ had loved me and died for me, and that God was ready to forgive me my sins, if I would only confess, and believe in Him. Then I followed you in a few words of prayer, and when you came to that verse you wrote in that hymn we sing so often—

Jesus take this heart of mine,
Make it pure and wholly thine;
Thou hast bled and died for me,
I will henceforth live for Thee.

"Then the burden rolled away, peace and joy filled my soul. I felt sure my prayer was answered, and that I had a new heart. I began at once to work for Jesus, and I have been doing so ever since.

"Your young convert,
"X. X."

May God help you, dear young readers, to come at once, that you may never again be found rejecting the dear Saviour, who loved you more than a mother ever loved her child, and who suffered in your place on that dreadful tree.

Away in Charleston, S.C., and other places in the south this last winter, I have seen hundreds of children come to Jesus, thus getting their sins forgiven, and their hearts changed, and made happy in his love. Will you not follow their example, and make these lines which I have written for you, the expression of your own hearts?

Then you will find your souls filled with "Peace and Joy," in believing in Jesus.

"At Last."

I AM glad to bring before my large family of young people and their parents the Ruth Elliott Homes for Crippled Children at Enfield and Swanage. Miss Priest-Peck is a most devoted friend to needy little ones. She writes:

"After years of working and waiting, after many prayers, with an intense desire to procure a home at Swanage for our little crippled children, it has at last come.

"It is not a mansion, but just a little house with four bedrooms, two sitting-rooms, &c., where we shall make a home for a few of the many children who to-day are wearing out their suffering lives in poverty and neglect.

"Three years ago we took ten of these children to Swanage for a month, the next year thirteen went, maimed or halt or blind, and this May five (three of whom had had a leg amputated) had a happy fortnight there. Margaret is but eight, Harold seven. 'Tis sad that, so young, they should have been so hardly wounded in the battle of life; they are dear bright little children, to whom the loss of a leg means much. The interest the children created, and the kindness we experienced were great, and our song is

We have been there, and still would go,
'Tis like a little heaven below.

"How the children loved the glorious sea, and the beautiful country; how delighted they were to hear the singing of the birds; and away in the bright sunshine, surrounded by kind and loving friends, they learned that God's earth was fair, that life might be worth living.

"To the kind and generous readers of The Christian we appeal for help for this new branch of our work. During its short existence of eight years, we have had 800 children in our home, children whose lives have been made hard and sad by the cruel force of circumstances."

One Day.

One day one baby died and one was born:
The sister sleeps upon the breast of God,
The brother on his mother's.

Which fares better?
She has escaped the sins and tears of time,
Lives without spot before the throne of God,
Her wreath Christ-given, not warrior's, but a child's.

The boy on earth (if living long) must stand
The fiery test between him and the crown;
For him the song of youth and high pursuit,
Or sigh of age and pain, and blighted hope.
Through all the way a Tempter leading down;
Through all the way a Helper leading up.
Happy, if he shall lean on Christ and wash
And walk in white athwart the muddy world,
To reign white-robed for ever.

Which fares better?
The one in heaven or earth? We cannot tell;
But this we know, God doeth all things well.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 12.

"Zeal." Luke xvi. 1-13.

THIS parable is a warning that we are not to try to interpret every single point in our Lord's parabolic teaching literally. There are certain points here that could not be so treated. For instance, the steward acted fraudulently. He had no right to tell his master's debtors to write off half their indebtness, giving him fifty when he had a right to a hundred, or eighty instead of a hundred. However kind he was to these men, and however much he ingratiated himself in their favour by conniving with them, there is no doubt that he acted very fraudently towards his employer, and this could not for a moment receive Christ's approval. It is said, indeed, that his master commended him—not that he could be really pleased or satisfied, but he admired the sagacity with which his steward had prepared against his own fall, so that there were homes awaiting him when he passed from his master's employment. He was commended, not because of his dishonesty, but because he showed such keen business tact.

How zealous men of the world are for their own interests; for these they are prepared to sacrifice strength, leisure, and everything which men are accustomed to make much of. We see them flocking through the thoroughfares of our great cities in the search for wealth, counting the days by their successes, estimating the wealth of the years by their gains. The zeal of men to make money is written in letters of fire over every exchange and commercial mart. This is the point which our lesson accentuates. When men show some amount of enthusiasm in the cause of religion, they draw upon themselves the remonstrance of their friends, but who ever hears warnings to stop when men are in pursuit of fame, or wealth, or worldly position? There is more fever in one hour of a general election day, than in a whole year of the religious activities of the churches. Who can ever forget the excitement of the Mafeking night? But where can we find its counterpart in religious service?

The desire of this man was to secure a home when he was turned out of his situation. He made friends who should receive him into their home. And, in order to secure their friendship, he laid them under considerable obligation. Are we equally anxious to secure for ourselves a place in the eternal tabernacles, so that, when we fail on earth, we may receive an abundant entrance into the kingdom of glory?

I like that word "receive" in v. 9. It is as though with some at least, there would be a public welcome into the Celestial City—what the Apostle calls a choral entrance (2 Pet. i. 11, Gk.). It was as though heaven itself will pour forth its inhabitants to welcome those who have been faithful in their appointed lot, and have done the very best they can with limited talents and opportunities. It will be good to be received.

Please notice the different terms which the Saviour applies to money. He calls it the mammon of unrighteousness (v. 9), mammon being the name of the god of wealth in the surrounding nations, the unrighteousness referring to the stain which attaches so often to wealth-getting. He also speaks of it as very little (v. 10); and, indeed, how little is money worth compared to the eternal riches. With what contempt they treat it in heaven! It is very unworthy of comparison with the true riches. He speaks of it also as another's (v. 12), because, after all, though we call our money our own, it is only lent to us for a little season, to use for its rightful possessor. Lastly, He speaks of it as a master (v. 13), for indeed we are not masters of wealth, when the love of it has crept into our soul; but it masters us, and dominates our whole life.

The only safeguard against covetousness is to take God as our true Master and King, and to serve Him with all the zeal of which we are capable.

The man born blind (John ix. 1-17).

GOLDEN TEXT: "One thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see" (John ix. 25).

INTRODUCTION.

THE whole of the ninth chapter should be read over. This blind man is a striking example of a blind soul. He was in the dark and could see nothing till Jesus opened his eyes; then he was in the light and could see everything; but above all he could see Jesus.

So is it with the awakening of the soul. To see Jesus is to begin the life of light.

Key to Blackboard Plan.—Once "blind." Spell "blind," and you will see its meaning. Now "see." Also spell "see," and the meaning of seeing spiritually can be understood.

1. ONCE.

We can take the whole lesson as a symbol of a lost soul saved by Jesus and found by the Good Shepherd.

B.—To be blind spiritually is to "Believe not." This poor man did not know Jesus (12). It was a man (11); that was all he knew. After he did know who it was he believed (38), and then he could see. One thing he knew, and was quite certain about (25). Let us study the "knows" in the 1st Epistle of John, and we shall soon see what believing means.

L.—To love sin is to be spiritually blind; to hate sin is a sure sign of having seen Jesus, or having been lighted by the True Light. The Christian hates sin because he knows it displeases his Master (John iii. 19.

I.—To be blind is to be ignorant of the way of salvation. Look at this man, blind (36) but willing to be taught. "Lord, open Thou my eyes" (Ps. cxix. 18).

N.—Needy is a blind man; he must be led, cared for, looked after, This man knew his greatest need, it was to have sight. It is the soul's greatest need as well, sight to see in Christ the true Son of God, the Redeemer of the world (Matt. i. 21).

D.—To be spiritually blind is to be dead (John iii. 7). "Born again"—born from above, anew; a new life. All are dead as well as blind till the great Physician gives sight and life. "Dead in sin" (Eph. ii. 1-5; Cor. ii. 13).

2.—Now.

After the man had received his sight he is the picture of a soul saved and trusting in Jesus.

S.—"Saved." Sometimes this word is objected to, but it is clearly seen here. The man wanted to see (7), so he did at once what he was told to do (15); he knew for certain he could see (25), and he was glad (38). Compare 1 John i. 7; 2 Tim. i. 12; Gal. ii. 20.

E.—The man was very much in earnest about his sight, and although he was badly treated (22, 34), he was faithful to his Healer and would not deny his belief in Him. (7) Cured by Christ (Luke ix. 11). (17) Confessing Christ (Rom. x. 9, 10). (34) Suffering for Christ (2 Tim. iii. 12).

E.—Enlightened. Notice how the man grew in his knowledge of Christ (11): A man; (17): A prophet; (33): Of God; (38): Lord. Let us pray that we may grow to know more and more of Jesus (Eph. i. 18; Hos. vi. 3).

Can we all say, "Once I was blind, but now I can see"?

Street Preaching in Ireland.

IN connexion with the Open-Air Mission for Ireland, the Gospel has been preached in upwards of forty towns by 200 volunteer workers in the course of the year.

In some cases slight opposition is met with, but speaking generally, the people listen with reverence to the story of the Cross. The work of the colporteur is often hindered by the fact that so few are able to read. There is therefore a growing need for open-air preaching.

Practically, it may be said, there are two distinct Irelands. In the north-east, the condition of things is much the same as on this side of the Channel, but in the south-west it is totally different. The Lord's Day is, alas, unrecognised, and Bibles in many parts are almost unknown. Even the because it has been found that with its study light comes into the mind, love into the heart, and into the life the Grace of God. Hundreds of thousands have not heard God's Word. It is not so much a knowledge of the penalties of sin that is lacking. Of this they hear from the Roman Catholic pulpits. But when, trembling and with ashen lips, they ask how they can escape the wrath to come, they are directed to Mary as the refuge of sinners. God's plan of salvation is ignored.

By visiting fairs and markets, the workers of the Mission are enabled to appeal to the heart and conscience of the crowds who would not, under any circumstances, assemble in a hall for a service. Ten years ago it was impossible to carry on any such work in the south-western district. Mr. Harpur cited many instances of how the Spirit of God had worked upon the hearts of listeners as they hung upon the words of Life which fell from the lips of the speakers.

A lad, who approached a crowd to whom the Gospel was being preached, with the object of causing a disturbance, became impressed and eventually yielded himself to Christ. In a short time a brother and sister were led to the Saviour. The mother remained a Roman Catholic for twelve months, but at last, after persecuting her son for adhering to his newborn purpose, the penitent woman admitted that the worst that had fallen from the lips of her son during his persecution had been a petition for her soul. The religion of her lad should henceforth be hers. What Ireland needs is not Acts of Parliament, but the Gospel to be carried into the homes of the people.

Sunday Closing of Public-Houses.—The Central Sunday Closing Association, 14, Brown Street, Manchester, are issuing packets of publications containing the most recent figures and arguments on the Sunday closing question. They are asking secretaries of religious and temperance organizations and friendly booksellers and stationers to get a supply of these packets for sale. The packets, which are sold at 3d. each, are in a handy and attractive form.

A Chinaman's Revenge.

HOW WANG CONQUERED HIS ENEMY.

I HAVE had the pleasure of accompanying Rev. F. M. Chapin, of the American Board of Missions, on a visit of over two weeks to Tung Ch'ang Fu, a prefecturial city, on the Grand Canal, between the Yellow and the Wei rivers, about thirty-six miles south of Lin Ching.

One day during our visit the native helper brought in a young man named Wang Ch'ang Yii, who told us he was a church member, having been baptized in Tientsin, at the L.M.S. station. His story was full of interest, illustrating what the Gospel can do for the Chinese.

His home is about ten miles west of the city. With him lives his nearest relative, an old woman, whom he calls "grandmother;" they are very poor. In their village also lives a rich man, with whom some two years ago Mr. Wang had a quarrel. In the fight which ensued, the poor boy, used to manual labour, easily came off victorious over the other, whose life was one of ease and indulgence. Enraged with defeat, the latter ran home, and fired right in Mr. Wang's face. Fortunately the charge was only powder, else it would have deprived him of his life instead of his eyesight. From that hour he vowed vengeance. His enemy, realizing the gravity of his rash act, sought through mediators to make peace, but no, all such appeals were made in vain; nothing but punishment to the uttermost would compensate for the wrongs done, and satisfy the hatred of his heart. He sought redress at the County Courts, but as his enemy was a literary graduate, and at the same time brought a counter charge, he could get no hearing. From there he went to the Prefecturial Courts, but with no better result. Such defeats would have discouraged the most sanguine; but made was now the one object for which he lived. As a last resort, he resolved to go to Peking, hoping there to have justice done. Receiving a supply of silver from relatives and friends, and securing a boy to lead him, he started on his long journey of 300 miles.

SEIZED A GUN,

After suffering many hardships on the way, he finally arrived at Tientsin, and, presumably fearing to spend the one cent necessary to secure lodgings at a Chinese inn, he slept the first night under shelter of one of the large city gates. Awakening in the morning, he found, to his consternation, that his silver had been stolen. In this miserable plight he found his way to a local "Yamen" (official residence). A clerk, after listening to his tale of woe, told him it would be useless to go further; no money, no friends, what could he do? at the same time advising him to go and have his eyes treated. Defeated in this his final effort for revenge, with despair in his heart, he said:

"I'LL GO AND HANG MYSELF."

The clerk, seeing his deplorable condition, took him to the Chinese Hospital, which is sustained by wealthy Chinese, having native physicians who have taken a regular medical course. (Its declared object is to show people that the Chinese can sustain such an institution as well as Christians). Not improving under treatment received, he soon came out, and sought to eke out an existence by begging, and finding shelter for the night in an inn.

The innkeeper, interested in his case, advised him to go to the London Mission Hospital, but, hating the foreigner, he did not want to go, and hearing the prevalent statements regarding their treatment of patients, such as gouging out eyes, cutting out hearts, &c. (supposed to be used by the "foreign devils" in taking photographs), he was afraid to go. The innkeeper, hearing of his fears, assured him that they were groundless. At last, mustering sufficient courage, he went in, and after four months had elapsed came out, not only with sight restored to his natural eyes, but also with the spiritual darkness dispelled, and rejoicing in Christ as his Saviour.

Returning home, his friends were surprised to find his sight restored, but still more to find that all his desire for revenge was gone. Love had taken the place of hate in his heart. They could not comprehend such a thing, but tried to persuade him to take up the case again, offering him money to do so. "No," he said, "now I am a believer and follower of Jesus, and Jesus said, 'Love your enemies.'" He sought the earliest opportunity to tell his former enemy of the change that had taken place in his heart, and that all desire to injure him was gone. The man would not believe it, and evaded Mr. Wang in every instance, fearing that he simply meant to deceive him, and thus gain a more favourable opportunity to get revenge for the wrongs inflicted. What words failed to do, his life in time accomplished, for now

THE TWO FAMILIES ARE FRIENDS.

Last New Year's time the former enemy came and paid his respects to the family; a brother also makes frequent visits, during which he reads the Scriptures to Mr. Wang. This is all the more remarkable because they belong to two different classes of society. There were no other Christians living near Mr. Wang's village until last autumn, when a young man and his wife returned from Shansi where they had been brought to know God. Our friend at once sought them out, and since that time, notwithstanding much opposition from their families, and in the midst of the terrible persecution which has been sweeping over this part of China during the past months, they have met regularly every Sabbath for prayer and the study of the Word. The Sabbath following Mr. Wang's visit to us, he returned in company with his friend, Mr. Ch'ang, gladly walking the twelve miles in order to hear the Gospel preached.

Instances like these are such as make the missionary's life a glad one, and give renewed assurance that his labour is not in vain in the Lord.

Work in Finland.

FROKEN LEKTOR INGMAN writes from Sortavala:

"I want to call attention to a great need in our poor and suffering country. We have exceedingly large parishes; in some cases the people live twenty or thirty English miles from the nearest church. The churches seldom have more than two pastors. These cannot possibly reach everyone who needs help for soul or body.

"Five years ago we began a little Home so as to train deaconesses to send to different parishes, that they may nurse the sick, read to the blind and aged poor, comfort the sorrowing, and help the tempted. The Home has sent out twenty Sisters, and fourteen are now in training.

"We are working under great difficulties. The Home is too small. We can neither train all who desire to come to us, nor send out so many as are sought for; and when the weary Sisters have broken down through overwork, as they too often do, we have not a room to which we can invite them to come to for a little hard-earned rest.

"As our people are so poor, and the famine has been so severe in some parts of our country, we feel we ought to make our wants known to fellow-Christians."

Rev. J. D. Kilburn, of St. Petersburg, also says:—

"I know Miss Ingman and her work well. The Training Home was begun and has been carried on principally out of her own limited income. It has been a joy to me to watch its growth, and to see the blessing which has rested upon it. Very heartily do I commend this good and needy work to all who are interested in the spread of Christ's Kingdom, and to all who desire to help the poor and suffering."

Colporteurs in Norway.—The Evangelical Colportage Mission for Norway, which is under the direction of Pastor G. Hübert, continues to make progress in the face of numerous difficulties. The annual report shows that the work has been pursued with untiring earnestness, and the interest awakened in the Word of God through the visitation and ministry of the workers has not been without gracious results. Pastor Hübert's address is Storgaden, 10a, Christiania, Norway.

Medical Missions in Bulgaria.

IN the course of a sketch of twenty-five years' work as a medical missionary in Bulgaria, Mrs. Elizabeth Bevan Tonjoroff tells how in the year 1872 it was a joy to find in Philippopolis a few men gathered together to study God's Word, having no preacher or leader among them. Gradually acquiring the language, she became a valued adherent and helper. Bansko became their headquarters, where, with her husband, she worked a district comprising thirteen towns and villages.

Mrs. Tonjoroff at the outset suffered much opposition and persecution from the inhabitants, but says:—"The sad condition of these poor souls deeply touched my heart. Looking for strength and guidance from on high I decided to consecrate myself for their welfare. Having an early inclination to serve the sick, and having a supply of medicines, I endeavoured to help them, not only by giving them medicines and advice, but by doing for them little household services."

At the time of the war with Servia, Mrs. Tonjoroff had her time fully occupied with nursing the wounded soldiers, and at the request of the government she took charge of the Provincial Hospital. The experience of these months showed the need for a cottage hospital, where cases requiring special care and attention might be received. A house was built for this purpose, with four wards, library, dispensary, &c. The work has constantly extended, and doors have opened on every hand for the spread of the Gospel in Macedonia and the more remote region of Albania. About 150 to 200 inpatients were received yearly, and as many as 7,000 to 8,000 outpatients attended at the dispensary. Gospel services were held in the library, but as the work of Pastor and Mrs. Tonjoroff increased it became necessary to build a mission hall.

Much distress is felt by the rapid growth of infidelity in Philippopolis, and prayer is asked that God will raise up more workers to fight against this growing evil.

Mrs. Bevan Tonjoroff may be addressed Philippopolis, Bulgaria.

Chamberi Mission, Madrid.

WRITING from Paseo de Areneros, 6 Provl, Madrid, Mr. Charles E. Faithfull says: "For many months past the funds have been barely adequate to meet the salaries of nine teachers of our five day schools that accommodate close on 400 scholars, and that of one native evangelist; in addition, I find myself on the threshold of the holiday month, the most needy one of the year, as then all is outlay with no income, for the obvious reason that there are no fees from the scholars. Further, the school material, such as desks, forms, maps, &c., much of which has been in use for the last twenty-five years, is sadly requiring renewal, and I am naturally anxious to have all in time for the next course that commences on September 1.

"Through the liberality of an old friend of the Mission, I am able to supply the great need of water for the school premises that in so providential a way were purchased, together with the chapel, about three years ago, a standing testimony to the faithfulness of our God, and a centre from which the light of his truth is continually going forth to the populous district in which they are. After careful consideration, I find that £100 will only just meet these requirements, as necessary as they are pressing.

"Notwithstanding the great heat, the services continue to be well attended; but, above all, we are favoured with the Lord's realized presence and blessing, and the work of conversion and addition to the Church continues unabated and unhindered."

The Hope Trust.—This important Trust again reports gratifying progress. The lecturing session extended over six months, in which period the agents of the Trust delivered no fewer than 504 to adults, besides a large number to juveniles, the aggregate attendance amounting to 239,945. Protestant classes were held in Edinburgh and Leith. The circulation of Protestant literature of course holds a prominent place in the operations of the Trust. Thirteen children's and youths' meetings have been held weekly in Edinburgh, Leith, and Newhaven. Two children's churches have been conducted every Sabbath. The attendance and interest of the children have been thoroughly maintained.

The Indian Famine.

TERRIBLE SUFFERING STILL.

DESCRIBING the effects of the famine among the Bhils, Rev. Thos. Evans, of Mussourie, writes:—"A race of non-Aryan, half-wild people, called the Bhils, have suffered most sorely of any from the present famine and cholera, and the cause is this: There is no cart-road into their homes, which are in the midst of a jungle, into which there is hardly a footpath. They have, therefore, been cut off from a supply of grain, which other places can get by road and rail.

FORTY PER CENT. OF THEM have died either of hunger or cholera—or both combined. I thought it well to call the kindly attention of the Viceroy to the sad state of these poor people, and now a transport service of camels and mules is engaged in carrying food to them from different quarters. But the worst of it is, this help came too late to save thousands of lives; and even now many of them are too weak to digest grain food. There are now three missions labouring among them, the C.M.S. in the centre, the Irish Presbyterians at one end, Canadian Presbyterians at the other. These people were for generations a semi-civilized race of marauders, but through British rule they are now greatly improved, and there is a regiment of soldiers organized from them who are very brave and loyal. Their land is far removed from all rail communication, but they are a simple-minded, honest, brave, and truthful race."

Referring to her labours among Mohammedan women, Mrs. M. Augusta Haig, Ahmednagar, says:—"My work has revealed to me a terrible state of distress. Many, now in their widowhood and old age, have absolutely no resources excepting a few halfpence they earn by spinning. Yesterday I was asked to visit a wada—a sort of enclosed court yard, In one tiny room three aged widows lived together, and in an adjoining room two others with four children and grandchildren. When I asked them what they most needed, they said they wanted clothes badly enough, but their ever-pressing need was food, and they pointed expressively to their mouths."

Rev. Dr. Valentine, Principal of the Agra Medical Missionary Training Institution, referring to the

in Gujerat, Rajputana, and other famine districts, says:—"We were greatly cheered to know that its force was considerably spent. From letters received from many of these parts, we learn that there is a fresh outbreak, and that in Bina and many parts of the Central Provinces, where cholera had not previously existed, it has broken out in a most virulent form. Therefore from man's point of view the prospect is most appalling."

In a recent letter, Rev. Dennis Osborne says: "The month of June—the first of the monsoons, and in some respects the most important—has come and gone. The rainfall in the famine-affected areas has been defective from 71 to 91 per cent., and in regions where 100 inches would have brought alleviation, only nine inches have fallen. But this is not the most appalling feature. Many regions have been outside the influence of both monsoon currents, and of this drought is summed up in an extract from the Vanguard, June 30, which says: 'The worst is to come. The most reasonable estimates are that from eighteen to twenty million will perish in this dearth now spread over the whole Peninsula.'" Referring to the generous offerings of readers of The Christian, Mr. Osborne adds:—"Your fund is doing the most extended good at this time of need, for its benefits are equally available to all. Its succour is to the destitute, as well as to the actual suffering, and its relief for the young is given irrespective of area—a kindly, Christlike heart gathers in such waifs and strays, and spends itself for their salvation."

Letters received by the Indian Committee of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association give sad accounts of the distress in the Feudatory State of Bhopal and in neighbouring districts. The Government is extending its relief operations, and although the numbers at the relief works are diminishing there is still need for much relief in the villages to which the people return when the rains begin. Here ploughing and sowing must be commenced. But the people have lost all, and need implements, bullocks, and seed-corn, and a subsistence allowance until the harvest is ripe. This relief distribution is in some respects more difficult than when the destitute people to be dealt with over a wide area, and are gathered together upon relief works, as it has inquiry made as to the circumstances of each village. Mr. Joseph Taylor, one of the Society's missionaries now at home on furlough, has gone out at short notice to India to assist in this work. His previous experience, and his administrative ability, give him peculiar qualifications for this service. Mr. John Lampard, of the Balaghat Mission, has abandoned his furlough in order to take part in this work. Both will proceed direct to the Bhopal State. Mr. Lampard hopes to return to London at the end of October for a few weeks to complete arrangements for the development of his own work among the Gonds. Communications should be sent to Miss Lampard, 114, Clapton Common, London, N.E.

Troops in S. Africa.

THE CAMP HOMES.

DEAR SIR,—We are wishing that our grateful thanks should reach every one of your readers who have shown an interest in the work among the troops, and contributed towards its progress. It would gladden the hearts of many if they could see how greatly their gifts are appreciated.

Thousands are turned out of the field hospitals into the comfortless Rest Camps to make room for fresh cases, whilst themselves still greatly in need of nourishing food. The kind help of English and Colonial friends enables us to supply at the Camp Homes, in the Orange River Colony, good soup free of charge to hundreds of convalescents in camp, and also, with the addition of milk and tea, to train loads of invalids passing through from the front. With these comforts Gospel literature is offered.

In the field hospitals the visits of the workers are eagerly looked for. The lavender bags sent out by English friends, the handkerchiefs and eau-de-cologne, all helping to make of the brave fellows whose patient endurance, whilst lying in intense weakness, or with terrible wounds, conveys many a lesson.

In the nightly meetings held in all our Camp Homes the power of the Holy Spirit is still being manifested in the conversion of souls and the strengthening of believers, whilst not a few backsliders have been restored.

One day a mounted soldier was thrown, near our tents, from a horse that he was training. One of our workers helped him and brought him to me. Giving him a restorative, I inquired about his soul, but was not aware that whilst he stood talking to me the brave fellow's shoulder was dislocated. He said his soul was saved. The worker, assisting him to reach his tent, inquired where he had been converted. "Oh, don't you know? It was in the meeting there (pointing to the marquee), the other night."

With the close of the campaign, our camp work will cease. We shall then hand it over to others, who will form permanent centres and homes for the garrisons remaining in South Africa. We hope to return to England before the end of the year. In the meantime, we shall thankfully receive help for the army of invalided men left to us by fever and sword. To provide free refreshments for some of these we have lately opened a small Home mid-way between Bloemfontein and Springfontein, in response to an urgent request from the medical officer. On the Orange River at Norvals Pont, a large Home of three marquees is open. Crowded meetings are held every night, and a blessed work of the Spirit is going on. At Kroonstad we are opening a Camp Home for the large number of troops now there. Thirty-four workers are distributed over the eight Homes.

Whilst most gratefully thanking friends who have shipped packages of literature and comforts, we would suggest their sending parcels by post only, as the expenses and difficulties connected with landing and clearing have been a tax on our funds.—Yours very truly, (Mrs.) M. S. Osborn-Howe.

Care of J. Storr Lister, Esq.,
King William's Town, Cape Colony.

NORTH OF BLOEMFONTEIN.

Many friends will be sorry to hear of the severe illness of Mr. Percy Huskisson, of the South Africa General Mission, which has made a big gap in our band of workers at the front; but we continue to receive most encouraging news from Mr. Darroll and Mr. Tervit.

At Winburg, Major Robertson gave them a warm welcome, and expressed a wish for a "Home." All buildings seemed to be in use as hospitals, but they succeeded in getting the Wesleyan Chapel. During the day an "H.L.I." came in, and gave them such a welcome, saying he had only just heard they had come. They understood his warmth when he told them he was a "Modder River convert."

The men were not allowed out of camp after 6 o'clock, so open-airs were held every night in the two camps. Tremendous crowds of men gathered round, and they had splendid times. The Christians turned up well, each bringing a bit of candle with him, and the ring presented a weird appearance with the sea of faces in the darkness all round. They had a one Sunday—a grand meeting at 3.30, and then tea for the Christians of the four regiments forming the brigade. After tea they had testimonies, which it was good to hear. One told of his conversion during the campaign, and a letter received later from his wife in England revealed the fact that she had been praying for him the very hour he was saved! Another lad, who had been wounded at Paardeberg, and has since returned to his regiment, told how much he thanked God for that bullet wound, for He had been teaching him many lessons in the hospital. A third, amid the half-rations, had been living on "the fat of the land" and "the finest of the wheat"; whilst another man, one of the Modder converts, thanked God that he had come to Africa, for he had found Him there.

On Friday, they moved on to Ventersburg, en route for Kroonstad, some troops having started the night before. Rev. Mr. Harman, the Wesleyan minister at Winburg, arranged to keep on the "Home" for the 12th Division, due to replace the Highland Brigade. The distance, thirty-five miles, was covered in fifteen hours, a record march, and

THE MEN WERE TIRED OUT.

The transport was delayed for six or seven hours at a terrible spruit; there was great difficulty with the wagons, as they stuck fast, and had to be unloaded and reloaded on the other side. Our workers had to wait for hours until it came to their turn to get their cart across, and then it stuck fast. They would have been in a fix, but four or five officers of the "Black Watch," and some of the men, came to their assistance, took the horses out of the cart, and pulled it up the other side for them, they being truly thankful to the Lord for thus undertaking for them.

At Ventersburg they found themselves once more in camp, enjoying life on the veldt; but the nights were terribly cold, and they were glad of every available rug, although it was but the beginning of winter. In the evening after their arrival, the lads came down to their cart and they had a prayer-meeting, but it was more praise than prayer, as they were all so thankful to God for his faithfulness proved throughout the long march. One lad's feet were raw; they had blistered after the first five miles, and yet he had trudged on singing,

"JESUS IS A FRIEND OF MINE."

This same lad at times cannot contain himself, but continually bursts out with "Thank God for Modder River Camp." He has made up a special chorus about it! It was there he was saved. They hear a good deal about "Modder River" from the lads. One or two have told them how they used to go to the meetings at the "Home," but would not yield, and how they have yielded to God since leaving.

On Sunday, they made a large bivouac by the cart, and a goodly number assembled for a Bible reading in the afternoon. They had been told to bring their "canteens" and bread or biscuits, so Mr. Darroll supplied them with tea and milk, the latter being a real luxury at the front. It seemed a strange way of catering, but it was good to see all the happy faces. They had a good time together, and then all went up to have an open-air in the lines among the men. A very large crowd gathered, and the Lord was with them. They are having big open-airs each evening.

They are so glad to be able to help others; to a lad needing milk they are able to give a tin, and also some bovril; and they passed on a dozen or so bovrils to the bearer company for the patients. Then another lad comes in for a Testament, and so they find the cart with its extras very helpful.

The other side of things is the increased expense, which is double the usual amount on account of the war and the scarcity of supplies. £500 are urgently needed.

The Wesleyan Conference.

IT has been a matter of great rejoicing that a high spiritual tone has marked the proceedings of the representative session of the Wesleyan Conference. The President's opening address, at the first session, when the laymen of Methodism joined their ministers in their legislative assembly, struck a deep note of spirituality. He drew a parallel between the closing years of the eighteenth and of the nineteenth centuries. Both periods in Methodism had been times of constitutional agitation, and the opening decades of the nineteenth century had been marked by great spiritual prosperity. He trusted that in the new century history would repeat itself.

Referring to the legislation, happily and finally agreed to by this Conference, by which the order of the Conference sessions shall be henceforth reversed, and the representative session composed of ministers and laymen in equal proportions shall meet first, Dr. Allen said he rejoiced that there was now a growing disposition to turn from the discussion of constitutional questions to the earnest consideration of their enormous practical and spiritual work. The temper of the Conference was as important as its constitution. Earnestly did the President plead for a deepened spirituality. They would never save men by the mere working of ecclesiastical machinery. The lay leaders of Methodism should lead also in direct spiritual work. He urged them all to a complete consecration.

The proceedings of Tuesday's session, when the

came before the Conference, will make the third Burslem Conference memorable in the history of Methodism. There was deep anxiety in many minds as to what turn events might take, and it was felt that, humanly speaking, the complete and triumphant success of the great enterprise to which the Church was committed depended in no small degree on the spirit and temper of that assembly. The anxiety proved to be needless, for verily God was in the midst of his people. Mr. Albert Clayton, the secretary of the Fund, reported progress. To complete the 1,000,000 guineas, they still needed 260,000 guineas. Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., referred to the national distractions, and the War and Famine Funds which had tended to make their task more difficult. He pointed out the magnificent measure of success already attained, and urged that the movement might be carried to a successful conclusion by widespread personal appeal to the great masses of the Methodist people. He announced that the committee had decided to extend the time for the actual payment of promises now made to complete the fund for one year.

Rev. H. Price Hughes then spoke in tones of solemn earnestness. Deep feeling pervaded the Conference as he dwelt on the spiritual aspects of this financial effort. Now came the test of their hymns of consecration. He urged upon rich laymen the duty of giving, not merely out of current income, but out of capital, and mentioned that Mr. Henry Holloway, of Tooting, permitted him to say that he and his brother had been led to promise 5,000 guineas, in addition to 700 guineas already contributed to this fund. Mr. Hughes closed a most impressive appeal in earnest words of prayer, and a solemn hush fell upon the Conference.

A WONDERFUL LOVE-FEAST.

Then stood up a plain Yorkshireman, Mr. Joseph Rank, of Hull, who with evidences of deep feeling, declared that this fund was not for the glorification of Methodism but for the glory of God. He believed that they should give as the Lord had prospered them, and with great joy proceeded to illustrate his faith by works, promising to give 10,000 guineas if 90,000 more were raised by the rich men of Methodism, and further promising to give the last 10,000 guineas to complete the fund of a million guineas. Mr. Rank had already promised 7,000 guineas in his own District. Then followed a remarkable scene which we have not space to describe. It was a Methodist Love-feast in which spiritual fervour and Christian liberality were happily joined. The time for adjournment came, but the Love-feast was resumed in the afternoon, and when the day's session ended more than 40,000 guineas had been promised by brethren, in addition to all their former gifts. More remarkable than even the amount promised, was the high spiritual tone that characterised the whole proceedings. The same spiritual enthusiasm carried throughout the Districts of Methodism will ensue a triumphant conclusion to this great undertaking.

PUBLIC MORALITY.

Many matters of great importance have been considered during the week, but space fails even to name many of them. It will be of interest to the readers of The Christian to know that when the report of the "Social Purity" Committee was submitted to the Conference, special attention was called to the courageous action of Mr. S. Smith, M.P., in the House of Commons in regard to the immoral tendency of certain stage plays, and a resolution was passed thanking him for calling the attention of Parliament to the crying evils of indecent plays in theatres, and to the gross licence on the streets of London. Foreign missionary questions received due notice. An earnest discussion took place on the proposal to send one of the missionary secretaries to visit the mission stations in Africa. Many facts were cited showing the large success that has already attended mission work in West Africa, and the pressing claims of the great populations in the interior.

THE WORK OF GOD.

The conversation on the work of God reached a high level of interest. During its course layman after layman testified to the spiritual blessings received during the Conference. Rev. Thomas Champness told how a commonplace Christian in Darlington had been transformed by the Spirit of God into a social reformer, who provided a working man's home for the poor, and sought their salvation by means of a mission hall which he had also built. Mr. Thomas Walker, of Bolton, testified to blessing received during a recent visit to Keswick, and referred with joy to a remarkable service in which, after Rev. C. Inwood had spoken of the filling of the Holy Spirit, 3,000 people stood up to signify their willingness to receive the blessing. Mr. Hy. Holloway, of Tooting, said he had received the greatest blessing of his life since coming to Conference, and appealed to his lay brethren to join him in seeking to lead their young men into the enjoyment of full submission. Mr. J. Wilcox Edge, of Burslem, pointed to the pew in which he found peace one Sunday morning, and urged that they ought to expect conversions still during their Sunday morning services. Rev. George Whelpton, of the French Conference, impressed upon his brethren the importance of secret prayer. Rev. Walford Green, chairman of the Third London District, told of the successful work done in his District. He bore testimony to the remarkable series of services held by Mr. Gregory Mantle in the great theatre at Brighton. Fresh evidence had been given of the wonderful power of God's Word in laying hold of people who had not been under religious influence before. Mr. Joseph Bentley, of Bradford, called attention to the attitude of working men to the services of the sanctuary, and urged that the P.S.A. movement had done something to solve a difficult problem. The President of the Conference closed the conversation, and expressed the opinion that by their central missions they were regaining their hold upon working men.

The relation of the Church to amusements was a subject referred to when the work of the "Wesley Guild" movement was under consideration. Rev. T. Dinsdale Young, in an eloquent speech, deprecated the idea that it was the business of the Church to provide amusements for their young people. The friends of the Wesley Guild maintain strongly that the devotional element is first and foremost in all their work.

The Zionist Congress.

TO the student of prophecy the great gatherings of Israel about to be held in London, from Saturday to Thursday next, are full of solemn significance. Amongst the many "signs of the times" now appealing to those who know the "Scriptures of the prophets," one of the most unmistakeable may be seen in this new Jewish movement, which is spreading with such amazing strength and rapidity.

It is essentially a national movement, an impulse of the people themselves—for it has been rather repressed than encouraged by the rabbis, who, for the most part, have stood aloof from it, and have left it to the earnest, patriotic Jewish laity. It is assuredly connected with a great awakening of the Hebrew race from lethargy and worldliness. Indeed, eminent and thoughtful Israelites have recently declared that, such was the state of utter religious indifference, pagan scepticism, and aspirations after mere political enfranchisement in the lands of their dispersion, to which they were drifting, that, but for this movement, in a few years the Jews would have had their national life wholly submerged and swept away by the mighty flood of modern civilisation and Gentile carnality.

But together with the yearning, the "earth hunger," to go back to their own land, the Lord's Land, "now that He, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob," is stirring up their nest by the cruel persecutions of the so-called Christian nations in whose midst they mainly dwell, has come a desire to walk again in the "old paths, the good way," and to fit themselves, as far as their light goes, for better things.

Thus, the Zionist body is earnestly seeking the physical, intellectual, and economic amelioration of the Jewish race, in all the countries in which they now sojourn. But this is only as a necessary means to the great end of their

RESTORATION TO UNITED NATIONAL LIFE.

That this is a remarkable and epoch-making event is evident, when we remember that this is the first time in 1,900 years that Israel, as a nation, has dared to call together a world-wide Convention, and that with the openly avowed purpose of returning to Palestine.

It is true that they assembled in Paris early in the century now closing, but not by their own motion; it was by the call of Napoleon I., when, at the height of his power, he recognised the help that their wealth and world-wide organization might afford to his schemes of conquest. But, in the democratic tendencies of these last days, the Jews have seen and seized their opportunity to assert their national position and rights.

The first occasion on which they met was when this new Zionist association, founded and presided over by Dr. Theodor Herzl, of Vienna, gathered from all lands, at Basle, four years ago. In the two succeeding years, Congresses were again held in the same town. The fourth Congress is now to meet in London, its main sittings being in the Queen's Hall, Langham Place, W.

It is to be preceded by a mass meeting at Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E., on Saturday night, August 11, at 9 p.m., when the Jewish Sabbath, which ends with sunset, will be over. The morning sittings will commence at 10 o'clock, and the afternoon sittings at 4, the chairman being Sir Francis Montefiore. After the opening of the Congress on Monday next by the president, Dr. Theodor Herzl, and the formal business which will follow, Professor Max Nordau will speak upon "The General Position of the Jews."

Tuesday morning: Reports of "the Actions Committee"; in the afternoon, Dr. Bodenheimer, of Cologne, will consider "Organization and Agitation."

Wednesday morning: "The Amelioration of the Physical, Intellectual, and Economic Condition of the Jews," in three separate addresses; afternoon, "Discussion on the Jewish Colonial Trust," introduced by Dr. Belkowsky, of St. Petersburg.

An interview with the courteous and able honorary secretary of the Congress, Mr. J. de Haas, for many years connected editorially with the Jewish World, at the temporary office, 14, Nicholas Lane, E.C., elicited the following facts. On Friday, August 3, there were registered 175 "groups of shekel-payers" (as the various local associations of the body are called) scattered throughout all lands. These groups had then elected 300 delegates to attend the London Congress. This does not complete the list, each post bringing in further returns. The delegates will total some 500, of whom 400 are from foreign countries, sixty will represent British "groups," and the rest will be delegates from our colonies, and those English Jews who have received mandates from abroad.

The direct and immediate object of the movement, Mr. J. de Haas stated, is the resettlement in Palestine, such as security of tenure and local self-government — of such Jews as cannot assimilate with their present surroundings. This applies particularly to those in Russia, Roumania, Galicia, and, in a minor degree, to those in the North of Germany.

UNDER GOOD AND SAFE CONDITIONS—

From the applications for tickets which are daily coming in from Jews and Gentiles, Mr. J. de Haas anticipates very large gatherings. The movement has not met with much encouragement from the great bulk of the wealthy English Jews or their rabbis; but Dr. Gaster, the Chief Rabbi of the English Portuguese congregation, heartily supports it, and will take a leading part in its proceedings. There will be no religious service at the Congress itself, and no private sessions—though there would be both elsewhere—every meeting at the Queen's Hall being open to the public, both Jews and Gentiles, men and women, with a charge of one shilling each day for admission. The honorary secretary could not conceal his fears (though he expressed them very gently and courteously) lest with overzeal, might give offence, or cause disturbance, by forcing tracts, or New Testaments, upon the delegates and others at the doors. Obviously it should be on this occasion the great object of followers of Christ to show their respect and love towards those who are still as dear as ever to Him who said of old, "I have given the dearly beloved of my soul into the hands of her enemies."

At Dr. Herzl's desire, and by the request of the Congress committee, Mr. James Neil, M.A., is to show his beautiful life-sized oil-paintings of Palestine, by James Clark, also Mr. George Armstrong's Raised Map of Palestine, James Macpherson-Haye's painting, 15ft. by 10ft., of all the identified trees and plants of the Bible, and many other maps, models, and Holy Land objects, that Mr. Neil is gathering together to form a bijou exhibition, to which the Palestine Exploration Fund has kindly consented to contribute. Mr. Neil will also show lantern views of the different already established in the Holy Land, and lecture on Palestine with a view to interesting all who attend the Congress in the country and its life. These will be given in the Small Queen's Hall and the adjoining gallery set apart for this purpose on August 13-15, at 3 and 8 p.m.

It shows the openness of mind, and willingness to learn, of the Zionist body thus to utilize the services of Mr. Neil, the former incumbent of Christ Church, Jerusalem, who was the first, in his book "Palestine Re-peopled," to make known publicly the commencement of the return of Israel to their own land, to trace the causes which led to it, and to show minutely from the Prophetic Scriptures all that is to follow.

As many of our readers know, Mr. Neil has just completed a course of ninety lectures on Palestine life in Lord Radstock's hall in Belgravia, most of them given before large audiences, and all of them with many tokens of the Divine blessing. He needs the prayers of the Lord's people, that grace and wisdom may be given him for this delicate, difficult, and important task.

SCRIPTURES FOR THE JEWS.

Writing in view of the approaching Congress, Mr. Marcus Bergmann, missionary to the Jews (222, Burdett Road, Bow, E.) says: "The meaning of the movement is simply this:—The Jews recognise that God has promised, through Moses and the Prophets, that they should be gathered together from all the four corners of the earth, and they consider that now is the time for God to redeem His promise. The long-continued captivity of the people, their altered circumstances in the lands of their dispersion, their degraded subjection to the kings of the Gentile nations, their long and sad tale of unparalleled sufferings, and their being scattered, like sheep without a shepherd, in the land of their enemies, oppressed and trodden down, with disappointed hopes of the Messiah, for whose coming (as their temporal deliverer and ruler as King) they daily pray—no wonder that they are now seeking to restore themselves, in order to take possession of the land given to their forefathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, by promise and oath.

"As there will be a very large influx of Jews in London for the Congress, and as very soon afterwards the solemn festival of the New Year and the Great Day of Atonement will be celebrated, I have been requested by various missionaries and Christian workers among the the Jews to prepare and supply them with Yiddish Scriptures and tracts. I am anxious to reprint the illustrated Epistle to the Hebrews, together with Lev. xvi. and Isa. lii. 13 to end of chapter liii., 50,000 or 100,000 copies are needed. About £5 will pay for more than 1,000 copies of the above three important portions of Scripture. The same amount will pay for 100 copies of the complete New Testament. No one but the printers and binders are paid for this work, so that every penny that is subscribed goes for the production and free circulation of the Word of God."

During the Congress, Rev. F. S. Webster, Rector of All Souls', has kindly placed the large school room, 126, Great Portland Street, at the disposal of the Hebrew Christian Prayer Union. This room will be used for meetings for prayer and intercession on behalf of the Jews, and, if possible, for preaching the Gospel to them. Permission has also been given to use the church steps for holding occasional open-air services. These services will be conducted chiefly by Hebrew Christians.

Irish Notes.

A METHODIST church, in memory of the late Rev. John Gilcriest, is being built in Rostrevor, one of the most charming spots in the United Kingdom. The church will accommodate about 200 persons, and is to cost nearly £1,000. The site, which is a beautiful one, was given by a Presbyterian, the late Mr. Joseph Weir, and most of the cost has been subscribed by the widow, children, and friends of Mr. Gilcriest.

Taking advantage of the fine summer weather, open-air services are being carried on with great success in many of the fairs and markets of the South and West of Ireland by the Rev. Wm. Harpur and his helpers. Hardly any opposition is ever given, except by some drunken rowdy, and generally speaking large numbers listen with apparent attention and respect to the preaching of the Word.

A Holiday Home, for young women in shops and engaged as governesses and teachers, has been opened under the auspices of the Young Women's Christian Association in Newcastle, Co. Down, and promises to be a great boon for the classes for whom it is intended. At the opening, Bishop Welland, of Down and Connor was present, and ministers and members of the various Protestant denominations were present.

The visit of Mr. Ira D. Sankey to Ireland in the autumn, under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, is being hailed by very many with great delight.

In a recent issue reference was made to a discussion on "Prayers for the Dead," at a clerical meeting in Cork. We are glad to learn that the result was not so favourable to High Church principles and practices as had been reported. "A Cork Clergyman" informs us that the doctrine was shown to be opposed alike to the teaching of the Bible and the Prayer Book, which is satisfactory, in view of the fact that the Homilies condemn the practice, and speak of such prayers as "a vain dream."

"Results of Missions."

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me to correct a serious mistake in the article on "Results of Missions," in your impression of August 2? In referring to an investigation made by me in many different quarters in Scotland, Ireland, and England, regarding the results of the mission of Moody and Sankey, i.e. in 1873-75, as these existed at the time of the inquiry, you say it was eighteen months after their visit. It was seven and eight years after their labours. I need scarcely say that in such an investigation its value depends greatly on the length of time that had elapsed to test these results—eighteen months would have been much too short.

I ought to say that it was at the request of friends in Edinburgh, where I then resided, that I undertook the duty. The testimony, which was most decided, was given by clergymen and laymen of every Evangelical denomination. In compliance with many requests, Messrs. Nelson reprinted the article separately, along with one by Mr. (now Dr.) Newman Hall which had given rise to it.—I am, yours sincerely,

David McLaren.

Scottish Notes.

THE report of the Free Church Committee on the youth of the Church points out that there is a decrease not only in the attendance at the Sabbath schools of 3,074, but also in the actual number of schools themselves of thirty-two. Wide and careful inquiry is being made into the causes by which this is to be accounted for; and, among suggestions made for the future, great stress is being laid on personal visitation at the homes of the children as being the means most calculated to win and retain their personal interest.

Intelligence was received last week of the death at Vladivostock, on July 30, of the wife of Dr. James A. Greig, of the Irish Presbyterian Mission, Kirin, Manchuria. Mrs. Greig was a daughter of Rev. John Young, of Greenock, who is well-known to attenders at Keswick and the Scottish Conventions for the deepening of spiritual life.

The "Children's Missionary of the United Presbyterian Church"—Rev. George S. Stewart, formerly of Inverness—who has been located for a year at Buchanan Mission Station, Kaffraria, has now been appointed by the Mission Board to the Emgwali Station.

The Edinburgh Evening News has begun a vigorous crusade against the drinking clubs of the city, and it is earnestly hoped that this and similar action in other towns and cities will lead not only to the stricter enforcement of the present law, but ultimately to fresh legislation on the subject. One great difficulty in the way of the latter movement lies in the fact any steps taken to place restrictions on organizations for working men must, it is feared, also affect the political and other more fashionable clubs. This might be expected to cause a loud protest; yet some means must be found, and that speedily, to deal with the present evil.

The Church of Scotland Temperance Committee state that their three evangelists, while overtaking a great amount of work, have recently been quite unable to meet all the demands for their services.

Attention was called, a few days ago, in a morning newspaper, to the deplorable "epidemic of profanity" now prevalent in Glasgow. The writer expressed the belief that the excitement among the spectators at football games has much to do with the spread of the evil; and that the police might at least do something to remedy matters by making salutary examples of a few of the foul-mouthed admirers of athletics. Turning to perhaps the most painful side of the subject, he continued: "During the fair holidays, both on board Clyde steamers and in trains, I was shocked at the awful oaths fathers employed in presence of their children, and I thought little wonder their families grew up swearers. Indeed, so easily did oaths come from the men, that I wondered if carriages with placards on them, 'Swearers only,' would have been patronised." He had, however, little hope of the police taking action, although the present law gives them ample powers. In fact, he found that the officers "only apprehended when the bad language was directed against themselves." The writer found in the introduction of bathroooms into all tenements a solution of "the problem." But Christians must not forget that it is flagrant "sin" with which they are face to face, and not only "a problem." Much prayer and the faithful preaching of the Gospel are the means within our reach for turning men from sin to righteousness.

The Leadings of Providence.

By Rev. R. BALGARNIE, D.D.

As the eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings, so Jehovah alone did lead him, and there was no strange God with him (Deut. xxxii. 11).

THE prophet Moses seems to have made a good use of his forty years in Midian. As may be seen from his writings, he studied among other things the book of nature. That life of his, "exempt from public haunt," found

> Tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
> Sermons in stones, and good in everything.

He notes, c. g., the mother eagle on the cliff, teaching her young brood how to fly. She begins by shaking up the nest, spoiling it for a place of rest; she pushes the young eaglets from the crag, and as they scream and flutter she spreads abroad her wings as a lesson in the art; and when they begin to sink from weariness or exhaustion, swiftly darting under them, she catches them up and bears them to a place of safety.

Is it a revelation, he thinks, of what Jehovah will do for Israel? Forty years later he found the analogy complete. It is true to-day of God's providential dealings with his people.

They are characterized by wisdom. It is a true instinct on the part of the mother eagle that leads her to "stir up the nest." She perceives that the time has come for her nestlings to try their wings and rise with her to the enjoyment of the bold, free life she herself is accustomed to. So she stops the supplies and pushes them from the eyrie.

"All these things are against me!" said Jacob when his home was broken up, and the famine in the land sent him and his sons to Joseph's care in Egypt. The "stirring up of the nest" is often hard to understand, and, to young faith and inexperience of God's ways, hard to bear, as if everything were against us. We judge the Lord by feeble sense. Has He forgotten to be gracious? We are afraid to venture out on the new state of things, into the higher and grander life that awaits us. We forget that a Father's eye is still over us for good, and around us are "the everlasting arms."

They are marked by tenderest care and love. "She fluttereth over her young." She is near to hear their cry of distress, and to help them in time of need. A suggestive lesson. There is help for us close at hand, all-sufficient and effective; yet help withheld till the moment of necessity. God is tenderly solicitous that we should not be over-helped or prematurely satisfied. As George Müller found at Bristol, supply came in to the day. How tenderly the promises to the young, and weak, and suffering are worded! "Fear not, for I am with thee." "Under his wing shalt thou trust."

> O spread thy covering wings around,
> Till all our wanderings cease.

They are illumined by precept and example. "She spreadeth abroad her wings." "That path which no fowl knoweth, which the vulture's eye hath not seen," "the way of life, which is above to the wise," which leads to "glory, honour, and immortality," has been made plain to us by the life, the death, and resurrection of our Redeemer. "I am the Way." "They that wait upon the Lord . . . shall mount up with wings as eagles."

Their end is rest and happiness. "She taketh them, beareth them on her wings." He who brought his people out of Egypt, led them through the desert into the rest and inheritance of Canaan, is "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

Field Lane Refuges.—The development of the Field Lane Refuges and Ragged Schools during the past year has been attended by considerable outlay, and the committeee have now to face an unusual debt, amounting to several hundred pounds. A donation of £500 has been given by a friend who was present at the annual meeting, and strong efforts are being made to further relieve the financial situation of the institution by special contributions. The secretary is Mr. Peregrine Platt, Vine Street, Clerkenwell Road, E.C.

About Books.

THE History of the Basutoland Mission, a booklet to which we recently called attention, may be had from Messrs. Morgan & Scott (3d.). The story has been translated from the French, and brings the narrative from 1833 down to 1898.

Twilight Whispers for Devotional Moments is a volume of brief papers by J. O. Keen, D.D. (2s. Partridge & Co.) There is thought and fervour in the pages, which should be welcome in many a Christian household. A portrait of the author is given as frontispiece.

Stories of Many Wheels, by William J. Forster (1s. C. H. Kelly), is a volume of temperance stories. Strong drink is responsible for many wheel accidents; and these stories aim at enforcing total abstinence among those who control and guide wheels in any shape or form.

Face to Face: Glimpses into the Inner Life of Moses. By Mrs. Penn-Lewis. (1s. nett. Marshall Bros.) A precious little book, full of teaching on the Godward life. External dress and general get-up indicate this publication as specially suited for birthday or other greetings on the part of Christian people.

Two Famous Preachers of Bath (1s. 6d. nett. C. J. Thynne) is a little book in which Rev. James Silvester, M.A., rector of Nympsfield, Gloucestershire, and formerly curate of Walcot, Bath, outlines the lives of William Jay and William Connor Magee. These biographical sketches are from a sympathetic pen.

The Mind and Art of Poe's Poetry is a volume of many attractions, by John Phelps Fruit, Professor of English Language and Literature in William Jewell College, Liberty, Missouri. (5s. H. R. Allenson.) All students of poetry will find instruction in these pages, which are at once judicious in tone and suggestive in character.

A neat little volume of Selections from "The Christian in Complete Armour," by William Gurnall (1616-1679), has been compiled by Katharine Blyth. (1s. Marshall Bros.) The work has been well done, and Professor Handley Moule writes an appreciative preface. Unquestionably the old Puritan has a message for modern Christians.

Green Pastures and Golden Gates, by Rev. Charles A. Fox, is a choice booklet containing two spiritual addresses and a poem, "The Supreme Attraction." (6d. Marshall Bros.) It is dedicated "in thankful memory of five-and-twenty years' unbroken fellowship with beloved brethren at Keswick Convention, and of innumerable personal mercies connected therewith."

Thomas Guthrie has been written for the "Famous Scots" series by Oliphant Smeaton. It is a splendid piece of work; the author understands the times as well as the man—there is sympathy as well as grasp of facts. Earnest Christians should read this book, for it delineates one who had great light on practical Christianity, and exercised a powerful leading in many directions. (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

A novel series of text-cards, called Text Pyramids, has been designed and compiled by Miss Ada R. Habershon. They are so arranged that by folding three times, and then tying a silken cord, they form a triangular pyramid, each card illustrating a Scripture subject. The cards present a delightful and profitable exercise for young people in Christian homes. (1s. per packet. E. Kaufmann, 5 and 6, Paternoster Square, E.C.)

The works of the late Dr. J. R. Macduff have a reputation all their own. Not the least beautiful of his many volumes of meditations was St. Paul in Rome: or, the Teachings, Fellowships, and Dying Testimony of the Great Apostle in the City of the Cæsars. This has been reissued in its seventh thousand, by Mr. C. J. Thynne (2s. nett). The introductory chapter is a substantial statement on the historical and topographical situation.

The Great Eastern Railway Company have reissued their Tourist Guide to the Continent. Among fresh features are services to Norway, Denmark, and Sweden, vid the Royal Mail-Harwich Hook of Holland route; of new tours in the Luther country and Thuringian and Hartz Mountains, a series of continental maps, and a chapter of "Dull Useful Information," giving particulars as to the cost of Continental travel. (6d. Office: 30, Fleet Street, E.C.)

Dr. Mackennal's little work The Kingdom of the Lord Jesus is a valuable addition to the series of "Small Books on Great Subjects" (1s. 6d. James Clarke & Co.). It contains five discourses, which deal with the Subjects, Method, Propagandism, and Universality of the Kingdom, with a concluding chapter on the Christian Patriot, and the War in South Africa. The pages are characterized by deep religious feeling and practical sense; and we trust they will have many readers.

The Slave that Saved the Land: A New Setting of the Life of Joseph. By Thomas Champness. (9d. Rochdale: "Joyful News" Book Depôt.) To retell the story with its charm and romance were easy; but to rehearse it as in this little work, demanded the insight and vivacity of Thomas Champness. No matter how many times we may have read the life of Joseph, the first three sentences compelled us to read through this, which has from beginning to end the novelty and attractiveness of "a new setting."

Rev. Joseph King, organizing secretary of the L.M.S. in Australasia, and formerly a missionary in Samoa, has written a useful little book—Christianity in Polynesia: A Study and a Defence. (1s. nett. L.M.S., 14, Blomfield Street, E.C.) We know of no book that gives so much information in so small a compass about a singularly interesting portion of the great mission field. Passing from group to group, Mr. King tells the story of Tahiti, New Zealand, Rarotonga, Tonga, Samoa, Fiji, New Hebrides, New Guinea, Melanesia, as well as the Sandwich and Loyalty Islands, New Britain and Savage Island.

The Donnellan Lectures, delivered before the University of Dublin, 1897-8, have been published in a goodly volume entitled Idealism and Theology: A Study of Presuppositions. By Charles F. d'Arcy, B.D. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton). The author is a keen thinker, and well abreast of philosophical speculation. While granting the nobility of modern idealism, he shows its limitations and defects. "As against materialism," he says, "idealism is true; but Christian theism is truer still"; and hence it is pronounced the final philosophy. In a word, the failure of idealism has led the author to a mode of thought concerning ultimate truth which is identical with the central doctrine of Christian Theology. The pages will prove stimulating to thoughtful minds.

In Paul of Tarsus an attempt is made to outline the story of the great Apostle to the Gentiles. It is from the pen of Robert Bird, whose "Jesus the Carpenter" has attained a measure of literary fame. The treatment is free; the author is not careful to follow ordinary interpretations of great incidents, and as much as tells us that the approval of Biblical students and theologians is a matter of indifference to him. Though open to objections on more counts than one, the book should prove suggestive as to the thought and action of the Apostle. The chapters number over 200, and the style is singularly readable. The pages are intended for the young; they will impress them with the greatness of the Apostle and the fulness of his life, though they are hardly calculated to do more. (6s. T. Nelson & Sons.)

Three books throwing light on a question of the hour are: South Africa: Personal Experiences and Impressions. By John Dickie. (1s. nett. H. R. Allenson)—a record of travel from the pen of a shrewd observer. A Little History of South Africa. By George McCall Theal, D.Lit., LL.D., a small work of great merit, the result of original research in the archives of Great Britain, the Netherlands, and Cape Colony. (1s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin.) Pen Pictures of the War. By Men at the Front. Vol. I. (6s. Horace Marshall & Son.) This is the opening volume of a series, in which soldiers' letters and the communications of newspaper correspondents describe exciting scenes—sometimes in "red-hot" language. So far the pages are devoted to the campaign in Natal to the battle of Colenso; and there are several maps and plans.

Dr. Pierson's volumes entitled The Miracles of Missions are most interesting reading, and valuable repertories of facts on the power and progress of the Gospel at home and abroad. We welcome the Third Series (cloth 4s.; paper 1s. 6d. Funk & Wagnalls' Co.), which is at once a handsome and useful book. Authentic records are here given of wonderful results in many fields of mission enterprise. There are stories of thrilling adventure and missionary heroism in the jungles of Africa, also of hardship and danger encountered in the vast forests of British America, each with impressive instances of answered prayer. These strong proofs of the truth of Christianity will be a help to inquirers and others. The sketches include accounts of two remarkable men of our time—George Holland of London, and Booker Washington of Tuskegee.

The booklet by Mr. Van Sommer—THE KINGDOM OF GOD—has now reached its fourth edition. (2d. The Author, Cuffnells, Wimbledon Common.)

HIS PERFECT PLAN, a poem by Rev. Stanley J. Hersee which appeared in our columns some months ago, has been published on a neat card by Partridge & Co. (1d.)

REST, a simple sermon addressed to the weak and weary, is rich in suggestion and helpful in its teaching and inspiration. (1d. R. H. Allenson, Paternoster Row.)

HINTS TO OPEN-AIR WORKERS. By C. N. B. Muston. (6d. per dozen. W. Nisol, 67, High Street, Edinburgh.) This booklet has counsels which should prove of service in many directions.

The speeches delivered by Sir George White and others at the festival dinner of the Homes for Working Boys have been published, and will be welcomed by all who are interested in the welfare of the young, as well as the personalities of the distinguished speakers. (Mr. William Denham 12, Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.)

Church of England.

Rev. John Scandrett, who has recently been appointed rector of Wapping, has spent his ministerial life in East London. Among the poor of Bow, Spitalfields, and Ratcliffe, the earnestness and faithfulness of his work have been appreciated.

Between 9,000 and 10,000 people assembled under the sheltering trees at Kirk Braddan, near Douglas, on Sunday week, to take part in the usual open-air service. The Bishop of Sodor and Man was the preacher, and he delivered an appeal on behalf of the Manx Church Sustentation Fund. Open-air services are conducted at Braddan throughout the visiting season, and are usually attended by many thousands of people.

The new parish church of Brynmawr, Breconshire, on the confines of the county of Monmouth, was recently consecrated by the Bishop of St. David's. The previous structure, which was consecrated in 1872, was so slight and flimsy, and so beggarly in aspect, that it was felt to be a wasteful expenditure to restore it. A temporary west end wall has been erected for the nave, the intention being to extend it, and also to add a tower and spire. The cost amounts to nearly £3,000.

The Bishop of Liverpool (Dr. Chavasse) preached on Sunday week at St. Leonard's Church, Bootle, to a large congregation. In the course of his sermon, he said that the Wesleyans were not the only body who deplored the falling-off in the number of candidates for the ministry. The Church of England was suffering from the same thing, and it was an appalling fact that at the present time their candidates for ordination were 200 less than they were ten years ago. One cause of this was the small incomes of the clergy, and parents preferred their sons to enter a profession or business where they would be sure not only of a competency, but very large incomes.

Congregational.

New College, Hampstead, is to celebrate its jubilee during the first week in November by a series of important meetings, which will be addressed, among others, by Rev. Canon Driver, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew at Oxford.

Zion Church, Attercliffe, Sheffield (Rev. W. A. Guttridge), will this year celebrate its centenary. The congregation has resolved to raise upwards of £1,000, £400 of which will be devoted to the Twentieth Century Fund and the remainder for the installation of electric light, renovation, and improvements to church premises.

It has been resolved to take definite steps to secure a place of worship for the Church at Dunoon. The services have hitherto been held in the Burgh Hall, but this has been found an inconvenient arrangement, and, in view of the present hopeful outlook under the recently inaugurated pastorate of Rev. J. B. Allan, B.D., it has been decided to erect a church.

The directors of the London Missionary Society have received an offer of £10,000 from Mr. Robert Arthington, of Leeds, for the purpose of starting missionary work among the Awemba tribes, to the south-west of Lake Tanganyika. The Society have unanimously accepted Mr. Arthington's gift, and it has been arranged that the expenditure shall cover a period of twelve years.

The anniversary of the ancient church at Burwell, near Cambridge, was celebrated with considerable rejoicing on Thursday in last week. This church has been regarded by many as one of the oldest Independent churches in the country, and described as dating from the year 1600. Rev. J. W. Upton has been the pastor for nineteen years. Rev. Dr. Guinness Rogers, being prevented through the intense heat from preaching, Rev. Dr. P. T. Forsyth delivered a powerful discourse.

Resignations.—Rev. R. Sewell, of the Old Meeting Church, Uxbridge; Rev. D. Davies, South Cheriton.

Calls (accepted).—Rev. F. J. Laverack, Southminster, to Dawes Road Church, Fulham, S.W.; Mr. Joseph Pleasants, of Cheshunt College, to Ramsden Street Church, Huddersfield; Mr. W. A. Samuel, of the Lancashire College, to Clifton Park Church, Belfast.

Baptist.

A Baptist cause has been started at Seaford. A chapel has been built by private enterprise in an excellent position, and during the holiday season is being supplied by London and suburban ministers staying in the town.

The anniversary of the Hornsey Rise, N., church (Rev. J. E. Joynes) was held last week. The secretary reported forty additions to the membership during the year, and progress in every department. Revs. J. R. Wood, Chas. Browne, Wm. Joynes, W. J. Mills (L.B.A.), and Mr. Wm. Wall, gave stimulating addresses.

The eighteenth triennial conference of the pastors and missionaries of the German Baptist Mission are to be held this year at Hamburg, from Aug. 20-24. Most of the delegates from the churches will, however, arrive on Sat., Aug. 18, so as to participate in the services of the Lord's Day preceding the opening of the Conference, which is the custom of the German brethren. The presence of friends of the Mission from Great Britain is invited.

Memorial stones of a new school chapel at Northumberland Heath, Erith, Kent, have been laid. The proceeds of the services amounted to over £150. This effort forms the second portion of a forward movement undertaken by the Queen Street Church, Erith (Rev. J. E. Martin), about a year ago for the extension of Baptist principles in the surrounding villages. An iron room has already been erected at Slade Green on a freehold site which was generously presented, and now the school-chapel at Northumberland Heath is being erected at an estimated cost of nearly £1,000.

Calls (accepted).—Rev. L. Wilson-Hoffenden, Pastors' College, to Lansdown Chapel, Stroud, ministry commencing on August 19.

Methodist.

Foundation-stones of new Sunday schools, costing £1,200, in connection with the Independent Wesleyan Church at Finedon, Northants, have been laid by Mr. F. A. Channing, M.P.

Wesleyan Methodists have peculiar reason to deplore the assassination of King Humbert. Their missions in Rome, Naples, and Sicily, have received much encouragement from the Italian Royal Family, and King Humbert took a warm personal interest in the work of the Italian Military Church.

A new Primitive Methodist Church, to accommodate 900 persons, has been erected in Buck's Road, Doug as, at a cost of £6,200, to which the society has removed from Wellington Street. At the opening ceremony the principal doors were opened by Mr. J. Sharp and Miss Cowley. The proceeds of the day's services realised £100.

A sad incident occurred at the annual excursion of the York Wesleyan Centenary Sunday School at Poppleton. The children and teachers had finished tea, and in the field all was sunshine and gladness, when, in a moment, Mr. Thomas Masterman, the beloved senior superintendent, suddenly expired.

Rev. J. Odell, of Birmingham, the President of the Primitive Methodist Conference, finding it impossible to comply with all the invitations that reach him to conduct special services in various parts of the country, is arranging to visit various centres throughout the Connexion so as to serve as far as possible all the districts of the denomination.

Bradley Wesleyan Chapel has been destroyed by fire. A large crowd of people made every effort to save Communion chairs, tables, cushions, books, and all that was movable, but before the fire brigades arrived from Wolverhampton and other towns it was soon seen that the chapel was doomed. The chapel, which had sitting accommodation for 750, was renovated only last year at a cost of £200.

Presbyterian.

The work at Caversham Road church, Reading (Rev. D. Annal), is making good progress. Various difficulties have been overcome, and the forward movement has resulted in increased congregations and additions to the membership roll.

It will be a matter of interest to visitors to know that there are now about sixty-five places on the Continent of Europe, or along the African shores of the Mediterranean, where Presbyterian services are conducted in the English language. Some of the services are carried on only during the summer months, but by far the greater number are held all the year through.

Society of Friends.

Edward Grubb, of Southport, recently visited Bath, and gave a clear and powerful address on "The Teaching of Jesus on Human Brotherhood." He showed how the idea of brotherhood, confined first to the members of the family, had grown, embracing by degrees larger and larger sections of humanity, and that this growth was in proportion to the degree in which the ideal that Jesus preached and practised was attained.

At Sussex, Surrey, and Hants Quarterly Meeting information was given as to the progress of the fund for building a mission-hall at Hastings, for which about £1,000 is needed. It was felt that Hastings has a claim on many Friends from various parts of the kingdom who have resided there in the past, for purposes of health, and that a general appeal might properly be made. Samuel Beck was encouraged to form a committee for this purpose.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. CHARLES GRANVILLE CLARKE, late fellow of Worcester College, aged sixty-seven years.—At the age of forty-eight, in the twenty-third year of his ministry, Rev. JOHN BENNEWORTH (Wesleyan).—Mr. S. A. HAYMAN, a devoted worker in connection with the King Street Wesleyan Church, Bristol.—Rev. F. C. KINGLAKE, rector of West Monckton, near Taunton.—Aged seventy-five, Mr. GEORGE SANDERS, for forty-three years a deacon, a Sunday-school superintendent, and devoted worker in connection with the Baptist Church at Great Missenden.—Rev. Canon JACOB, for twenty years rector of Ardcolm, and Treasurer of the diocese of Ferns.—At Vladivostock, Mrs. GREIG, wife of Dr. Greig, Irish Presbyterian Missionary in Manchuria.—Rev. WILLIAM INGRAM, senior minister of Rothiemay Free Church, aged eighty-seven. He retired from active work in 1897, after a ministry of fifty-three years. Mr. Ingram was well known, too, as an earnest evangelist.—Aged eighty-three, Canon DAVID DALE STEWART. In 1854, Dr. Sumner, then Archbishop of Canterbury, presented him to the vicarage of Maidstone, which he held till 1878, Archbishop Tait making him one of the six preachers of Canterbury Cathedral in 1871. Archbishop Benson appointed him to an honorary canonry of the Cathedral in 1885.

Life's Quest.

SHALL I seek for gold, mother?
Give me thy counsel, pray.
Nay, nay, my child, for, though bright to-day,
It will presently lose its power to charm,
It will vanish, like birds that fly away
When summer departs, and leave in thy palm
Only an emptiness galling to see,
The void of a heart-breaking vanity.

Shall I seek for fame, mother?
Give me thy counsel, pray.
Nay, nay, my child, for the world's applause
Is a wreath that will presently fade away;
For little it gives, for little withdraws,
Whom it yesterday crowned it kicks to-day.
Fame is an emptiness galling to see,
The void of a heart-breaking vanity.

Shall I seek for ease, mother?
Give me thy counsel, pray.
Nay, nay, my child, for ease is a shroud,
And who lies therein will be put away,
'Gainst the lover of ease high Heaven hath vowed
To direct the arrows of wrath and slay.
Ease is an emptiness galling to see,
The void of a heart-breaking vanity.

What will thou have me seek, mother?
Give me thy counsel, pray.
Then list, my child: seek "the better part;"
Find the will of God and the whole obey;
Do all that God sets thee to do from the heart;
No mortal thing fear, but make Him thy Stay;
Life's fulness thou then shalt be given to see,
And peace shall be thine through eternity.

GEORGE A. SUTTLE.

Rev. R. Basil Westcott.

THE death at Delhi on or about July 31 of Rev. Robert Basil Westcott will evoke the sympathy of the many friends and disciples of the Bishop of Durham. Few men (says The Times) have kept the duty of missionary activity more in the forefront of their teaching to the Church of England than Dr. Westcott, and the best proof of his earnestness in the matter is that four of his sons have chosen to be missionaries in India. One has been thirteen years in Madras; two have spent eleven years at Cawnpore, one of whom has lately been rendering valuable service in famine relief among the Bhils. Mr. Basil Westcott, who was the Bishop's youngest son, was a graduate of Trinity College, Cambridge, and, after some terms at Wells Theological College, was admitted to deacon's orders by his father in 1896. He at once joined the Cambridge Mission to Delhi, and has died in his 29th year.

The London Tent Campaign.

THE wind and storm of the past few days has played sad havoc with some of the tents; but we hope in a few days to have all in full swing again. We have six sufficiently repaired to continue the services, and the interest as far as the people is concerned is unabated.

Dr. Munhall is at Brixton this week, speaking every night at 7.30. Next week he will be at Hammersmith, Fulham Palace Road, near the Broadway, and tents will be erected at Woolwich, near Plumstead Station, Willesden Green, Forest Gate, Upton Lane, Hammersmith, Enfield, Notting Hill, Wandsworth, and James Street, Walthamstow.

The Y.M.C.A.

REPRESENTATIVES of the Associations of many countries assembled last week at Les Ombrages, Versailles, the house of Mdme. André. Great Britain was represented by Mr. W. H. Mills, of the English National Council, and Mr. David Dreghorn, of Glasgow. Germany, France, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, Norway and Sweden, and the United States of America also sent representatives, and discussions of great practical value took place for the furtherance of the work for young men throughout the Continent of Europe.

The South Wales Executive has held a conference at Duffryn, near Cardiff, this week, under the presidency of Mr. John Cory. Plans were developed for the engagement of a travelling secretary exclusively for the southern half of the Principality.

By kind invitation of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Barclay, a conference of workers of the North-east Metropolitan District Union was recently held at Frogmore Lodge, St. Albans. Encouraging accounts of work were given by a number of the delegates. The German Artisan Association (Whitechapel) reported the purchase of a farm colony of over 300 acres, situated near Ware. Here it is hoped to give employment to a considerable number of unemployed young foreigners of various nationalities. Mr. F. L. Porter called attention to the resumption of demonstrations throughout the district next autumn and winter. Mr. R. L. Barclay urged a greater effort to increase membership, pointing out that this involved greater enthusiasm and effort.

Off to the Hop Fields.

WRITING from Fern Bank, Brentford, Mr. John Burnham says:—"Two brethren of the London City Mission and others hope soon to take up work among the hoppers in Worcestershire. Taught by experience, our mission is on distinctly Gospel temperance lines. The work will extend over the whole month of September; the field of labour lies distant from London; the hop-yards (unlike the gardens of Kent) lie widely apart, necessitating the hiring of conveyance daily, to reach the outposts of service. All this means expense, and we are looking to God to touch the hearts of his stewards."

Personalia.

Pastor T. L. Johnson of "Liberia," Boscombe, has met with an accident to his knee, which, though not dangerous, necessitates some weeks rest. Mr. Johnson has had to cancel all his appointments for the present.

Writing from the s.s. Victoria, within sight of Port Said, Mr. Henry Varley says:—"The passage has been very fine. We held an interesting service on Sunday morning last. About fifty of the soldiers were present, and all appeared interested. I distributed a goodly number of pamphlets among them and the stewards. My wife is cheerful and bears the journey well."

Beahill Park House.—This Home of Rest at Sutton, Surrey, having been enlarged, there is now much more accommodation, and those requiring rest and change are received at low charges by applying to the hon. superintendent.

The Council of the Evangelical Alliance specially ask for financial help, and for sympathetic prayer from the believing people of God. The pecuniary need is urgent. Moneys have been advanced beforehand for distinctive aggressive Gospel work on the Continent, and the help of fellow-Christians is asked to share this expense. More than £100 was spent also in calling a day of National Intercession in connection with the South African war, and none of this has yet been subscribed. And in various ways the Council have been passing through a trial of faith, and now, after prayer, makes its need known to all believers. Subscriptions of smaller amounts will be gratefully received, but donors of £20 and upwards will be entitled to all the privileges of Life Membership of the Alliance.

Notes & Comments

THE "Yellow Peril" is exciting increasing comment; and the conviction is growing that the outlook is serious beyond calculation. In prophetic interpretation, the prospect has generally been confined to Syria and neighbouring regions, with the classic lands of the West. From time to time, however, politicians and military leaders have speculated upon movements and events arising outside this sphere, but likely to involve the destiny of races and entire continents. Few have heeded their words of warning regarding the threatening advance of the Mongolian; but now at length we are being shown, by the lessons of history and the force of statistics, that the Yellow Brotherhood is a power for evil from which we may well pray to God for deliverance. Certain it is that in point of numbers, as reckoned "effective" for purposes of war, the Chinese leave the Western nations far behind.

Impressed by these facts, we may well conclude that the prophetic outlook is really wider than it has been generally represented. Not merely the Jews and the Church, with the regions of the old Roman Empire thrown in, can fill the range of vision. The entire race in all its divisions is sometimes brought into view; hence we read of "the tribes of the earth" and "the kings of the whole world." The Divine outlook is even more extensive than the sweep of our exegetical telescope. So we may be satisfied that whether in the Far, as well as the Near East, all things are being overruled for the greater glory of God.

The lifting, at any rate for the time being, of the cloud of darkness that has so long enshrouded the safety of the Legations at Pekin, and of so many of our faithful missionaries in that troubled land, has been a great relief to the civilized world. The danger is by no means over yet, but the prospect has lightened, and there is substantial hope of a final settlement without the horrible bloodshed which we thought had already taken place. The events of the last few weeks bear clear witness to a Restraining Hand keeping the forces of barbarism and licence within bounds. In this we may surely see the result of the earnest prayers that have everywhere been offered up that the cause of God may not be altogether overthrown in China—and an encouragement to continue in fervent supplication for the safety of the missionaries and native Christians that are still in danger of martyrdom.

Writing at Northfield on the 3rd inst., Mr. Sankey says:—The August Convention met last evening, with Mr. W. R. Moody in the chair. The audience was larger than at any opening meeting since the conferences were started by Mr. D. L. Moody. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan gave the inaugural address.

Whatever be said about some of the utterances of the German Emperor, his recent sermon on the Divine meaning of the Eastern problem contained a noble vindication of the efficacy of prayer as a moulding power in the world's history. One passage is well worth quoting and pondering over:

> God has hung the prayer bell in sunshine and happiness. How often does it hang there mute! But when the storm wind of necessity breaks out it begins to sound. May the earnest days that are upon us, the heavy clouds which gather over us, set the prayer bells ringing. Let our prayers be as a wall of fire round the camp of our brethren. Eternity will show that the secret prayers of righteous men were a great power in these struggles, and will reveal the fulfilment of the old promise, "Call upon Me in trouble and I will deliver thee." Therefore pray continuously.

It would be well for the nations generally if all crowned heads gave hearty expression to a faith so evangelical and true in the presence of their people.

The tabulated list of casualties from all sources that have taken place during the South African War on the English side issued by the War Office comes as a rude shock to those whose attention has recently been attracted elsewhere, or who have grown tired of watching events from day to day. The total casualties now amount to 37,775, exclusive of the sick and wounded men in British hospitals in South Africa! These losses were by no means mainly during the earlier period of the war. The story of Lord Roberts' successes has a very dark shadow. The casualties during the last two months more than equal the average of any similar period since October. These are, of course, mainly under the head of disease, but the number of deaths is appallingly great. And these figures, with the background of sorrow and suffering which they imply throughout the land, take no account of the unknown losses on the other side. The dread arbitrament of war is costly indeed, not only in treasure, but in priceless human lives.

Recent questions in Parliament have elicited ample proof that cases are continually occurring of clerical pressure being put on pupil teachers or Nonconformist principals with a view of transforming them into "church" men and women. The facts were not denied, though Sir John Gorst denied his power to interfere with those guilty of such practices. Such incidents perpetuate a feeling of bitterness between those who should be brethren in Christ, which is unknown in America and the British colonies, where no Establishment exists.

A correspondent has taken exception to a recent note in these columns on the complaint against Free Churchmen for neglecting the village chapel during their annual holiday. We expressed the opinion that a change of religious as well as physical atmosphere was occasionally beneficial, and that if Nonconformists attended their own service one end of the day, they might find good in attending those of other denominations on the other. Our correspondent pleads for those village pastors who have to struggle against Ritualistic services all round, and fears that the "sanction given" by us to attend such services, "even for half a day," would readily be quoted by young or careless hearers.

Of course, we should be sorry to "sanction" or encourage Ritualism in any way, directly or indirectly, and doubt if the Free Churchmen, of whom we were speaking, would be likely to attend such services a second time. Yet we think that the perfect law of liberty sanctions a somewhat freer interchange of courtesies during the holiday season between Christians of various denominations than is often possible for them at home, and that the "parish church," among others, might be visited, in some cases, with good results. Even in the case of a High Church, a visit on the part of Free Churchmen would probably brace them to a more intelligent, as well as strenuous, opposition to its ceremonial and doctrinal errors. We must explain, however, that we were throughout dealing with the privileges and opportunities of Evangelical Christians, and contemplating occasions when Conformists and Nonconformists may meet together in happy fellowship and worship.

That many members of the English Church Union are disquieted by the manifesto sent out by Lord Halifax and his followers in their name is clear from the fact that a memorial has been sent to him protesting against the declaration, and dissociating the signatories from it. These memorialists include such men as Professor Moberley, Canon Body, Canon Bodington, &c., while the Bishop of Lincoln is sufficiently sympathetic to be thankful that such a protest has been made, though he has not signed it. The Record thinks that those who did so would have shown better courage by withdrawing from the Union; the Church Times stigmatises their action as "a stab in the back" of their friends; while the dumbness of the bishops is "a conspiracy of silence" on their part. That Lord Halifax did a foolish thing is practically admitted by many members of the E.C.U., chiefly because it put into clear words the real attitude of the Union on the crucial doctrine of the Mass. But it is far better to know whither the Ritualists are drifting, and he has at least shown that pretty plainly.

The High Anglican seat between the two stools of Ritualism and Romanism is a difficult one to preserve. In a recent leader dealing with the assassination of the King of Italy, the Church Times says:

> When anti-papal bigots have said their all, the fact remains that the Roman Pontiff is the leading bishop of the Church of Christ. No one can take his place in Christendom. He has an interest for us all. He represents pre-eminently the claims of the hierarchy, he ought to represent the spirit of Christianity. By the world at large he is accepted as its most conspicuous exponent.

Unable, however, to shut his eyes to the shameful history of the Papacy, the writer refers to the Papal state as "having been founded on fraud and extended by chicanery and violence," and after asking "is Christendom still to be scandalized by the attitude of its chief Bishop?" adds, "We see in him a centre, not of holy or orderly influence, but of intrigue that dissolves society."

A Romanist organ, The Monitor, taking as its text the Free Church Assembly discussion in regard to the falling-off in the number of Sunday-school scholars says:

> Methodism, like other sects, is waning, because it has no real hold on the people; because, like kindred sects, it is no part of the Church founded on earth by our Lord. When Methodists have awakened to this fact, their present difficulty will be simplified by there being no scholars left to teach.

Meantime the Methodists refute such ignorant criticism by cheerily subscribing £40,000 during the Wesleyan Conference, towards the million guineas aimed at for its Twentieth Century Fund for aggressive work. And this in a year of exceptionally heavy claims upon the generosity of the public.

Englishmen as a whole have never made "good" Catholics, because one of the cardinal Romish virtues is absolute subserviency of the laity to the clergy in all religious matters. Some sense of this fact seems to underlie the remarkable letter sent by Cardinal Vaughan to the Romanist Young Men's Societies recently assembled at Chester. In it he counsels them emphatically to keep to the safe path of blind obedience, which is his notion of "loyalty to the Roman See." He soundly berates those who are independent enough to "read and discuss whatever is printed, if only it falls under their notice, and is written in an attractive style." . . . "The shepherds," he adds, "are over the sheep, not the lambs and sheep over the shepherds;" and those who "criticise the conduct of the Holy See as though they had a mission to rescue the Government of the Church from failure" come specially under his lash. Such a manifesto will do good, though not in the way intended; for it shows that the religious control claimed by the hierarchy is a tyranny of the worst kind.

A writer on "Missionaries in Egypt," in the current Nineteenth Century, while kindly in tone, deprecates the notion of spreading Christianity in that country by direct propaganda, and says it is "as an educator, as a moral force, by his example indirectly influencing the lives of his people, that the missionary can be of use." The writer seems to be unable to distinguish between the idea of political tolerance of all religions, as is the case in India, and the private right of influence possessed by every British subject. Religion is greatly helped by indirect influence, and holy examples, of course; but that is not the way Christianity conquered in the first century, and it is not by this means it can hope to conquer to-day. "Go ye forth, and preach to all nations," is the Divine command of the root of all missionary endeavour. Let missionaries be wise, and tactful, and circumspect in their methods, by all means; but to expect the messengers of the Cross to be mere dumb witnesses to their cause, would be to sound the death-knell of all distinctive missionary work.

An American writer some years ago pointed out that the division of Church History headed "The Spread of Christianity" is only the history of foreign missions under another title. Let those who deem missionary work to be an experiment of modern times alone, bear in mind that "foreign missions have been in progress from the day of Pentecost to this hour." There is nothing in the entire range of the world's history more noteworthy than the growth and spread of Christianity, from the gathering of the few at Jerusalem, through the Roman world to Mediæval Europe, and the New World; and in that progress there is the assurance that the religion of Jesus will ultimately reach every nation and people of the earth. "Of His Kingdom there shall be no end."

It is impossible not to observe, in these days of rush and hurry, a great decline in courtesy. Much of this, doubtless, is due to want of thought rather than to any wilful disregard of the feelings of others. The inspired direction to have compassion one of another, to love as brethren, and to be pitiful, was accompanied by another—"Be courteous" (1 Peter iii. 8).

The development of what is termed, "sport," and the consequent increasing desecration of the Sabbath, even by those who have the whole or greater part of the week in which to pursue amusement, certainly point to a great deterioration in the national character. Hence the wise words in regard to excessive devotion to games which the Bishop of Hereford spoke in distributing the prizes at London University College School were certainly well timed. Dr. Perceval expressed his fear that a number of intellectual enthusiasms had vanished before athletics, and he urged that it was possible to become an athletic hero without sacrificing learning. But a higher note than this might well have been struck, for it is possible to develop the body at the cost of the soul, and to forget in the pursuit of athletic recreations that the highest power of the body is that of being "the temple of the Holy Ghost."

Anarchy—Its Cause.

"O KING, let my counsel be acceptable unto thee, and break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor, if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity." If there is one desideratum conspicuous by its absence from the experience of any and every reigning Sovereign or Republican President to-day it is

TRANQUILLITY.

And neither the reason nor the remedy is far to seek. No one placed in authority over others can maintain his authority unless he is faithful to the One who gave him that position. This is true in every department of human life. It is in the nature of things, it is one of the eternal laws.

In the beginning God gave to the man a companion and a help meet for him. He was to protect her, and she was to reverence him. But she disobeyed God, and led her husband into the same sin. Consequently, her desire became subject unto him, and he ruled over her. If their elder son was accepted with God either by law or grace, either by doing well, or by bringing a sin-offering if he had done ill, he should have the right of the first-born over his younger brother: "Unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him" (Gen. iii. iv.). If an elder daughter be left by her mother in charge of the younger children, as long as she fulfils her trust they will respect her authority; but if she neglects or tyrannizes over them there will in that house be anarchy.

The great monarch, in whom the times of the Gentiles began, was entrusted with absolute power. He was the head of gold; "whom he would he slew, and whom he would he kept alive." But instead of exercising his power righteously he exalted himself against God, whose delegate he was, abused his power for his own aggrandisement, oppressed the nations whom he conquered, and showed no mercy to the poor.

Successive dynasties followed his example, and, in keeping with inevitable law, the gold of royal prerogative declined to silver, brass, iron, and earthenware. The Persian (silver) monarchs could not slay or keep alive at their own will, as did the King of Babylon; they were bound by their own edicts. The Macedonian Empire (brass) represented less royal prerogative, than military power. The Roman Kingdom (iron) had for its motto Vox populi, vox Dei—"The voice of the people, the voice of God." But it was, and is, dreadful, terrible, and strong exceedingly; it has great iron teeth; it devours and breaks in pieces, and stamps the residue with its feet. It has ten horns, symbols of power, but it is unsteady. It stands upon feet and toes part of iron and part of earthenware. It is partly strong and partly brittle. For the metal of governmental prerogative, selfishly and unrighteously exercised, does not mix with the earthenware of the popular will—and there can only follow discontent,

LEADING ON TO ANARCHY.

When misgovernment has conceived, it brings forth discontent, and discontent breeds anarchy, and anarchy when it is finished brings forth murder. National sin brings penalty upon the nation, but it often falls upon the innocent and the righteous. Five rulers have been cruelly and wickedly done to death in our own day, each of whom was, according to the human standard, a good and gracious Emperor or President; while the Turkish tyrant and assassin has gone free—for how long we do not know—and he has begun again with a fresh Armenian massacre, variously estimated at from sixty to five hundred.

Since this article was begun, the Daily News closes a leader with these words:—

To kill such a King as Humbert, who never put himself forward, and, at the same time, never shirked his work, is quite as silly as itis wicked; and, even on Anarchist principles, absurd. But an Italian statesman, even if he wears a crown, must ask himself why so many Anarchists are Italians. Are there any circumstances in the nature or history of the country which account for this fact? If he inquired, he would have to acknowledge that high taxation and dire poverty were rife in many parts of the kingdom. Even when an example is being made of dastardly murderers, we may be usefully reminded that the way to prevent an effect is to remove the cause.

Some other papers, whose editors know everything, recommend the confinement of all avowed Anarchists, either in criminal prisons or lunatic asylums. As well try to stamp out famine by trampling on the sufferers with nailed boots. Anarchy is the symptom of a disease in the body politic. It is produced by the neglect of the Divine axiom, "He that ruleth among men must be just, ruling in the fear of God," present rulers inheriting the past, and finding it impossible to cut off the entail of their predecessors.

But the spirit of Anarchy is not confined to Italy, as is shown by the murder of the Russian Czar, the American Presidents, the Austrian Empress, and by the recent attempt on the life of the Prince of Wales (not to mention many other attempted assassinations), and the proposal, if nothing more, to murder every one who wears a crown in Christendom.

Is there no dire poverty in our own land? Is there any land on earth where it exists in more dire forms? There is no country where there is so much liberty, though it is often

> Freedom free to slay herself,
> And dying while they shout her name—

Liberty to the sweater; liberty to the distiller, the brewer, and the publican; liberty to the libertine, the procuress, and the harlot.

Nay, the Government has been known to be itself a sweater; the poverty-making drink fiend is becoming, if it has not already become, the ruling power in our land; against the verdict of the people, the atrocious C.D. Acts have been reinstated in India under the false name of the Cantonment Acts; and they would be applied to all Britain if some people had their way.

Truly, "we may be usefully reminded that the way to prevent an effect is to remove the cause."

King Humbert the Martyr.

By Rev. Cav. ALEX. ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

THE assassination of good King Humbert is the crime of the century, the crime of crimes. No man less deserved such a fate. He was the kindest of men, as well as the most constitutional of sovereigns. "My sole ambition will be to deserve the love of my people," he said, when he ascended the throne, twenty-two years and six months ago; and during each month and week and day of these years he made good his words. Never a day passed but he did something of a public or of a private character to merit gratitude and affection. He risked his life for his people on the field of battle; he went to Naples in 1884, when it was a hotbed of cholera, and visited the sick and the dying, supplying their necessities, and comforting them with words; he went to Casamicciola when it was ruined by the earthquake of 1883, and sent nearly a quarter of a million of francs to help the wounded and bereaved on the Riviera after the earthquake of 1887; indeed there never was a case of distress in any part of Italy but he hastened to its relief. Private individuals, too, in every part of Italy testify to kind words said, and kind acts done to them.

An old veteran at Trieste, signing the register of condolence to be sent to Queen Margherita, burst into tears, saying, "It was the King himself who bound up my wounds, when he was Crown Prince, and nursed me for hours by my bedside." A young butcher has just told me that, when he was serving his military term at Venice, and had charge of a boat in the lagoon, seeing King Humbert's gondola pass, he put his men through certain evolutions by way of salute, with which the King was so pleased that he gave him ten francs.

A photographer at Cuneo, who always accompanied King Humbert in his shooting excursions, is inconsolable, and has endless stories to tell of

THE KING'S CONSIDERATE KINDNESS.

There is not a family at Monza that has not received proofs of the Sovereign's affection for his people. It is said that never a legitimate request was refused. He gave away in private charity a quarter of a million pounds sterling annually. He was the most generous, the most beneficent the most philanthropic man in Italy, probably in Europe.

And it was precisely when showing his generosity and trust in his people that he was shot. He gave the site for the gymnasium, and he gave the bulk of the money required to build and furnish it. And he it was, too, who gave the gold medal for the best athlete. At considerable inconvenience, and against the wishes of the Queen, he went out that Sunday evening to encourage the youths by kind words, and by distributing the prizes. Of course, he knew the information that had been received by Vienna and other places as to Anarchist plots against him. It has since come out that Queen Margherita herself narrowly escaped assassination on her way to Monza. But

KING HUMBERT WAS ABOVE FEAR.

He said to the Queen, "Nothing can happen to me that is not ordained. I must keep my promise to the young men, but I shall be back before you break up for the night;" just as when his life was attempted before, he said to the general by his side, "That is one of the perquisites of my profession!"

King Humbert enjoyed the enthusiasm of his subjects and said so, although it has been observed since that no order was maintained at the games, and many suspicious persons were seen, amongst whom his assassin, Bresci, was noticed by the police. He was a man "prejudicato" as it is called—a man who has been already condemned for crime, and who, condemned by Crispi to live within a certain space, was freed by Rudini. He had been hanging about the grounds with drunken companions and women of bad life, all the day, and had actually gone to mass in the Royal Chapel, with intent, it is believed, to kill the King, who, however, did not appear. King Humbert was standing up in the carriage saying good night to the leaders of the young men, and actually thanking them for their display of loyalty, when he was shot. General Ponzio Vaglia, seeing him stand and stare strangely, said, "Majesty, are you hurt?" He replied, "Non mi pare" (I don't think so), when he sank into the cushions. The horses, at a gallop, soon reached the gates of the Royal Villa, when the King, gathering up his strength, rose bolt upright in the carriage, and then died. If ever man and to truth and goodness, it is King Humbert, and if ever a diabolical crime was committed on earth it is that of his assassination.

It is now asked, Why did they not guard the King? Why did not someone do something? It is remembered that when his assassination was first attempted, the aged and wounded Cairoli threw himself on the assassin, himself receiving the blow intended for the King. Why did no one move on this occasion? Perhaps there was not time, for it was the work of a moment, and the horses in the carriage started at a gallop.

And what of the villain who did the deed? He is now in prison, where he is eating and sleeping comfortably, and declaring that he regrets nothing; shrugging his shoulders contemptuously when told the King was dead, declaring he will soon be at liberty again, whilst in every capital in Europe like himself, drink to his health. Both Lord Salisbury and Signor Crispi have pointed out that so long as such leniency as is now exercised towards such enemies of humanity continues, so long such crimes will be perpetrated. I believe there is nothing such cowardly ruffians more dread than bodily pain, and if the lash were freely used it would have a salutary effect.

But the forces at work that create and rear, and bring to maturity such inhuman monsters must be dealt with. These in Italy are three: Anarchism, Socialism, and Clericalism. Anarchism and Socialism are the enemies of kings and princes, of rulers and men of social position, of law and order the world over. And in Italy their strength is felt as much as in any land. Not long ago a Socialist newspaper thus referred to King Humbert. It was speaking of the law passed by Pelloux for the suppression of seditious literature, which law was necessitated by the disclosures at the trials of the rioters at the so-called "bread riots" at Milan, when it said, "It is a stupid legend to make the King a figurehead. He knows what he is doing, and he must take his share of responsibility. It is very convenient to say his ministers are responsible. If he does not mend his ways, we will see him saltare (jump) one day."

Besides Anarchism and Socialism, there is a third force at work for the destruction of Italy, and of the monarchy, and that is Clericalism.

THE CLERICAL PAPERS OF ITALY

often, in speaking of King Humbert, decline to call him King of Italy; whilst clerical papers in France, and even in England, have spoken disrespectfully of him. The policy of the Vatican is, and has ever been, the destruction of Italy's unity and independence, in order to the re-establishment of the Temporal Power. The Globe of Monday, July 23, said in a leading article: "So long as the Vatican persists in its anti-national attitude, in the vain hope of re-establishing the temporal power of the Pope, so long will fools and fanatics be provided with fearfully potent reason for sedition, and worse. The ridiculous fiction, which it pleases the Vatican to keep up, that the Pope is a prisoner, and he himself the victim of outrages innumerable, is a constant source of danger to the State."

Clericalism does not scruple to ally itself with Socialism and with Anarchism, when such an alliance will advance its objects. This was the case at the late riots at Milan, to which The Globe also referred. In the Court of Justice, at the trial of the rioters, a card was produced, of which some 70,000 had been circulated by the priests, which bore on one side a portrait of the Pope, and on the other words to this effect: "The Pope is King of Kings and Lord of Lords. For the carrying out of his communion he needs temporal power. Though the temporal power is not an article of faith, yet it comes so near to being one that those who do not seek to bring it about

ENDANGER THEIR EVERLASTING SALVATION.

We do not think that you will escape, though thousands have renounced this claim, amongst whom is the highest in the land" (a reference to King Humbert).

Then a clerical organ rejoiced in the fact that all the evils of Italy were due to its being under the ban of Pope Pio Nono, which ban Pope Leo XIII. had never removed. Even in this time of national anguish, the Papal Embassies in Rome refuse to put out signs of mourning. At various places, Archiepiscopal Palaces were also without the symbol of grief for a time, because, they explained, they had no Italian banners! and the banners of patriotic associations have been refused admittance into churches, where services in commemoration of King Humbert were going on. As was noted in The Christian of August 2, the Pope is always the "poor prisoner of the Vatican," and the King, according to Papal notions, is the "usurper." Then, there have been many instances lately, of the Papal authorities punishing priests who expressed loyalty to the King and Kingdom of Italy.

There is no doubt that the Papal Church must bear its share of responsibility for the spirit that exists in Italy, and for the deeds of shame that are the fruit of that spirit. There is no doubt a reference to the enemy Clericalism, as well as to Anarchism and Socialism, in the words of the new King, Victor Emmanuel III.:—"The institutions of the country shall be protected by me with a firm and energetic hand from every insidiousness and violence, from whatever quarter they may arise." King Victor Emmanuel III. also repeats the grand phrase of his father's which roused the anger of the Vatican, "Roma intangibile, the symbol of the greatness, and the pledge of the integrity of Italy." Protestantism has lost a good friend in King Humbert, but his august son clearly also realizes that, as the Papal Church is the enemy of the monarchy and of the nation, so Protestantism is the bulwark of his throne, and of the integrity and independence of his kingdom. As it is, it is only Protestant nations that are the true friends of Italy, that sorrow in her sorrows, and rejoice in her joys; that hang out their banners to the breeze on the anniversary of September 20, and drape them in mourning on occasions of national grief; other nations, Austria, France, Spain, Portugal, daring not to do so, because forbidden by the Papal power, and its aspirant to the temporal sovereignty.

Dr. Robertson has received from General Ponzio Vaglia, Minister of the Italian Royal House, the following telegram:—"Rome, August 8, 1900: His Majesty King Victor Emmanuel thanks you for the lively sympathy you have shown him in his great affliction."

Open-Air Treatment of Consumption.—This subject is very much to the fore just now, and a pamphlet entitled, "Simple Directions" for the above (1d. Allen & Hanbury, Limited), will be found timely and concise. Those interested in the painful subject will find in it helpful hints as to dietary, methods of living, and nursing, &c.

Egypt.—Mr. Hermann Harris writes from 6, Rue l'Hopital Egyptien, Alexandria:—"I am carrying on Gospel meetings three times a week in my own house, attended by Moslems, Copts, and Roman Catholics, and others; also twice a week in a mission room in another quarter of the town. I am publishing a Gospel magazine monthly in Arabic, which is stirring up great interest, and leading many in the corrupt Eastern churches to 'search the Scriptures,' and find the Truth."

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, August 19. Eccles. xi.

STILL the bitter cynicism of the mere man of the world, who reckons up the assets of life against its liabilities and forfeits. He has seen rich men come to beggary, and honoured men to dishonour; and he asks what good is there in it all. Would not it be equally good if the millionaire had never been born? What is the use of living? Is life worth having? He is quite aware that it is useless to argue and contend with the Almighty Ruler and Disposer of all things, and yet in undertones he very seriously criticizes the present state of things.

But there are flaws in his argument. For instance, he speaks as though good living were the one aim of life (v. 7); and the supply of appetite its sufficient object. He describes human life as a shadow flung for a moment on the hills by a passing cloud, and before you can call attention to it, it is gone. Now, we cannot accept that view of life as complete. For us there are other considerations. For instance, beyond the horizon of time we are to dwell with God, receiving every blessing which his love can provide. Since this must be borne in mind, this at least will satisfy us. Again, on our way to that beatific vision and perfect satisfaction, we have the enjoyment of all the Beatitudes of which the Master spoke in his wonderful programme of a godly life, a life of love. To see light come into disappointed eyes, and hope into despairing souls, to live and give for others—this indeed makes life worth living.

MONDAY, August 20. Eccles. xii.

The Preacher now turns to offer some practical considerations for the alleviation of human misery. Granted that there is plenty of mourning and sorrow in human life, yet surely these are better and more consistent with the best life than mere gaiety and luxury. Since affliction is the common lot of men, it is better to frequent spots where we may learn to be brave and strong, than to live the butterfly life of the worldling, whose laughter is as the crackling of thorns under the pot—plenty of noise and smoke, but very little heat.

Granted that you are poor, yet patience and wisdom will do a great deal towards lightening the pressure of poverty. To be patient is better than to be proud; to be self-contained than to be hasty and vehement. A wise and holy soul is better than a rich inheritance, and these qualities are as true a defence (see v. 11, R.V.) as gold and influence. God sets one thing against another. What one lacks in one direction is equalized by what one receives from God in another.

In reading this chapter, and especially vv. 15-18, we must remember that this book is the result of common worldly prudence, which gives us the result of a good deal of experience "in the days of vanity." We are forewarned against enthusiasm on the one hand, and rash wickedness on the other. But there is a greater than Solomon who says, "He that loveth his life shall lose it, and he who loseth it shall find it." And the Holy Spirit has secured that these two views should be presented side by side, that we may be convinced of the infinite superiority of the one policy of life over the other.

Life is full of traps and pitfalls; but if our soul is filled with the Divine Light (and this is wisdom) we shall be strong to resist evil, and wise to pick our way. But let no man trust himself. The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. There is only one true guide—the Shepherd of souls.

TUESDAY, August 21. Eccles. viii.

Wisdom is, as we have seen, the light of God shining clearly in the human soul. It makes the face shine, and mollifies the hardness of the expression. It sets the soul on the way of obedience to the laws of God and man; so that the light of the royal favour falls on the good man, where the king is also good. It leads us to find the opportune occasion for doing right, so that we not only do right, but do it at the right moment. It sets itself to patient continuance in well-doing, knowing that it is as impossible for wickedness to prosper as it is for a man to control the wind, or the day of his death (v. 8, R.V.).

The wicked Dives may be buried with great pomp, and Lazarus be hustled into a pauper's grave; but the righteous shall be vindicated, and the beggar rest in Abraham's bosom, whilst the rich man is forgotten. The light of a good man's life casts a radiance over many a generation after he has departed.

Listen, O child of God, to the affirmation of worldly prudence—It shall be well with them that fear God. Though the sentence against evil doers remains unexecuted, though they spread themselves in great pomp and power, though now, the righteous seem to come off second best, yet ultimately, by the very construction of the world, the balance of blessing shall fall to the lot of the righteous. The Son of Man shall some day say, "Come ye blessed." The everlasting habitations shall unfold their portals. The kingdom of God shall be set up. The mysteries and inequalities of life shall have an end.

WEDNESDAY, August 22. Eccles. ix.

The Preacher gives out the results of his observation and experience. Looking broadly at the life of man, he says that all things come to all, that one event is the lot of the most diverse characters. But other considerations must be borne in mind also. For instance, there is a great difference between the sense of rectitude and the uneasy conscience of the man of selfish and worldly policy. Surely the peace of God counts for something, and the sense that He is well pleased. And as we anticipate the hereafter, how much better it is when the soul has a sure and certain hope of being received at last into the Home of God. Even if the outward events of human life are much the same for the just and unjust, there are riches of blessedness for the soul that loves God which are priceless—pearls of great price, to get which we may well sell all that we have.

What stress the Preacher lays on the possession of life (vv. 4, 6): but there is no real life apart from the Living One, who said, "Because I live, ye shall live also." Let us never be content to exist; ours may be life more abundantly, through living union with Jesus. Let us ponder well the parable with which the chapter closes. Surely that little city may be compared to the heart of man, besieged by all the power of the great adversary; but faith brings Jesus into the question, and his power avails to make us more than conquerors. No, the race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, but this is the victory that overcometh—our faith.

THURSDAY, August 23. Eccles. x.

Let us translate some of these sayings for our own edification. The more holy you are, the sooner are the tiniest blemishes noticed in your character (1). It is characteristic of a good man that he knows his duty so certainly as to be able to act with precision and promptitude (2). We often get by yielding what we should miss by insisting (3). Place and position do not by any means indicate deserts (5). Curses and misdeeds come home to roost; one cannot do a wrong to another without suffering more than the person wronged (8). Science and skill save hard labour. A little fire judiciously applied will often avail where great power has failed. There is a great deal in the art of doing things (10). Beware of the bite of the old serpent, the devil, who yields to no charm, save the name of Jesus, uttered by faith (11). Be careful of your words, which, if they be out of keeping of the Divine love, may land thee in bitter sin and sorrow (13). Beware of strong drink, and use all your influence to receive the election of sober and good men to places of political trust. How many rulers have been spoilt through intemperate habits (16)! Keep your soul, and your house, in good repair (18). Be strong to keep your secrets, or you will live to rue it. What is spoken in the ear in the closet, will be proclaimed on house tops (20). May the Holy Spirit not only show us the truth of these things, but enable us to conduct our life on the pattern shown us!

FRIDAY, August 24. Eccles. xi.

Some people are always waiting for a propitious time to do God's work. "We will not speak to that soul to-day," they say, "because all the conditions do not seem favourable. Wait a little! Perhaps some day we shall be favoured with ideal conditions, and there will be no need for hesitation." But, if the farmer were always to act on this principle, there would be no harvests at all. Farming is always carried on under some disadvantages, which, however, do not daunt the agriculturist. "Be instant in season, out of season." "Sow beside all waters."

We can never tell how much previous work has not been wrought within the soul by the Divine Spirit. Take, for instance, the case of Cornelius. How impossible it was for Peter to know all the blessed operations of the Spirit of God in that gracious soul. He cast his bread in faith on the waters. He did not stay to ask whether it were morning or evening, but struck in, as the Spirit of God directed. And what a harvest fell to his hand in that Gentile home!

In the morning of life there is special encouragement for the Gospel worker, the young heart so soon responds; but in the evening of life we may still endeavour to win the aged for God. We cannot tell which God may be about to save, therefore let us abide in fellowship with his Spirit, prepared to co-operate with Him always and everywhere, asking no questions.

SATURDAY, August 25. Eccles. xii.

The R.V. brings out very clearly the beautiful imagery of this chapter, which contains a poetical description of old age. In old age the light of joy is darkened, and there are but small intervals between the returning clouds; the arms which guard and the legs which support are palsied. The grinders drop out of the jaws, the eyes fail in vision, the voice becomes weak and unmusical. The aged dread the steep hill and crowded way, the almond with its white blossom is in evidence, and nothing can stimulate failing desire. Finally, the lamp of life falls from its pendent position, the silver cord breaks, and the golden bowl of life is smashed into a thousand fragments.

But this is not all. The home may be shattered, but the tenant goes elsewhere to live. He stands ultimately before the judgment seat of God, where the most secret things in life are brought into judgment, and dealt with. In the meanwhile, the true policy of life is to fear God, and keep his commandments. "This is the whole of man" (see R.V.). It was thus that our Lord answered the enquiry of the rich young ruler. And if it be asked what shall be done to those who have failed, or to those who cannot live up to so high an ideal, we must turn from these pages to the Gospels and Epistles, to Calvary and Pentecost, to the work of the Saviour on the cross, and of the Holy Spirit sent by Him from the throne.

Climbing.

FROM nature up to God he tried to climb;
But on the height were mists, and dazzling gleams,
And twilights at high noon, and fields of ice,
And walls of rock, and wild crevasse. Yet saw
He not the throne and Him that sits thereon.
The beatific light seemed near, but far
And vague, still veiled by luminous cloud
And spaces vast.
Descending painfully,
Low in the vale, he found the path he missed—
The way to God; the Way, the Truth, the Life.
The quest was won; not by star-scaling thought,
But by God's quickening grace, opening the mind
And heart to light and love and God, Himself—
(Still immanent, but never known till now)
A rest of full content, a heaven begun.

So climbs the soul; first, in the vale to God,
Then finds in Him all else, with Nature as his throne.

I.—Sacrifice and Offering.

BIBLE READING, by Rev. HUBERT BROOKE.

FROM the very centre of his assembled people, God spoke to them through his servant Moses, giving them lessons concerning worship, purity, and the living out of holiness for his glory. For intellectual understanding and spiritual experience, we must take the books of the Bible in proper order. Leviticus is not A nor B, but it is C. Meeting as God's children, for lessons under C, are we quite sure that we have duly learned A and B?

The broad teaching of Genesis is that mankind is a ruined race. When a soul would draw near unto God, it can only come on one footing, saying, "God be merciful to me a sinner," recognising the need of regeneration in order to serve God, and to do his will.

Having learned that truth, we are ready for the blessed lesson of Exodus, that God has provided for ruined souls in Christ Jesus, the true Paschal Lamb. Throughout Exodus there stands out above all else the redemption which is pictured in the Old Testament, fulfilled in the New, and now awaits every soul that is ready to accept it. That redemption is to be heard of, understood, received, and known as a thing possessed. "These things have I written. . . . that ye may know that ye have eternal life" (1 John v. 13). We cannot imagine an Israelite who did not know for certain, on the day when the Tabernacle was raised, that he was out of Egypt for ever.

Possessing this glorious redemption, we may go on to hear God's voice through Moses in Leviticus. The Book has a marked character of its own, as indicated in the fact that the phrase, "And the Lord spake unto Moses," occurs at least thirty-six times in the twenty-seven chapters. Here, then, is authority to answer every doubt; for, in one sense, Leviticus has more of the directly spoken words of God than any other Book in the Bible. The words for offering and sacrifice occur ninety-one times; so that there is much to learn concerning this way of approach unto God. Sacrifice generally meant the service of a priest; and that word occurs in this Book 165 times. Further, sacrifice and priest have much to do with man's purity, or before God; so that clean, unclean, and associated words occur 186 times. Then follows the matter of practical holiness in God's service; and the words holiness, holy, and sanctify, all from the same root, are found in this Book 131 times.

Chapters i.-vii. have to do with sacrifice; viii.-x. with priesthood; xi.-xvi. with purity; and xvii.-xxvii. with holiness.

We are taking up, this morning, lessons of sacrifice. Of this there are five different forms, namely: The burnt offering (chap. i.); the meat or meal offering (ii.); the peace offering (iii.); the sin offering (iv.); and the trespass offering (v.). These five offerings are taken up a second time and applied in chaps. vi. and vii.

Before we look at the subject more closely, let me remind you that these things were written for a redeemed people who had entered into covenant relation with God; and, for opened eyes, the sacrifices teach concerning our Lord Jesus Christ. Of many believers it may be said that their knowledge of Jesus is summed up in the idea of sins borne and forgiven; but that is the simple lesson previously taught in the Passover sacrifice. More than that, our cup of the New Covenant points to the occasion of the institution of the Old Covenant, with the blood sprinkled upon altar, people, and book (Ex. xxiv.). Oh, that every believing soul would press on at once to know that, as soon as we are pardoned and reconciled to God, there is a covenant to be consciously entered into for our whole-hearted service to Him who has purchased us for his own possession in time and in eternity!

Handing ourselves over to God for service, as Israel did in the covenant sacrifice at the foot of Mount Sinai, He will dwell in our midst in manifested glory, as in the Tabernacle of old. At the raising of that Tent, He taught Israel the lessons of five-fold sacrifice, in the spiritual counterparts of which true believers alone are concerned. To any soul here who has not come under the blood of the Passover Lamb, I must say, "These things are not for you." God does not teach his lessons in Egypt, but only in the wilderness.

Pardoned ones who live mostly to please themselves are of Leviticus, for only to those who had entered into covenant with God were the words spoken. The Father will not tell his most precious secrets to a wilfully disobedient and careless child, whose ears are not open and whose heart is not ready for them. Is that the reason why Leviticus is so little studied? Oh, ask God to transfer its teaching from the paper and to print it, with his own hand, upon the page of your heart!

It is an old division of the sacrifices revealed to us in God's Word, to classify them as expiatory, dedicatory, and eucharistic; and we may well regard them, under those headings, as indicating the order of Christian experience. For the whole-hearted Christian, who knows his sins forgiven, who has peace with God and would fully serve Him, and who thankfully appreciates spiritual privileges, the various kinds of sacrifice represent five aspects of

for his people, as we shall find by reference to a few passages in the New Testament.

In Eph. v. 2, we have Christ as a burnt offering, "Walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given Himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savour." The meal offering seems to set Him forth as offered to God to be used for man, because meal is man's food. "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power; who went about doing good, and healing all who were oppressed of the devil" (Acts x. 38). "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister" (Matt. xx. 28). If you would be of the greatest use to your fellow-men, in wider blessing than ever before, give yourself unreservedly unto God, after the blessed Master's example. In guiding the hand of your little child, the character of the writing will depend very much upon whether the little fingers are stiff or pliant.

We see Christ as our peace offering in Eph. ii. from verse 12. They who were once aliens and strangers to God, now in Christ Jesus are made nigh. Here the question is neither forgiveness nor dedication, both taken as accomplished; but and He presents us to the Father, leaving us restful in his presence.

2 Cor. v. 21, "He hath made Him to be sin for us," or, literally, the sin offering. This meets the uncertainties that sometimes cloud the believer's soul, as to acceptable service; and thus we become "the righteousness of God in Him." The trespass offering pointed to Him "who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree" (1 Pet. ii. 24). Sin as a whole, and sins one by one, are met by the offering of Him who maintains our reconciliation with God.

What a boundless fulness we have in Christ! Pardon, cleansing, acceptance, perfect standing before God, continuous communion, peaceable worship, and restful presence with the Father, are provided once and for all, through his one perfect, finished sacrifice.

In a secondary but true sense, the Lord Jesus Christ is an example for us in the holy life He lived out, as the burnt offering and the meal offering. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service" (Rom. xii. 1). That is our form of burnt offering. We follow Christ, as a meal offering, when we "owe no man anything, but to love one another; for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law" (Rom. xiii. 8).

Our lower measure of peace offering takes shape (Eph. v. 7-11) when our fruitful works of light are to bring others into living communion with God. "If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another (the peace offering), and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son (the sin offering) cleanseth us from all sin. . . . If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins (the trespass offering), and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John i. 7, 9). In 1 Peter ii. 23, we are taught to follow the example of Christ as the sin offering, in so far as we patiently bear undeserved reviling and suffering.

A peculiar feature distinguishes the trespass offering from all others. The making of amends for was to precede the offering of sacrifice—a solemn lesson for many whose lives are clouded from neglect of this rule. New Testament teaching differs not from Old Testament theology. If we seek the presence of the Father, asking forgiveness of our trespass, for Christ's sake, and there remember that our brother hath aught against us, what are we to do? "Leave there thy gift before the altar . . . first be reconciled to thy brother" (Matt. v. 24).

Surely He who kept the best wine until the last will close this last Keswick Convention of the century with his richest blessing. Hinder it not by bolting the windows of heaven upon our side of them—may be through some unamended wrong. Let us confess and right the wrongs, and then look up to God for the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ.

The Fruits of Divine Relationship.

By PREBENDARY WEBB-PEPLOE.

"Go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God" (John xx. 17).

IT is well for us that, again and again, we should be brought face to face with this solemn question: After we have received forgiveness of sins, and have accepted the position of them which are in Christ Jesus, before we reach conformity to his image in glory, what is to be done with the interval? As Christians, what is our life to be, for the glory of God and the welfare of men? I fear there are far too many who never understand aright the two totally different kinds of existence lived by professed believers in Christ. In the one case, the life is antecedent to the death, resurrection, and ascension of the Saviour; in the other, it enters into the consequences of that ascension. The one life is that of anticipation, hardly ever of fruition; the other is blessed with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. Well did Lady Powerscourt say that many Christians live upon earth, and seem to make in heaven; while others live in heaven, and pay visits to troubled men upon earth when God Almighty gives the commission.

We should know where our life, as true believers in Christ Jesus, really commences. It takes its rise with God in glory, and then reflects that glory among those who know nothing of the Saviour's love. According to the old Puritan, Vaughan, enthusiasm is a feeling; but zeal is a principle. The one comes of an over-heated imagination; the other, lighted at God's holy altar, steadily burns at his shrine, and reflects always his life and power. Are our feelings and our workings founded merely in enthusiasm? or have we received that zeal which comes from God, and is exhibited by us in the power of the Holy Ghost?

If I rightly understand the passage before us, our Lord here establishes an entirely new relationship between Himself and his disciples. Blessed are the women who carry to men such a message as Mary brought to these. In that salutation, "my brethren," they heard words never before addressed to men by the Lord. We will examine the meaning of that new relationship, and will see how it comes with power to us who are also Christ's followers.

It is hard to speak ill of men like the disciples, who, with one or two exceptions, were so devoted to their Lord; and yet we can scarcely hide from ourselves that, in the time antecedent to Christ's death, they never represented Him with power among men. He sent them forth to preach, heal the sick, cast out devils, and raise the dead; but we hear little concerning results from their ministry. In one instance they did say, "Lord, even the devils are subject unto us"; but they were perfectly

ASTONISHED AT THEIR OWN SUCCESS.

A large number of Christians exhibit the same characteristic now. This ought not so to be. Victory should be expected, deliverance may be claimed, power can be manifested, and reflection of the Christ-life should be seen in us all.

The life of dependence upon and fellowship with the Lord, had its inception in those times exactly as it has with us to-day. Having been told that Jesus was the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world, two of John's disciples followed Jesus and stayed with Him for a time (John i. 39). Watch the process of men's so-called worship on a Sunday morning in that part of London where I live. They make a "propriety" call upon the Lord Jesus Christ, seemingly under protest because of deserting a former Master, but it has no practical effect upon their lives.

Matt. iv. and Mark i., parallel passages, show how the Lord deigns to call upon men in their daily life. Many here who have paid Christ "propriety" calls, may have afterwards found Him interrupting their earthly business, and saying "Follow Me!" For awhile, these men did follow Him; but they were soon back in the old life.

In Luke v., He comes to them again, in the midst of their ordinary occupation, and speaks with such convincing power that for the first time Jesus Christ is called "Lord," as Peter makes the confession, "I am a sinful man." There had been mention of sins committed: but none among them seemed to see the full depth of sin until Peter uttered those words. The first stage of spiritual communion begins with obedience to the command, "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men."

The next stage of advance is seen in Luke vi. 13, where Christ chooses the twelve apostles and sends them forth to represent Him among men. Observe, in Matt. x., how He begins to instruct them. Having called them to follow Him, and having made them apostles, He now names them disciples, or learners, and instructs them concerning

THE LIFE THEY ARE TO LIVE.

When He has fully instructed them, He speaks of them (vv. 24, 25,) as servants who have to take up the duty of obedience to Him in everything. In all earnestness, they try to occupy that position.

Until long after ten o'clock last night, I was dealing with many in this tent, who said, "I have tried, I have tried, I have tried!" In telling you that, I betray no secret. It is the cry of those who have not yet entered into the full rest of power. Those disciples went to Conventions held upon the hillside, and saw Christ's majestic power over the elements of earth, and the powers of heaven as He performed his miracles; so that, in the fulness of their feeling, and the abundance of their emotion, they were compelled to bow before Him, and to say, "Of a truth, this is the Son of God."

What came of the conviction? It passed away; like the morning sun at eventide, it was gone. Solemn, indeed, was it to hear from many last night, how the beauty of their emotion at gatherings like this had been replaced by coldness, carelessness, and worldly ambition. These are plaintive, but natural and inevitable confessions, where men are on the further side of Christ's death and resurrection.

At the end of his life upon earth, the Lord seeks to draw the disciples yet nearer to Himself, in the new name of John xiii. 33, "Little children." They were to love one another, as He had loved them. To-day, the cry goes back from the impotent soul, "Would to God I could do it, but I cannot!" No, my brother, you cannot; and Jesus knows it.

He draws them one step nearer when He says (John xv. 15, 16), "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth; but for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you. Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain." A wonderful privilege, but they could not then live up to it.

The blessed Master dies, rises again, appears to Mary, and sends her with that message. Dr. Westcott has strikingly proved that, not only the women, but the whole Church in an inchoate condition, were present on the evening of that same day, when Jesus stood in the midst and said, "Peace be unto you." Christ's death and resurrection, when truly apprehended in the power of faith, bring all who constitute the Church of Jesus Christ into a new relationship to God, to Christ, and to one another; also into a new position with regard to the world. We are separated absolutely from the world, and are brought nigh unto heaven; whereas our closest relations were with the world, and heaven was a far-off country. There are Christians, so-called, who have no nearer connection with heaven than the seeking to follow Christ because they admire Him, and the wish to be where He is.

May the Holy Ghost open up to every soul here present the meaning of this new relationship. It means a common Fatherhood, a common home, blood ties. It means such a close link between believers, that they have the same experience, thoughts, occupations, purposes, privileges, and inheritance. The wonderful name of "brethren" embraces more than we could possibly conceive of, apart from that revelation first made to Mary. In Heb. ii. 11, we have the grounds of the expression "brethren," for it says, "Both He that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are of one"—that is, out of the one Father and God, of Him, belonging to Him, and with Him. We are

ALL ONE IN CHRIST JESUS—

"for which cause He is not ashamed to call them brethren," having tasted death for every man.

We begin where those disciples seem to end their story of perpetual failure to stand for Christ among men. The death and resurrection of their Lord, the turning point in their existence, places us in a totally different relation to Him, through Him to God, and through God to one another.

Let me here humbly say that I do not like to hear Christ spoken of as our elder Brother. Our speech should not detract from the honourable dignity of our Lord. He is not ashamed to call us brethren; but that does not give us the right to call Him Brother. In heaven He acknowledges us before the Father; but let us be humble enough to think of Him as far above us, and yet as so beautifully tender in his greatness, that He gives us all that is involved in the position of his brethren, so that we look up trustfully into the face of our God.

We may now take the Christ of heaven as our Leader, our Enabler, and our Life. From Him there comes that gift of the Holy Ghost which was the further stage of his bestowal upon the disciples, in consequence of his ascension to our Father, as well as his Father, to our God as well as his God. Oh, the change that came over the little band of feeble and faithless ones, from the day when Christ ascended to glory, and the Holy Ghost descended upon them! Peter, the coward, became Peter the lion-hearted; Boanerges, the son of thunder, became John the gentle. Accepted in the Beloved, made sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty, we claim what Christ Jesus has, we use what He gives, and we shall represent Him truly among the children of men.

Shall we take this life, instead of that struggle after something which is always ahead of us? You who have hitherto never taken this step into light and blessing; you who acknowleged last night your utter failure in the past—will you not see, from these simple words, that you now have all that God Himself can give? Ye sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty hear his word. Come out from the world to-day, "and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters." "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves"—to-day, by the grace and power of the Holy Ghost—"from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."

The Cotelingam Brothers.

AN interesting service was conducted on Sabbath evening (5th inst.) at the Congregational Church, Dorking, by the Cotelingam Brothers. These brothers are three young Hindus from South India, sons of Rev. M. Cotelingam, the first high-caste Hindu convert of the London Missionary Society. They have been educated under Principal Miller at the Madras Christian College, and carry high credentials. Their eldest brother is Principal of the L.M.S. College at Bellary. They were present and took part at the World C.E. Convention, and are now making a world-wide tour to see the general effect and work of Christianity outside their own land. They intend, God willing, to return to India and give themselves to evangelistic work among their own countrymen. Each has his own separate part to take in their intended mission work. One is devoted to speaking, another to singing, and the third to writing—that is to Christian literature.

The service at Dorking was impressive for its simplicity and sincerity. It was kept within an hour's duration. After a hymn and prayer there was a trio from Songs and Solos, "Behold the Bridegroom Cometh." Then followed a short reading from the Scriptures (Matt. viii. 1-18), and prayer by another of the brothers who led this part of the service with much feeling and reverence, when a touching solo was sung by the youngest, entitled, "Jesus, my Shepherd, Guide me." This solo was composed by the singer, and was specially dedicated to the C.E. Convention.

Then came the address by the eldest brother, who spoke in excellent English, and took for his topic the need of the Gospel for India. He gave a sketch of the vastness of the population of the country, and the general good effect which Christianity had already produced upon the people. The Gospel had already made remarkable progress in India, and missionary work had been greatly blessed of God. The address concluded with an earnest appeal to the unconverted to give themselves at once to Christ. Another solo, "What will you do with Jesus?" having been sung, the service was impressively closed with a hymn and prayer.

Altogether it was an occasion to be remembered, not only for its novelty, the sight of three young Indians of one family devoted to the cause of Christ, but for its spiritual influence and unaffected simplicity.

Poplar Rescue Work.—In connection with the efforts in the interests of fallen girls, which Mrs. Wilkes has so long and so usefully maintained at Poplar, an interesting incident is related. In our issue of June 28, a paragraph was inserted relating to the Poplar Home. A copy of the issue in question was found by a sailor on a boat, and by him taken to his home in East London. At the same time, a poor girl, in serious trouble, had hired a lodging with the sailor's wife, who became acquainted with her circumstances, and who, on reading the copy of THE CHRISTIAN, noticed the reference to Mrs. Wilkes, and advised the lodger to make application to that lady. The result was that the girl was received into the Home and is now doing well. This is not the first occasion on which a notice in THE CHRISTIAN has led a girl to seek refuge in the Home. Mrs. Wilkes' address is Manor Cottage, 31, Sturry Street, Poplar.

A Vision and its Call.

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

SHE was one of Christ's hidden ones, busy and eager in the midst of life's rushing stream, but with her true deep life hidden with Christ in God, far from unrest and fretting care. The years had passed easily to Roberta Sylvan, and from her happy home she went forth a bright and winsome bride. But on this summer afternoon, she sat alone beside the river where the silver aspen grew, and golden water lilies floated with roots deep down beneath. She plucked the blue forget-me-nots, and remembered other times, when the flowerets had come through other hands, and to-day they spoke in echoing tones. Her boy was busy in the school, her wish was to have him like his father, good and true. She thought of him, so Christlike and so faithful, gone beyond her calling now.

The teeming, busy town lay yonder through the trees; no sound disturbed her ear. Resting against a sturdy tree, she lost sight of all around. Gone were the river, trees, and flowers; silent the birds and humming bees; she was amid the scenes that

CALL FORTH TEARS AND PAIN THE HEART.

Little children cried and moaned from slights and cruel blows. Women wept and kept their weary vigil. Men toiled and laboured hard to feed the hungry ones at home. Among the crowded, weary throng, she saw one with gleaming eyes and sneering face, one master evil power. With artful stealth he clasped his unseen chains about them, and drew them on into his evil clutches till they were captive at his will. The oath, the empty laugh, the coarse jest, the bitter cry, the drunken men and women—all united in a chorus of despair; but overhead, as from the sky, a clear voice said, "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth to Me from the ground."

Roberta Sylvan was awake. She knew her call. For ever gone were sloth and mean indifference, and she arose in God's great strength, now to redeem the time.

Amid that thronging mass of human lives, another power is moving every day, binding up the wounds, drying tears, and pouring in the oil of joy. Sick and dying watch for her, for she carries good tidings, and

TELLS OF A SAVIOUR'S LOVE.

Oh, that our Christian men and women might fling away indifference and selfishness, and say with heart and voice, "I love Thee," till love shall blossom into ripe obedience, and "I love" shall mean "I serve!" When God's fire is kindled in the human heart it is to give warmth and comfort to the world; when He touches the soul, it is for some grand purpose. When He calls, He has some message to send to the weary, pining world. Why will we say, "His chariot wheels are long in coming," when we know "He cannot do many mighty things because of our unbelief"? Should we not rather "prepare the way of the Lord, and make straight (in this desert of sin) a highway for our God"? Christians, into whose hands this paper comes weekly, what part are you taking in witness-bearing? Have you seen the wrongs and woes of life? Let your pity grow into helpfulness and healing.

Have you told them how God from his high estate
Looks down on their toil and care,
And that not alone for the rich and great
Hath He made the world so fair?
Have you bettered the poor man's narrowed span?
Have you brightened the way he trod?
Perchance when he knows the love of man
He may learn the love of God.

Have you realized the burdens and weariness imposed on the many? Put yourself, with all your Christ-like influences, at their service, to support, and uplift, and cheer.

Do you see the children, without the check and guidance their unformed characters need? Lend them your wisdom and your sheltering love, and be their guiding star.

The fallen and degraded may seem to repel us. If we are one with Him who sought and touched the worst, we cannot choose but gladly go and extend a loving hand, luring from impurity and vice by the magnetic power of goodness and love. Not all are gifted in art or music; but all who live in Christ shall be gifted with all the fulness of his Spirit to do greater works than He did, because He ever lives to intercede with the Father.

Pleas for Temperance.

By JOAN WYNCOTE.

II.—SPECIAL DRINKING DAYS.

IT is a sad truth, yet it is true, that thousands of people are so much the slaves or victims of customs (which in this age ought to be quite obsolete), that they are, as it were, compelled to get drunk on certain days. Probably more people suffer from this cause on Saturday afternoon than on any other day, though a large number of people habitually give way to intemperance on Sunday and Monday.

"COMPULSORY DRINKING."

I am told by competent informants, that in a great many firms the work-people resort to a public-house together as soon as they have received their wages, where each is supposed, indeed compelled, to pay for so much drink. Woe betide the man, or in some cases woman, who refuses! The persecution such a one would have to endure would be so terrible, it would be impossible to remain in that situation; thus, many who have no leaning towards intemperance yield to the others, to the complete ruin of health and temper. No doubt these customs were first established through generous motives; people who work together should be sociable, and in a barbarous, coarse age their only way of showing this sociability was by meeting to drink together. By all means let sympathy and good-fellowship exist between workers as much as possible, but we have surely had experience enough now to know that drinking together will not be conducive of it, for, alas, how many quarrels arise when people are in their cups!

WHAT CAN TEMPERANCE REFORMERS DO to break through this custom without destroying the kindly feelings it was intended to foster? Can it be built up on a firmer basis?

Old-established rules die hard. We are, as a nation, conservatively attached to them, and much tact and patience will be needed—perhaps many good intentions will prove failures—before real reform can be effected. This must come from the workers themselves and not from outsiders, though the latter might help at first. If a few men and women could be found brave enough to endure the persecutions, and firmly refuse to take the drink, they would, without question, win the respect of their fellows in the long run, and in time get many to follow their example. It would require great courage, but those who accomplished it would be morally as deserving of the Victoria Cross as our soldiers who win it for bravery in another form.

I was once told by a young man that he liked the firm for which he was then working much better (though from a business point of view it was not so good as his former one), because he was not compelled to resort to a public-house as soon as his wages were paid.

The Ven. Archdeacon Woosnam who has done such splendid work for "The Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen," makes a practice of going himself if in port, or sending his helpers when he is absent, to meet the ships when "Jack" comes ashore with his pocketful of money and all sorts of temptations ready at hand. These good men make friends with the sailor and invite him to a "Sailors' Rest," where everything is provided for his comfort and he is placed out of the reach of temptation. Could not some such course be adopted with regard to our friends who have not yet learned to spend their spare time wisely and profitably without falling into temptation? Many would resent what would appear to be interference, and much wisdom would be needed, but surely it is possible to get to know some of the tempted ones, and to form plans to enable them to pass pleasant Saturday afternoons, until their present habits have become loathsome to them—in fact, until the temptation is overcome.

THE PAYMENT OF WAGES.

Some firms pay on Friday. This is an excellent plan, as it enables wives to do their marketing on Saturday morning; then, in well-ordered families, children and parents can spend a pleasant Saturday afternoon together. Even those who are tempted to spend some of their money at the public-house have less time in which to do so, and would not go to extremes, as they must be at work on the Saturday morning. It would be still better if part payment were made to wives, as is now the case with sailors, and has proved so satisfactory.

SUNDAY DRINKING.

This is, I think, the saddest of all; the chief cause for it being that people have not learned to use time and money wisely. It is much to be regretted that the proportion of poor people who attend places of worship on Sunday is so small. Numerically greater than the rich, they are decidedly numerically smaller in their attendance at public worship. If habitual Sunday drunkards were personally visited with Christian influence, and persuaded to attend a place of worship at least once on Sunday (more especially in the evening when the public-houses are open), this should deal an effective blow to Sunday intemperance. The elevating influence of the service would replace the desire for low companions, drink, and excitement, and they would go quietly home to supper and bed, having spent time and money well if they have given a trifle to the collection, to say nothing of what they have saved to help to make the home more comfortable, or for clothes and food.

Sunday drinking is, alas! not confined to the poor, so if my remarks fall into the hands of others who are addicted to it, let them consider it is the Lord's Day, ordained from the beginning as a holy rest from toil for man's convenience and blessing, and that it should be kept as such.

"SAINT MONDAY."

This is a term applied in covert scorn to a day spent in simple revelry, by many who have to work very late on Saturday night. I am told these are more numerous in the west than in the east of London, not that more people work late there, but more people "play" (as north country people would term it) on Monday. Whether they can afford it or not is a question of thrift which concerns themselves only; if they cannot, they will have to suffer privations for indulging in it. But, supposing they can afford it, or think they have fairly earned the right to it through their toil, it is a grievous pity to spoil it by intemperance. Several streets have been named to me, in which many of the inhabitants get more or less intoxicated every Monday.

Anyone who could organize a scheme by which these people could have a profitable holiday instead of wasting it in drinking, would be a true benefactor to his kind. Short excursions into the country in summer, especially if their wives could go too, would have a refining influence upon the men, and remove temptation from the wives to drink in their husbands' absence. In winter, if some philanthropist personally conducted a party of these holiday people round one of the museums or other interesting places each Monday, it would enlighten and improve them, so that eventually the idea of spending a holiday in drinking would lose its charm.

BIRTHDAYS AND MARRIAGES.

Celebrating these occasions with treating and drinking is another great evil; for here again workers hardly dare refuse to participate.

These facts will be a surprise to many who had no idea that such arbitrary customs remained amongst us. I have carefully avoided the names of the trades in which these habits are most prevalent, that temperance reformers may study how best to raise the esprit-de-corps of these workers to a higher level. We do not forget that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is the only real lever by which they can ultimately be elevated, but human sympathy and aid is often a necessary precursor to the Gospel message.

THE LATE

Mr. William Nobbs,

EVANGELIST.

LIKE many of his contemporaries in evangelistic work, the late Mr. William Nobbs belonged to the working-class. He was born in the village of Charlton Kings, Gloucestershire, in 1831, and had but little education, for at the age of eight he was sent to work in a brickfield. He was thus engaged until he reached the age of fourteen, when he went to learn the trade of baker and confectioner. Two years later, he went to London, where he worked at his trade for about six years. He married before he was twenty-one, and shortly afterwards, on grounds of health, left the bakery and joined the London police force.

He was at this time a godless young man, caring nothing about spiritual things. He had not been married eighteen months when his wife died, and a few weeks previous to this he had lost his father. Trials and sorrows do not always break hard hearts or subdue stubborn wills; William Nobbs was not unaffected by these, but continued worldly. Leaving the police force, he obtained employment on the South Wales Railway as porter, and after a time was sent to Carmarthen as the platform foreman. From Carmarthen he removed to Worcester, where he heard Mr. Dod, minister of the Countess of Huntingdon's Chapel, preach. The faithful Word aroused his conscience, but as yet he did not yield to the Lord. At length, having joined the county of Gloucester constabulary, and been stationed at Whitminster, God was pleased to bring him to a knowledge of Himself in a remarkable manner.

On Sunday, December 13, 1857, he was ordered to go on duty at Nuppend Baptist Chapel, in the parish of Eastington, near Stroud, to preserve order, as the big lads of the village had become troublesome, and disturbed religious services. It was a rule in that constabulary that each policeman should attend some place of worship once on Sunday, so the sergeant said to William, "Nobbs, you have not been to any place of worship to-day. I want you to go to Nuppend Baptist Chapel, and keep order outside; then when all is quiet, you can go in." Mr. Nobbs did as he was ordered, and in due time went into the chapel; the preacher on the occasion was Mr. Harper, a tradesman of Cheltenham, who preached from the words, "Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of Me and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed when He cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels." The word came with power, leading him at once to decide for Christ.

On returning to the police station to report himself to his sergeant, he said—"You did me a good turn to-night, in sending me to that chapel; it has been the means of my conversion." He then read a portion of Scripture to him and his wife, and spoke to them about their souls. There lived in the village a godly man named George Barnard, and to him the young convert went for help and instruction. This was so fruitful in result that very soon Mr. Nobbs began to distribute tracts and speak to the people, as he went on his rounds of duty. Hence he was called "The Preaching Policeman."

About nine months after his conversion he left the police force, and went through the villages, giving away tracts and reading the Scriptures to the people. He then took a bolder step, and commenced preaching in cottages, and on village greens, soon becoming known as an earnest winner of souls. A friend lent him "The Lord's dealings with George Müller," and, being greatly blessed in reading this book, he was led to trust God to supply his need in temporal things; and the Lord did not fail or forsake his servant.

After about two years he removed to Cheltenham, where many were converted under his preaching. Among those saved several became Gospel workers. Here he married one of like faith and purpose with himself, and the marriage proved singularly happy. One great feature of his work in the Gloucestershire villages was the open-air baptismal services. Mr. Edward Evans, of Brimscombe, in a letter to the writer, says: "I remember well when I was a boy seeing the crowds who came to witness the baptisms in the brook at Chalford on Sunday mornings, and hearing him preach (before going down into the water) to the hundreds assembled. His voice was heard all round the valley, so that many people sat at their windows on the hill-sides, and heard the Word."

Removing to Marshfield, near Bath, he continued evangelistic work in the neighbouring villages, occasionally visiting London and other towns, the Lord using him in the conversion of many. After nearly two years' stay in Marshfield, he left for Gloucester, where his brother, to whom he had been made a blessing, joined him. They frequently preached in the Gloucester Theatre, which had been taken for Sunday services; often from 800 to 1,000 gathered to hear them. In 1873 he went to Ireland, and attended the Believers' Meetings at the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, also at Willow Park, the seat of the late Mr. Bewley, where he met Mr. D. L. Moody. Gathering greater power, Mr. Nobbs launched forth, and undertook preaching tours in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales.

In addition to his gift as an evangelist, Wm. Nobbs was no mean teacher of the Word, and his well-chosen and carefully thought-out Bible readings were greatly appreciated wherever he went, and his services were much sought after at Believers' Meetings and Conferences. During the last seventeen years of his life his home was at Hereford. On Sunday, April 8 last, he preached at Sutton Lakes and Marden, and on the Tuesday evening following he baptized seven persons at the Barton Room, Hereford. On the 12th he left home for Brimscombe, to take part in the Good Friday Conference at Stroud. He felt very unwell, but having attended the meetings for many years he was very desirous to go. He took part in the morning and afternoon meetings, but those present saw that he was ill. In his prayer he said: "Having looked round this morning I miss many dear faces which were here last Good Friday; and, loving Father, ere this time next year some of us may be in thy presence, in the King's Chamber."

On the Saturday morning he was no better but rather worse, and returned home to Hereford, and took to his bed, having developed erysipelas. He suffered severely, but with patience and cheerfulness, and after seven weeks passed peacefully and quietly into the presence of the King on June 2.

The interment took place on June 5, in the burial ground attached to the Barton Room, Hereford. Many brethren and evangelists from various places were present around the grave. He leaves a widow and two sons to mourn his loss. One son is still unmarried, and lives at home with his mother at 3, Shaftesbury Terrace, White Cross Street, Hereford.

THE LIVING TEMPLE.

Regeneration is the building of this temple; covenanting on our part contains the dedication of it; what then can follow but constant possession and use? The regenerate, as such, are sons, both by receiving a new nature, even a Divine (2 Peter i. 4) in their regeneration; and a new title in (what is always conjunct) their adoption. Hereupon the continual supplies of the Spirit in his house (or temple) are the children's bread (Luke xi. 13). Because they are sons, therefore God sends the Spirit of his Son into their hearts (Gal. iv. 6), and He is styled the Spirit of adoption (Rom. viii. 14, 15). John Howe.

THE DEVIL'S PRONOUN.

(Luke xii. 13-21.)

How clear and deep an insight Jesus had into the misery of wealth, when He made the first effect of prosperity on this man to be reasoning within himself and perplexity as to what he was to do! How many rich men cannot sleep for wondering how they are to invest their money! But the perplexity is not altogether displeasing to the farmer. Observe how delicately the pride of ownership is hinted at in the "my's," with which his talk is so plentifully sprinkled—"my fruits," "my barns," "my corn," "my goods," and even "my soul." "My" is the devil's pronoun. Its continual use hardens against the claims of brotherhood and the recognition of God the Giver and Owner of all. Dr. Alex. Maclaren.

Rev. Maurice Phillips, Ph. D.,

OF MADRAS.

AT the recent Œcumenical Missionary Conference at New York the important work of the London Missionary Society in South India was represented by Rev. Maurice Phillips, of Madras. Assuredly no more capable representation could have been arranged.

Born at Llanboidy, in South Wales, in the year 1838, Dr. Phillips is now in his sixty-second year, and has spent almost two-thirds of his life in the service of the London Missionary Society in South India. Going out first in the year 1861, he was appointed to take charge of a new mission which had just been opened at Tripatoor, an important town some fifty miles to the south-west of Madras. Here, and in connection with the neighbouring missions at Salem and Coimbatoor, he laboured for the next twenty-two years with only one visit to England. In 1885, after a second furlough to England, Mr. Phillips was removed to the Madras Mission, one of the oldest of the L.M.S. stations in India, of which he has remained in charge ever since.

South India as a missionary field has always been pre-eminent for successful work among the poorer classes of natives. From the days of Schwartz and Rhenius until now, it seems as though "the common people" of South India have heard gladly the preacher of the Gospel. No doubt their motives have not always been of the highest; but the fact remains that the willingness of the people to listen has given the Christian missionary a great opportunity of proclaiming his message.

Dr. Phillips had not been long in India before he realized the greatness of this opportunity, and prepared himself to use it to the utmost. From the very first, and throughout all his missionary career, he has given himself with fervour to direct evangelistic and itinerating work, and has been greatly blessed in his labours in this direction. Foreseeing that he would be only half equipped for his work unless he had a thorough knowledge of the native language, Mr. Phillips set himself diligently to the acquisition of Tamil. His knowledge of this language is equalled by very few South Indian missionaries, and has proved of great advantage to him, not only in preaching, but also in writing books and tracts in the Tamil tongue.

For Dr. Phillips is a great believer in the power of the Press. On his itinerating tours he always endeavours to dispose of large numbers of Christian books and tracts, and with such success that last year he was able to report: "We have sold 1,436 Bibles and portions, 6,864 tracts, and 6,200 copies of the 'Messenger of Truth,' besides distributing gratis nearly 30,000 handbills. As in previous years, we spent the mornings of November and December in going through the streets and lanes of Madras, selling books and speaking a word in season as we passed along. By this plan we come in contact with many people who do not hear us preach in the regular preaching places."

But Dr. Phillips is not only an evangelist, though that is the work he loves best. He is also a thoroughly capable Tamil scholar, and has made a careful study of the Vedas and other sources of Hindu religion. In 1895 he published in England an important work on "The Teaching of the Vedas"; and two years later he received the rare distinction of being made a Fellow of the Madras University. He has made use of his present furlough to sit for, and to secure, the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at the University of Basle.

Yet, with it all, he holds strongly to the belief that the key to the winning of India for Christ is to be found in the conversion of the uneducated classes, especially the lowest classes of all, the outcasts, or Pariahs. Speaking of these, Dr. Phillips says, "The history of Christianity shows that the Divine method of converting nations is to begin with the poor and ascend to the rich. And the wisdom of this plan in India is palpable to all; the Pariahs are the foundation of the caste system of India; take away this foundation by Christianizing them, and the superstructure must inevitably fall." On the question of the outlook for missionary work in India, Dr. Phillips is very hopeful. "The prospect of mission work in India to-day," he writes, "is as bright as the promises of God, and the promises of God are as bright as the sun at noonday. Our motto must be 'Work—and Victory!'"

Dr. Phillips has had the somewhat unusual distinction of having a village named after him. As an experiment in providing for the needs of poverty-stricken converts (a very difficult problem in South India), a new Christian village has been founded near Madras, and has been given the name of Phillipspuram. It has at the present time more than two hundred inhabitants, and seems to have every prospect of success.

Since his visit to America in April last, Dr. Phillips has been taking his furlough in England, and is in great demand as a missionary deputation. There are few better-known names than his among the Congregational churches of this country.

"Results of Missions."

DEAR SIR,—May I be allowed to amplify somewhat the reference, in your last two issues, to my investigations on the above subject?

My inquiries concerning results of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Mission in 1872-3 were not confined to the numerical results—"permanent accessions to the membership" of the churches. They had a much wider scope, and dealt specifically with the following points:—

1st. Additions to church membership.
2nd. Permanence and quality of such additions, as compared with those made in the ordinary course of the Christian ministry.
3rd. New spheres of Christian activity opened up at or since their mission—an outcome from it—and additions to the number of Christian "workers."
4th. Quickening of the spiritual life, intercourse of Christians of different churches, and indirect results generally.

Among those who replied to these inquiries, I find, in Edinburgh:—Revs. J. H. Wilson (Barclay Free Church), Dr. Andrew Thomson (Broughton Place U.P.); George Wilson (Tolbooth Established); Mr. Robert Wilson, who originated the Sunday Morning Breakfast, which has been continued to this day and has been a nursery of missionaries in the foreign field. In Glasgow:—Dr. Andrew Bonar; Mr. James Scott (who conducted the United Evangelistic Association, an outcome of the mission); Professor Dr. Candlish. Dundee:—Rev. John Macpherson. Berwick-on-Tweed:—Rev. Principal Cairns, and Dr. Maclagan, a much respected medical man (brother of the Archbishop of York).

Coming to Ireland: in Dublin, Captain Kearney White, the well-known secretary of the Scripture Readers Society for Ireland, and Mr. Sutton, the superintendent of the City Mission; in Belfast, Rev. Dr. Williamson gave very decided testimony.

In England, inquiries were made at Birmingham, Newcastle, and Liverpool; from these, similar replies were made by Dr. Dale, Mr. Leitch, and Mr. Thomas Matheson. Last of all, Mr. Spurgeon's testimony may be quoted. He had at first been disappointed in the immediate results, but later he said:—

> It is with the utmost pleasure that we intimate more pleasing tidings . . . we are delighted to have seen and conversed with many who make good disciples and hearty workers. God be thanked for this evermore!"

These reports of eye-witnesses were selected without a thought of the various denominations to which they respectively belong. But it may be interesting to know, that on looking over these testimonies, we find they are furnished by ministers or members of the Church of Scotland, Church of England, Church of Ireland, Free Church, United Presbyterian Church, Scotch Congregationalist, English Congregationalist, Scotch Baptist, and Methodist Churches; and, had they been prepared a little later, it might have been added, from the Society of Friends.

It ought to be borne in mind that Mr. Moody repeatedly said that he and his colleague knew knew themselves to be reapers; that there had evidently been a remarkable preparation for their labours in those two years. Further, and most important, that while they justly "magnified their office" as evangelists, they always exercised it in concert with the ministers of the churches wherever they went. Perhaps there may be some need now that this should be remembered. Is there not some danger of its being forgotten by evangelists of these days?—I am, yours sincerely,

DAVID MCLAREN.

The Indian Famine.

From The Times.

SIR,—I send you below a copy of a telegraphic notice which appeared in the Madras Mail of July 12, 1900, and which appears also in other Indian papers :—

"Railway Difficulties in Northern India.

"Lucknow, July 11.—The B.B. and C.I. Railway Company has advised other railways that through booking of food-stuffs for places in the Rajputana Malwa railway cannot be accepted, owing to the impossibility of working the food traffic, in the absence of water supply for the engines."

If you will be good enough to publish the above in London it will give the good people of England a better idea of the fearful famine now raging in India than anything else is likely to do. People at home have been led to believe that railways in India are all that is needed to protect this country from famine, and that a good and sufficient water supply was a mere craze of the late Sir Arthur Cotton's. As it now appears that railways cannot be worked without a proper and sufficient supply of water, and it is officially declared that the mortality amongst the ryots' cattle is perfectly appalling and the losses incurred thereby beyond computation, and as a blade of grass cannot be grown in India without water, which cannot now be obtained even for the favoured railway works, nor at any time when the rains fail, as they do so frequently nowadays, by the destruction of the forests and jungle to supply the railways with cheap fuel, is it not time for the people of England to inquire why good reservoirs cannot be established in India similar to that now constructing on the Nile, and so preserve this country from the dire effects of famine, without coming on their charity every two or three years?—Yours truly,

J. F. FISCHER, General R.E.

Bangalore, July 14.

P.S.—It is now officially known that the destruction of the ryots' live-stock cannot be estimated; to all this loss we must add the losses of human lives and the labour of years, all caused by the want of a proper water supply, which can be very easily remedied in India if only the opposition to this in England were once got rid of.

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

In the course of a very brief note, PUNDITA RAMABAI writes, under date July 14: "I am glad to say the Lord has given to me nearly 1,400 girls by this time. Please pray for me."

Miss SOONDERBAI H. POWAR writes from the Zenana Training Home, Poona: "Many thanks for help. The Lord sent the money just when I needed it, and He is supplying all our needs. Please pray for my work. I am getting more famine girls."

Writing from Ahmednagar, Mrs. M. A. HAIG says: "In addition to the various kinds of help amongst the children, all going on as before, but with increased numbers, we are now giving clothing and blankets to the old and infirm, and especially to women and children. The change in the season has necessitated this form of relief."

The work at Rev. ALBERT NORTON'S Home for destitute boys at Dhond, Poona, continues to make progress. Over 400 boys have been received. Mr. Norton writes: "Of these 400, some have been passed on to other missionaries and some have died, but about 300 are still with us. As a rule, the lads improve rapidly after coming to us. One of the collectors of this presidency has written saying: 'You can probably have large consignments of orphans soon, if you will send up here for them.'"

Public attention has been drawn to Godhra, Panch Mahals, by the extreme character of the suffering in that district. Rev. GEORGE W. BLAIR, Irish Presbyterian Jungle Tribes Mission, writes thence: "We have taken over from the Government the charge of three villages, and we feed the poor daily, having three workers distributing grain. The majority of these poor people

ARE FEARFULLY EMACIATED.

We are arranging to take over the relief of seven other villages. In Godhra, also, we feed a number of Bhils who have fled from their own villages owing to the famine."

Mrs. L. WHEELER MOORE, of Basim, Berar, writes: "There is great distress here at present (July 12). The rain has come in earnest, and in its train follow disease and death, as well as the springing grass and budding flower. The cholera is claiming many victims. Mr. Moore has distributed clothing and blankets to over 1,700 persons, and it still seems as though nothing had been done. I am at present in need of milk preparations for the little children whom we have taken in, also for the numbers of sick who are too weak to digest ordinary food. It is almost impossible to get milk at any price, as so many of the milk-giving animals have died."

A further communication from Dr. WILLIAM HUNTLY, of the United Presbyterian Mission, Bundi, Kotah, says: "Your readers' help reached me at a time when Mr. Bonner and myself were thinking how to help the villages in the neighbourhood. Mr. Bonner is now clothing and feeding the feeble folks. The clothes of the village women are reduced to rags, and we have commenced the distribution of skirts; these are easily made of native-spun cotton dyed red, and costing about 8d. per skirt. To prevent them from selling their new skirt, they leave the old rags in a heap, which is subsequently burned. . . I saw a few days since over a hundred cases of famine-diarrhœa, and doubted if ten would survive. The chief aim at present is to keep those who have survived thus far from sinking into the famine-diarrhœa period, for at this late period and in this season, when they come for relief, they come to die. Some 5,000 are now on poor relief, and although the state of things is not so horrible as it was some months ago, yet the monsoon is three weeks behind, and if it comes not quickly we cannot even think of what the prospect will become. The people are realizing as never before, if not the sin, at least the uselessness, of their idol worship."

The condition of Gujarat is thus described by Rev. Dr. G. P. TAYLOR, of the Mission House, Ahmedabad:—"You can scarcely know how timely and helpful is the aid from your readers. The is growing fiercer. As yet (July 20) we have had only a single heavy shower. Since then the ground has become quite parched again, and the few farmers who ventured to sow are lamenting the loss of their seed grain. At the end of last year the Government opened a poor-house here; there are 3,900 persons on the rolls to-day. Stretcher parties bearing the dying and others bearing the dead are frequently passing to and from the place. In the Mission compound we are now keeping over 200 women and children, all of whom came to us as famine sufferers. Mrs. Taylor's time is all taken up with her ministry of mercy in their behalf. During their residence with us many of them have very much improved, and it gives no little joy to see them gradually won back to health. Taking an early morning walk, I recently came across the dead body of a fine young fellow, of not more than twenty-two years. It was lying quite exposed, with dogs waiting near to devour it. I was able to secure the good services of the headman of the village, who promised to guard the body until a grave should be ready. Some mornings ago, when fetching a stretcher-party for another lad whom I found dying on the road, I saw, suspended from a tree, the dead body of a woman who had hanged herself rather than endure further misery. . . . What we see is but a fraction of the total distress."

From Deacon Abraham.

IN a letter to us, Deacon Abraham says: "While I desire to make it known that our work is done in entire dependence on the Lord, who has been and is the Fountain of all our blessings, and our Guide and Head, I wish to express hearty gratitude for friendship and help, and especially during my present visit to England. It is now seventeen months since I arrived, and, God willing, I shall leave for home in a month's time. I have extended my visit, in the hope of obtaining an interview with our ruler, the Shah of Persia, for the purpose of gaining some good for my people, but this cannot now be, as his majesty's visit to England has been abandoned. I learn, however, that my noble landlords, Siraj al Saltana Salor al Ikram, and Jomshood Khan Majed Saltana are coming to England, and I am hoping that I may be able to show them, with the help of Christian friends, some of the good of England, and the institutions which we have not in our country.

"Many friends have written to ask me if my visit has been a success. Through the war, and the famine in India, &c., and because every society is interested in its own work, my task has sometimes been hard; but I praise God that He has been with me, and by his goodness I have been enabled to visit and speak in most large towns in England, while I have twice visited Scotland, and once Ireland, holding altogether over a hundred meetings. Now, as I am to face many hardships, the needs of our orphanages, and the distress of our neighbours and many poor refugees, I am anxious to be able to take them some help. This year wheat is almost at famine price—three times more than ordinary; and the last post has just brought me sad news from my wife, Esther. She writes:—'A severe disaster has just befallen us. On June 21, Eastern reckoning (July 3, Western) a terrible hail-storm destroyed the fields of wheat and cotton, and beat down the fruit in the vineyards and orchards. The hail was like large walnuts, and in one place 400 horses were killed; it is dreadful to see the starving people at our doors. We wonder whence the Lord will send supplies for our fifty orphans, and all our family, with teachers and servants, seventy-two souls. We use one sack of flour for bread daily. Our orphans and we daily pray to God for all, and for our English friends, especially for those whom the Lord has led to think of us. Still we trust Him, for his mercies are many. The Kurds have again commenced robbery and other evil deeds. Many have fallen victims to them, and naked and hungry come to us, so that we are obliged to give them a piece of bread. At present we have nothing in hand. Please make this known to our Christian friends.'

"I think it will be well to make this need known, as some of our friends may think that my journeys have resulted in a good sum. I am sorry to say that is not the case. I know that the presence of the Lord is better than all treasures, and I go trusting Him to supply our wants. "Jehovah Jireh," or, as we say in Syriac, "Marya Nikhzi" is still his name. Our hon. treasurer is W. Wainwright, Esq., Horham Grange, Sussex; our hon. secretary is Miss Barclay, Urie House, Tranton Road, Bermondsey, S.E. Letters to me in Persia (2½d. stamp) should be addressed only—Deacon Abraham, Urumiah (not Oroomiah), Persia."

Sailors' Institute, Bilbao, Spain.—We are in urgent need of literature for sailors visiting this port—pictorial tracts, copies of THE CHRISTIAN, "Penny Stories," &c. We are a branch of the "British and Foreign Sailors' Society."—WM. J. MANSFIELD, Missionary, Apartado, 192, Bilbao.

Hobart, Tasmania.—Christian work in this part of the colony is being substantially helped forward by the publication of a magazine, The Christian Record. The chief feature of the periodical is the definite promotion of evangelical truth, and from a recent number, which contains a full report of the 1900 Synod, the paper promises to maintain the ideal set before it.

A Letter from Tientsin.

A LETTER, dated Tientsin, June 14, has been received from Rev. T. Bryson, of the London Missionary Society, by his friends in England.

In it, after describing the destruction of the railway line at various points between Tientsin and Peking, he continues:—

"We are now anxiously waiting for news from the front. This is the fifth day since the force left Tientsin. We know they have had one encounter with the Boxers, and killed some scores—no casualties on our side. The poor Boxers are an undisciplined, ignorant, fanatical horde, who could not stand against the merest handful of armed men. They are to be pitied, though, at the same time, they are bloodthirsty and cruel enough to revenge themselves upon innocent, undefended countrymen, who may be suspected of having any connection with foreigners or the Christian faith. The reign of terror against Christians throughout the district between Tientsin and Peking is awful. Many have lost their all, some their lives. Men, women, and even children have been murdered.

"I wish I could give you a calm and detailed account of our last Sunday's services in the hospital waiting-room, which was crowded. The chapels at the Ma-chia-kou and within the city are closed with official seals to protect them against mob violence, so we meet in the hospital. I conducted the service, and after a short address gave the Christians an opportunity to speak or pray. We had a splendid address from old Tsni, whose son was lying seriously ill with scarlet fever, and many others spoke well, but you should have heard one poor fellow—no—the tale was too sad. A man began to tell how he himself had escaped, though his aged father and mother had been murdered and their bodies thrown into the river. The poor fellow sobbed and broke down as he went on with the story till nearly all the women and many of the men were in tears. The place was a Bochim. We have a large number of refugees with us here, and are doing our best to care for them. An English gunboat has gone to Kei-tai-ho, and the foreigners there are perfectly safe, but the panic has spread to their servants, and many of them are running away, and a telegram has just come in as I write from Mr. Keers, saying that our Chao-yaing missionaries, with the ladies of the Irish Presbyterian Mission at Ching-chow, left that city for Newchwang yesterday.

"I need not write; do not be anxious about us here, for telegrams will be giving you all the news long before this reaches you. Only let me add that we are in perfect peace, fearing no evil, because our trust is in God, who ruleth all."

Eurasian Children.

DESCRIBING her work for Eurasian children at Bangalore, Miss L. H. Anstey writes: "I have had the Home for nine years. Missionary operations amongst Eurasians are difficult, because Europeans take a greater interest in native work. There is little regard shown for the Eurasians, but we believe in God's power to save them.

"A number of the young people in connection with our Home desire to confess publicly their determination to live for Him who died for them. They are to be immersed in the waters of the Ulsoor Tank. One is a lad of Chinese and European parentage, another is of Burmese and Chinese, and the others are Eurasians.

"The rooms and hall of our home are very large and convenient. Owing to reports that the premises were ghost-haunted, they remained unoccupied for very many years; therefore the owner lessened the rent for our advantage. Even when we left, during the year of the plague, 1898-9, the place remained vacant, so the landlord was glad to receive us again.

"The children are industrious; they sweep the large compound morning and evening, one of the elder girls superintending. The sewing and cooking is also done by them."

Canadian Annual Meetings.

THREE of these have lately been held, and the results have been on the whole encouraging. The first was the Congregational Union at Montreal. The programme resolved itself about the work at home, the wider circle of Congregationalism in other lands, the broader ground upon which fellowship is invited with other churches, and the yet wider field of service which considers the whole of man and all men. The chairman's address, by Mr. Edmund Yeigh, of Toronto, was on a timely topic, "The Making of an Empire," while the home missionary addresses, by Revs. Hugh Pedley and A. F. McGregor, and the foreign missionary addresses, by Miss Emily Wheeler and Rev. F. W. Macallum, two missionaries from Turkey, were particularly good and inspiring. Among the other topics considered were Prison Reform, Temperance, Sunday Observance, the Labour Problem, and the Federation of the Churches.

The next gathering was the Presbyterian Assembly at Halifax. Here was seen the strength and influence of Presbyterianism in the increase of 10,118 to the membership, and the financial receipts of 2,384,897dols. Concerning the Century Fund, 709,383dols. was reported, so that the one million goal is already more than assured. Church life and work was reported to be more than usually satisfactory, and indicated a deeper earnestness on the part of the membership. Sunday school effort was also pointed out as gratifying, though the Young People's Societies showed a considerable decrease. The Assembly recommended the study of the Bible in the public schools, and sounded an earnest warning against the increasing lack of Sunday observance. The work of the Church in connection with education, home and foreign missions, as seen by the different reports, was marked by great encouragement, and altogether the gathering was one of the best in the history of the Church.

The third gathering was the Baptist Convention at Winnipeg. Here, too, was seen the rapid growth of another denomination during recent years. In Ontario and Quebec alone the offerings for home missionary purposes have trebled during the past fifteen years, while a large number of the churches have become self-supporting. The reports on foreign missionary work and education were equally encouraging. An address by Professor Farmer, of Toronto, on "The Relation of Christianity to Social Problems," emphasized the regeneration of the individual, as did the discussions which followed. Following a paper on "Political Corruption and the Relation of the Church Thereto," was a resolution urging greater interest in affairs of State. On the temperance question the Convention emphatically declared for prohibition. The following topics will further show the varied character of the programme:—"The Baptists and the Bible," "The Man Problem," and "The Training of the Young," which helped to make the first national gathering of the Baptists one of interest and power.

"The Exhibition City."

A PAMPHLET, entitled "A Few Words from the Exhibition City," has been issued by Commissioner and Mrs. Booth-Hellberg, of the Salvation Army. It gives a pithy account of the work throughout France, and adduces a number of interesting incidents in connection with the slum and rescue operations.

An accompanying letter adds:—"You will be glad to know that we have at the present time eight halls in Paris alone, in addition to three slum posts and other social branches. We are making efforts to reach with the Gospel a portion of the multitudes from all lands who are crowding to Paris this summer. To this end we have, amongst other measures, rented a small plot of ground inside the Exhibition itself, on which we have erected a kiosk, where our officers talk to the people, distribute Salvation literature, answer inquiries, and give information upon our work in general. They also mix with the crowd, and visit the restaurants inside the Exhibition, singing their songs of salvation." The address of the Salvation Army headquarters in France is 3, Rue Auber, Paris.

Church Reform in Spain.

WE recently reported the breakdown of the false accusation against four Spanish Reformers who were charged with disrespect to a procession they could not possibly have seen. The Cathedral authorities of Zamora organized "a special service of humiliation for the toleration of the execrable sect of Protestants—degenerates and bad characters who had lost all trace of national and patriotic honour." While the service was taking place, the village Court of Villaescusa was deliberating upon the decision of the Provincial Court. The local officials, acting on the instigation of the resident ecclesiastic, described the alleged act of the reformers—which the judge and jury said did not take place, as "abominably—premeditated," and denounced their conduct in unmeasured terms, concluding with the remark that, as they had "to take special care to follow public opinion, and to reflect it in their acts, they must say that public execration has covered the perpetrators of this unspeakable contempt, as by their actions they lacerated the heart of the faithful in Villaescusa, and horrified the entire Catholic Society."

In consequence of this necessity of following public opinion, the Court has now condemned men who had been acquitted on the same charge by judge and jury, to a fine of £1, payment of costs, and seven days' imprisonment. Only in Spain could such judgment be given, and it shows the hostility which the reformers are called upon to face.

Medical Missions in North Ceylon.

IN the course of an account of medical missions in North Ceylon, the Misses Leitch write:—"The two large hospitals now in North Ceylon, with four dispensaries and two nurses' training schools, in the charge of four fully-qualified physicians, and an adequate staff of native helpers, in connection with which about 8,800 treatments were given the past year—these are standing memorials of answered prayer. The sums which we have, by God's help, been enabled to collect in Great Britain and America for these two medical missions, i.e., for land, buildings, endowment, and current expenses to date, amount to 55,226.75dols. These two medical missions are under the care of the American Board, the doctors in charge being missionaries of the Board.

"The General Medical Mission, which is located at Manepy, near the centre of the province, was opened in 1893. This work is under the care of Rev. T. B. Scott, M.D., and Mrs. T. B. Scott, M.D. The Women's Medical Mission, which is located at Inuvil, about one and one-half miles from the General Medical Mission, and which was opened in 1898, is under the care of Miss Isabella H. Curr, M.D., and Miss Annie Young, M.D. There is a staff of a dozen or more native assistants connected with each institution, all of whom are Christians. These two hospitals are easily accessible to 300,000 people.

"The setting on foot of these two strong medical missions has not only resulted in relieving much suffering, but has also helped materially to check an opposition movement which, owing to the establishment of a Hindu College and more than eighty Hindu day-schools, was at one time threatening to seriously impede the mission work.

"Natives of all nationalities and creeds in the community avail themselves of the advantages of these hospitals. Nearly 3,000dols were received last year in fees and for medicines, which sum met about 80 per cent. of the current expenses, exclusive of the support of the missionary physicians."

Communications for the Misses Mary and Margaret W. Leitch may be addressed care of Mr. C. E. Swett, 14, Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.

Kurdish Tyranny.

A CORRESPONDENT in Turkey in Asia writes: "A letter is just to hand from one of the workers in Persia, who has passed this way to visit his charge among the Nestorians of the Kurdish mountains. He found nearly forty villages burned, plundered, and largely deserted from the depredations of a Kurdish chieftain, Mustafa Pasha.

"Our friend was delayed a week in Jezereh from danger en route from the presence of said tyrant, who impressed a whole caravan into his employ for a week, and forced the few poor villagers to supply, as the last thing before he left, breakfast for 200 persons.

"To look upon the desolated villages, ravaged fields and burning forests, while the poor villagers looked down from the hidings among the rocks to see the Kurds harvesting their crops, was, our friend says, 'one of the saddest sights I have seen.' We think these regions desolate indeed, but he calls them 'prosperous' as compared with what he saw. Much as the Turkish Government may care to control the Kurd, it is far from easy now that he is set upon his feet as 'Hamidieh,' or reserve force for the Sultan."

The Moravian Missions.

ALTHOUGH the response to the recent appeals of the Society for the Furtherance of the Gospel among the Heathen, on behalf of the "Labrador Ship," and the "Ship and Emergency" Funds, has been generous and hearty, the needs of Labrador at the present time are numerous and urgent. The S.F.G. is an organization within, but separate from, the General Missions Board of the Moravian Church, and from the first has met the requirements, and raised the bulk of the funds for this particular field. The Moravian Quarterly of the London Association announces that the capital funds of the Society have had to be attacked, and that "matters have now become so acute that unless further substantial aid is forthcoming soon, the Labrador Mission will become a charge upon the already overtaxed General Fund or have to be abandoned."

The support given to the Medical Missionary Training Home is unhappily inadequate to its demands, and these financial anxieties are further aggravated by a debt of some £400 on the Leper Home. This ancient and noble missionary enterprise has peculiar claims upon the practical sympathy of all who have at heart the true interests of the human race. It is well known that its founders, the United Brethren, were Protestants before the time of the Reformation, and that the Protestant character of the missions has been maintained—often at the cost of persecution, bloodshed, and martyrdom—unimpaired to the present day.

It will be remembered that the "Morton Legacy" was for extension only, and cannot be applied to existing work, the funds of which greatly need replenishing. The secretary of the London Association of the Moravian Missions is Rev. W. Wetton Cox, 7, New Court, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

God's Little Things.

Only a sunbeam's ray!
But it brightly fell on a sufferer's bed,
Lifting his thoughts to a happier sphere;
It shone in a dark and dreary court,
Speaking to toilers a word of cheer,
Telling of One who, tho' hidden from sight,
'Midst suffering and toiling could keep us bright.

Only a letter of love!
But it seemed God's message to weary hearts,
Burdened and tried with care;
It told God's servants in distant lands
They were not forgotten in prayer;
It came to the one who was going astray
And helped him to choose the better way.

Only a kindly word!
But it nerved another the battle to fight,
Sweeten'd some cup of pain;
It cheered the grief of a sadden'd heart,
Bid the downcast hope again.
We never can tell what our words may do,
It would make us watch if we only knew.

Only these little things!
But a word of cheer and the kindly deed
That spring from love to the Lord,
Will bring to others some blessing and help,
Will in no wise lose their reward.
And the life that for others' good we spend
Will prove the happiest in the end. S.J.H.

Clifton Conference. — The thirty-eighth annual Conference at Clifton, to be held October 2—4, selects "The Atonement of Christ" as its theme. These Conferences have been marked by their fidelity to the fundamental doctrines of free grace, and have been a means by which many have been brought into a realization of the "deep things of God." Communications respecting the Conference should be addressed to the Convener, 3, Berkeley Square, Clifton, Bristol.

Soldiers in South Africa.

IN a letter thanking Mr. A. Holness for a parcel of tracts, Mr. Spencer Walton writes:

"They will be carefully used. God bless the messages of life to many. We have had very trying times in our little colony, but times of remarkable blessing. Many dear lads in our army have stepped over the line. We have worked for the last two months with the 1st Cavalry Brigade in Natal, and nearly 200 have come out on the Lord's side. During Ladysmith siege our missionaries did a grand work for God.

"I wonder if you will recognise your old friend in enclosed photo. It is an interesting one. I am sitting next to the Tonga King. Last year I pioneered his district and established the first Mission Station in British Amatongaland.

"Next May we hope to come home on a much-needed furlough. Next month I am off to British Amatongaland to settle about more stations, leaving here on 28th. Pray for me and ask for prayer."

Mr. Percy Bateman, of Leeuw River Mills, viâ Bloemfontein (June 27), writes:

"We are having some good meetings with our Yeomanry friends stationed here, and I am hoping many may receive definite blessing. We have them in our dining-room. Amongst them we have a son of Mr. Richard Cory, of Cardiff, of whom you doubtless know. Pray for us, as we do for you."

MR. SPENCER WALTON AND THE KING.

Ongole Faith Orphanage, India.

WHILE the famine has not raged with its greatest intensity in the Ongole district, there have been many pitiable sights and scenes of suffering and deprivation. Writing from the Faith Orphanage, Rev. H. Huizinga cites a case representative of many similar sad incidents:—

"A little Mohammedan baby girl, six months old, was brought to me by its emaciated mother. 'Take it, sir,' she said, 'I have no food for myself, and no milk for this child and its twin sister.' I took the little skeleton baby into the Orphanage, and gave the mother a small sum to help her take care of herself and her remaining child. Our little one has greatly improved since it was brought to us, and the other children are very fond of it.

"The number of orphans who are brought to us is increasing daily. We hope to be able to receive all who come, and to provide for them until they are grown up. We shall teach them all, if possible, to read the Bible and to write. We shall also teach them to work, and make them better fitted for their environment in after life. The various details of the problems arising from the assumption of the care of so many homeless waifs are constantly before the directors and the advisory council. We look to God, the Father of the fatherless, both for guidance and for means to carry on this work."

American Notes.

THE Volunteers of America, under the leadership of General and Mrs. Ballington Booth, are steadily building up a solid and progressive evangelistic work all over the northern part of the country. The leaders of the movement are now visiting a series of Chautauqua assemblies, where each will address large audiences. While the fact that much of the work of the Volunteers is done avowedly in connection with churches tends to conceal its extent, yet the good is really accomplished, as the membership rolls of the churches show, and the increasing number of friendly pastors proves. In Chicago, recently, the local officers gave an outing on "Poor Children's Day" to 20,000 poor children in Washington Park, the lunches having been prepared for the occasion by the children of the public schools of the city.

Mrs. Booth's prison work is still extending, and is now carried on in eleven of the largest establishments in the country, the latest being that at Columbus, O. A recent visit of Mrs. Booth to the Pacific Coast gave a great stimulus to the local "posts," and obtained for them many new friends. At San Jose, California, the Volunteers are rejoicing over the conversion of "Lulu," a quadroon native of Fiji, who was a cannibal in his youth. The San Jose News says, in an article about him:—"Brought up by his savage mother, he was present at many of the barbaric rites and sacrifices of his tribe, and he relates in a graphic manner tales of cannibal feasts and orgies at which he was present in his younger days. About eight years ago, Lulu went to Australia, and thence to different ports, until a few weeks since he found his way to San Jose. Falling in with the Volunteers he shortly espoused the Christian religion, and has since been doing yeoman's work in expounding his new-found faith on the street corners, and in the 'Armory' (Volunteer Hall), in a characteristic and striking manner."

Coney Island is a seaside resort on New York Harbour—a kind of Margate in some respects, only with a reputation for shows, vulgarity, and rascality that no English watering-place possesses of which I ever heard. Mr. J. D. Hughes has for several seasons been engaged in soul-saving work at this place—notoriously in need of such effort — and now he has erected a Gospel Lighthouse, which throws the words, "Jesus saves" high up into the air by means of electric apparatus, The light revolves from north to east, thence to south, to west, and back to north again. It can be seen, not only all over the island, but for miles beyond. The first display took place on Saturday evening. Mr. Hughes said that while he did not wish to be sensational in his methods, he believed the words thrown on the sky by the lighthouse would make some people think about eternal things with whom ordinary measures had hitherto failed. He expects before long to have a projectoscope attachment that will throw whole texts from the Bible into the air.

ROGER MARTIN.

The Giants of Ethiopia.

SIR,—As anything which throws light upon Scripture is of interest to Christians, may I draw attention to a point which, so far as I am aware, has not yet been publicly noticed.

Captain Welby, in his journey a year ago through Abyssinia and regions south-west of that country, reported that "one tribe, the Firkana, was of immense stature, most of the men being seven feet in height."

Mr. E. S. Grogan, who traversed the African Continent from the Cape to Cairo, speaks of encountering, in the region of the Upper Nile, the Dinka tribe, regarding which he says: "They are of colossal stature; some of the herdmen I saw must have been very nearly seven feet, and in every settlement the majority of the men towered above me, while my boys seemed the merest pigmies by their side" (see the Geographical Journal for August, p. 179).

In Isaiah xlv. 14 we read:—"Thus saith the Lord, the labour of Egypt, and merchandise of Ethiopia and of the Sabeans, men of stature, shall come over unto thee, and they shall be thine: they shall come after thee; in chains they shall come over, and they shall fall down unto thee, they shall make supplication unto thee, saying, Surely God is in thee; and there is none else, there is no God." It would thus appear that the day of blessing to Israel will also bring blessing to these physically noble but spiritually neglected tribes.

Yours truly, C.N.B.M.

What a Little Girl Did.

I AM glad to acknowledge 10s. for the Indian Famine, which has been collected by a little girl of five years. This is what her aunt says:—"I told her about the poor little Indian children, and suggested that she should try to help them. She found a small cardboard box, made a hole in the lid, and went about amongst her grandmother's workpeople and servants, asking for pennies for the 'poor little children that are starving.' Some of course gave her more than the penny, and some guests helped too. I thought perhaps you might like to tell your readers about her, in the hope of inciting other children to do likewise."

"For Valour"—"For Love."

A VISITOR called one bright afternoon in the sweet spring-time to see a young girl about sixteen who is suffering from rheumatism in a very acute form, so that she is quite crippled in her limbs. Her sofa-bed had been moved close up to the window in the pleasant cottage that looked out on a good garden where daffodils and other flowers grew. On the window-sill and on the table near her were flowers sent by friends.

"I have hardly got a finger to offer you," said the sufferer. "You see I am all bandaged up in cotton wool as though I had been wounded by the Boers in South Africa."

The visitor very gently stroked the back of one hand, worn and wasted with pain, and then sat down to talk to the patient, the mother telling of the agony that had to be endured night and day, and of the sleepless hours, and the weary pain in every limb and joint. The mother said how sad it was to have to see her daughter suffer so continually and be able to do so little to give relief. "If I could only bear some of the pain for her I don't think I should mind"—though the poor mother herself was knocked up with the nine weeks of incessant nursing.

The home is a Christian one, and both father, mother and sick daughter are earnest Christians and love the Saviour. After a little chat and prayer the mother spoke beautifully about the uncomplaining patience and the courage and faith of this tried disciple and said she was sure that there were many soldiers on the battlefield who did not bear their pain and torture with more heroism than her daughter. I am sure she has deserved her medal.

The girl said:—"I think as I lie here how I should like to win the Victoria Cross, or at least be worthy of one; for is not that the greatest honour in the army?"

"Yes, it is only given for most conspicuous deeds of bravery," said the visitor. "It is a bronze cross, very simple in its design, but it bears the word most coveted by officers as well as men—'For Valour.' You have to endure this pain alone—not for Queen and country, for King Jesus has given you a cross to wear for Him. There is one eye that sees and knows all you have to endure, and though you may not win the glory of the Victoria Cross you have gained a greater and more glorious one, which you may silently and lovingly 'take up' for Him who died on Calvary, crucified for us. May you be able to bless God that you have found and wore the cross for Him."

And going out, the visitor felt what a privilege it was to see and know some one who had taken to her heart her cross of suffering, that some day will be exchanged for the crown of glory.

The pathos and the sadness of the war in South Africa is bright with deeds of heroism and bravery wrought by men faithful to the discharge of a soldier's duty; but there are thousands of humble followers of Jesus who are bearing in fortitude and faith untold pain in humble homes that will win no earthly renown. Their names, however, are written in heaven, and their reward will be joy unspeakable in the Father's House. The Victoria Cross is gained for merit by costly sacrifice, and is given only for valour; the Cross of Jesus is not for merit, but on it are inscribed the immortal words, "For Love."

A Child's Petition.

I'm but a child! yet e'en a tiny light
Will help to scatter darkness. Let me be,
O Lord, a little flame that gloweth bright:
A shining beacon, guiding lives to Thee.

I'm but a child! yet little drops of dew
Refresh the earth and make the daisies glad.
My gifts are small, I know, and graces few;
But use me, Lord, to comfort hearts so sad.

I'm but a child! yet oft a wee, sweet flower—
A violet or primrose gathered wild—
Has served to cheer some life in sorrow's hour;
Thus, Lord, make me a ministering child.

I'm but a child! yet lowly lark on wing
Floods earth with music, and the skies with praise.
So teach my little voice thy love to sing,
That I may help some drooping soul to raise.

I'm but a child! yet since my Lord doth make Earth's smallest things his gracious ends fulfil;
I'll ask Him now my little all to take,
And make my life to serve his blessed will.

Jesus the Good Shepherd.—John x. 1-16.

Golden Text.—"The Good Shepherd giveth his life for the sheep."—John x. 11.

Introduction.

The lesson is full of suggestions. We can only take two or three, and the principal ones are—

The SHEPHERD
SHEEP
STRANGER

The Shepherd is the Saviour. The sheep are his children. The stranger is his children's enemy. (Describe an Eastern shepherd. How he goes in front of his sheep, how he names them, how he puts them in a fold, &c., &c.)

Key to Blackboard Plan.—Notice the word "one."

ONE Shepherd Fold Way

Each of these would make a whole lesson. Study, too, "safe" and "unsafe," and the reasons why they are safe and unsafe.

Shepherd.

We all know the picture of the Good Shepherd, with a little lamb in his arms. The Good Shepherd. He is good. See what He does for the sheep.

Calls by name (3). See Rev. ii. 17.
Leads them (3). See Rev. vii. 17.
Knows each one (14). See Nahum i. 7.
Gives his own life for them (11). See John xix. 30.
Goes before to show the way (4). See Luke i. 79.

Compare Ezekiel xxxiv. 10, I will deliver my flock; (11) search them, seek them; (13) feed them; (16) strengthen them; (22) save them. See also Deut. i. 30, John xv. 13.

The {Great / Good / Chief} SHEPHERD {Heb. xiii. 20. / John x. 11. / 1 Peter v. 4.}

Sheep.

The sheep are the Good Shepherd's children, those who love Him and obey Him. They Hear his voice (3). See Hab. ii. 1.

Follow Him (4). See Luke v. 11.
Know Him (4). See 2 Tim. i. 12.
Are saved (9). See Rom. v. 9, 10.
Want others to come (16). See Luke xxiv. 48.

There are other sheep, and Christ wants them too (Isa. lvi. 8). There shall be one fold (Ezek. xxxvii. 22, Eph. ii. 14, 1 Pet. ii. 25). Let us ask to understand all this (6).

Stranger.

The word "stranger" has other names to explain it: (10) "thief;" (12) "hireling." All are opposed to the Good Shepherd; all try to do the sheep harm. He climbs up and tries to get over the wall of the fold (1). He tries to attract the sheep and get them to follow him (5). If danger arise, he runs away and leaves the sheep to be killed (12, 13). Silly sheep, to leave the care of the only one Good Shepherd and wander off to other leaders! It is danger, danger all round. Come back to the fold and never stray again (Isa. lvi. 10-12, Ezek. xxxiv. 2-5, Rom. xvi. 18, 2 Cor. xi. 13-15). Ask, pray earnestly, that the Great Shepherd will keep you close to Him and never let you get under the influence of such who call themselves shepherds, but are strangers, thieves, hirelings.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 19.

The Woes of the Drunkard (Prov. xxiii. 29-35).

THE need of our times is desperate. Each year our country is adding more millions to the already fabulous figures of the drink bill. The condition of our streets at night, when the public-houses close, baffles description. Even in broad daylight, respectably-dressed people may be seen, in increasing numbers, under the influence of liquor. For drink artizans neglect their work, and mothers their babes. Because of strong drink, homes that might be happy are desolate. Women, to an extent which a few years ago would have been deemed impossible, go to public-houses, or fetch drink to their homes, and get drunk together. Lads and girls in their teens get drunk. What is to be done? The State is paralyzed; it is useless to look to the Government for help. Young friends of the C.E. Societies, it is for you to save your country. You must do it by individual and collective effort. Let each place himself, though his influence be but an ounce weight, in the scale against the liquor traffic.

It would be hard, in the denunciations of the most vehement teetotaler, to excel these terrible words by the wisest of men. The love of strong drink brings woe and sorrow, as when the newly-married wife wakes up to see that her husband is beginning to frequent the public-house, or to like the intoxicating cup, or when the child finds itself neglected because the parent is hopelessly incapable. As for complaining—what depression follows on the night's debauch! And as for wounds—what would equal the hurt done to property and health? The wine may be tempting enough to eye and taste. Cup after cup goeth down so smoothly. The company is so stimulating, the sense of enlargement and liberty so bewitching. But, like the syren sisters of olden fable, there is but one end—at last . . . The Egyptians had, at their feasts, cups, at the bottom of which a serpent was modelled, in the act of striking with its forked tongue, so that when the reveller had got beyond the first half of his potation, he might be suddenly accosted and arrested by the emblem of his awful peril. It biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder. Sir Andrew Clark said: "I am speaking solemnly and carefully, and I tell you that I am considerably within the mark when I say to you that going the round of my hospital wards to-day, seven out of ten there owed their ill-health to alcohol. When I think of all this, I am disposed to give up my profession, and to go forth upon a holy crusade, preaching to all men, Beware of this enemy of the race." Sir Henry Thompson said: "I have no hesitation in attributing a very large proportion of the most painful and dangerous maladies which come under my notice to the ordinary and daily use of fermented drink, taken in the quantity conventionally termed moderate." Sir William Gull said: "Where alcohol is taken, even in moderation, it deadens the nervous system, spoils the health, and spoils the intellect, by injuring the nervous tissue of the brain."

How strong are the reasons then for adopting the vow of Total Abstinence for ourselves and for others, according to those noble words of the Apostle Paul: "If meat maketh my brother to stumble, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, that I make not my brother to stumble" (1 Cor. viii. 13).

I heard an affecting story the other day of a young lad, a South American native, who was conducting a missionary through the forest, and was suddenly stung by a dangerous snake. Instantly his leg began to swell, and the poison began to spread. The missionary sliced off a large portion of his flesh, just by the bite, but in vain. The lad did not fear death, but longed to live that he might preach the Gospel to his own people. Then the missionary suddenly bethought him of sucking the poison from the wound, and it saved that young life, which is now expended in the service of God. So let us, so to speak, by our entreaties, tears, prayers, and example, rid our friends and neighbours, so far as lies in our power, from the terrible effects of the love of strong drink, which, as this context shows, leads to other and nameless evils.

C.E. NOTES.

Junior societies in the United States are able to do much "Sunshine" work. News comes of a society in Detroit formed amongst the children of the slums. Having no money to give, they have recently made a patchwork quilt for those poorer than themselves. Once in four or five weeks they hold "Sunshine meetings." This means that they will go to the home of some old lady, or "shut in" person, and stay for about half an hour, singing hymns, repeating Scripture verses, and sentence prayers. Often the people from the neighbourhood will gather about the door and seem much interested.

There are nine societies of Christian Endeavour in the Samoan Islands, with a membership of nearly 1,000. The native pastors speak much of the blessing received through the movement. The inhabitants of one island collected £18 to send the Gospel to the heathen. Most of those who joined the first society, started in the island of Malua in 1890, have since offered themselves for mission work in distant out-stations, and the large heathen island of New Guinea. The members of the Society in Malua include the King, and his humblest subject, "One in Christ Jesus!"

Calvinistic Methodists.

THE recent meetings of the South Wales Calvinistic Methodist Association, held at Cwmbwrla, near Swansea, were full of blessing. The Twentieth Century Fund meeting was well attended. It is aimed to raise £100,000 towards church extension and other praiseworthy objects. The missionary meeting was a glorious occasion. Two workers from the Indian field, Rev. J. Ceredig Evans and Miss Laura Evans, spoke with much earnestness. At the close, when the first-named missionary was singing a hymn in Khasi, translated from an old Welsh hymn, familiar throughout the Principality, a striking scene was witnessed. The congregation rose, and continued singing the refrain again and again with deep feeling.

On the Wednesday afternoon an open-air service was held, Revs. Dr. Rees, of Merthyr, and S. T. Jones, of Rhyl, preaching to some thousands of people. The service was a powerful one, and the people were deeply stirred. The climax of the gatherings was reached in he last service, when Rev. S. T. Jones spoke on the awfulness of the Judgment Day. The impressive character of this service will long be remembered by those privileged to be present.

Middle-aged ministers declared that they had never attended such powerful services as these. The preaching was Christ-centric, and for that reason it reached human hearts as nothing but the Gospel can.

D. H.

Welcome Home, Canning Town, E.—The August muster of "The Christian Life Boat crew" was well attended, a special feature being the large number of seafaring members. Miss Child opened the meeting by giving out the text for the month, Psa. cxv. 12, referring to the blessings received throughout the past month. One of the seafaring members, who had come a considerable distance at his own expense, expressed gratitude to God for his acquaintance with the Home. Miss Reed, from Oporto; Peter Carroll, from s.s. Kent; Captain Wrake, of H.M.S. Alert; and several others followed with terse addresses. Mr. Blaauw, Miss Child's valued helper, thanked God for restoring mercies, and for sending a co-worker along in the time of need. Friends who take sympathetic interest in the work carried on by Miss Child, will be glad to know that the premises have been secured, although there is still a balance to be made up.

Among the Hop-Pickers.

MEDICAL MISSION WORK.

LAST year I had the privilege of organizing some relief for the sick amongst the hop-pickers, combined with definite spiritual, Evangelical teaching and influence. Our relations, I am happy to say, were most friendly with all other Christian workers in the three parishes with which we attempted to deal last year, and some of the most experienced fellow-labourers told us that they had never seen the hearts of the people so softened as they were by the Medical Mission aid.

In the parish and the immediate vicinity of Paddock Wood, there is an invasion of about 7,000 people for hop-picking during the month of September; in Yalding, &c., about 6,000; in Hunton, &c., about 4,000. The majority of these are home-heathen indeed, and revolting scenes take place which even benighted heathen races would not tolerate in their kraals.

Amongst such vast numbers, with such completely changed conditions of life from one-roomed homes in city slums to living in tents and huts, with the temptation to eat unripe fruit and rashly drink impure water, and the casualties from burning and scalding, which result from cooking in the open air, sprains, cuts, &c., I need not say that such Christian sympathy and help are most necessary and much appreciated. The County Council provides a cholera mixture, but in one parish, at any rate, the seven places where alone it could be obtained by the public generally were all beershops!

The cost of providing a Medical Mission station complete, with tent, dispensary, seats for Gospel service, &c., I have been able to reduce to £48. We should like to see eight such stations at work during the hop-picking next month. For the work in prospect this year, we shall need the assistance of at least four Christian doctors, and twenty Christian women with trained nursing experience. Beside their help, we shall welcome offers of personal service from about twenty whole-hearted Christian workers for conducting open-air meetings in the hop-pickers' camps, the village streets, &c., and for tract distribution in the hop-gardens during working hours.

I hope that in a few weeks a council of representative Christian friends will be formed to accept the responsibility of guiding and sustaining this undertaking. I can only say in over thirty years' experience of home-missionary work, I do not know any effort more urgently necessary. Meanwhile, I shall be very pleased to hear from any who are moved to help in carrying out our Lord's injunction—"heal the sick, preach the Word"—amongst these poor people.

THE GOLDEN KEY.

In the first week in September there will be gathered in our district people out of great cities, country towns, and scattered villages, tramps and gipsies, with no place to call home, of every age and conceivable class. Such a sight, surely, as affords scope for the the Spirit of the Lord Jesus when "He had compassion on the multitude."

Many of them are vicious, superstitious, profane, and yet not without gratitude, as appears by one of this class meeting one of our workers in a distant town, saying, "I am proud to shake hands with a man who tries to do our folk good." For many years past five tents have been erected for tea, Gospel meetings, services of song, magic lantern exhibitions, temperance meetings, &c. Last season nearly 200 meetings were held with an aggregate attendance of something like 18,000. Fifteen Missionaries were employed, and we were fortunate in having in our band members of the St. John's Ambulance Association, who were able to be of service in several instances in remote places. This is a new feature, and we hope may be yet further developed.

Who can tell what may be the golden key to open hearts? Many of our old friends and supporters have recently passed away, and we therefore ask for kind help and sympathy to enable us to go forward. Books and tracts will be gratefully received.

HEREFORD AND WORCESTER.

Worcestershire and Herefordshire hop-pickers are often forgotten in the mission work carried on at this season of the year; but for several years. Mr. Jones and myself have visited among them, and we hope to do the same this year, looking to the Lord to supply our need, both as to expense and literature.

As there is no fund for this work, and as each year we are able to visit a greater number of hop-yards, it becomes more and more necessary to make this appeal. The people know us and we know them, and they are always glad to welcome us. It is real hard work, but work that God blesses, and we gladly undertake it as before. Communications, tracts, books, &c., may be addressed care of Mr. Clissett, Stanley Hill, Ledbury. William Luff.

Rev. John Burnham writes: "The Evangelistic Hymn Book (½d., recently issued by Messrs. Morgan & Scott), is just what we want for our work among the hop-pickers. But our work in Worcestershire is new, and we are opening another centre in the region of Bromyard, demanding all our funds, and more. If some good friend should be moved to give us a few hundred copies, the gift would be most welcome."

The Evangelization Society.

IT will interest many readers to hear how greatly the Lord is blessing our tent work this season in many counties. During the last three months we have a large increase in the number of meetings taken, and some of the tents are proving too small for the numbers who flock to hear the Word, especially on Sundays. We are preaching in tents in various places, from Ross and Cromarty to Cornwall.

It is probably known to most that the Society uses no methods to induce large attendances which in any way appeal to the emotions only, but that its preachers depend upon the Word of God, brought home with power by the Spirit of God. Our aim is that the evangelists should be definite, clear, and sympathetic in every address, so that the preaching must have results, whether seen in time or eternity.

A Cumberland correspondent says:—

Since I have been in this town (Whitehaven) I have not witnessed such a time of blessing as we have had. A large number of people have been savingly brought to God. The meetings, night after night, in numbers far exceeded our expectation. Your evangelist presented the Gospel of the Grace of God in the plainest possible manner. The whole truth has been clearly, forcibly, and most powerfully brought before the people. With many others I feel grateful to the Society for this tent mission.

From a neighbouring village another friend writes:—

We are glad to say that the tent has been filled, and eternity alone will reveal all that has been done during the mission. We know of a number of conversions that have taken place night after night, and have every reason to believe that there are many others still under deep conviction of sin.

A Suffolk correspondent writes:—

We have much occasion to give practical proof of the many favours received during the mission here. On the Lord's Days large congregations gathered, and on week evenings encouraging numbers collected; but even better still, rapt attention was paid to the Word preached.

Many letters could be given from the converts who write, thanking God that they ever heard the Gospel in our tents. Frequently the writers of such testimony have been in Christ ten, fifteen, or twenty years before we hear from them. John Wood, Hon. Sec.

Dunoon College.

LAST session was one of the most fruitful on record at the Dunoon Gospel Training College, Kirn, Scotland. A friend has just cleared off all the current debt, and the fine building and grounds are being put in new order.

In the College, main stress is laid on a thorough knowledge of the Bible in Greek and Hebrew, together with a practical preparation for preaching the Word. The College seeks to train Heralds of the Cross, and it is clear that the churches have not yet lost their love for simple and earnest preaching. The Principal, Rev. Duncan Macgregor, has now recovered his health.

The standard of excellence is not regarded as being forward in scholastic degrees, but in full preparation for preaching the Gospel. No sectarian test is applied, and so the students are of various denominations. As there are no special collectors, the funds needed for the work are raised by faith and prayer. The progress made in past years show that no radical change should be made either in the mode of teaching or in the manner of raising funds. God has provided. Visitors to Scotland are cordially invited to visit the College and examine the work.

Scottish Notes.

THE determination expressed by members of the Glasgow Corporation to deal effectively with the widespread opening of Italian ice-cream shops on Sabbath has resulted in the framing of a clause making it unlawful for any person to "sell or vend any article on the Sabbath day without having a licence." The reservation indicated, however, is calculated to rob the decision of its moral value. Experience has shown that nothing short of the observance of the Christian Sabbath, or Lord's Day, can meet even the social need, and if the Divine requirement be admitted, should any corporation grant a contrary licence?

In a circular which has just been distributed among parents by the Edinburgh School Board, the opinion quoted of a physician to the effect that smoking by growing boys checks their growth, blunts their mental faculties, and ruins their morals. The cheap cigarettes they use are simply rank poison, and instances are known of death having been directly caused by their use.

A head-master adds that "it is well known that smoking by stealth leads to dishonesty, bad company, and other serious consequences." The Board have earnestly requested the co-operation of parents and guardians in dealing with "what threatens to become a serious national evil."

In a recent lecture dealing with "Gambling and Betting," Rev. William Muir said he had found not only that these existed in Blairgowrie, but book-making as well. He felt it would be a farce to deal with the subject without referring to raffling at church bazaars, believing as he did that "we shall never be able to speak with power regarding the larger question until we sweep all such practices from our midst," and he prayed that "such a wave of spiritual blessing may sweep over the Church of Christ as shall render for ever impossible such things as are meanwhile so frequently resorted to, instead of appealing to, and depending on, the freewill offerings of the Christian people."

Delegates are being appointed and preparations made for the annual conference of Scottish Y.M.C.A.'s which is to be held at Inverness in September.

While preaching in the open-air in the east-end of Glasgow on Saturday, August 4, Mr. Robert Macminn was suddenly taken ill. He was at once carried home by his friends, but died while being taken upstairs.

The commissioners of the borough of Broughty Ferry have refused a request from Pastor Jacob Primmer, for the allocation of a piece of ground on which his annual Protestant conventicle might be held.

A visit a few days ago from Staff-Captain Elbourne (chief officer of the Dundee Division) was made the occasion of a special series of meetings in connection with the local corps of the Salvation Army at Blairgowrie.

At the last monthly conference of the Glasgow Christian Workers' Union Mr. A. B. Munro (president) occupied the chair, and the speakers were Mr. Robert Logan, Bethany Hall, and Mr. D. F. Ramsay (formerly leader of praise at the conferences, now of Ireland).

High praise is given to the educational department of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A. in the report of H.M. inspector. "A pleasing feature," he says, "is the extreme interest taken by the managers in all branches of the work, and the skill with which they adapt the curriculum to the varied needs of the pupils."

The proper authorities in various parts of the country have set themselves resolutely against trafficking in licences. An application for transfer at Friockheim was refused last week, the chief constable of the county reporting that the applicant had no experience in the trade whatever, and that the licensed houses in the town were changing hands too frequently.

At the last meeting of the Scottish National Sabbath School Union, a report was given in detailing the arrangements for various evangelistic missions to be conducted among the children of Glasgow and district during the coming winter. The committee are prepared to undertake similar services in the country towns and districts also. A new union has just been formed at Johnstone, while the Edinburgh Baptist and Lanark Unions have applied for affiliation.

Slade Mission, Plumstead.—This Mission is now under the honorary superintendence of Mr. David Carnegie, who writes:—"The halls are in a position fraught with great possibilities, but it is cause for regret that in spite of the largely increasing neighbourhood comparatively little financial assistance has been hitherto rendered. At least £75 will be required to put the premises in order. If the necessary funds were at our disposal, we believe the time is not distant when the Mission may become entirely self-supporting." Mr. Carnegie's address is "Eltekon," Eglinton Road, Plumstead, S.E.

The Wesleyan Conference.

THE Pastoral Session of the Wesleyan Conference was resumed on Monday week at Burslem. The leading public service of the last week of Conference was that at which forty young ministers were ordained for the work of the ministry.

The charge by Rev. F. W. Macdonald, the ex-President of the Conference, was a noble deliverance. He took as his text Acts xxvi. 16, 17, and 18—"Rise and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness, both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee, &c." Mr. Macdonald then dwelt upon the significance of the conversion of Saul of Tarsus, and proceeded to insist upon some of the essentials of an effective ministry. It was not the business of the Christian minister merely to lecture upon, and to discuss the historic Christ. It was not his business to build up from literary or archæological resources another portraiture of that grand and inspiring personality. The Christian minister was not primarily a man of letters, nor a student of literature. He declared that he enunciated a truism that could never become a platitude when he said that the primary business of a preacher of the Gospel was to be the

WITNESS OF A LIVING CHRIST.

The preacher proceeded to expound the nature of the witness borne by the servant of Christ, and to illustrate it from the example of St. Paul. Very beautifully, in closing an address that made a deep impression on those who heard it, Mr. Macdonald recalled the experiences of past years. It was almost forty years since he stood for the first time in that pulpit. Said he, "I was then little more than a boy, very slenderly equipped for the ministry—but happy and hopeful, for the Lord had appeared to me, and said 'I send thee.' Very gentle was his appearing to me in my father's home, at my mother's side." Many a time since He had appeared to him—to chide, to reprove, to comfort, to enlarge the vision, to strengthen the feeble grasp, to nerve the relaxing courage. "Brethren," said the ex-president to the young men before him, "He will appear to you. He is still the living Lord and Head of his Church, and He takes you this day under his guardianship and protection." The whole service was an impressive one. Dr. Allen afterwards declared that the charge was not only such to every newly-ordained man, but to every minister present. The result would be the renewal of their vows and obligations to the Lord Jesus Christ.

THE OBITUARY SERVICE,

when the roll of the honoured dead was read, was a time of solemn searching of heart, and of admonition. Rev. William Perkins offered a touching prayer, and the brethren joined not without emotion in singing the hymn—"Come let us join our friends above." The Secretary first read the names of those who had been called home during the year; twenty-seven in Great Britain, two in Ireland, and ten in Foreign Mission fields. Then one after another of the brethren rose in quick succession to pay their tribute to the work and worth of their former fellow-labourers. The venerable Dr. Jenkins spoke of the genius and brilliant preaching ability of Edward J. Robinson. It was peculiarity of temperament that alone prevented him from taking the very highest position in Methodism. During his ministry in Ceylon, Mr. Robinson acquired a profound knowledge of Oriental thought and philosophy. In his obituary notice it was recorded that immediately before his death, which occurred somewhat suddenly, he exclaimed:

O, could I catch one smile from Thee,
And drop into eternity!

Rev. Bamford Burrows and Rev. H. Price Hughes joined in paying a warm tribute to the beautiful old age of John Connon, who did some of the best work of his life as a supernumerary minister in a country circuit. He died in the sixty-fifth year of his ministry. Rev. Owen Watkins did not forget the brethren who had laboured in his own old field of South Africa. Rev. Marshall Hartley spoke of native preachers whom he had met on his visit to the Eastern Stations. Rev. Thomas Champness spoke of the brethren who had faithfully rendered quiet service in difficult spheres.

The relation of baptized children to the Church was discussed in connection with the report of a committee that had considered the question during the year. It was urged that a larger measure of pastoral care was due to baptized children, and the suggestion was made that pastoral classes should be formed with a view to the instruction of such children, and their personal decision to serve Christ. Incidentally the question was raised as to what course they should adopt in regard to children brought for baptism by un-Christian parents. Mr. Price Hughes thought it right to refuse baptism to infants whose parents had no idea of what the baptismal service meant, and had no intention of keeping their baptismal vows. Rev. J. Shaw Banks, on the other hand, urged that their conduct in regard to any child born into the world should not be dependent upon the moral character of the parents. If the parents failed in their duty, the Church should seek to supply the lack. Rev. Thomas Champness earnestly declared that every little child had a right to come to Jesus Christ.

One of the last acts of the Conference was the designation of the President of the Conference of next year. It was a foregone conclusion that Rev. Dr. Davidson, of Handsworth College, would receive the honour of election; and so the result proved. Dr. Davidson is one of the most scholarly and devout of Methodist preachers. His election is a recognition of splendid service faithfully rendered.

The World's Students.

BY ONE OF THEM.

THE World's Student Christian Federation held its Fourth Conference at Les Ombrages, Versailles, from August 3 to 8. The Federation is fortunate in always having been able to secure an interesting place for its meetings. The first conference was held in an old castle on Lake Wadstena in Sweden, the second at Williamstown, U.S.A., the third at Eisenach, fragrant with its memories of Luther, and the one just over was held in a beautiful old country house situated in a park on the outskirts of Versailles.

The Federation is represented in England by the British College Christian Union, and has also affiliated to it Student Christian Movements in ten other countries, namely: America, Australasia, Germany, Scandanavia, Western Europe, including France, Switzerland and Holland; South Africa, China, Japan, India and Ceylon; and a group of isolated unions in mission lands.

The object of the Federation is to win students for Jesus Christ, to build them up in Him, and to send them out in the world to work for Him. With this three-fold object in view it seeks to promote the scientific study of foreign missions, and it lays stress upon the importance of seeking to help men individually to know Jesus Christ. The Federation was formed in 1995, and in his report, just published, the general secretary, Mr. John M. Mott, contrasts the student work of 1900 with that of 1895. He says:—"In 1895 there were 900 student Christian associations or unions in universities, colleges, and higher schools; now there are 1,400. Then 45,000 students and professors were members of such societies; now the number is nearly, if not quite, 65,000. Then there were ten national student movements; now there are fifteen. . . . Then there were only thirty-eight secretaries spending all or the larger part of their time in Christian work among students; now there are 101. . . . In 1895 there were held ten National Student Conferences, attended by 2,600 student delegates; during the past year there have been twenty such Conferences, with an attendance of over 5,200 students. Then there were less than fifty pamphlets and books published in the interest of the various student movements; now there are nearly 200. . . . Then there were spiritual awakenings reported in but three or four countries; since then the number of conversions among students has increased year after year, and during the past year alone there have been spiritual awakenings in nearly every land included in the Federation. In those days there were only 11,000 students in Bible classes and circles of the various Christian associations; to-day the number is over 23,000."

Mr. Mott's entire report is of engrossing interest to those who pray for the coming of the Kingdom of God, but we must pass on to tell a little of the Conference at which this report was presented.

The Conference opened with an address given in French and then in English by Dr. Karl Fries, of Stockholm, chairman of the Federation. He spoke to us of the importance and privilege of giving Jesus Christ the pre-eminence in all our work, in the whole movement.

At once, on the conclusion of the chairman's address, the Conference proceeded to receive reports of the Student Christian work in the countries represented. The German report came first, and told of Christian Unions in twenty-five German Universities and Colleges. This was followed by the Dutch report. It was encouraging to hear that in Amsterdam alone there were six Bible Circles. Schoolboys' Camps have also been started in Holland, with marked success. Report followed report in quick succession, all giving accounts of real progress. India has 550 students in Bible Circles; America, 14,000.

China has forty-five Unions, with a member ship of over 1,700 Chinese students. Japan reported 200 conversions as a result of the year's work. And here let me say a word about the personnel of the Conference. We had with us an Indian, a Chinaman, and a Japanese, each of whom had travelled to Europe to be present at the Conference. Twenty-three nations in all were represented, among them we might mention Belgium, Bulgaria, Spain, United States and Canada, Hungary, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Russia. About fifty were present, and it was wonderful to observe how quickly all made friends. If anyone had previously been sceptical about the reality of fellowship in Christ between men of different nations, his scepticism must quickly have been removed, as he saw Boer and Englishman, Spaniard and American, Chinaman and Japanese exchanging experience and inquiring with keen interest about the work of God in each other's country. Later, in the Conference devotional subjects were treated, and also methods of Bible and missionary study. The delegates from the Orient on one afternoon dealt with the subject, "How can the students of the Occident help the students of the Orient?"

We were deeply moved as Mr. Honda made his plea for Japan,

"MORE MEN AND BETTER MEN."

Then Mr. Hwang, of Nanking University, asked for prayer for China. He said to us:—"I think that this is the most critical time for 400 years in the history of China. When this war is past great changes will take place. China needs mental and spiritual help. Will you not all come to China?" The same plea for men came to us from India. Mr. Karmakar told us how plague and famine are missionary factors in India, breaking down caste and making men think. "India is an open door, and therefore, brethren, come!" was his message to us. Surely these are days of vast opportunity for the Church of Christ; the harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few. We were only fifty men, but as we faced the call of Christ to prayer for labourers on the last day of the Conference, we felt that there was vested in us a great responsibility, and that there was for us also a large possibility. Some of us determined to give ourselves as never before to the work of prayer. We closed our Conference by joining hands and singing, "Blest be the tie that binds," and as we did so we realized as never before how closely knit together are those who are in Christ Jesus, even though they live and work in different hemispheres.

Chautauquans at Barmouth.

AN institution usually takes years to carve out for itself a place in our present day life; yet, to judge from the enthusiasm which marks its members, the British Chautauqua has already taken strong hold of a large section of the religious public.

The sixth annual Summer School is in session at Barmouth. The arrangements have been so well carried out as to secure an entire absence of friction and worry, and the members are thus free to give themselves whole-heartedly to the business and pleasure in hand.

The former presidents have been Dr. Cave, Rev. C. H. Kelly, Dr. Munro Gibson, and Dr. Clifford. The last-named is now succeeded by Dr. Horton, who made a notable pronouncement on Friday evening in his inaugural address, the subject of which was "The Great Teachers of the Century." Dr. Horton opened his address by stating that the great problem that the eighteenth century had bequeathed to the nineteenth was, to unite Deism and Evangelicalism in a faith which should not ignore reason nor disdain the facts of the world, a faith in which the religion of all the centuries and the science of the nineteenth century should lie down together, each respecting and each requiring the other. He then went on to examine the contributions to the problem of such thinkers as Wordsworth, Coleridge, Byron and Shelley; then the little group, Emerson, Carlyle and Ruskin; then Maurice, Kingsley and Robertson; then on the other side Newman, Keble and Pusey; then Mill, Darwin, and Spencer, and finally Tennyson and Browning.

IT WAS A MASTERLY ADDRESS, and was followed closely by a keenly interested and attentive audience.

On Saturday, an informal conversazione was held, over which the venerable and revered Marianne Farningham presided.

On Sunday the Chautauqua Sermon was preached in the Assembly Room, by Dr. Horton, to a crowded congregation, from the text, "God is a Spirit."

A delightful item of the programme has been a most interesting and illuminating series of lectures by Rev. George Harmer James, of Derby, on "The Lives of the Great English Reformers." "John Wycliffe, the Morning Star of the Reformation," and "William Tindale, the Hero of the English Bible," have already been dealt with; and on Thursday the final lecture of the series, on "Hugh Latimer, the Apostle of England," will be delivered. We have seldom heard more interesting or more helpful addresses than these.

So far, the programme has barely been commenced, and lectures are to be delivered by George Swainson, Esq., F.L.S., on "Corals and Coral Islands"; by Rev. J. C. Carlisle, of Folkestone, on "The Teacher and His Preparation," and on "A Night in London Streets"; by Mr. W. R. Bradley, of King Edward's Grammar School, Birmingham, on "The Letters of Paul"; by Mrs. Bonwick, on "Woman"; and by Dr. H. Frank Heath, of the University of London, on "Is the Novel Worth Studying?"

But intellectual help is not the only object of the Society. Spiritual and physical refreshment occupy also a very prominent position in its procedure, and the early morning prayer service, from 8 a.m. to 8-30, is perhaps one of the most helpful and stimulating of all our engagements; nearly all the members turn out to this meeting regularly, and the little Baptist Chapel is crowded every morning.

On the physical side may be noted the excursions. These were inaugurated most dismally, for on Thursday last the coach drive through the magnificent scenery of the Pass of Abenglasbyn to Beddgelert was accomplished through a steady downpour of rain. This unfortunate commencement did not, however, in the least damp the enthusiasm of the party, and the Mark Tapley spirit which was then so fully displayed has been abundantly rewarded, for we have since enjoyed absolutely perfect weather.. There has been a very large accession of numbers this year, and very many applications have had to be refused, as all the accommodation was long since filled up.

A MEMBER.

International Zionist Congress.

THE fourth congress of Zionists opened at the Queen's Hall, Langham Place, on Monday morning. A preliminary gathering had been held on Saturday evening at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, for the purpose of welcoming the delegates. Between 5,000 and 6,000 persons were present, and gave an enthusiastic greeting to the men who have prominently identified themselves with Zionism.

At the first session of the Congress at the Queen's Hall, large numbers of delegates of both sexes were present from nearly every country in Europe, as well as from Palestine, Canada, South Africa, and the United States. Dr. THEODOR HERZL was elected president of the Congress, he having held the same office in the previous Congresses. Dr. Max Nordau (Paris), Dr. Moses Gaster (London), and Professor Dr. Mandelstamm (Kieff), were the vice-presidents; and Sir Francis Montefiore one of the assessors.

In his presidential address, part of which was delivered in English (the official language of the Congress being German), Dr. HERZL pointed to England as being one of the few countries in the world in which God's ancient people were not detested and persecuted. He declared that the Zionist movement meant not only much for the Jews, but it also meant something for others. It not only opened up to every country a settlement of the Jewish question in a manner worthy of mankind, but it likewise contained the elements of a great perspective for the Orient. The Asiatic problem grew from day to day more serious, and would for some time be deeply tinged with blood.

IT WAS OF INCREASING IMPORTANCE to civilized nations, therefore, that on the shortest road to Asia there should be set up a post of civilization, which would be at the service of civilized mankind. Such a post was Palestine, and the Jews were ready with their blood and their substance to provide that post for civilization.

The address of the morning was that of Dr. MAX NORDAU, on "The General Position of the Jews." He spoke of the vast strides anti-Semitism had made in many parts of the world since the previous congress, and he particularly emphasized that phase of anti-Semitism which was known as the "Blood Accusation."

At the afternoon sitting Dr. ALEXANDER MARMOREK, of Paris, spoke of the harsh treatment which the Jewish emigrants from Roumania had received in various States through which they had passed. Dr. Marmorek said that only that great and hospitable country, free England, had remained true to its old reputation of being an asylum and a refuge for fugitives from injustice. Suffering and persecuted human beings had never claimed in vain the hospitality of England, and all Zionists felt the deepest gratitude to the English Government, which had already shown a benevevolent interest in the poor Jews in Roumania, and gladly would they place at its disposal the information as to the real situation in that country. which the Government appeared to lack.

A report on "The Status of the Jews in England" was read by Mr. L. J. GREENBERG, hon. secretary of the English Zionist Federation. He stated that no measure—Parliamentary or social—would stand much chance with the people of this country which prejudiced intentionally or unintentionally the Jews in England. Whatever slight hostility had been shown to Jews as such in England, its backing had been found in the limited ranks of those who were notoriously outside the influences of religious work and thought. Professor Dr. RICHARD GOTTHEIL, of New York, submitted a statement of the progress which the Zionist movement has made in the United States.

Evangelistic.

The Tent Campaign.

THE wonderful work of God proceeding in the nine Great Tents erected in the suburban districts of London may well stir the Lord's people to praise. Twenty thousand persons listen to the Word of Life every Sunday; thousands every night of the week; and, best of all, some 3,000 names have been taken of those who have professed faith in Christ, and have been dealt with individually since the commencement of this Mission.

So far, meetings have been held nightly, for from one month to six weeks, in eighteen different districts. Every class is being reached; the poor and those in better social position attend freely; infidels, Romanists, Ritualists, and Socialists have been converted; and many a poor drunkard has gone home a free man in Christ Jesus.

The children and young people are coming in thousands to their own special services, and the most tender, pathetic incidents may be recorded, showing how God hath ordained praise out of the mouths of babes.

But full of blessing as the past has been, the future is brighter with expectation. We desire to visit eighteen more places, closing the Mission about October 14 with a meeting in one of the largest halls in London, for a great Converts' Rally and Thanksgiving Service.

Among the evangelists who have joined hands in the work, are—W. R. Lane, Charles Inglis, Henry Varley, Rev. Dr. L. W. Munhall, Weaver Brothers, W. S. Weeden, Rowland Edwards, D. M. Cameron, R. Logan, J. W. Van de Venter, John Vine, J. Telford, G. R. Cairns, Newton Jones, Hugh Paton, J. S. Harrison, William Grove, and others.

We are all very thankful for the help given by the central committee, and committee of reference. These friends subscribed nearly £2,000, and it was hoped that Christians all over the country would subscribe the remaining £1,500 required to carry the work through the season. But for some reason there has been a holding back until the crisis has come—a balance of £500 on the wrong side. For the work to collapse would be an eternal shame; hence I feel constrained to lay the facts before your readers.

The storms of the last few days have done much damage to six of the tents, requiring a sum of £200 to put them in suitable condition for work. This makes the appeal more urgent as the need is immediate.

The Free Church Mission.

Arrangements for the simultaneous mission by the National Free Church Council in February next are approaching completion. The ready response of the leading ministers of the several denominations to conduct a week's mission has been noted with much satisfaction. Rev. R. J. Campbell goes to Oxford and Rev. C. Silvester Horne to Cambridge. Manchester will have Rev. Hugh Price Hughes and Mr. Rendel Harris. To Birmingham have been assigned Rev. Dr. Clifford and Mr. Gipsy Smith; to Bristol, Dr. Mackennal and Rev. W. Cuff; and to Cardiff, Rev. John M'Neill. Dr. Barrett goes to Hampstead; Dr. Horton to Halifax; Rev. F. B. Meyer and Mr. Leonard Weaver to Leeds; Rev. G. Campbell Morgan to Portsmouth; Rev. J. G. Greenhough to Huddersfield; Rev. J. H. Hopkins to Bradford, and Dr. Monro Gibson and Rev. Howard May to Newcastle.

Gospel Tents and the Gales.

As a result of the recent gales damage has been done to several tents that were in use for Gospel services. Writing from Hutton, Weston-super-Mare, Mr. JOHN ELLIOTT says:—"The tent was wrecked on Bank Holiday by the gale. I was inside—alone—at the time, and about to light the lamps, when it came down with a crash. I scrambled out safely, and am now preaching in a cider store."

Mr. JOHN COATES, of the Bible Carriage and Tent Mission, Ross, Herefordshire, writes:—"Our one tent, which has been doing such good service all through the past summer weeks in one of England's darkest villages, was blown to ribbons, and thus rendered useless for further service. We are anxious to replace it at once in order to carry on the encouraging work."

Mr. JOHN DENNING'S tent on Southsea Common, however, stood firm, although a large circus tent, pitched only a few yards away, was swept to the ground. Although no performance was going on, a number of persons were in the circus at the time, and a number were injured, Mr. Denning's tent being used as a temporary resting-place until the sufferers could be removed to a hospital. The Gospel Tent Campaign is making good progress at Southsea, and several have sought the Lord during the past few weeks.

With Scottish Fishermen.

There can scarcely be a more interesting sphere of usefulness than is furnished along the North East Coast of Scotland during the fishing season. It was recently my good fortune to spend a Sunday at Fraserburgh, in the company of Mr. Josiah Nix.

On the Saturday evening we were hard at work in the Town Square surrounded by at least 250 fishermen and their connections. It was pleasing to see all church distinctions lost sight of, and all harmoniously working for the coming of the Kingdom of Jesus. For an hour and a quarter this united open-air service was held with visible signs of blessing.

Mr. Nix hires the Dalrymple Hall, the largest in the town, for Sunday services. So popular are these gatherings that the place is commonly known as "The Fishermen's Kirk." It was inspiring to look into the faces of so large a congregation, and most refreshing to see the eager way in which the men and women drank in the word of truth. In the afternoon a meeting for testimony was held, and as the praise and witness bearing mingled, our hearts burned within us. There were some interesting cases of blessing in connection with this service. A still larger number of people attended the evening service, when Mr. Nix preached from the parable of the Pharisee and the Publican. Further decisions for Christ brought this happy service to a close. Immediately an adjournment was made to the links for an open-air campaign, and at least 1,000 men and women gathered round and listened for an hour and a half to straight talks on Gospel themes.

Mr. Nix has spent a good part of the summer at Stornoway and Fraserburgh, and stories of conversion are told from these and many other fishing towns along the North Coast of Scotland. T. R.

Rev. W. Priestnall, of Watchet, writes:—"Mr. F. A. Glover has been conducting a tent mission here with happy results, and evidences of Divine favour. The meetings for children and young people have been very helpful, and those for adults have also been attended with blessing."

Mr. W. D. Dunn has concluded a three weeks' mission in one of the tents of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission, Aberdeen. There was deep interest throughout, both in the afternoon Bible readings and the evening Gospel meetings. Many of the Lord's people have been revived, and all through the mission awakened sinners have been pointed to the Saviour. Mr. John Climie is now carrying on the meetings.

Reference has lately been made by evangelists to the need for some endeavour to reach Sunday cyclists, and in some instances it has been found that the exhibition of a large banner, inscribed with some striking words of warning and appeal, has a marked effect upon the pleasured-seekers. Mr. E. J. Coble writes that, in company with a friend, he has stood with large banners, one inscribed "Beware, ye that forget God." "Prepare to meet thy God" and "Eternity." Thousands of persons have read the words, and tracts have been distributed.

About Books.

THE LIFE OF LIVES.

WHATEVER its defects, Dean Farrar's "Life of Christ" has had a powerful influence in popularizing great facts and attractive theories as they cluster round the "Sweet Story of Old." By a vivacious style, the writer secured attention alike to familiar biographical details and to discussions of a more erudite character. Many who have read the popular book will wish to make the acquaintance of a companion volume, representing the Dean's more recent investigation and thought, entitled The Life of Lives: Further Studies in the Life of Christ. (15s. Cassell & Co.)

In the words of the preface, this substantial volume "deals with questions of high importance, which the Gospels suggest, and aims at deepening the faith and brightening the hope in Christ of all who read it honestly." The contents exhibit a variety that comports well with the well-known versatility of the author. After a chapter on the Divine Birth, come others on the Unique Supremacy of Jesus, followed by one which should be of special service to evidential workers, on "The Testimony of Sceptics and Free Inquirers." Proceeding, we have word-pictures of great scenes and incidents, with succinct descriptions of the condition of the world at the beginning of our era, and the state of religion in Palestine at the same time. There is a character-sketch (though not so called) of John the Baptist, followed by chapters on Christ's teaching, both as to its form and substance.

If the "broadness" of the writer's views occasionally appears, so also does his sturdy Protestantism. In a chapter on "The Apostolic Commission" he deals with "the power of the keys," and gives an interpretation of "binding and loosing," as arising in Matt. xviii. 18 (compare Luke xxiii. 47; John xx. 23). He shows that the power in question was given to the entire Christian community, and not to the ministry alone.

> Christ conferred upon the Church the right, not indeed of deciding whether this or that man shall be saved or lost, but of declaring what men she can admit into, or reject from, her community. The claim of "priests" that they can absolve from sin entirely perverts the true meaning of Christ's words. All that priests can do is to state—not by their individual authority, but solely in agreement with the mind of the whole Church—the conditions on which sin can alone be forgiven. Those conditions the Church may set forth. They are the conditions of sincere repentance and genuine amendment. If anyone fulfil these conditions, he not only will be, but is forgiven, and has everlasting life. If a man have not fulfilled these conditions, he is not forgiven, though all Popes and priests should pronounce their absolutions over him, and call him "saint." Apart from a miraculous power of reading the heart, any "absolution" which is not simply declaratory and hypothetic is a false pretence, founded on the perversion of a phrase which has no such meaning—a pretence more meaningless than the idle wind. Who can forgive sins but God only?

The chapters number forty-three, and there are full indices. On points of detail the views expressed are not such as command ready assent; but as a repertory of facts gathered from a large literature, and presented in the language of our day, the book is calculated to be of service to many.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA.

WE have before us two opposing expositions of the war between Great Britain and the Transvaal. The first is a pamphlet reprinted from the Revue des Deux Mondes, and entitled, The South African Crisis, by Professor A. Kuyper, D.D., LL.D., member of the States-General of Holland. Translated and prefaced by A. E. Fletcher (Stop-the-War Committee. 6d.).

The second is, Origin of the Anglo-Boer War Revealed; the Conspiracy of the Nineteenth Century Unmasked. By C. H. Thomas, of Belfast, Transvaal, Orange Free State Burgher. (Hodder & Stoughton. 3s. 6d.)

We have not space to enter into a discussion of the subject, important though it be. The case for the Boer is strongly stated by Professor Kuyper and not less so that on the other side by Mr. Thomas. With this difference, however, that while the Professor is a Hollander, Mr. Thomas is "not an anti-Boer nor an Englishman; born of Continental parents, and brought up in Europe."

He tells us that "with real grief he records his conviction against the Boer nation as solely and entirely guilty, but with this qualification, that its responsibility is much attenuated by the fact that the bulk of that people has been unconsciously decoyed as tools of a gigantic intrigue, a conspiracy originated some thirty years ago by an infamous Hollander coterie, and operated since by its product, the now well-known association, the 'Afrikander Bond'—its object being no less than the eviction of all, that is English, from South African States into one free, independent Republic, the affiliation to be with Holland instead, and Dutch the common and official language, other nations, in return for afforded aid, to participate in the advantages wrested from England."

We commend both publications to the careful and unprejudiced attention of all interested (and who is not?) in this grave controversy, and all who wish to know the truth about it.

MRS. SPURGEON'S BOOK FUND.

IN a charming little brochure—"The Book Fund and its Work—1898-9"—Mrs. Spurgeon tells the story of some of her efforts on behalf of poor ministers during the last two years. Within this period some 10,343 volumes have been distributed. The grants of books are not confined to ministers of any one denomination, and many are the touching acknowledgments received — often from pastors in pitiful distress. From one and all the testimony as to the value set upon the teaching is most encouraging. Many who by perseverance and self-sacrifice have worked their way into the ministry, but whose poverty has precluded them from obtaining even necessary books, have been assisted in forming the nucleus of a library.

The particulars given of the progress made in translating and circulating Mr. Spurgeon's sermons in quite a number of countries are particularly interesting. Another branch of this enterprise is the "Pastor's Aid Fund." This help chiefly consists of gifts of money in times of need, and boxes of clothing. During the past two years the grants in money, including the amounts given to needy ministers and their families from the Fund, for general use in the work of the Lord, have exceeded £600, a sum which, as Mrs. Spurgeon says, "will unquestionably prove that much sorrow and suffering have been relieved, and many hearts uplifted from a crushing sense of destitution and distress." (Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster, Paternoster Square; or Mrs. Spurgeon, Westwood, Beulah Hill, S.E.) It is well worth perusal, and all who study its pages, will pray with their writer that the Lord may never withdraw his Holy Spirit from a service so calculated to enrich his ministers and do Him honour.

WORKS BY THE LATE E. C. MILLARD.

THERE is a certain fitness in the re-issue of the two remarkable books written by the late Mr. Millard. As our readers will remember, this devoted worker was taken to God a few weeks ago, but one of his last acts was to arrange for the re-issue in cheap form of his well-known books. The earliest of these, originally issued in 1891, is entitled "What God hath Wrought," being an account of the Mission Tour of Rev. George C. Grubb, M.A., through Ceylon, South India, Australia, New Zealand and Cape Colony. Being one of the mission party, Mr. Millard here described scenes and incidents of which he was a personal witness. The second book, entitled "The Same Lord" (Rom. x. 12), describes a subsequent tour in Australia, Tasmania and New Zealand. The pages outline many remarkable meetings, and narrate stories of conversion and progress in Christian experience that are sure to be helpful to a large number of readers. These works are attractively produced, and fully illustrated. (2s. nett each. Marlborough & Co.)

Over the Alps on a Bicycle, by Mrs. Pennell, is a fully illustrated description of an adventurous ride. (1s. T. Fisher Unwin.)

The Life Story of S. C. Crutcher, coloured evangelist, of Shenandoah, Iowa, U.S.A., has been issued by Robert Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C. (6d.) The narrative is replete with interest.

Twenty-four Sacred Musical Solos, composed by Miss Ada Rose, is a collection of choice pieces, with music in sol-fa as well as the old notation. Copies may be had (1s.) from the composer, Mrs. W. J. Gibbs, "Melrose," Bromley, Kent.

Thoughts on the Book of Ruth is a useful exposition of a section of sacred history, often overlooked. The actual events and the symbolic personages are expounded in a helpful and instructive manner. (2d. George Clarke, Melton Constable, Norfolk.)

Much earnest and helpful advice is to be found in the pages of Simple Counsels to Christian Servants. The book will appeal with comfort and encouragement to many who experience difficulties in maintaining "patient continuance in well doing." (2d. Nisbet.)

Lady Hope's book The Open Door (1s. 6d. Christian Colportage Association, 37, Farringdon Street) will take light and joy into many a humble home. It is a volume of short readings, the first of which furnishes the title. There is a striking unconventionality about the publication, various types, plain and ornamental, large and small, being employed, according to the character of the matter. In every sense this is an excellent book, evangelical in substance and purposeful in character; and it should have a large circulation.

Notes & Comments

THE news of the week, eclipsing all other in hopeful and sympathetic interest, is the official announcement of the relief of Peking by the Allies, and the assurance that the Ministers and most of the Europeans are safe. This is welcome news to all, but especially to those "of the household of faith" who have been petitioning long and earnestly the God of nations on behalf of their brethren and sisters in the cruel bonds of pitiless persecution.

The Daily Express of Tuesday contained, in "Scenes in Breadless India," a series of most painful and deplorable photographs of starving natives. One picture was of three boys found dead in the fields. The article thus concludes:—

Next morning at sunrise I followed the carts that gathered up the dead. In a cleared space in the adjacent jungle I attended the funeral of sixty-five famine victims. The ashes of a thousand other victims lay in white smoking heaps. On top of these ash-heaps, low caste men piled logs—four such piles. Atop of the logs were thrown the sixty-five bodies, the morning's harvest. On the bodies more logs were thrown, till only a foot here, a head there, protruded. Then the four piles were set afire, and the flames of the funeral pyres leaped far above the tops of the surrounding trees. Thus is the trace of famine obliterated from the face of India.

Anything more ghastly in picture and letter-press it is difficult to conceive. The writer says: "We were journeying through a depopulated Hades. . . . At stations nearest these relief camps the train paused for water, which gaunt half-dead coolies brought in buckets from the nearest cholera-infected well." Jackals prowl about ready to feed upon the dead. There is wanting no element of horror; and for six months, until the seed now being sown shall ripen, starvation, with its attendant horrors, will increase. What an opportunity for the Government to win the people's hearts to a beneficent British rule—for Christians to win them to Christ by showing them the love of God.

As we go to press we receive reports from Pundita Ramabai, and many missionaries, telling the same story of famine, misery, pestilence, and death.

We commend to the diligent study of our thoughtful readers the closely reasoned studies in Leviticus, which formed the subject of Rev. Hubert Brooke's Bible readings at Keswick. There is no more fruitful book in the Bible than Leviticus, read, as Mr. Brooke suggests, in conjunction with the Epistle to the Hebrews; yet probably few Books are less read by most Christians than these.

We have been invited to send a "message" as to "how we can best serve humanity," to a "Brotherhood" whose pledge is "to serve humanity in the spirit of Jesus." The following is our response:—

The only force that can truly uplift humanity is the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth (Rom. i. 16). Any attempt to improve the Old Adam within us is but scratching at the surface. Man must be born anew (John iii. 7).

The influences of heredity and environment must, of course, be considered. But here let me quote the experiences of our two best-known philanthropists, who have done more than any in their genaration to "uplift humanity":—

i. Dr. Barnardo finds that lads and girls whose parents and grandparents have been confirmed drunkards, and in whom all the forces of heredity militate against a good life, have been enabled, by the grace of God, to overcome them and turn out good and useful members of society.

In a word, the Divine Saviour can overcome heredity as He overcomes the world (John xvi. 33).

ii. General Booth, on the other hand, declares the experience of his Social Scheme to be, that when a man is at his lowest there is hope for his salvation. But that when his environment is improved, the spirit of independence and self-will asserts itself, and he is harder to reform in the highest sense.

Hence, change of environment cannot save. Man must be made to feel his need of a Saviour, then he will find a Saviour sufficient for his need.

A correspondent in the Daily Mail grumbles at the Children's Seaside Services, and demands that such services should be suppressed, on the ground that while "some children, perhaps, attend of their own free will, others are coerced by foolish nursemaids and mothers." He pathetically asks, "Cannot the children be protected?" What nonsense! Of course, the idea of putting pressure on children to attend a daily service during their holiday against their will cannot be too strongly deprecated. No evidence, however, is adduced to prove that this is being done. The bright, eager faces of the boys and girls at all the children's services we have attended, and their manifest eagerness and attention, are enough to dispose of such petulant complaints as worthless. But the tone of the remonstrance clearly suggests an equal antipathy on the writer's part to Gospel services in any form.

Rev. W. H. M. Hay Aitken contributes to the August number of The Churchman a luminous article on "The late D. L. Moody as a Preacher." The writer recognises both the enormous amount of preaching which Mr. Moody was enabled to do, and the convincing character of his words:—

It seems to me unquestionable that this man must have preached to a larger number of his fellow-men than any other preacher that ever lived. What other man during these nineteen centuries has continued to address day by day for a period covering more than a quarter of a century evening congregations varying in size from 5,000 to 15,000, and afternoon congregations varying from 2,000 to 5,000? What other man can have preached to between two and three millions of auditors each year for some twenty-six years, and to an aggregate of auditors not falling short of the entire population of the United States at the last census?

If, again, we estimate the greatness of a preacher by his command over the attention of his audience, and his capacity of printing his thoughts on the minds and hearts of his hearers, this man of plain and homely speech has surely had but few rivals. One of the most impressive things in those marvellous gatherings, the like of which, I suppose, we are scarcely likely to behold in our time again, was the sight from the platform of that sea of eager upturned faces, every eye fixed and every mind apparently attent, catching all the speaker's points, and delighting in his illustrations, smiling at the smart or humorous passages in his discourses, and not unfrequently responding to his pathos with their tears.

Mr. Moody's belief in the power of illustration, and his industry in collecting "points" are also noted.

If he heard a good thing said, down it went on the inside of an old envelope, and when the day's work was over it would be duly consigned to one of those larger envelopes, which, like Joseph's store cities, treasured the fat of the land. . . . He was a great believer in the power of illustration. Just before he began his wonderful mission to the aristocracy of London, I chanced to say to him one day, as we were sitting in the garden together, "Moody, how will your stories go down with these refined and educated West-End folk?" He paused for a moment, and then replied with his usual decision, "I don't know about the stories; but, mind you, 'lustrations will tell with any class of society, from prince to peasant." And the event proved that he was right.

There are 6,000,000 more total abstainers to-day than fifty years ago, and yet there are 20 per cent. more drinkers. That is the nett position of the temperance cause just now. Mr. Bamford Slack accounts for this apparent contradiction by the great increase in population. While the crusade against the drink traffic has been eminently successful in one way, saving thousands from a drunken grave, preventing the formation of habits of intemperance in countless multitudes besides, and gradually building up a healthier public opinion, it yet remains true that the evil is, in another sense, increasing steadily. Population is overriding reformation. We are not keeping pace with the demands of the situation, in this as in many other directions. It is well to recognise that the battle, like the South African campaign, is not yet won, and that there is greater need than ever for incessant watchfulness and unfailing efforts, if Britain is to become sober as well as free.

Much interest will turn upon the Liverpool Brewster Sessions, as the authorities of that city are of opinion that in several districts there is a great excess of licensed houses, and have given notice to the trade that in dealing with the question of the renewal of licences the magistrates will take into their consideration only the actual wants of the locality. No doubt a large reduction in the number of public-houses and gin shops will result, and it goes without saying that the brewers and others concerned will fight strenuously against this simple method of dealing with the question, without compensation in regard to what they are pleased to term "vested interests." We sincerely hope the sensible action will be entirely successful in lessening the drink evil in Liverpool, and that it will be promptly followed elsewhere.

A report recently presented to the Vestry by the Medical Officer of Health for the parish of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields throws a very lurid light upon the pressing question of the housing of the working classes in the metropolis and other large cities. He describes one court, consisting of eleven houses, inhabited by no fewer than 155 persons. From the lower rooms, light and fresh air are well-nigh excluded by a high wall, only four feet distant, and all the houses are in a wretched structural condition. The death-rate consequently is very high, the average for the past five years being over 47, whereas that for the Peabody Buildings was only 15. And this preventible loss of life goes on year after year, while the question is being discussed in Parliament and out of it. Meantime the publican and the property owner profit chiefly by the wretchedness and misery involved.

It is said that the presentation of the Gospel is often in such hackneyed terms as to be uninteresting, unattractive, and powerless. A remedy worse than the disease is the substitution of political or social, biographic or scientific, essays for the Gospel of Christ, of which the Apostle was not ashamed, for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth. Secular titles are sometimes given to Sunday evening discourses, while novels assume titles taken from the Scriptures of truth. Both practices are evil.

Writing in view of the long-hoped-for close of the war in South Africa, Mr. Thomas Hogben, of the Welcome Mission, Portsmouth, points out certain things that may save the men from temptation on their return home. In brief, these are Mr. Hogben's recommendations :—

(1) That the War Office should be requested to give the men their reserve pay, say, to the extent of one-third down and two-thirds three months after arrival home.
(2) That the public should be aroused to the evil of tempting the men to drink by treating, &c.
(3) That a booklet should be prepared warning the men plainly against the temptations to drink, lust, and company that will beset them on arrival, especially pointing out that some publicans make their houses free, that men from the seat of war may, by telling their stories, serve as decoy birds for customers. This booklet should be given at the port of embarkation.
(4) That one central and united effort should be made by all interested in the men for a weekly prayer-meeting in every town for the first month after the cessation of hostilities.

The God of Nations.

By Rev. F. C. SPURR, Lewisham.

A CAREFUL study of history reveals the fact that, in men's apprehension of God's relation to them, there have been three well-defined stages. The early Israelites conceived Jehovah as belonging essentially and exclusively to them. Where the Tabernacle rested, or the Temple permanently stood, there was Divine Light; beyond the sacred barrier all was darkness. They failed to understand God's ultimate intention towards the world, and they regarded themselves as the goal of God's kindness rather than the agents for making that kindness known to others. In a word, they came at last to degrade God in their thoughts to the level of a local and tribal Deity.

The second stage was reached when the prophets of the eighth century before Christ protested vigorously against the shameful misuse of Jewish privilege, and declared that Jehovah was the God of the whole earth; that He could and would use a heathen like Cyrus to accomplish his will as much as He would employ the service of Hebrew prophet or lawgiver.

This preaching of the prophets was the dawning of the day which was perfected in Jesus Christ. For then the third stage was reached, and men understood, under the teaching of the Holy Ghost, that the Gospel was for the individual, and also for all nations. And it is just the apprehension of this truth, made living by the Divine Spirit, that is the foundation and support of all missionary enterprises. There are against which we need to guard. The first is to place the whole stress upon the notion of the individual being brought to God; the second is unduly to emphasize the idea of the nation in some way acknowledging God. As to the first of these extremes we have still with us great numbers of people who can never see beyond the individual. For them, God reigns over a great separate nation each member of which is individually and directly accountable to Him without regard to others. This invisible host or Church exists as a separate entity from the world; it must not mix with its politics, nor even share in its life more than is absolutely necessary. The world is doomed for fire; and all who belong to it will perish. Meanwhile we must labour with individuals, and seek to save them.

The other extreme is taken by men who confound the Church and the world; to whom the Church is a vast external society which has the right to claim every infant as its property, and to demand respect and submission from every living person. So Augustine the monk turns a nation from paganism to Christianity in a single day. Charlemagne causes 20,000 Saxons to enter the fold by one action; and Francis Xavier "converts" 1,000,000 of people in ten years.

Both of these extremes contain truth—much truth; but

BOTH ARE GRIEVOUSLY FAULTY.

It cannot be too frequently insisted upon that religion is, above all things, a personal matter, and that unless a man deliberately and thoughtfully, by his own act, yield himself to God, he has no part in the heavenly kingdom. On the other hand, it must never be supposed, because people as individuals refuse to acknowledge God, and to adore and serve Him, therefore their retribution will be only individual. There is a common notion abroad among ungodly men that their refusal to be religious is, after all, "their own affair." Frequently the expression is employed,

"THAT IS MY BUSINESS—

it has nothing to do with you or anyone else." Profound error! The irreligion of individuals has unfortunately to do, not only with the personal transgressors, but with the community as a community, of which they form part.

A very little reflection will make this abundantly clear. The radical question is that of man's relationship and responsibility. Is he related or unrelated, responsible or not responsible? If he is related he is responsible, since all relation involves responsibility. Then, is he related? A child can answer the question. Man begins his career in a state of helpless relation, subject to others, who become his governors, and to whom he owes obedience. For his sustenance, protection, and education, he is always in debt to superior persons. When he reaches the age of liberty, and can act, as he thinks, independently, he is simply plunged anew into debt towards his Maker, since he is compelled to use his Creator's world, and to breathe his Creator's air.

Besides this, he is continually compelled to seek the assistance of his neighbours, without whom he could make no progress whatever. From the hour of birth to the hour of death

MAN IS A RELATED CREATURE.

Then, he is a responsible creature too—the one thing includes the other. Not only is he responsible because related, he is also responsible because he is an agent. Why has he been brought into the world? To exploit others to his own advantage? To act the part of a petty king? No! He is here for a double end, to accomplish the special purpose which his Creator has designed for him, and to assist his fellows to accomplish their special purpose too, as he has the right to ask them to assist him.

And all this is for one individual. Multiply the individuals, and you multiply relations and responsibilities until that complex thing called Society exists. And ever God remains at the head of affairs, and to Him the individual is responsible; to Him, also, are congregations of individuals responsible. He is the God of nations, because He is the God of individuals.

So the prophets and seers of God have always looked wistfully forward to the golden day when no man shall need to ask his brother whether he knows God, for all shall know Him, from the least unto the greatest. The final vision of the sacred Bible is that of a city upon earth in which the Tabernacle of God shall dwell, and from which all evil is for ever excluded. Happy vision! it shall be fulfilled one day. But meanwhile

HOW DOES GOD TREAT NATIONS?

He is their God, their Master, whether they own his sway or not. The best nation now existing, or that has ever existed, has contained, and does contain, many elements which are utterly opposed to justice and truth. Yet it cannot be doubted that the nation which, as a whole, turns to Him receives his benediction. "Blessed is that nation whose God is the Lord." Nor can it be doubted that the nation which disowns Him, or derides his justice, receives his displeasure. Witness Nineveh, Jerusalem, and Sodom. There were some good people in these cities, yet the cities perished because their trend was evil; the bad outbalanced the good. And in dealing with nations, is it not ever the balance that God judges by?

Now let us apply all this to the present crisis. Why these national sorrows? Why this terrible unrest amongst the peoples? Why this outburst of hellish fury in China? Why the heart-breaking conflict in Africa? Let us be wise enough to get behind the political explanations, so contradictory and superficial, and search for the radical cause of the world's misery at the present moment. It is not difficult to discover. And it is not a sudden cause; it has been long in coming to a crisis. In a word it is this—

THE NATIONS HAVE FORGOTTEN THE GOD OF NATIONS.

Why is France suffering? She has forgotten God. A year ago, one of her leading statesmen proposed in the Chamber that the legend on the French silver coins, "France trusts in God," should be obliterated, since "France needs the support of no divinity." China has in the most deliberate manner refused the light of Christ. Her leading men have lied in the most perverse and abominable manner about the servants of God. She has refused God, and lo! men see the devil awake in her.

And England! O, my country, I love thee; fair beyond all lands art thou! No trees so green as thine, nor flowers so beautiful or fragrant; no women so fair nor men so strong as thine! And yet, O land of the free, seventy men out of every hundred thou harbourest pay no respect to the house of God. Thy men of science smile at God and at prayer; and some of thy religious men strive might and main to tear the crown of Divinity from the head of our Redeemer. Thou art fat and wealthy, and thou boastest of thy arms and of thy fleet; but beware lest thy pride shall bring thee down.

Yes! we are forgetting God—the God of nations, the God of our nation, the God who has made us what we are—the envy of the earth. Christians! let us redouble our prayer and our efforts to bring back our youth and our men to the living God. The will of God shall be done, it is undoubted. May it be the joy of our country to embrace the will of God with its heart. The world may be against us, and our sorrows increase, but it will be well at heart with us if the benediction of possessing God belongs to us.

From Mr. Meyer.

Intercourse with Mr. Sheldon.

MRS. MEYER and I left Liverpool last Wednesday, and with the exception of one day of stormy weather have had a good passage—calm seas, brilliant sunshine, lovely moonlight. I have thus been able to rest and get through some of my arrears.

The chief charm of the voyage, which will make it always memorable to us, has been the opportunity of continuous intercourse with Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon. Our state-rooms have adjoined; our seats at meals and our chairs on deck have been together, and we have had opportunities for those long, quiet talks which are only possible on an ocean voyage like this. I do hope that we may all be the better for this intercourse, which was arranged by our Heavenly Father, we having had no hand in it.

Mr. Sheldon's mind is eminently practical. He is true to the Gospel, but it seems as though, instead of stating it doctrinally, he is set on applying it to life, as he sees it around him. I think that this peculiarity of his mind should be carefully considered in every estimate that is made of his character and work.

He is now grappling with the domestic servant question, and is writing a story with the object of teaching the dignity of service, and of bringing mistresses and servants together, to discuss their difficulties in the light of the Sermon on the Mount. As we listened this afternoon to the first chapter of this new story it seemed to me as interesting as anything he has ever written. He proposes to read these six chapters on six successive nights in some public place in Boston, and so inaugurate the campaign he is about to take with Dr. Clark, for the next few months, in the principal cities of the States.

He is a most interesting conversationalist, as he looks at things so freshly, and from the standpoint of

MUCH SANCTIFIED COMMON-SENSE.

His birth in a New England manse, his early years spent on a ranch in the far west, to which his father emigrated, and where the family had to rear everything from the ground, with the experiences that befall a young college student in America in working his way through his education, have been an excellent preparation for his present ministry to the church.

To his own church he preaches but once on Sunday, except during the three winter months, when he reads one of those wonderful stories chapter by chapter at an evening service. For the other Sunday evenings of the year he encourages his people to cultivate the religious life of their families; whilst he devotes himself to his young people, giving an address to them after the Christian Endeavour meeting is over on the current topic. He lays great stress on the family life, and makes it a rule to spend two or three evenings at home each week reading aloud, and entering into the interests of the home-circle.

His church is very intent on the evangelization of 5,000 coloured people, who have a settlement not far from their place of worship. Their efforts are specially directed to the children and young people. This appeal to the young is very characteristic of Mr. Sheldon, who is always hoping that the new young generation may save society.

We took a service together at the request of the second-class and steerage passengers on Sunday afternoon, first in the saloon, and then on deck, each giving two brief addresses. His was very interesting—on Temptation. (1) We should keep ourselves employed, which he illustrated by a graphic description of the way in which his father and brothers used to fight and arrest the prairie fires. (2) We should watch and pray, which again he illustrated from life in the wild west, when, during the progress of a blizzard, they dared not venture from their log house to feed the cattle in the barn, without keeping their hands on a strong cord, connecting the one with the other, for fear that they should perish within a few yards of their own door. (3) We must hide in Christ, which he illustrated by telling the graphic story of how, on one occasion, they were only just in time to save themselves from the rush of 10,000 cattle, maddened by fear of the cow-boys' lash, by springing up in a great ox-waggon. There was a marvellous freshness in these illustrations, which rivetted the attention of his audience.

We are now not far from New York, and I am hastening to Northfield, from which I hope to be able to send further tidings. In the meanwhile, I earnestly ask for the prayers of God's people.

At Northfield.

Northfield is beautiful as ever. Writing this in the early morning of what promises to be an exquisite, though very hot, summer day, I glance round from side to side on a most lovely panorama of mountain, river, woodlands, pasture lands, and picturesque houses embowered in trees.

The Northfield Hotel, in whose spacious verandah I am sitting, has been enlarged, at the cost of £7,000, to receive eighty additional guests, and as it has been greatly extended in the direction of the valley, the view is correspondingly increased, so that, altogether apart from the Convention, Northfield offers many attractions to the visitor.

The congregation of people from all parts is larger than ever. It is clear that many old friends have made a special effort to be present, and all the houses are crowded. There are large numbers of ministers, representing the presbyteries and associations of great cities; many ministers from the Southern States; workers, singers, missionaries, Christian Endeavourers, Sunday-school teachers, Bible students, from all parts of the world.

I am glad to say that Mr. W. R. Moody presides over the meetings with great modesty and dignity, not obtruding himself, but taking the necessary direction in the simplest way possible, and most efficiently. It is very wonderful that last autumn, with a kind of prophetic prevision of coming events, Mr. Moody said to him one day, when they were driving together, "All this will go on without me, but you must take the chair. Anyone else might divide them, but they will unite on you." Probably no man of his age has been called on to take just such a position, demanding and delicacy in handling men; but he is consciously upborne by the loving prayers and sympathy of this vast assembly, which, as I stood up to address it last night, seemed greater than on any previous occasion. What a wonder has been wrought in eleven short years, for I came first in 1890, when the gatherings just filled Stone Hall, and then Dr. Gordon was alive. Now he, Macgregor, and D. L. Moody are with God!

W. R. Moody, his sweet wife, and their bewitching little baby-girl, whom God gave in the place of the little one whom He took last summer, met Mrs. Meyer and myself at the station, and drove us up to the hotel. I felt, however, that I could enter no dwelling-place till I had stood by that grave, so he and I went there. It is an ideal position on Round Top, at the top of the slope above the old home, and in a position from which it is easy to see Mount Hermon, the school for boys, four miles away across the valley, on the one hand, and the Western Hills on the other, with glimpses of the Connecticut River. It is a miniature Pisgah of vision. At the head of the grave is a simple massive headstone of white granite—as strong, massive, and simple as his character was whose remains lie beneath. The name, dates of birth and decease, with the text, "He that doeth the will of God abideth for ever," are all the inscription. Indeed, what could be added that would not dilute and diminish the effect? We stood in prayer that more of the Spirit which endued him might fall on us both, and renewed our consecration to the ideals for which he lived.

Then I went to salute Mrs. Moody, calm, strong, womanly, so fitted to be "the mother" of all these young men and women. Mr. and Mrs. Fitt are there with their bonny little girl, and Paul Moody, for whom surely a great career is opening. There is grace and common sense represented in this family to consolidate and carry forward this mighty concern. It is a great task to have to raise some £20,000 per annum for the maintenance of these institutions here and at Chicago, but He who imposed the responsibility will find the half-shekel, when the tax-gatherer calls, as He did for Peter.

It is gratifying to learn that the sales of the Biography of Mr. Moody have reached 195,000 copies, which surely is a very great figure, considering the size and cost of the book.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan has been here for the past few days, and is looking much better; and we earnestly hope that, in answer to our prayers, and sincere efforts to help the people, this may be the best Conference ever held at Northfield, and so, as Keswick was, the crowning blessing, in this direction, of the closing century.

"He is Able to Succour."

(St. Matt. xi. 28; Heb. iv. 4; Rev. xxii. 10.)

Sinner, thou whose tarnished name
Bears the brand of guilt and shame;
Thou whose heart is crushed within,
By the burden of thy sin;
Jesus every pang doth know,
He who bore thy weight of woe
Pitieth thy sore distress,
Waits to pardon, save, and bless.

Captive, chained, by doubt and fear,
In despair's deep dungeon drear,
Thou who bitter throes hast borne,
Thou whose heart is sad and worn,
He whose soul was bowed with thrall,
Sympathizes, knoweth all;
Waits to give thee sweet release,
Blessed freedom, perfect peace.

Mourner, bowed by saddest grief,
Tears that cannot bring relief,
Weeper who hath wept in vain
Sobs of agonizing pain,
Jesus all thy griefs doth know;
He who wept for thee below
Yearns thy rugged path to smooth,
With his balm thy spirit soothe.

Sufferer, doomed with fleeting breath,
Standing on the verge of death,
Trembling, weary, lost, and lone,
Jesus hears thy heart's sad moan.
Tell to Him thine every fear,
He has trod doom's pathway drear,
Died the death, and fought the strife,
Won thy soul's immortal life.

Struggler with the restless sea
Of a dim uncertainty,
Jesus trod life's ruthless tide;
Take Him for thy Friend and Guide;
He will succour, bless, and heal,
Grave thy soul with heaven's seal.

The review of the year—remarkable in many respects, and memorable from many points of view—is carefully prepared and detailed. Throughout its numerous and increasingly varied spheres, the society maintains its well-directed and aggressive activity, and the tidings from missionaries far and near, contained in the report, reveal how surely the Kingdom of God is winning its widening way (Wesleyan Mission House, Bishopsgate Street Within, E.C.)

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, August 26. Solomon's Song i.

THERE is no love like thine, most holy Lord. What the lover's kiss is to the maiden of his choice, what fragrant ointment is to the sense of smell, what wine is to the exhausted, weary soul, and a thousandfold more, that Thou art to those whom Thou choosest, and causest to approach unto Thee. Only draw me nearer and ever nearer to Thee, even into thy inner chambers, where Thou dost manifest thyself to those who keep thy commandments, as Thou dost not to the world.

I am black, swarthy with the tan of earth and soiled by sin. The coarse canvas of the Arab tent is my native hue. It is only in thine eyes, and because thy beauty is shed from thy face upon me, that I am comely. Only Thou couldst say that I am as the curtains of Solomon. Those who know me best weary of me, and I am often weary of myself; but tell me where Thou feedest thy flock, that I may find Thee, and be included in thy care, and rest at noon beneath some spreading shade. Thy companions will not suffice. Thee, and Thee only, my soul desires.

What is this thou sayest, that thou wilt replace the plaits and necklaces of my rustic adornment with beads of silver and wreaths of gold? Ah, how glad will that moment be when I stand arrayed in thy beauty, and all who see me glorify Thee in me. That they may turn from me to Thee in wonder and admiration is all my desire, for Thou art pleasant to me as the spikenard with which Mary anointed Thee, or as a bundle of myrrh or camphire. And where Thou art there is new beauty in nature, the pastures are greener, the cedars more stately, the firs more graceful, the sun is brighter, the stars more brilliant, and the flowers increase in beauty.

MONDAY, August 27. Solomon's Song ii.

Rose of Sharon, Thou art, O Lord; it is the royal flower, and red withal, as though dyed from Calvary; as the lily, Thou art adorned with more beauty than Solomon in all his glory. My life aspires after a lily-purity, but, ah! I grow among thorns, the sharp points of which surround and wound me.

All beautiful things are but types of Thee, my glorious Saviour—the apple-tree with its delicious fruit and refreshing shade, flowers with their nectar, and fruits with their sweet taste, cedared banqueting-halls and royal banners, gazelles and hinds of the field. All nature finds its key and perfection in what Thou art. From her fairest achievements my soul rises by a natural ladder of association into thy dear presence.

Thou comest, Thou comest to my soul. For these many days I have been without the sensible enjoyment of thy presence, but the season of absence and distance is over, and the Holy Spirit has made Thee nearer than the nearest, dearer than the best-loved. Thou art looking in at the windows of my soul, and glancing through the lattice-work. Thou biddest me follow Thee into the world of the Resurrection, where the winter is over and the thunder-rain is spent. The wolds are carpeted with flowers, and the woodlands ring with the choirs of birds, for Faith, and Hope, and Love are here; and Thou art mine, and I am thine. But I cannot give Thee all my thoughts, for the little foxes distract me, the flitting cares and tiny worries and wandering thoughts; when I would be all taken up by Thee, my heart is torn hither and thither. But do Thou turn to me, my Beloved, and tarry with me till the day breathes after the heat, and the shadows lengthen.

TUESDAY, August 28. Solomon's Song iii.

I would that my dreams, as well as my waking thoughts, should be full of Thee, my Saviour. I would that sleep itself might not be possible to me, unless I were assured of thy nearness and love. I would speak of Thee to the watchmen, as one well known to them and me, for there is none in heaven or on earth beside Thee, none to be compared with Thee.

Thou shalt come again, Thou Bridegroom of true hearts. Through the heavens, Thou shalt come. The clouds that made a chariot for thy return to the Father, shall become the stairway by which Thou shalt come again. And thy Church shall accompany Thee. What a procession that will be! It shall resemble the royal marriage procession, when Solomon and his bride approached Jerusalem, she being borne in her litter or palanquin, guarded by a squadron of warriors, the air being redolent with columns of perfume; whilst he reclined in his royal carriage, the interior of which had been fitted up by the love of the daughters of Jerusalem. All the earth shall then go forth with songs to greet Thee; and how blessed for thy Church, and for me, when we shall be with Thee, never again to sin or sorrow, or be parted, but to spend the eternal years with Thee in the glory which Thou hadst with the Father before the world was made.

WEDNESDAY, August 29. Solomon's Song iv.

The words of this chapter are such that I cannot apply them to myself, my Lord. By no stretch of speech canst Thou say of me what the Bridegroom said of his spouse. My eyes are not gentle and loving as doves; my lips are not full of pleasant and comely speech; my body is not the fair temple of the Holy Spirit; my heart is not meet to be thy dwelling-place. Whatever Thou sayest of others, Thou mayest not say these tender words of me; not yet, at least, till the day of my life wanes, and the other life breaks, with all its blessed emancipation from the soil and burden of the flesh. Then, for the first time, Thou wilt be able to say of me, "Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee."

In the meanwhile, I will gladly come with Thee, my Lord, from my native home, from Lebanon with its snow-peaks, and Hermon, where the lion roars and the leopards roam; I would forget my own people, and my father's house; I would forsake all others, and cleave only to Thee. What to me are the fellowships that men hold dear, unless they are channels down which thy love may reach me? What are the charms of Moab or Philistia, if Thou art exiled thence?

Since Thou hast made me afresh, Thou hast planted my heart with plants and pleasant fruits. I am thy garden, and would be shut up and sealed for Thee and Thee alone. But the spices hang so heavily, they do not pervade my life or spread abroad to the delight and comfort of others; let the winds breathe on me, that the spices may flow out, and then come into thy garden, walk the paths of my heart, and eat thy pleasant fruits.

THURSDAY, August 30. Solomon's Song v.

He came to me the other day, and called me to a new surrender, a new service, a new revelation of Himself. He pleaded with me to open to Him, for He had stood waiting and knocking at my heart's door too long.

I know not what possessed me, I acted as one bereft of sense. Of course I loved Him, and knew that my life could only be happy in his fellowship and love; and yet, I know not why, I answered Him rudely and roughly, as though it were too great trouble to yield to his will. Presently my heart smote me. I sprang to my feet, and went to the door; and ah, I envied the very handle He had touched, for the perfume of his hands still clung to it. But He had gone, and when I sought Him, I found Him not. I called, but He gave me no answer; and those who might have helped me to find Him turned on me with reproach. I deserved it all, and have only myself to blame if He never speak to me again.

Do you ask me to describe Him? He is white in his stainless purity, and ruddy with the traces of Calvary. His head is crowned with most fine gold, and his hair is black with immortal vigour. His eyes are full of love. His face is fairest of all the sons of men, because the glory of God shines there. He is girt with the purple robe of royalty, girded with the golden girdle of Deity. His words—what He says and the way He says it—are sweet and precious beyond compare! Eye hath not seen, nor the heart of man conceived, how fair He is.

> For ah, the Bridegroom is so sweet,
> So fair his smile on banished men.

FRIDAY, August 31. Solomon's Song vi.

When the spouse extols her Lord, the souls that hear her words are astonished, and ask that they may seek Him too. We may win men by direct exhortation, or by indicating the awful doom of rejecting such a Saviour; but very often when we dwell on the perfections of Christ, when we speak and act under the spell of his love, it greatly arouses and fascinates the weary, dissatisfied children of the world. There is nothing of all this in their experience.

How often our beloved Lord comes into the gardens of our homes to gather lilies—the sweet, pure girls and boys, the babes! He needs them for the adorning of his home. His body-guard is composed of those who have never been defiled, and who are without fault before the throne of God (Rev. xiv.).

Art thou thy Beloved's, and is He thine? These are great words to say. The first clause implies consecration; that thou art not thine own; that time and money, children and home, are absolutely at his disposal; that thou art the very slave of Him who bought thee to set thee free. Thy Beloved's, that He may have for evermore the first claim on thee; that He may save thee here, and glorify thee hereafter; that He may have thy heart's love and thy life's endeavour. And the second clause implies that all He has is thine; that thou mayest lay claim to his unsearchable riches, and make use of his inimitable worth. Ah, soul, it is a great exchange to give Him thy worthless self, and to receive Him and all for which He stands!

SATURDAY, September 1. Solomon's Song vii.

The daughters of Jerusalem describe the bride, in her rich attire, which is delineated from her embroidered sandals to her luxuriant tresses. They enumerate the clasp of her under-girdle, her crimson shawl which makes them think of a garland of red lilies around a sheaf of corn, her straight and slender neck, her dark and sparkling eyes, her tresses, lustrous enough to captivate a king. It is thus that the angels and principalities of heavenly places will gather around the Church some day, and extol her beauty—the beauty which Jesus shall have put upon her. We are told that in the Church God will make known his marvellous wisdom. All that is attractive in Christ's humanity, all that is divinely beautiful in his Deity, all that is glorious in heaven's fulness, shall gather in the Church, when the Spirit of God has completed his work.

We shall be able to say then, what we say now, "His desire is toward me." Christ desires us. Nothing less can satisfy Him than the love of his people. Nothing that heaven itself can give, is comparable, in his esteem, with the love of those whom He has redeemed. Why it should be so, we cannot understand, but that it is so, we are devoutly thankful.

The Shulamite invites her spouse to come with her into the country, to be free from interruption and intrusion (v. 11, &c.). And we may well imitate her in this, that in our busy life, we should seek times of seclusion, lodging in villages and getting early to the vineyards, where we may tell Jesus how we love Him, and open our hearts to his love. Godly souls have always loved the quiet and beauty of the country. As they walk to Emmaus, Jesus joins them.

Caution.—I find that "J——s N——n F——y" is once more imposing upon credulous Protestants, and passing himself off as a secretary of a society which has no existence. Five years ago the Indian Watchman and the Bombay Guardian, two evangelical papers in Bombay, thoroughly exposed this impostor, and he disappeared from view. Recently he has renewed his false pretences, and sought to obtain posts under Protestant and Evangelical auspices. Full particulars about him may be gathered from a pamphlet, copies of which may be seen at the offices of the English Churchman, 74, Strand, W.C.—Alfred Porcelli, Colonel.

Keswick Addresses.

II.—Priesthood.

BIBLE READING BY REV. HUBERT BROOKE.

AMONG the subjects of the Book of Leviticus, our second division (chaps. viii. to x.) is concerned with Priesthood. God's lessons here deal with Aaron as the high priest, and with his sons in their subordinate capacity. Ten times in this short section we are told, "This is that which the Lord commanded"; and we are here upon the simple assumption that the statement thus made is true. The matter is, therefore, of interest for the study and understanding of all the Lord's people. There is a whole line of blessings, particularly in the Christian life, that are absolutely bound up with the service of the High Priest, without whom, practically, we cannot have them at all.

No high priest existed in Israel when the passover lamb was killed, nor was there one at the offering of the covenant sacrifice beneath Sinai; but when it is a question of worship and of continually maintained access to God, we have to do with priesthood at every point of life. This is not an elementary subject, touching the pardon of the sinner who seeks salvation. That pardon is given when we behold the Lamb of God, and receive the forgiveness which is secured at the price of Christ's blood, shed for us. An intelligent apprehension of forgiveness leads the soul to say, "I am purchased from the many lords who have had dominion over me, and I am now to take my Lord's will as the rule of life."

The section before us is all about Christ; indeed, the Old Testament is full of which are all solved when you turn to Him. Someone asked me the best book to study in order to understand Leviticus. The question may be answered in a moment—Hebrews. Keep the leaves of the one Book as well worn as of the other, and you will understand both.

Lev. viii. tells the story of the consecration of Aaron and his sons; chap. ix. describes the attendant sacrifices, with God's acceptance and seal thereof; and chap. x. contains a solemn warning in the judgment upon the two sons of Aaron who offered strange fire, and did not come to God in his appointed way.

Read in the first of those chapters, verses six to eleven, the carrying out of the instructions previously given in Exod. xxviii. Aaron had to be washed in order to represent, as he did feebly and typically, the perfect holiness of the Lord Jesus Christ. "For such an High Priest became us (or was suited to us) who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners" (Heb. vii. 26). Then came the clothing of Aaron, with inner coat of white, girdle, and mitre; and these things were also worn by each of his sons in their priestly office. The things peculiar to Aaron alone were the robe all of blue, the ephod with its girdle, the breastplate with the Urim and Thummim, and the golden plate or holy crown placed upon the mitre. All this is but is designed to teach us wonderful lessons concerning Christ and what He is for us. The colours mentioned tell of his perfections—white indicating his absolute holiness; blue, his Divine nature; purple, his Kingly glory; and scarlet, the atoning efficacy of his shed blood. All these qualities, and more, enter into the work of Christ as our great High Priest.

Moses next "poured out the anointing oil upon Aaron's head, and anointed him to sanctify him," or to separate him for his special office. Of Christ it is said (John iii. 34), "God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto Him." Whatever He was made for us, it was "for evermore" (Heb. vii. 28). As every blessing came to Israel solely through Aaron, so spiritual blessings are ours only through the Lord Jesus Christ, who has never passed on his High Priestly service to anyone else.

Compare Lev. viii. 23, 24 with John v. 19 and 30. Christ's ear heard only his Father's judgments, and his lips spoke only his Father's words; his hand did no work but that of the Father, who had absolute control over his whole power of service; and was that of the Father. Some Christians seem to hold that, when Christ became man, He was subject to our infirmity of judgment, and spake words that cannot always be taken as absolutely true. But in John xii. 47 to 50, He clearly tells us that by his teaching as a whole, and by the words in which it was expressed, we shall all be judged at the last day. Upon Christ's words I may rest my soul for all eternity, or the Bible is a fraud—there is no alternative. Every word He spoke was with the absolute authority of the Father. If He seals the Books of Moses as true, I am content to accept them. In these days of Bibles, with many-coloured pages, when wise men discover the hands of seventeen editors in a verse of fifteen words, we see a brighter glory than ever in the God-given utterances of Him who declared that "heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."

A definite consecration offering is made by Aaron (Lev. viii. 25 to 28), and, literally translated, it was his "handfulness." Upon the shoulder (bodily strength) was put the fat (riches of the heart's affection), and upon these were placed things taken from the basket, representing earthly possessions. After the whole—placed upon Aaron's hands—had been waved before the Lord, it was burned upon the altar in token of Divine acceptance. We have no difficulty in recognising Christ in that picture. Because all his heart's love was for the Father, it was for those whom the Father loved. He who was rich, for our sakes became poor; so entirely was He, for us, the consecrated High Priest.

The blood of sacrifice and the oil of anointing sprinkled upon Aaron (verse 30) shows him as bound in eternal covenant with God for his calling. Our Lord was, in all points, like those whom He represents, sin only excepted. And on the God-ward side of his representative character as our High Priest, his wonderful qualifications for the office are seen in his absolute sinlessness, free right of access to the Father's presence, Divine nature, perfect service accomplished, complete atonement made, and full anointing with the Holy Ghost. In our great High Priest there is nothing lacking and nothing superfluous.

Learn a further lesson from Ex. xxviii., in verse 12. Christ bears our names before God, between his shoulders; and herein is the assurance of perfect support in our utter weakness. Like Paul, we may glory in our infirmities, that they may show forth the perfection of Christ's strength. But in 29, "Aaron shall bear the names of the children of Israel in the breastplate of judgment upon his heart when he goeth in unto the holy place, for a memorial before the Lord continually" (verse 29). Of Christ it is said, "Having loved his own, He loved them unto the end" (John xiii. 1). His love will not wear out, any more than his strength. He will secure us, and love us, right to the end.

IN THE PLACE OF STRENGTH

In Aaron's breastplate were the Urim and Thummim, by which the high priest gave Divine guidance and judgment. When Joshua was appointed leader of Israel, his path was made clear at every point of doubt by going to Eleazar the priest, and following the counsels obtained through these oracles of God. Knowing Christ as our great High Priest, his perfect guidance is at our disposal for the smallest need of our life.

The plate of gold was always upon Aaron's forehead, that the children of Israel might be accepted before the Lord. All who come to God through the Lord Jesus Christ will find perfect acceptance, and may be assured of a welcome on the ground of his perfect atonement and present intercession. In Him we have strength to meet every need, a love that will last through eternity, guidance for every step of the way, and acceptance for our poor prayers in all their feebleness,

The most beautiful prayer, in human estimation, is nothing worth if he who offers it comes not in the name of the great High Priest; while three or four words, expressive of real desire, and uttered in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, may open the windows of heaven and bring down countless blessings. He is before God for the very purpose of handing in our petitions, perfumed by his merits; and I, for one, want no other incense.

Try to grasp these truths, not only for yourself but for others who may be injuriously affected by certain false teaching which is so prevalent in the present day. Somebody said to a simple believer who had come out of Romanism, "Peter keeps the keys of heaven, and you will have to go to him for admission." "No," he replied, "I know Peter's Master, and therefore I shall not trouble the servant." Take weaker ones by the hand and lead them to know the great High Priest, upon whose office no earthly priest, so-called, must be allowed to encroach.

There were differences between Aaron and his sons in regard to the offices they fulfilled and the garments they wore; but both he and they were washed and consecrated. When Christ washed us from our sins in his own precious blood, He made us kings and priests unto God (1 Peter ii. 9; Rev. i. 6). We are to live and are to be always girded ready for service. Never may the Christian say that he is "off duty." Wearing the mitre of intercession, bearing the marks of Christ's blood, may our ears be open to his Word, may our hands be yielded to his service, and may our feet be constantly found in his ways!

The Lord wants the strength of our bodies, the affections of our hearts, and the possessions of our lives, as priests consecrated unto Him. Many of those who say they love and trust the Lord, and that they have yielded their wills and their lives to Him, keep their purses and their possessions to themselves. By the Israelite of old, such things were considered least of all; and, if he had given himself to God, his goods were freely included in the gift. Let us not forget the sacrifices of Heb. xiii. 15, 16: "By Him, therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips giving thanks to his name. But to do good and to communicate forget not; for with such sacrifices God is well pleased."

We have been seeing something of the great High Priest in his glory. God grant that some of its outshining may cling to us, so that we may be used in his service among the sons of men.

Faith's Reckoning.

BY REV. F. S. WEBSTER.

For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed (Rom. viii. 18).

With these words upon his lips, the verse yet unfinished, John Calvin died; and in all ages they have been the sheet-anchor of God's saints when buffeted by the waves of this troublesome world. Here is a simple lesson in arithmetic. "I reckon," or calculate, says Paul, using a word of severest prose, but far more forcible than the most picturesque imagery, to show that both sides of the equation are equally substantial. He gives the result first, and the working of the sum afterwards.

Perhaps you say, "Can anyone who has eyes and heart for the present sufferings, speak so lightly of them? What of the sorrows of London's outcast and submerged tenth? What of the agonies of the massacred Armenians? What of the sufferings of the native Christians and murdered missionaries in China? What of famine-stricken India, and the battlefields of South Africa? Well, Paul has added up both columns accurately, using a very fine calculus which embraces every element in the problem. The result is due neither to sanguine temperament, nor to superficial treatment; but it is as the only possible deduction of faith. He who made the comparison well knew what suffering was. See his beautifully modest, but most accurate statement, in 2 Cor. xi. 24-27.

Paul knew that suffering is not confined to sinners. The fair things and the treasures of earth are subject to vanity and corruption; and a common groan of travail and pain goes up from all creation. Does that saying seem an exaggeration upon this beautiful July morning? Nay, the Apostle, looking upon nature with his inspired knowledge thereof, knew that its seeming peace is only on the surface; while, underneath are strife and suffering. The very birds that charm us with their song impale butterflies upon thorns to feed their young. Even we who have the first-fruits of the Spirit groan within ourselves.

But, thank God, we are not subject to vanity, nor are we in bondage to corruption. Peter tells us that we are redeemed with the precious blood of Christ from our empty manner of life. Our Lord Himself says that He chose his disciples to bear the fruit which does not corrupt and fall, but remains. At the close of Rom. vi. we have the old life and the new brought into sharpest contrast. "What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? For the end of those things is death. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." There is neither vanity nor corruption when, living in accordance with this chapter, indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord, letting God make our reckoning true through the mighty indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

WE RECKON OURSELVES DEAD

For all that, the fullest salvation that can be enjoyed on earth does not free God's children from sorrow and pain. Seemeth it strange that they who look forward to an eternity of bliss groan under earth's heavy loads? Our very union with Jesus Christ exposes us the more to suffering. If we have anything of his infinite compassion, sensitiveness to sin, and abhorrence of evil, we cannot pass through this world without sharing the burdens which made Him the Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief.

In this passage Paul speaks not as a blind optimist, but as one whose heart was wrung again and again with the woes of suffering humanity. But when pangs are most keen and sorrows are most severe, even then, thank God, we may make the reckoning of faith. Passing through the hottest furnace of affliction, when flesh and heart fail, we may count the sufferings of this present time as not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.

Shall we cast up the other column? What is this, so weighty, infinite, real, and sufficient that, in view of it, earth's ills are unworthy of mention? Some beams of the glory to be unveiled upon us have already reached this sin-stricken world. "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth." Can we go on and say, "Of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace"?

It was a glory veiled in flesh; but glimpses of it have served to break earth's gloom, and to bring a foretaste of heaven, in the joy, peace, deep satisfaction, and rest which are found in the love of God. Jesus shed forth his glory upon the ordinary domestic occasion of the wedding feast in Cana of Galilee, crowning the obedience of faith with a glorious miracle. When under bereavement, sickness, or poverty; when life becomes flat, insipid, and tame; then Jesus waits to turn prayer into communion, faith into devotion, the drudgery of duty into a delight, and sorrow into a very sacrament to our souls. The people at the feast knew not whence the good wine came; and, to-day, the world knows not that unfailing solace, abiding joy, and the strength that upholds under all circumstances, come from Jesus only.

There comes a time here when the storm-clouds, that have darkened the horizon and hidden the beauty of the hills, part and roll asunder, and the glory of your own Skiddaw shines out in magnificence. The first item in our counter-claim is the unveiling of Jesus Christ in the coming glory. If we did not read our newspapers, and forgot what is going on outside this tent, we might well think that we had heaven upon earth here at Keswick. But it cannot be until Jesus is unveiled and made manifest to the world that rejected and refused Him, until He is vindicated and enthroned to reign upon the earth that drank in his blood.

When Jesus Christ is unveiled, the sons of God will also be manifested. The world knoweth us not; but let there be no anxiety, on our part, to be unveiled while our Master is rejected. They who have appeared as weak, foolish, despised, and unworthy of notice in the eyes of men, will then be seen as the very chosen of God. There will be for the dross of earth cannot rival the gold of heaven. When the shadows flee away, we shall see things as they really are; and love will prove to be the greatest thing in the world.

One other item in the account is the redemption of the body. Whilst we abide in Jesus Christ by faith there is glorious deliverance, through the power of the Holy Ghost, from the dominion of sin; but, if we forget our Lord, natural corruption is always ready to use our bodies as its vehicle. When Jesus comes we shall be like Him. "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." Until this is accomplished there can be no final release for suffering creation, which "groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now." As you listen to all this,

WHAT IS YOUR RECKONING?

It is true of animals, trees, and flowers, that "the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly;" and it is sad to see these things fall, fade, wither, and die. Are you lower than creation? Is there one here sunk so low as to be subject to vanity willingly? Do you try to persuade yourself that chaff is as good as wheat, while you seek to satisfy yourself with the husks of this world? Creation is under temporary bondage, not willingly, but in hope. Are you subject to vanity, in despair? Have you abandoned hope, forgotten the coming of your Lord, and ceased to listen for his chariot wheels? Ah, the Apostle heard the cry of all creation, longing for that future emancipation which is promised by God! Has not that cry an echo in your heart? As you hear of sorrows, sins, triumphant iniquity, and rampant cruelty, does not the cry go up from your heart, "How long, O Lord? Come, Lord Jesus, come to this suffering, sin-stained earth." Be not content with this present state, even though the first fruits of the Spirit have filled your own heart. In the crowning day of Jesus there shall dawn a golden era, when the groans of creation shall be hushed, and when the whole world shall join in one harmonious anthem of praise to Christ.

Skegness Conference.

ON the 8th inst. I found myself for the first time at Skegness, a new watering place which has sprung up on the sands of the East Coast in the last twenty years. I found a warm and earnest Gospel work carried on by Rev. Geo. Goodchild, formerly of the Pastors' College, and now minister of St. Paul's Church, an iron building erected for the Reformed Church of England, and subsequently sold for its present purpose.

Open-air services of an uncompromising sort are held almost daily during the season, and which, on this occasion, were of a specially interesting character.

In the afternoon a conference on "The Need for an Open-Air Ministry" was held in the church, at which an able and promising young minister, Rev. Walter Butcher, himself a product of the open-air ministry on the sands, read the opening paper, which will be found in another column.

Rev. George Goodchild gave a sketch of the work, which began eight years ago. It showed him to be a man of exceptional zeal, energy, and fitness for such work. Then followed an address from the chair, and several five-minute talks. Among the speakers were Mr. and Miss Tippet, members of a family who have been remarkably blessed through the open-air services. Mr. Eyres, a business man from Capetown, had asked me on the sands if I remembered him, and I recognised him as having taken an active part in S.A.G.M. meetings, when I was there in 1895-6. He gave a very racy sketch of his conversion and subsequent adventures in the Gospel.

Dr. Morris, of Brighton (who also preached two mighty sermons on that and following evening), gave wise counsel, as did also some others, who were holiday visitors.

Ground has been secured for a permanent building for which contributions will be warmly welcomed. R. C. M.

The Vatican's Hostility

TO THE ITALIAN KING AND KINGDOM.

IF the inhabitants of other countries are inclined to think that the hostility of the Vatican to the King and kingdom of Italy is less acute than formerly, the people of Italy do not think so, nor does the Vatican itself. Cardinal Rampolla, according to the Agenzia Italiana, has been approached on the subject, when he replied as follows:—

As the head of religion, Leo XIII. could not but second the desire to honour the remains of King Humbert with the functions of the Church, but the Pope can never forget the position in which the Holy See has been placed, which is unchanged since September 20, 1870; nothing, therefore, can be changed in the attitude of the Vatican, nor will be changed so long as lasts this state of things, which the Pope cannot in any way tolerate.

That is to say, the policy of the Vatican is to upset the Monarchy, break up the unity and integrity of the country, and restore, with all its unspeakable evils, the temporal power. To quote a leading article in The Globe of August 10:—

No progress has been made in the direction of reconciliation with the Vatican. The policy of Rome is as changeless as that of Russia, and those who guide the intrigues behind the Papal throne have never swerved in their determination to turn back the hands of the clock, and drive out the Royal troops through the gate by which they entered the Eternal City thirty years ago.

Of course that is their intention, and in their endeavours to carry it into effect no tool is too base to be used. Anarchism, Socialism, alliance with France, or with Italy's enemies anywhere and everywhere, all are welcome allies in certain circumstances.

Nor must it be forgotten that the Vatican did not permit its priests to attend the funeral of the late lamented King Humbert. Those who attended were Palatine clergy, disconnected with the Roman Curia. Then, again, in no instance were the national flags permitted to be taken into the churches during the saying of masses for King Humbert. One reason generally given was that they had not been blessed by the Church. That is to say, Italy was banned by Pope Pius IX., and that ban Pope Leo XIII. maintains; and, indeed, it has been said in some clerical organs that all the evils of Italy are the result of this.

In this way the Papal Church virtually takes to itself the responsibility for all Italy's sorrows. Italy will never enjoy peace so long as a hostile Papal Church exists to seek its destruction in its very citadel. The Papacy is the worm gnawing at the heart of the kingdom. The following news has just been telegraphed from Muro Lucano, near Naples:—A priest, discussing with a canon about the regicide, Bresci, insulted the memory of King Humbert on the usual subject of the temporal power. A lieutenant of the 86th Regiment, Signor Luigi Stella, having heard his words, invited him to repeat them, which the priest did, when immediately the officer arrested him. Then the fact became known; the people, on the initiative of the Syndic, made a solemn demonstration against the priest. A. R.

The Shaftesbury Institute.

TO many minds, the "West End" of the chief city of the world conveys only an idea associated with gorgeous mansions and luxurious life, and the poverty and distress which lies hidden away in the slums is alas too often unknown to the general and Christian public. Of numerous agencies which exist in the interest of less fortunate residents of this fashionable locality, the Shaftesbury Institute continues its work of Christian benevolence with unabated vigour. The record of the year's doings is one which calls for praise and thanksgiving, for under the direction and superintendence of Miss Meredith Brown, the work has been abundantly fruitful.

A pleasing event was the opening of the Deaconess House in Great James Street, one of the principal slum thoroughfares. In all branches of the Mission difficulties have to be encountered and discouragements faced. Among the younger classes reached many are hard to manage and difficult to understand. These often furnish characters of the strongest type, and, once their affections are won, it is easy to bring home to their hearts the Gospel message.

The Women's Shelter is indeed a boon to many on the verge of starvation. A few nights' protection have given a new start to lives almost without hope of gaining an honest living; and a few words of timely sympathy have raised their thoughts to higher things, and not a few have been made to rejoice in the knowledge of a Saviour's love. Among the factory girls much toil has been rewarded. The classes meet four nights in the week, two of which are devoted to sewing, one to the Bible Class, and the other as play-night. The Training Home for Girls at Clarendon House proves as useful as ever. The girls are taken from evil surroundings into the quiet neighbourhood of Maida Vale, and the Home has no outward sign to distinguish it from the houses around. Here the Deaconess in charge, and the matron, carry on their preventive work. Girls between the ages of fifteen and twenty-one are received, including many who have been allowed to grow up friendless, with no one to care for their morals, manners, or education. They are trained in all branches of house and needlework, and prepared for service; and, above all, have set before them a holy and virtuous life.

"The Handy Man."

ENGLAND feels that she owes a deep debt of gratitude to her seamen and Royal Marines for their gallant deeds in South Africa, and now again in China. Vast sums of money have been raised for wives, orphans, and mothers, and although great energy is expended in the administration of these funds, there must still be missing links. Your paper is widely read, and the eye of some Service man may light upon this letter. He knows full well that my heart is ever with our men of the Navy and those dear to them, and I only want to know of a case of distress unrelieved to get that case helped. I ask my Service friends and others to let me know of any unrelieved and deserving cases, and I will do my best for them.

Much is being done for widows and mothers, but little is done for Jack and Joe. The Naval Brigade are the fortunate fellows, but every day men are invalided out of the service—without work, without pension, in weak health, and often with insufficient clothing. This state of affairs has only to be known to be remedied. Help for a few weeks would set many a bluejacket or marine, worn by sickness, on his feet again. A warm suit of clothes on invaliding would be a boon to many a man on leaving the hospital for civil life; and small sums of money can be wisely expended in paying the railway fare of mother or wife to enable her to look once more into the face of the dying son or husband, and to hear his last words. I am ready to do all this for our men—for richly do they deserve it—in their time of weakness and sorrow.

Soldiers' Christian Association.

THE prolongation of the war in South Africa has rendered it necessary for this Association to continue its work for the troops, beyond the limits originally contemplated; and while thankful for the signal blessing that has been bestowed upon its operations, the Council is exercised as to the best way of pressing forward with its inadequate resources. Eight large tents, each capable of seating 250, have been sent out, and the accommodation thus provided has latterly been supplemented by four iron buildings, of equal capacity, for use during the colder weather. These have been utilised at the various camps throughout Cape Colony, Natal, the Orange River Colony, and the Transvaal. Lord Roberts, who from the first has taken a deep personal interest in what has been done, recently wrote advising the placing of the iron buildings—two at Bloemfontein (so as to admit of the tents there being moved forward with the troops), one at Kimberley, and one at Ladysmith.

Each tent is furnished with tables and seats, and with a good supply of wholesome literature. Occasionally, in the pressure of emergency, the authorities have borrowed the tents for military purposes.

The men have crowded into the tents for reading and writing during the day, and during the evening and on Sundays for religious meetings. An old worker among soldiers, of thirty years' standing, speaks of the interest evinced by the soldiers in what is being done for their moral and spiritual welfare. This testimony is borne out by that of workers in every part of the field, and whatever other results may follow the war there is good reason to believe that it will be the means of great to a very large number of our soldiers and to the Army as a whole.

From the very commencement of the work there has been a steady ingathering into the Kingdom. Week after week the workers have forwarded the names, &c., of men who have enlisted in the service of the King of Kings, sometimes ten, twenty, thirty, and forty names being sent from one or another of the tents.

Hospital visitation has also been undertaken. In taking some marked Testaments round to men just leaving for England, a sergeant was asked for a comrade who could not be found. On learning why he was wanted, he said, "I wish someone would give me one," and immediately his wants were supplied. "Are you a Christian?" was asked. "Yes, thank God," was the reply. "How long have you been one?" "Ever since I lay sick of enteric at Orange River. I was one of four in the tent, and my temperature was pretty high. First one was taken out, and then another, and another, and I only was left. It made me think of wife and little ones, and I vowed if God would save my life, I'd give my heart to Him.

An extract from a worker's journal just to hand from Bloemfontein, says:—"Enteric is awful! I find I have relations here, and they have kindly put their garden at my disposal, so that I have the privilege of taking baskets of roses and other flowers all round the wards. Oh, what smiles of thanks I have had! The very sight and scent seems to put new life into some faces."

AT WOODSTOCK CAMP.

Mr. W. Gordon Sprigg, general secretary of the Cape Y.M.C.A., who has the oversight of the Association's work in South Africa, writes, in his report of July 23, of the erection of one of the large iron buildings at Woodstock Camp, where it will be furnished as a reading and prayer room for the men. He says: "This will probably be an important camp for some time to come. When the necessary furnishing is completed I am in hopes of having a very comfortable building."

The Council are very anxious to continue the labours of those remaining at the front, as well as fill gaps in the staff caused by sickness and death. The secretary of the S.C.A. is Mr. A. H. Wheeler, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

Missioning the Hoppers.

IN THE WEALD OF KENT.

"IT is over thirty-one years," says Rev. J. J. Kendon, of Goudhurst, in the annual report of Hop-pickers Mission for the Weald of Kent, "since the Lord led me to labour among these people. During those years many thousands have heard the good tidings of great joy. How many of these have received Jesus we shall never know until the Lord shall come. The number of hop-pickers visiting the hopping districts is estimated at 60,000. If we lift up our eyes and look, the fields are indeed white unto harvest, and the call is urgent for the sower and the reaper to gather fruit unto eternal life.

"The pickers come under the sound of the Gospel more or less all the hopping season, and carry back with them the seeds of eternal life. Walking by the side of one of these, and speaking about the Lord Jesus, a little fellow of nine years said to me, 'Please, sir, I think I shall try to get converted.' 'Well, my little man, and why do you want to get converted?' 'Because if you gets converted, you don't swear at your mother.'

"We have five centres from which missionaries go forth to all the hop gardens, camps, hamlets and villages around them. Every bin is visited, and all the hop-pickers come under the personal influence of the workers. Tracts, books, camphor bags, texts of Scripture, testaments, are distributed among the hoppers. In the evenings a camp is visited, and a Gospel Service or a Lantern Gospel Service held. Each Lord's day camps have been visited in the morning and afternoon, while all have united in a good open-air service in the village in the evening, These are the lines upon which we have worked, and the labour has been exceedingly pleasant. Everywhere, and by all classes, we have been kindly received, and in most cases, very heartily welcomed.

"A Hop-pickers' Shelter is being erected at Curtisden Green, Goudhurst. It will be the home of the hoppers during the season. Here they will find rest when they are weary; they will have facilities to write and receive letters; they will find tables, desks, seats for their use; medical aid in sickness; Sunday school services for their families; Gospel services on Sunday and week evenings; there will be texts of Scripture, Bibles, hymn books, a portable harmonium, &c. The shelter will be put in trust for Gospel work among the hop-pickers and home dwellers 'Until He come.' We are starting the first Shelter this year in hope of seeing such blessing upon the work that the way may be clear to erect other shelters in other districts in future years."

Harvest Hymn.

RAISE high the hymn of praise,
The festal harvest song;
In sweetest harmonies
The joyful strains prolong.
Thy works all join to praise Thee, Lord,
And saints thy boundless love record.

Thy ever-watchful care
Has blest our earthly toil;
Our barns are now enriched
With treasures from the soil.
Thy works all join to bless Thee, Lord,
And saints thy ceaseless love record.

The springing corn was fed
By sun and rain and dew;
Thus may thy Spirit's power
Our thirsty souls renew.
So will we ever praise Thee, Lord,
Ever thy boundless love record.

For thy great harvest home
Ripen our souls, we pray:
May fruits of love and grace
Increase from day to day.
For ever, then, we'll praise Thee, Lord,
Thy matchless, boundless love record.

Cricklewood Mission.—As the result of a conference held some months ago, it was resolved to start Gospel work amongst the Midland Railway Company's employés living in the Brent Cottages in Clarymont Road, Cricklewood. Open-air meetings were accordingly commenced in May last, and these, together with tract distribution, house-to-house visitation, &c., have been ever since carried on without intermission and have been blessed by God. The work is conducted upon an unsectarian basis. The folks who attend the meetings seldom go to a place of worship. The Midland Railway Company have given a site for the erection of a Mission Hall, and this it is much desired should be erected before the dark evenings come round. The hon. treasurer is Mr. H. E. Newton, 5, Rockhall Terrace, Edgware Road, Cricklewood.

The Late Mr. George Holland.

THE venerable and esteemed George Holland has passed to his rest. He had been in a weak condition for some months past, and the end came, peacefully, on Sunday morning last.

In the days when the many great missionary enterprises which now figure so prominently in the East End of London were not even thought of, George Holland's was a familiar form passing in and out amongst the homes of the poor. He became deeply touched by the scenes of juvenile depravity and suffering he saw on every hand. Moved by Divine love and compassion, he set to work to scour the highways, courts, and alleys of Whitechapel, and the George Yard Mission is a striking monument to his strenuous and devoted labours. In order to shape the "raw material" of the motley and grotesque assemblies which gathered from time to time, he made many personal sacrifices, counting all else but loss that he might rescue the bodies of the suffering children from disease and win their souls to the Saviour.

The best of his days were thus spent among scenes revolting, and associations unquestionably dangerous. For forty-five years he patiently and persistently pressed forward in this work. Through his exertions hundreds were rescued from the lowest depths of sin and misery. He was the soul and centre of the George Yard Mission.

This undertaking, which God has been pleased to own and bless so largely, had its origin in the day of "small things," and dealt at first with little children only. As all Christian workers are aware, there is no department of usefulness that calls for a larger exercise of faith and patience. These graces abounded in Mr. Holland, however, and so, having gained a foothold among the young, he went forward to adopt means for reaching their parents. Many of these were the victims of drunken habits, and sinful excess of every description. To cope with these evils a system of house-to-house visitation was organized, and weekly evangelistic services, conducted by Mr. Holland, were held.

The numbers that crowded into these meetings provided convincing proof of the appreciation of the services, and esteem for the devoted worker. Great blessing resulted; in some cases whole families being restored to the paths of righteousness, peace, and comfort.

A frequent visitor to George Yard was the Earl of Shaftesbury, and his impressions of the Mission and its director were constantly recorded in his diary. One of these entries reads:—

"May 31, 1878.—Went in evening to Whitechapel. Anniversary of George Holland's work in the locality. What a miracle of labour and God's goodness in that terrible district, which though terrible as it is, produces many instances of truth and virtue."

When recording the return of Lord Beaconsfield from the Conference at Berlin in 1878, and the ovation given to him at the Mansion House, Lord Shaftesbury says:—

"The steps of this mighty man to glory and greatness are strides as rapid as they are broad. And yet I had rather by far be George Holland, of Whitechapel, than Benjamin D'Israeli, Earl of Beaconsfield." Another entry reads: "Went on Wednesday evening to Whitechapel for service for ragged children. Deeply touched. Blessed God for the sight, and that He has raised up and sustained such a genuine, ardent, lovable, and Christ-hearted man as that dear and beloved George Holland. It is touching to see the smile of those small outcasts when one pats their cheeks, with words of praise and affection. It does one good, heart and mind. And so it does to see that inestimable man, George Holland, and converse with him. I had rather be George than ninety-nine-hundredths of the great living and dead. What a servant of our beloved and precious Lord!"

Speaking of him to a friend, he remarked, "I know of nothing like his zeal; he has laboured for the last twenty years night and day; he has given all his time, all his talents, all his life to his work, and he is just as fresh, as earnest, and as enthusiastic as twenty years ago. I never saw his like. He seems to live in the full light of God. And did you ever see such a face as his? It is always radiant. It does me as much good to see George Holland's face as to hear a sermon."

Mr. Holland was a powerful advocate of the claims and rights of the poorer classes. His pathetic appeals were often the means of moving stony hearts and indifferent minds to recognise how deep was the distress and how stern was the every-day battle against starvation fought by the poor, not only in the East End, but throughout the metropolis.

Nor was the influence of our departed friend confined to his own particular sphere of work. His large-hearted liberality and Christian love have been felt far beyond Whitechapel. His zeal and sympathy were strong and unwearied. No opposition, however formidable, cast him down. In sorrow he was full of faith; in joy he abounded in grateful humility. His gentle affection was ever towards the hundreds of little children, who, in their misery and deprivation, smiled at his kindly face, and realized that there was one at least whose love and care were assured. Mr. Holland was a man of prayer; in him faith and works were so associated as greatly to redound to the glory of God. Rich and poor believed in him; the former were his helpers, the latter were the objects of his tender solicitude. His name is fragrant of goodness and truth. God raise up others of a loving heart and mind!

The first part of the funeral service will be held at St. Matthew's Church, Essex Road, Islington, on Friday (August 24) at 2 p.m., and the interment will take place at Highgate Cemetery about 3.15 p.m. A memorial service will be held at George Yard, Whitechapel, E., the same evening, at 8 p.m.

Holidays for London Women.—Probably no class are more in need of rest and change than the overtaxed labouring women of London—the wives and mothers of the working poor. The Women's Holiday Fund secures for these a fortnight or three weeks in the country or sea-side. Arrangements have been made for the accommodation of between three and four hundred, and many more applications continue to be received. The treasurer is A. S. Daniell, Esq., Fairchildes, Warlingham, Surrey.

The Need for an Open-Air Ministry.*

WHEREIN does the need lie? In the world; in the Church; or in the ministry itself? These three ideas will be briefly dealt with, seeing that they equally lead us to the final judgment.

I. THE WORLD'S NEED.

The world's wound is too open and sore, its iniquities too great and grievous, to require any proof of the need of a ministry of healing and salvation.

No subject is discussed more in ministerial gatherings than this—"How shall we cope with this terrible indifference to religious truths and practices?" Where is the root of all this mischief? Is religion played out? Is the story of the Cross a myth that is fast losing its power over the lives of men? Is the religion of Christ to be classed with Confucianism, Brahmanism, and Buddhism? Is it a matter of changing choice and circumstance which religion we adopt, because all will equally lead us to eternal bliss?

Or, more briefly—Is the cause of this indifference to be sought within the religion itself? To this we give an unqualified No.

At the commencement of those great religious revivals that have altered the lives of nations, there has generally been much open-air preaching. It was an excommunicated clergyman—choosing rather to preach in the open than be silent — that founded Wesleyanism. Witness Whitefield and his strange gift of moving the masses; Spurgeon and the thousands that listened to his silvery voice, proclaiming in the open the good news of Salvation. It must be an aggressive open-air ministry, I believe, that will in any measure cope with this indifferent age. Win the ear of the people, and your message will soon win their heart; but how shall they hear without a preacher?

An open-air ministry is an extreme effort to meet an extreme need. For awhile, hearts estranged from God lie under the moulding influence of our speech. We preach a pure Gospel to men that may hitherto have received the truth through impure channels. Within the sound of our voice there is a class of men that will never be reached in any other way. There are millions who by subterfuge—vain excuse and palliation of conscience—refuse to hear God's still, small voice in the soul. Conscience speaks, but its message is either misinterpreted or refused. Not till in the open air do they heed that God hates sin and will punish the hated thing with eternal death. The careless, the indifferent, the iniquitous, stay for a moment to hear the story of the Cross. Those who live totally without the pale of the Church have the Gospel preached unto them by an open-air ministry.

There is necessarily something extreme in this work. The more terrible and more sacred things in life are thought and spoken of. Love—Death—Hell—and Judgment to come; the world's greatest sin, the Crucifixion of its Lord—these are the chosen themes. And rightly so. Responsibilities meet—the responsibility of the hearer's soul to its God, and the responsibility of the preacher for the salvation of the hearer. It seems from this that an open-air ministry is a more sacred thing than it is generally considered to be. This, then, stands as a proof. This ministry, reaching as it does that part of the world which is untouched by ordinary Church work, is needed, and is demanded of a Church that would be faithful to the Master's commission—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

(To be concluded.)

THE LATE

Principal T. C. Edwards, M.A., D.D., of Bala.

IN the recent death of Principal Edwards, one of the commanding personalities of Welsh religious life passed away, and one of its great centres of spiritual force and leading. His place was inwrought with the history of his native land for a generation, on its highest side. As preacher, theologian, and patriot he will rank among the formative figures of Welsh history during the nineteenth century. He filled a unique place, and his memory will be for ever interwoven with some of the most important movements of his time.

Principal Edwards was an instance of the noblest kind of heredity, being the son and grandson of two of the most influential public men of their day. His grandfather on the mother's side was the celebrated "Charles of Bala," who a century ago founded the British and Foreign Bible Society, and was the chief founder of Welsh Sunday Schools, his name holding in the Principality very much the same place as that of Robert Raikes in England. To be the chief instrument in initiating two movements of such world-wide scope is not given to many men, and "Charles of Bala" is a name to conjure with in many Welsh households to this day.

Principal Edwards was scarcely less fortunate in his father, Lewis Edwards, D.D., who was the founder of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist College at Bala, and continued to be its principal for nearly half a century. With such "forbears" it is not to be wondered at that young Edwards grew up in an atmosphere of fervent piety, large spiritual aims, and intense earnestness of life. From his cradle he was consecrated to the work of the ministry, and he never wavered in his devotion to the sacred calling as the highest and noblest to which human powers can be devoted.

Wales has been indeed fortunate in that, for nearly two hundred years, her ablest men have given themselves with enthusiasm to the service of Christ in the pulpit, on the platform, and in the press. In this one family alone, we find that, for three generations, the best talent and the noblest force of character have been devoted to the uplifting and redeeming of their native land from the powers of ignorance and sin. For in Principal Edwards' educational, pulpit and professional work, he was carrying on the work of his grandfather and father to its legitimate issue.

Young Edwards showed something of his gifts when quite young, and at eighteen we find him starting a monthly periodical for use in Sunday schools, and continuing to edit it for several years. He was also prominent in the competitive "literary meetings," which have for two generations formed one of the most stimulating agencies in stirring up the latent powers of young Welshmen. Entering his father's college, he gave himself with ardour to his studies, and succeeded in getting his degree of B.A. in the London University from that institution. Entering University College, London, he took thence his M.A., and later on, at Oxford, he again greatly distinguished himself by his zeal and scholarship, his strength of character being conspicuously shown in the way he retained his early religious convictions in the midst of a strongly sacerdotal environment.

A pastorate of nine years now followed in Liverpool, filled with the most strenuous work, and marked by ever-increasing success as a preacher of the Gospel. Here also he showed a remarkable power of inspiring young men with his own enthusiasm and earnestness, and the band he gathered round him during those early years afterwards proved, by the place they took in public life, that his influence was as permanent as it was potent.

But Principal Edwards' great opportunity came with the opening of Aberystwith University College, as the first step to the creation of the Welsh University which is now an accomplished fact. He was appointed to the headship of this college in 1872, and for nineteen years, devoted his best powers to nursing this institution from a weak infancy to a vigorous manhood.

Among the first batch of students were included some of the most brilliant young men of their day. The names of T. E. Ellis, Lloyd George, Samuel Evans, Ellis J. Griffith, and Owen Edwards, all of whom have since distinguished themselves in Parliament, represent one contingent of a group of scholars who, in the pulpit, at the bar, in the professor's lecture-room, as well as in science and business life, have shown that with adequate training, Welshmen, long kept back from taking their place in the larger world by lack of educational opportunities, are capable of taking rank with the men of light and leading in every department of human activity. No small share in this brilliant result was due to the marvellous faculty possessed by Principal Edwards of inspiring others with his own fervent spirit and lofty aims. He was a born leader, and his powers had been hallowed from his youth up by the most fervent piety; so that to be under his influence was to be drawn into the highest circle of aims, and the most strenuous output of energy.

The number of students increased between 1872 and 1891 from 27 to 360, and when he left this onerous but honourable post, the College was firmly established in its beneficent career, and two other University Colleges—one at Bangor and another at Cardiff—had been similarly started on successful lines. As an educationalist, Principal Edwards thus stands among the foremost that Wales has produced.

Nor was he during these years less busy in still higher regions of service. As a great "Cymanfa" and Association preacher he became the most prominent and successful in his own denomination, if not, indeed, of all others. He was able to speak with almost equal fluency and force in Welsh and English, so that his services were in requisition in all directions. To this enormous output of energy we must add his labours as a commentator; for it was during this busy period that he collected the materials for his masterly commentary on the 1st Epistle to the Corinthians, which would in itself be enough to perpetuate his memory and continue his influence. And, finally, he was almost equally energetic in connexional work, attending the synods, presbyteries, and conferences of his denomination, acting as examiner in theological examinations, and preaching on great occasions and at innumerable ordination services.

Truly his talents were not allowed to rust for lack of use. He was ever impressed with the necessity for working "while it was day, because the night cometh when no man can work."

As a thinker, Dr. Edwards was remarkable for several qualities seldom combined in one man. The writer remembers a noble sermon delivered by him some years ago in the City Temple on behalf of the L.M.S., when the character of the matter and delivery reminded him strongly of that definition of eloquence which describes it as "Logic on fire." The argument was close-knit and condensed to a degree, not a word was wasted in unnecessary effort, and for some time it seemed as though the audience were in for a high but somewhat frigid intellectual treat. As the preacher developed his theme, however, he gradually warmed to his work; his ideas took fire; the heart warmed the brain with its enthusiasm; and in noble peroration the first impression of lofty aloofness was altogether lost in the fine glow of personal appeal to which the whole sermon was made to lead up. The stately argument brought us at last to the feet of the Master, as we heard Him say, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." And this was a typical sermon. The simple piety of the man, his profound personal devotion to the Saviour, his rich spiritual experience, controlled his imperious intellect, and made it do duty as a servant where it so often dominates as a master. All the resources of culture, scholarship, and experience were made subservient to the one central aim of his life, so to preach Christ as to master the whole nature of the listener, and bring him a willing captive to the Saviour's feet.

This has been the kind of preaching that Wales has been privileged to hear from its great pulpit orators for four or five generations. There can be no better ideal of preaching in any land or language. In Dr. Edwards, the churches of the Principality have thus lost a "prince in Israel," a leader of commanding influence for good, a thinker of the first order, and a humble but sincere believer in the crucified Saviour. He has passed to his rest and his reward, "worn out by hard work" in the world's parlance, before the time of natural decay (he died at sixty-three), but in truth ripe for the bright company of "just men made perfect" through earnest service and patient suffering.

Other Lands.

The Indian Famine.

THE arrival of the long-expected and overdue rains in parts of India by no means removes the need for further generous contributions in aid of the starving. It must be long ere the first crops are gathered in, and meantime, as various missionaries point out, the miseries of the people will be accentuated in many ways. They are without seed corn, or cattle, or instruments for ploughing. Large numbers who were well-to-do farmers are now penniless. Sickness, too, has followed on extreme weakness, and a considerable time must elapse before the stricken ones are able to work. Obviously, relief must be continued for a considerable time, and it is necessary that a generous measure of support should still be accorded to the devoted Christian workers who are so strenuously labouring in the interests of the people.

"Our pressing need," writes Rev. C. B. Ward, of Yellandu, Nizam's Dominions, "is for seed. Rice is three times its usual price, and difficult to obtain. The loss of cattle has been great. Being an industrial mission, we have lost heavily on our village lands and gardens; but God hears prayer, and our 120 orphans have not known want. For months yet distress will be great. I purpose to take in 230 boys and girls, in addition to those which we now have."

Rev. Eric Lewis, of Kurku Mission, Bhaisdehi, Betul, Central Provinces, writes:—"The people are about to be set to work in their villages. The work will be chiefly weeding and gathering stones out of the fields, and the wages paid will be very low. We hope to open a cheap grain shop to sell at a price which will give them a good living for their work. We shall probably sell at quite half the market rates. Our grain comes thirty-six miles from our headquarters,

ON MEN'S HEADS OR CAMELS' BACKS."

"This morning," writes Rev. P. B. Keskar, of Sholapur, under date July 27, "I saw a boy fainting for want of food. After a little food and water had been supplied he told me that he had neither father nor mother. He was quite emaciated. He is a sample of several whom I have picked up. There are 250 persons in our poor-house, including 120 boys and fifty-five girls. I desire to take 300. We have twenty-two lepers in our asylum, and shall try to take thirty more. We heartily thank your readers for their help. There will be scarcity for another five or six months, until the people get the new grain."

Rev. S. Gillespie (son of the late Rev. Robert Gillespie, of Borsad) states, in a letter from Delsa Camp, Gujarat: "Through the long delay of the monsoon, we are face to face with the possibility of a continuance of the famine. Other parts have received a fair amount, but we have had practically none. Where there should be, on all sides, fields of young green crops, there is nothing but the brownness upon which we have gazed for so many months. The few cattle, kept alive with difficulty, are weakening unto death. Emaciated people, and the lame and decrepit, are becoming more in evidence. Only yesterday I undertook to feed 100 such, daily."

In the course of an interesting communication, Mr. M. T. Carroll (of Messrs. William Watson and Co., of Bombay) says: "The Viceroy has arranged to visit Kathiawar and Gujarat, where the rain has been practically nil, and where deaths from starvation are still (July 26) occurring daily. Nothing that has been said can give a true picture of the heartrending scenes. Corpses and skeletons (picked by dogs) are to be seen all about the rainless, foodless towns and villages. Your foods have been a special blessing. Without doubt these gifts have saved many thousands of lives."

Dr. Colin Valentine, of Agra, writing under date July 24, says: "The famine is growing in intensity. The failure, partial in many parts of the country and complete in others, is causing great anxiety. Cholera has reappeared in various parts, besides breaking out in fresh places. I have sent a to missionaries in the stricken districts, and am thankful to say much good has resulted. I am collecting famine children, and having them sent to orphanages outside the famine area. I must now find homes for 1,500 to 2,000 children. I am glad to know that you are sending out a large consignment of oatmeal."

Rev. J. E. Scott, of the American Mission, Muttra, wrote that on July 17 the famine in Rajputana was as severe as ever. "A little rain has fallen, but the farmers have neither cattle nor grain, nor money with which to purchase. We are feeding about 2,000 persons per day;

MANY OF THEM ARE CHRISTIANS, and have opened a number of grain shops where small supplies can be obtained at low prices, or free. We are also rescuing many children, and are making blankets to be distributed in the rains and cold weather. The food stuffs and medicines were a great blessing. Fever will prevail, and we shall need fever medicines. Thousands of these weak people will die of malaria."

Describing a recent tour through some parts of the affected districts, Rev. Dennis Osborne writes from Poona:—"Everywhere it is the same sad story of disease and destitution threatening death. Relief works are in operation in almost every district, and swarms of suffering human beings are being kept alive, while, in spite of every effort, hundreds in each camp are dying off. The physical system, enfeebled by want, is open to the first assault of disease. More heartrending still is the partly children, domineered over by vicious-looking, heart-hardened native officials. What is noticeable is the comparative fewness of the girls, and the mind can scarcely contemplate their exposed condition without the keenest pain. In some poor-houses, while there are hundreds of boys there is not a single girl to be seen. What has become of them? The possible answer is so full of pain that the mind refuses to entertain it."

Mr. A. Boake, of Loughton, kindly forwards a graphic letter which he has received from Mr. V. F. Hunter, who, writing from Belgaum, says: "Mr. Bird and myself have just returned from Gujarat, calling at Ramabai's Homes (where we saw about a thousand children, bright and happy), and then at Mr. and Mrs. Norton's Home at Dhond. As we approached Ahmedabad it was quite a common sight to see people sifting the dirt at the railway sidings in the hope of finding a little grain, and digging up and eating almost any kind of green plant to satisfy their hunger. What few cattle I saw were searching in vain for their number was gradually decreasing. I have never seen such awful sights as at Ahmedabad. It is impossible to give you a full description. There were women suckling their skeleton children, and crying because unable to get any food. Men, women, and children were climbing trees and picking off the buds. Children staggered along the gutters picking up any kind of filth and eating. We passed fearful specimens of humanity, some lying in the busy roadsides and paths. The great need is workers. 'No time for dressing, eating, or study of God's Word' is the cry everywhere. One brother told me he was so worn out that he could scarcely preach, even on the Lord's day. We heard of one who died alone within twenty miles, yet he was caring for a large number of orphans. One dear lad of fourteen brought down forty-seven helpless, dirty lads over 300 miles because no man or woman could be spared for the task. We shall try to get some workers together and visit Gujarat again."

Friendless Indian Women.

A LITTLE more than a year ago, by God's good hand upon us, we opened the Home for Homeless and Friendless Native Women in Calcutta. God has supplied the means and enabled us, without touching the money collected in England for the purchase of a house, to stand free from debt, with a balance of 4,000 rupees. Our numbers have ranged from fourteen to nineteen; the latter is our roll number now. There are six unbaptised in our midst, all called widows—some are forsaken wives—and several of them are desiring baptism. Two or three we feel very hopeful about, and feel much encouraged.

Two are showing a great change in their life and conduct, and a third has begun to manifest a change of heart. One of our number, only with us a short two months, died last year a rejoicing Christian. She was baptized at her own urgent request about three weeks before she died. She had only heard of the Lord Jesus a few days before entering the Home, but soon received Him as her Saviour.

Ours is not exactly a Rescue Home, but a Preventive Home, though it partakes of the nature of both institutions. It is for those who wish to escape from who may, perhaps, have succumbed, but desire not to go further into the paths of sin. The young widows of this country deserve our pity and much more effort on the part of we missionaries to hold out a helping hand to them than we have hitherto done. There seems to me no greater means of missionary work and influence than to get these poor, tempted young Hindu widows or forsaken wives under the daily influence of the power of the Gospel. It is simply marvellous to see the effect it has upon them, quelling their waywardness, and giving them the power of self-control.

We can, only humbly and tremblingly, thank our heavenly Father for some whose whole lives and demeanour have undergone a change, who now love their Bible and prayer, and show by their lives a real desire to follow the Lord Jesus Christ. Difficulties, perplexities, troubles, disappointments, there are, and must be, in a work like this; but the Lord is manifesting and glorifying Himself in our midst. He undertakes all for us, so

WHY NEED WE FEAR?

The work, with its useful industries of drawn-work, plain sewing, &c., chutney, preserves, cakes, is becoming too much for me and my good matron, Mrs. Seal. We are realising some 40 rupees profit every month. Bible classes, instruction in secular elementary studies, cooking, &c., go on daily, besides. A Bengali lady comes voluntarily to give the secular lessons. My great need is one about or over thirty years of age, who would just love to lead these weak ones to the foot of the cross of Christ, to get salvation, power, and strength. Is there any one who reads these few lines who will come, who feels, "God is calling me to go"? If so, please communicate with Mrs. Weaver, hon. secretary, Cedar Lawn, Hampstead Heath.

Evangelization of France.—The Home Mission of the Free Evangelical Church of France presents a very happy report for the year. There are now twenty-one stations, with over thirty paid agents. There are also forty annexes or sub-stations, where regular services are held, and 150 other places where occasional services are conducted. Some of the stations are the centres of important evangelistic effort. From Rouillac, for instance, Pastor Marsault visits over thirty localities. The intercourse with other evangelization societies in France is most cordial, and while the work entails much difficult and arduous labour, there is no lack of converts, and the conditions of life in the country are becoming more favourable to the spread of the Gospel. Copies of the annual report may be obtained from the secretary, Mr. Alex. Somerville, 4, Bute Mansions, Hillhead, Glasgow.

Korean Opening.

SOME of our readers will remember that, about two years ago, we called attention to the plans of a group of Christian Koreans, who, after visiting America and England, undertook evangelistic work in their own land. These friends seem to have encountered many obstacles. Mrs. T. Macknight, of Tafira, Las Palmas, Canary Islands, one of their correspondents, writes to us:

"David Yer had at Harley College the prospect of founding a college among his own people; and Philip S. Yih desired to be a general evangelist travelling over Korea. David writes now from a temporary work he took up in the Methodist school in Seoul, Korea, and Philip was enabled to be evangelist for a few months only. Now these are no longer lads, but men, and they still adhere to their first decision for God, made and consecrated by prayer in England.

"We look with every hope to the founding of this college in Korea, that in their native land there may be such an establishment, with Christian home attached. Dr. Underwood, Presbyterian Mission, has the oversight of all the work done by David and Philip, and reports with much satisfaction about them. He appeals to us to help them in this work. Now, says David, is just the time for preaching the Gospel in that land, and we know there is a most abundant readiness among the heathen Koreans to receive Christ. These lads are their natural teachers. Can we continue our work and give them a college and a living? If we found a college in that land, it will be a centre of active Christian work."

In a recent letter David Yer says: "I am, just as I was in England, under the care of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is, I believe, with me now. The other boys are well, and I meet them nearly every day. I am working in the Methodist School under Rev. H. G. Appenzeller, and teaching about 100 young men and boys; most of them are Christians. This is the only Christian school in Korea.

"I teach the Sunday school lessons regularly, and preach occasionally in the Methodist Church, which has more than 300 regular members. But it is so little work for the Saviour that I am waiting for God to call me to another work.

"Dr. Underwood advises me to begin a schooling work under him that I may have a preaching room, and I think it would be better; but I must wait a while. Will you think over it, and pray for my future work in this land?"

Temperance Assemblies in Norway.

THE great Northern Temperance Congress of Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Iceland, and Finland opened on August 1, at Christiania, about 2,000 representatives being present. The president, Herr Sven Arrestad, M.P., welcomed the delegates, and a leader from each country responded. On Councillor Malins (representing England) rising to speak, the Swedish choir from Gothenburg occasioned some surprise by singing "God Save the Queen."

The leading features of the Congress were speeches on given topics by scientific and other specialists, the chief subjects being "Temperance in the Schools," "Liquor Laws," "The Duty of Christians," "Drink and Morality," &c. Few resolutions were passed, but a deputation was appointed to wait upon the Scandinavian School Teachers' Congress to urge the desirability of temperance teaching in schools.

The meeting of the Norwegian Women's Temperance Union was largely attended. The reports presented showed marked advances in every respect. The annual session of the Norwegian Grand Lodge of Good Templars reported a membership of nearly 20,000 adults and 10,000 juniors, and an increase for the year of thirty-six lodges and branches. The Norwegian Total Abstinence Society also held its annual meeting, under the presidency of Sven Arrestad, M.P. About 300 representatives attended, and progress was reported in every department.

Some 3,000 Scandinavian schoolmasters and teachers attended the Teachers' Congress, which was addressed by Dr. Bergmann, Mrs. A. Trygg Helenius, and others.

Norway has certainly never before known so numerous and enthusiastic a series of meetings, and the result of the Congress cannot fail to be a deeper and more lively sympathy with the temperance movement in the North.

Christian Work in Cuba.

ALTHOUGH Protestant Christianity had been at work in Cuba prior to the American occupation, the work had not been as extensive or aggressive as it has since that time. Under the able leadership of Rev. A. J. Diaz, the Baptist Church has been at work since 1882-3, and has been enabled to establish six missions in and about the city—two of which are now independent churches.

In Spanish, sixteen services are held weekly at eight stations; six Sunday-schools, with 800 enrolled; three free day-schools, with 800 enrolled. A free dispensary is open daily from 1 to 3 p.m. in the central church building. The old rolls show a total membership of 2,700, but this will be materially decreased when the lists are revised.

An English service and Bible class are held each Sabbath. This organization controls a sanitarium with beds for 100 patients and a 38-acre cemetery (the only Protestant one in the city). It is gratifying to know that fully 50 per cent. of the current expenses of the organization is raised on the field, and that in 1899 there were seventy-five accessions to the Church, seventy-two of whom were received on confession of their faith.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has had a Cuban Mission in operation for some years under the care of Rev. J. E. Barredo, but on January 1, 1899, Rev. George N. MacDonnell reached Havana, authorized to expand the work. Accordingly a chapel and school were opened at 2A, Virtudes Street, where regular church services were held and instruction given in English. The following statistics show the growth of the work.

Spanish Work.—Three missions with 100 members and twenty-nine probationers; three day-schools, enrolment 250; four Sunday-schools, enrolmnt 200—seven religious services weekly. An English congregation has been formed with twenty-eight members. About 500dols. have been raised for work on the field, and 100dols. have been sent to the Foreign Missionary Society. Mr. MacDonnell is ably assisted by Rev. Thad. E. Leland.

The work of the Episcopal Church in Havana among the Spanish-speaking peoples was carried on, with during the war; and the lay-reader, Señor Jose Ramon Peña, still continues the church services, and lately revived the Sunday school.

Work among English-speaking people was begun in January by Rev. W. H. Neilson, D.D., in centrally located quarters. He was succeeded in February by Rev. W. H. McGee, who held services regularly until stricken with yellow fever early in December. In January the church moved to more commodious quarters. In connection with the church, a day-school for Spanish-speaking children has been maintained since July 1.

A Women's Guild has rendered much service in improving the appearance of the church. To further the Cuban work, Rev. Pedro Duarte, the pioneer missionary, comes from Matanzas once each month, and holds a service in Spanish, and Sr. Pena conducts a like service every Wednesday.

The Presbyterian Board of Publication and Sunday School Work have had Rev. Pedro Rioseco on the field as their representative since April 1, 1899. His work has been the formation of Sabbath and day schools, and otherwise to prepare the field for larger work in the near future.

At present two Sunday-schools, with an enrolment of 115, and a free day-school with sixty-five enrolled, are in operation. Three religious services are held each week, one of which is English.

A TENTATIVE CHURCH ORGANIZATION has been effected, with seventeen members.

The Congregational Church has work established at four points, at which five services and Sabbath schools are conducted in Spanish, and two services in English each week. The work was begun early in 1899 by Rev. A. De Barritt, who did much hard work, and pleaded so effectively for aid that it was decided to enlarge the work; and Rev. Dr. Herrick, who had been working among the Cubans in Florida, was sent to Cuba as superintendent of missions, with headquarters in Havana.

Rev. Lopez-Gullen, of New York, has been working with these gentlemen in a four months' mission; and, as a result, a church has been organized with nearly 100 members.

Many former members of Dr. Herrick's Florida congregation now live in the city, so that the outlook for a strong central church is VERY ENCOURAGING.

Work under the supervision of the Disciples of Christ is carried on at one point by Revs. L. C. McPherson and Melvin Menges, who came to Havana in October, 1899. Not until December were suitable rooms found, where English services have since been held—35dols. has been raised for foreign missions. Much service has been rendered to brother missionaries, and plans made for the organization of a Sunday school, and preaching service in one of the suburbs. No Spanish services have yet been held.

Work is also being done in Havana among Spanish speaking peoples by the Christian Alliance and the Society of Friends—both of which report encouraging progress. The Young Men's Christian Association has had representatives of its Army and Navy Department at work among the American soldiers and sailors, but nothing has yet been done for the young men of the country. There are many Cubans who have been members of various associations in America—so that there is a nucleus for work. In this and in other ways the field is a most promising one, and only needs men and means for its fuller development. The lack of suitable buildings has rendered effective church work difficult, and it is exceedingly probable that several of the denominations will erect buildings soon.

In this city of a quarter of a million people, there is little of the Light of the World. May the time come speedily when the Light of Lights shall shine in his fulness, dispelling darkness and dispair. A. E. Moody.

American Notes.

FOR the last six years the missionary societies of this country and Canada have met in conference for mutual help and suggestions, but the next one, announced to take place on September 21, will be one of the most important ever held. Plans for the future work in China will be discussed, and on the 20th the Presbyterian Board will confer with a number of their missionaries on furlough from that field. The Methodists alone claim to have suffered a loss of at least 500,000dols. already, and the Presbyterians have probably suffered as heavily. It is anticipated that a good deal of attention will be given to the questions of mission comity, and other points that were emphasized at the Œcumenical Conference in the spring.

Mrs. Ballington Booth's work among the inmates of our great penal institutions is making rapid progress, and eliciting warm commendation from those who ought to be able to judge best of its value and permanency. In the State prison at Columbus, O., the members of her Volunteer Prisoners' League held an open-air meeting in one of the prison parks on Independence Day. The remarkable occurrence was witnessed by the Warden, the Board of Managers, and a large number of visitors.

The new Central Christian Church of Columbus, Indiana, is the first religious edifice in this country to possess a roof garden. It is 75ft. by 53ft., and covered by a slate roof for protection in case of storms, a screen wiring being stretched round the garden to prevent accidents, and keep mosquitoes off the congregation. Its seating capacity is for 1,000 persons. The ladies of the church have made the garden attractive with plants and vines. The Sunday attendance has increased since its opening. Roger Martin.

Temperance Conference.—It has been decided to hold a National Temperance Conference in Manchester on October 2, at which Lord Peel has promised to be present, and to which all religious, temperance, and social reform organizations are to be invited to send delegates, for the purpose of discussing the attitude of temperance and social reformers towards the minority report of the Licensing Commission, with the view to securing, if possible, legislation on the lines of the recommendations contained therein.

The Position in China.

MISSIONARIES' TERRIBLE SUFFERINGS.

IT is good to learn that the Church Missionary Society has received from Shanghai a telegram, dated August 18, reporting the safe arrival there of twenty-three of its missionaries. Others, it was added, were following. The Society has also been notified that all the Mid-China missionaries are well.

On the other hand, terrible stories are told of the sufferings endured by other missionaries and their families, who were ordered to leave the interior and repair to Chung-King. They had to travel long distances in the intense heat of summer.

Reports from Hankow state that the missionaries from Shan-si arrived there after suffering fearful hardships. The ladies of the party came in utterly worn out, some of them in a dying condition. They had to struggle along, half-clothed, under the hot sun, for twenty-seven days. The fugitives were often without food. The children are reduced to mere skeletons. Some of the party died of exhaustion on the road; but the number of deaths is not yet known. These unfortunate people were the victims of the Manchu Governor of Shan-si, Yu-hsien, a notorious anti-foreigner and patron of the Boxers.

Reports from Chung-King state that thirty missionaries from Ta-tsien-lu, Kaiting, and Paoning left yesterday for Shanghai by river. The position at Chung-King is STILL VERY UNCERTAIN.

Fuller details have been received about the escape of the members of the China Inland Mission from Shan-si. The party which arrived at Hankow included Mr. and Mrs. Saunders and their two children, Mr. Jennings, and Miss Guthrie, from Ping-yao; Mr. Cooper and two children, from Lu-cheng; Mr. and Mrs. Glover and two children, and Miss Yates, from Luan. Mr. Saunders' two children, Mrs. Cooper, Miss Rice, and Miss Houston died of their sufferings en route.

Mr. Saunders reports that the friendly magistrate at Ping-yao received orders from the Governor, Yu-hsien, to destroy all the "foreign devils." The missionaries started for Tai-yuan-fu, a distance of fifty-four miles, under an escort. After they had travelled nearly fifty miles they met some native Christians, who warned them not to go to Tai-yuan-fu, where the premises of the Inland Mission had been burned down, and the Roman Catholic Mission destroyed, while the Baptist Mission was threatened with instant destruction. Mr. Saunders and his party then turned back to Ping-yao. The escort deserted them, and the fugitives pawned everything they had, including the ladies' wedding rings. They reached Lu-cheng in safety, but

STRIPPED OF EVERYTHING THEY HAD.

Thence they all fled south, with one donkey-load of bedding and clothes, and a small supply of silver. Twelve miles out, the donkey was seized by the mob, the clothes and silver stolen, and everything else destroyed. The fugitives were left with nothing to wear but native pyjamas; and half-naked, under a blazing sun, they tramped on, driven from village to village, with little or no food, and only water from puddles to drink. Sometimes a Chinese magistrate would give them provisions, and one supplied them with a little silver.

Mr. Saunders then tried to hire a cart for the ladies, but the villagers refused to let them have it. At one place the mob beat the whole party, and stole their money. Miss Rice and Miss Houston died from the effects of their injuries. On the arrival of the party in Honan, they were given bread and water, and sent on as prisoners. Coming to Hu-peh they found the magistrates, who were acting under orders from the Wu-chang Viceroy, most kind. Mrs. Cooper, however, died of her injuries in her husbands arms. Her last words were,

"OH, REST! REST!"

The native Christians also showed great kindness to the unfortunate fugitives. The whole journey lasted fifty days.

"Prayer Brings Pardon."

A STORY OF OLD FRANCE.

MADAME CELESTINE CARRIER had for twenty years made the surplices for the choir of the cathedral, when her son—her only son, Alphonse—was carried off by the conscription—for those were the days when they took even the widow's only son. She lived just under the shadow of the cathedral, in a cottage so small that it was called by the townspeople, "The Hole in the Wall," and the name stuck. As the youth kissed his mother at parting, he said:

"But of course, I shall soon again be with you, mother! Dry those tears and think only of the time of my return."

"Ah!" cried the widow, "you speak after the manner of this life only—we may never meet again; the good God alone knows the end of everything—make Him your friend, Alphonse." With many repeated farewells he promised his mother that her God should be his, and that his waywardness and folly were now at an end; and he added:

"Mother, I am now a soldier of the King—my life is his. I must see that I do not disgrace him or my country."

"Remember the words, my son," said his mother, "Fear God," then it will be easy for you to do the next thing, "Honour the King."

The widow was nearly heartbroken at the loss of her son, and when he was sent on foreign service it needed all her faith and trust in God to believe that still all was well. Years passed, she heard nothing of or from Alphonse; but she never ceased to pray for him; she never gave up the hope that wherever he was, if he were still living, he would become a son, by his own choice, of the loving God. "Ah," her sister would say, "you have great patience, and more faith in Alphonse than I!

WE SHALL SEE WHO IS RIGHT."

"My patience," Madame Carrier would reply, "is for Alphonse; my faith is in God. It is He, not Alphonse, to whom I pray." Still, the years passed with no tidings. One day, just thirty years after Alphonse had left his native place, his mother—now seventy years of age—was arranging her linen-closet when she came across an unfinished piece of needlework. She called to her sister:

"Babette, here is the fine linen shirt I was making for Alphonse when he was called away. I will finish it, and he shall have it when he comes home."

"Celestine, are you mad?" asked Babette. "Alphonse would be fifty years of age were he living, and that is a lad's shirt."

But Celestine only smiled, and proceeded to finish the garment. On the third day it was completed; but the eyes had grown weary over their task of love, and in the twilight the worker fell asleep.

"Awake! awake!" cried Babette, "for here is thy grandson!"

Celestine awoke with a start. Her grandson?

"While I slept thou didst my dreaming, Babette," she cried. But, as a young man, straight and tall, came out of the shadow: "Oh, my Alphonse!" she exclaimed, throwing her arms around his neck, "thou hast returned, and all is well, as I prayed."

"Grandmother," said the young man, "I am indeed Alphonse, but the son of your son. He sent me to ask forgiveness for him." "Forgiveness for my son, whom I have loved and prayed for these fifty years!" was her reply. "Tell my Alphonse prayer brings pardon."

At these words Alphonse himself appeared. He looked with tender pity on her who bore him, his eyes filled with tears: "Mother," he said, "thy son was lost and is found; for long he walked in evil ways, but God has given thee thy answer, and saved thy son." Babette looked on as one in a dream—Celestine had conquered! "Why didst leave thy mother in doubt all these years?" she asked. "Nay, not in doubt," said Alphonse. "I knew my mother trusted in God, and though I turned from Him I knew He was her Comforter."

Then Widow Carrier showed her son the shirt she had just finished. "Said I not so to thee?" he asked, turning to his son, "that we should find grandmother making something for our arrival? And now I will wear this garment, for I am travel-stained."

And so Celestine's faith was rewarded, and she was content. "But if God loves to bless, why," asked Babette, "did He tarry?" "Thou and thy 'buts'!" cried Celestine. "Does every child get all he asks for at once? Didst not, thyself, yesterday refuse a toy to Rénè, until he should know how to use the gift? I am content. God has sent me two sons to-day, and both are his. He knows that now I have learned the value of his gifts." But Babette, who did not understand, shook her head.

China and Korea.

IN a letter from Seoul, Korea, Miss Perry, Superintendent of the Home for Destitute Children there, says:

"I suppose you are getting alarmed for our safety during the fearful trouble in China. We are expecting a shipful of refugees from Tientsin and Chefoo. Many have lost all they had. I am offering to take two ladies. . This morning Kumsuni went to God after hours in convulsions. She had grown so tall (five years old). We shall miss her very much. Just before she died they sang hymns to her, and Maria (a Korean woman) repeated, 'Yesu darra, Kumsuni' ('I will follow Jesus'—her favourite hymn). I have taken another boy of fifteen; he was nearly starved. I hope people at home will take up this work. The need is great."

The above was addressed to Miss Pash, of Esburn, Laurie Park, Sydenham, who is at present in this country representing the work, and who will be glad to conduct missionary meetings, illustrated by children in Korean costumes, wherever invited.

Rest for Deserving Poor.

SIR,—It seems to me that the idea of providing "havens" of rest is "from above"; but I am anxious to know how the "merits" of intending "refugees" will be discovered, and by whom shall it be decided who is "deserving"?

You have always been very strong on the matter, and perhaps reading your paper for twenty years has helped me to notice the more carefully. But I have come to the conclusion that from half to two-thirds of the earnings of a large proportion of the working classes in the East End "are deliberately and constantly wasted, and virtually 'got rid of' in drink, tobacco, betting, and gambling, without one effort being made to provide for a rainy or dark day." Am I not right in saying that so many are the calls for all classes of workers to-day, that sickness is the only legitimate reason for any person not being profitably employed? It follows, therefore, that the only reason for future need of help by any person seeking it, will be, that they have experienced reverses over which they have had no control; and it seems to me this is the only ground upon which a person can be considered "deserving." Even the dread of the workhouse for old age has failed to stimulate people to cultivate thrifty habits during their "day of opportunity," and the setting up of an "unguarded" rose-coloured future for the old age of any and all, without regard to antecedents (provided principally by taxing the careful, struggling and really worthy), will not only encourage a continuity of the recklessness referred to, but will possibly demoralize many now provident under difficulty and establish the motto, "Let us waste, for when we are old we shall live well."

I believe it is our duty not alone to care for those whose day is past, but for those whose day is to come. If taxation is becoming burdensome (and it is) even with the old restrictions, what about the future of thriftily-trained members of the rising generation, if an "unguarded" earthly paradise awaits (at their cost) the indifferent and wasteful as well as the really deserving poor?—Yours truly,

BUSY BEE.

The Zionist Congress.

TO many who have not realised its meaning before, it must have been a strange sight to see so many of the Scattered People en masse and in groups in the neighbourhood of Langham Place last week.

What is the meaning of this assembly? It is the first articulate cry of returning consciousness of a nation long in a deadly swoon; yet how different these men of intellectual power and influence from the oppressed and wretched men who are ordinarily recognised as Jews!

Some five years since the world was startled by the appearance of a small book by Dr. Theodor Herzl, editor of the Neue Freie Presse, entitled "The Jewish State," which set forth very forcibly the sole remedy for the woes of his people as "the fulfilment of its kingly dream of millenniums past—a reconstructed Jewish State." To attain this end, Dr. Herzl proposed the formation of two companies, "The Society of Jews," and "The Jewish Company;" the former to do preparatory work in the domains of science and politics, to be afterwards practically applied by the Jewish Company. He has shown that all the requisites for national prosperity—knowledge, wealth, cosmopolitan experience, international commerce, talent, ability, thrift, and industry—are to be found among the Jewish people, and he is assured that the Jewish State, a thing impossible so lately as fifty years ago, is even now a possibility, and will be ere long a certainty.

The "Zionist Association," which is the scheme of Dr. Herzl set in motion, enrols its members on payment of a shekel. Every delegate present at the yearly Congress represents at least a hundred shekel-paying members, and in many cases two or three times as many, since a delegate can be elected to represent more than one constituency. At the present Congress, held at Queen's Hall, between 400 and 500 delegates were present.

The aim and object of Zionism, as formulated at the first Congress, is "to procure for the Jewish people an openly-recognized and legally assured home in Palestine." To this end will be required a charter from the Turkish Government, which has not yet been obtained, "but," said Dr. Herzl in his opening address, "we still hope, and continue to labour, to secure it."

"Zionism," Dr. Herzl maintains, "is the ONLY SOLUTION OF THE JEWISH QUESTION.

It not only opens up to every country a prospect of the settlement of the Jewish question in a manner worthy of mankind, but it also contains at the same time the elements of a great perspective for the Orient. Our reappearance in the land of our fathers, prophesied by Holy Writ, sung by our poets, yearned for midst tears by our stricken nation, and jeered at by miserable scoffers—is a matter of political moment to the powers that have interests in Asia. Asia is the diplomatic problem of the next decade, which grows daily more serious, and it will, I fear, for some time, be deeply tinged with blood. It is thus of increasing importance to the nations of civilization that on the shortest road to Asia a post of civilization should be at the service of civilized mankind. This post is Palestine—and we are those who are ready with our blood and our substance to provide it."

It is an interdependent, not an independent, State that the Zionists seek to found, the Sultan being their sovereign, and the goodwill of all the nations their guarantee with him. The executive of the Zionist movement is the Aktions Comité of Vienna, of which Dr. Herzl is president. This committee occupies itself with the diffusion of Zionist aims in all the world, of which it is able to give a good report. The Jewish Colonial Bank has been called into existence, with powers to treat for the purchase of the land.

Dr. NORDAU'S speech, a very fine piece of oratory, eloquently described the suffering of Roumanian Jews, and appealed to all lands against the perfidy of Roumania, who has broken the covenant of the Berlin Congress by which she obtained her independence, and which bound her to protect all her subjects, alike foreign or homeborn. He appeals also to all Jews for systematic, continuous aid for their poor brethren wandering aimlessly away from a land which condemns them to beggary and starvation, into other lands whose cities are closed against them.

The Hon. Secretary of the English Zionist Federation (Mr. L. J. GREENBERG) read a report on the condition of the Jews in England, who could exclaim "The lines have fallen unto us in pleasant places," her native and foreign subjects being treated alike. This is due, Mr.

DR. THEODOR HERZL.

Greenberg held, to England's principle of free trade, which broadens her view as to foreign matters, and the love of the English people for the Bible, which is more part and parcel of their life than is the case in any other European nation. Those whose ancestors have laid down their lives for the Bible are not likely to suffer persecution from those who hold the Bible to be their most sacred heritage. Mr. Greenberg spoke the truth here, but not the whole truth. In former times there have been so-called "Christians," even in this country, who persecuted the Jews because they held that they were under the displeasure of God, and that in persecuting them they performed the Divine will; and if Christians in England do not still persecute the Jews, it is because there is more true Christianity in the land, and Christianity involves Christ-likeness. Men of the world, which are God's "sword," may work his will in judgment, but the followers of the greatest Prophet ever sent by God to his people will not persecute, but seek to do them good. England is a place of "pleasant lines" to Israel, because here they take refuge under the shadow of Christ.

With ill taste, and worse logic, the speaker animadverted against Christian efforts among the Jews, professing that, while these were ineffectual, the slums were neglected, neither of which statements is correct. It would be well for Jews to take to heart the truth that should England cease to cherish a spiritual Christianity, even though she should remain professedly Christian, anti-Semitism will again rear its horrid head in this land, and England will no longer be "pleasant" land for them.

A curious sight has been the appearance of Galician and Russian Jewish Rabbis on the platform haranguing their Western brethren. Rigid Talmudists, they require that religion, which to them means Talmudism, should be an indispensable item of education. Alas for them, their atheistic, pantheistic, "enlightened" brethren scorned the thought, and gave them plainly to understand that if they were present at the Congress as Zionists well and good, but that as representatives of religious communities they would not be tolerated.

On Thursday morning a scene of great confusion took place over this subject; the propositions which had created the ferment had to be withdrawn, and Dr. Herzl poured oil on the troubled waters by stating that, while religion was excluded from their deliberations as Zionists, it did not necessarily mean that the Zionist Congress was anti-religious.

It is, however, painfully evident that human intellect, will, and power is the god alone recognised in this assembly of representatives of the one people on earth whom God has chosen to be his own people, whose King and sole Leader should be Himself. How pitiful it is to hear them reckon on themselves alone for their salvation, bemoaning the horrors of the time, but never lifting their eyes to God.

True, a little discourse was delivered to the assembled Zionist delegates, by Rabbi S. LEVY, in the new Synagogue, on the Sabbath before their first session, on the words, "Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people, saith your God," but the text was all the sermon, and was entirely left behind in the very unspiritual address which followed.

The bones of Israel are very dry. "Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain that they may live!" (Ezek. xxxvii. 9).

DAVID BARON.

Rev. James Neil was permitted to give seven formal lectures to crowded audiences of delegates, members, and visitors, which were received with great enthusiasm, as were also the objects of the Palestine Exhibition, which he introduced to the Congress.

Pure Literature Society.

THIS Society has the distinctive feature that it does not edit or publish either books or periodicals, but selects, recommends, and circulates periodicals and books, cottage pictures, school-cards, diagrams, texts, &c. From these subscribers of a guinea may have a shilling parcel every month, and may purchase books at reduced prices, or may recommend grants of libraries of from £5 to £10 at half-price. Some 9,353 libraries have been thus granted to associations, schools, village committees, workhouses, gaols, hospitals, working men's institutions, &c., in all parts of the world, to the value of nearly £75,000, as well as to ships, which have now over 600 libraries afloat. More than 100 "Magazine Associations" are connected with the Society, and above 1,000 parcels of the selected periodicals are sent out each month from the office.

The Secretary is Mr. Richard Turner, and the offices of the Society are at 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.

Scottish Navvy Mission Society.—The annual Conference of Missionaries was held on August 14th at Easter Warriston House, Edinburgh, when Sir Archibald Campbell, Bart., presided over the gathering, and Rev. Kilpatrick, Colonel Morton, and Colonel Agnew gave helpful addresses. The reports from the missionaries were most encouraging, and cheering accounts were given of the progress of the Society in its efforts to take the Word of Life to the navvies. The superintendent is Mr. F. J. Taylor, 49, Castle Street, Edinburgh, who will gladly send a report to intending subscribers.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

 I want to interest my "Young People" every week in what Mr. Meyer writes on the Christian Endeavour Topic. Parents will also find the S.S. Lesson Notes suggestive and helpful for Sunday talks with their young folk. (See next page.)

A Request.

 I should like my young friends to read the account of dear Mr. George Holland (page 16), who died last Sunday. He was such a devoted friend of poor children. And will you send me a little thank-offering for the work he has done, to cheer those who are continuing it?

Pen Pictures from Afar.

A MALAGASY SUNDAY SCHOOL.

I HAVE great faith in the good work that is being done in the Sunday Schools of Great Britain. Some of the earliest religious impressions ever made upon my own heart were received in a London Sunday school. But for the devoted teacher of the Bible class I attended I am not at all sure that I should be writing now to the young people who read The Christian.

To-day I am going to give you a pen picture of a Sunday school in Madagascar. I cannot transport you to that very interesting island, so that you will have to use your imagination a little to make the school, its teachers, and scholars a reality to you.

Antananarivo is the capital of Madagascar, and there is the school that I am talking to you about. We will suppose that we are assembling with the boys and girls and adults who are making their way, chatting and laughing—all so bright and happy—for their morning lesson. The school is not held before the service as in England, but after. The time would be about half-past ten. Look! Not only a large number of dusky-skinned children are filing in, but many grown-up people. Surely they do not need so many teachers as these—men and women! The fact is, grown-up people—many of them parents—attend Sunday school at Antananarivo. In this school there are two women's classes and one men's class. The men number about sixty, and their ages range from seventeen to seventy. You will conclude, therefore, that some men in Madagascar, even when they become grandfathers, do not consider themselves too old to attend Sunday school.

The attendants at the school number 300, which are arranged in twelve classes. The missionary's wife is the superintendent. A dozen regular teachers, with a few "reserves" for emergencies, together with a secretary, make up the band of willing workers.

I can almost hear some of you saying, "Why, it is very much like a British Sunday school!" Of course it is, the home school being the model.

Would you not like to hear these Sunday scholars sing? I wish you could, for I am sure you would be delighted. When properly trained they sing in tune and with good taste. Since you cannot hear them sing, I will give you, in the Malagasy language, the first verse of a very favourite hymn in this school: "Jesus loves me, this I know":—

Jeso ô! Mpitia anay,
Maminay ny teninao;
Osa ny fanahinay,
Fa mahery Hianao;
Mamy, ry Jeso,
Ny ftiavanao.

Now let me tell you a little about the teacher of the men's class I have spoken of. He was educated in England some years ago, and this would explain the great aptitude for teaching we cannot help noticing. The men often sit spell-bound while he is giving the lesson and never seem weary in listening. His name is Ratavao, and he is engaged all the week in teaching in one of the city High Schools. But he never wearies of his Sunday work. He longs to bring all the members of his class to a true knowledge of Jesus Christ. Nothing gives him greater joy than when one of his scholars really decides to give himself to Jesus.

Then I think you would like to hear something of Rajocbelina, the secretary. He, too, is a native, as you would judge by his strange name; so un-English it is, and not at all easy to pronounce. Happily, he is a most earnest Christian, and that makes his services so valuable. He is quite the right hand of the superintendent. He is a medical student, making good progress in his profession. Many are the duties of a good secretary, and all of these he discharges with scrupulous care, but perhaps the one he most enjoys is that of assisting the superintendent at the close of the year to make out the prize list. Would you not all like to be present at the prize distribution?

A custom adopted in this Malagasy school might be imitated in England with much advantage. As some of the teachers live far from the church, and as it is difficult for all to meet again during the week, the teachers stay behind for about twenty minutes, while the lesson for the following Sunday is briefly discussed and explained by the superintendent.

I do so hope that all the young readers of this Young People's Page will become teachers in a Sunday school, either at home or abroad, and have very much blessing in their work. J. W.

Ragged School Union.

IN all its varied departments the work of the Ragged School Union and Shaftesbury Society has been sustained uninterruptedly through another year. The growing demands of the work, coupled with the uncertain tenure of the old offices, rendered it necessary to look for other premises. These were secured after careful consideration, and at the new offices of the Union accommodation is provided for the numerous departments of effort, with considerable margin for still further extensions when necessary.

One of the most pathetic and successful branches of the Society is the Cripples' Mission. These poor, afflicted children, representing every grade of suffering, remain with their parents. A register is kept, which now bears no fewer than 6,240 names, and a network of visitation is organized over the whole of London. The cripples are grouped under the direction of nineteen divisional superintendents, while there are 195 local superintendents, and over 1,000 visitors.

The Holiday Homes of the Society were visited last year by 1,188 children, while the Day in the Country and Fresh Air Fund, which forms part of the holiday scheme, retains its place in the programme of the Union's operations. Upon the clothing department of the Society the demands made are more numerous and pressing than ever, and the practical help afforded was never more appreciated or urgently needed.

The amount of labour involved in the accumulation and distribution of clothing, like other branches of the society's work, is undertaken voluntarily by earnest and devoted friends whose loyalty to the cause of the distressed and suffering never fails. An adequate idea of the extent of this benevolent institution can only be obtained by perusing the annual report. The secretary of the Union is Mr. John Kirk, and the offices are at 32, John Street, Theobalds Road, London, W.C.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 26.

MINISTERING TO CHRIST (Matt. xxv. 31-46).

THE idea of the Shepherd is applicable to our Lord in all its particulars; here to the division which must be made between intermingled flocks. The separation process is always going on, but one day it will be consummated and final. Some have said that this parable describes the judgment, not of individuals, but of nations; and of these in regard to their treatment of the Jews. If this were so, it would be interesting to look on it as a plea on the behalf of the Jews throughout the coming Christian ages. It was as though Joseph, the saviour of the Gentiles, put in a plea for his brethren, whom he was to leave in Egypt. But on the whole, the closing words are so general, that we are bound to take in a wider and more general application, and to think that Jesus is always coming to us to claim our help in each case of pain and need that accosts us.

We cannot reach Jesus now to minister to Him. And even if we could, what is there that we could give Him? But He has made over the debts we cannot pay to Him directly to the poor and needy; and bids us pay over to them what we cannot give to Him. Most lovingly He says that He will accept whatever we do to others for his sake, as payment to Himself. We can therefore say, with the Apostle, "I am a debtor to the Greek and the Jew."

Is it not beautiful that our Lord identifies Himself thus with the hungry and thirsty, the weary and homesick, the outcast and suffering? There is not a workhouse or hospital of which he is not Patron. The rich and successful cannot count on so close an association with Him as those may whom the great wealthy world treats with supreme disdain and contempt. Should any of my readers be in the conditions referred to let them be greatly comforted; Jesus was like this in his earthly career, and remembers what it is like, and sympathizes with a keen, and warm, and inexhaustible sympathy; and accepts any kindness as though it were done to Himself.

We must be on the outlook for any case of need which He puts in our way, remembering that the outstretched hand of need is his. But let us beware, on the other hand, and remember that we must help wisely. To give money away profusely may injure the moral nature of the applicants for our help, making them lazy and careless. We should guard against this. We must not give to every beggar who asks for alms; but we should not refuse, unless we are quite sure that our ministry will hurt rather than help. It should be borne in mind, however, that the Lord does not bid us distribute money, but give food, clothes, personal ministry, and these are much less liable to abuse.

The Great Teacher speaks of those who give hand-help to others as Righteous, because only when we are really right with God are we merciful to men. Righteousness and mercifulness are one. Before a man can minister thus to his fellows, he must have bent low before God, have been forgiven, and justified, and have received the gift of the Holy Spirit. There is no antagonism between these words and those of the Apostle Paul on the inability of works to justify the soul. The Apostle deals with the root, Jesus with the fruit. You cannot have one without the other.

Oh, the sin of not doing! Mark that the banished and exiled souls were so because of what they did not do. We may be condemned, not simply for what we do, but for what we neglect to do. Not to bind up the wounds of the wounded Jew, and to pass by on the other side; not to have the oil ready for the lamp; not to use the talent entrusted—this will bring down the wrath of the Lamb, and degrade the soul to the level of the devil and his angels.

Let us ask, then, for the grace of the Holy Spirit, that we may follow the steps of Jesus, who went about doing good, and healing all who were sick and in need. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will remember him." F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

Dr. and Mrs. Clark sail for America on Aug. 24. The time intervening since the Convention has been spent at C.E. meetings in France, Germany, and Spain.

The first Christian Endeavour Society has just been established in Korea. This almost completes the circle of nations of the world that have opened their doors to the movement, Thibet being perhaps the one exception.

An Indian C.E. Convention was held on July 14 at Serampore, in the historic Mission Chapel, where Carey preached and prayed, and where General Havelock was baptized. Our Indian comrades had special prayer for the World's Convention, then meeting in London.

Rev. F. J. Horsefield, of Bristol, writes in The English Churchman:—"I sincerely wish my brother clergy would consider the advisability of utilising the methods of Christian Endeavour in their parishes. It is undoubtedly a means of blessing, and a source of power wherever it is honestly and wisely tried."

International S.S. Lesson.

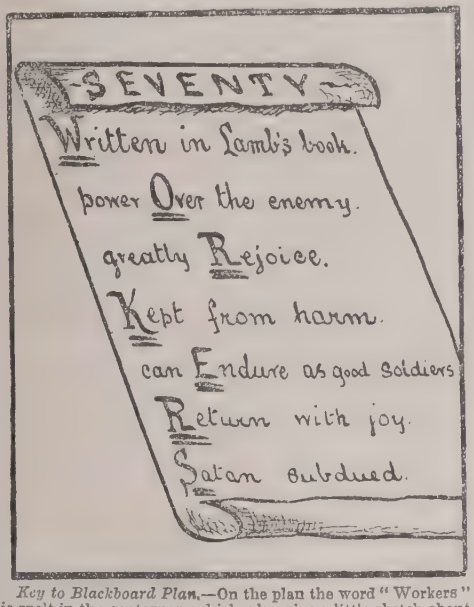
September 2, 1900.

The Seventy sent forth.—Luke x. 1-11; 17-20.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few."—Luke x. 2.

INTRODUCTION.

CHRIST wanted some helpers to go to the places around where they were, to tell the people who He was, and to make it known that the Messiah had come; so He chose seventy men from among his followers and sent them out two together. Moses had seventy elders (Num. xi. 16), the Sanhedrim was also composed of seventy men.



Key to Blackboard Plan.—On the plan the word "Workers" is spelt in the sentences, which also give a little sketch about these seventy men whom Jesus chose, and will show us that all who work for Him can have the same power and joy, &c.

WRITTEN IN THE LAMB'S BOOK.

Before we can be true workers for Christ, we must know we are true Christians, and that our names are written in the Book of Life (Rev. xxi. 27; xx. 12), and alongside our name we must also know the work He has given us to do; not of our own choosing, but what He wills we should do. We are "saved to serve." The (1) "Lord appointed." (3) "I send you" (Mark vi. 7). There is plenty of work for all to do (Matt. x. 37, 38; John iv. 35). Even a small child can say, "What would Jesus have me do?"

POWER OVER THE ENEMY.

(19) Power over all the power of the enemy. Workers for Christ need this, boys and girls at school need this, the business man and the little maid-of-all-work need this. Oh, that all would claim this God-given power. To be a disciple is to be worth tempting by the devil; then ask, and you shall receive power over the enemy of souls. Christ is the stronger, his power is greater than Satan's (1 Cor. x. 13; Heb. ii. 18; iv. 15).

REJOICE.

(20) Rejoice! for if you work for Christ you are known in heaven (Dan. xii. 1; Phil. iv. 3; Heb. xii. 23). Beautiful word of encouragement; you may have discouragements, disappointments, but you have much to rejoice over, too (1 Peter i. 6, 8).

KEPT.

Kept you will be, the Master promises it and He is faithful. See how the seventy were kept (iii. 19). "Among wolves," but no harm came (19); "nothing shall hurt you" (7); food all provided (Matt. x. 16; 1 Peter i. 5; Isa. xxvi. 3; 1 Sam. ii. 9).

ENDURE AS GOOD SOLDIERS.

These seventy had much to endure (iv. 7, 8), but Christ wanted them to learn that they must not trouble about their own comforts; they were to be content with just enough food, and not to be on the look-out for luxuries (2 Tim. ii. 3, R.V.).

RETURNED WITH JOY.

After hard service comes the joy (17). When we have done our duty for Christ's sake, and not for our own selfish ends, it makes all the difference; there is great joy in "giving up" and "being faithful" for his dear sake; this kind of service brings its own reward.

SATAN SUBDUED.

(17) This might be a new experience to these men, perhaps it would be to some of us too, but "we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us," and Satan will be made to be put under our feet by the mighty power of Him alone who lived our life, and was tempted like as we are and was yet without sin. Ask for his help in all work.

LESSON TO LEARN.

To be a worker for Jesus, trusting in Him for help to do the work.

Thoughts on the Lord's Day.

PROPORTION.

The position of the day is changed, but the proportion remains unchanged. Wordsworth.

A FENCE.

All declension may be said to be begun wherever we see these two ordinances despised—the Sabbath and the Sanctuary. They are the outward fence around the inward love. A. Bonar, D.D.

A SURE CROP.

When will man's blindness learn that there is no profit, and no peace, but in the ways and will of God? Who ever gained in Sabbath shops, or by a Sabbath spade? The seed of Sabbath work springs up a harvest of soul-piercing woe. Dean Law.

Personalia.

Rev. HOWARD H. RUSSELL, D.D., LL.D., of Ohio, U.S.A., president of the Anti-Saloon League of America, is preaching on Sundays during this month and September at Dr. Barnardo's Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, E.

In celebration of the eightieth birthday of Rev. Canon CHRISTOPHER, of St. Aldate's, Oxford, Rev. F. J. Hazledine is endeavouring to raise funds in order "to found exhibitions at Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, and Ridley Hall, Cambridge, to enable men truly converted, truly evangelical, to spend a most profitable year after taking their B.A. degree, which otherwise they could not afford." Bishop Chavasse has written warmly commending the scheme, and wishing it God-speed. The exhibitions would be known as the "Christopher Exhibitions." Mr. Hazledine's address is Kingham Hill, Chipping Norton, Oxon.

Mr. ROWLAND EDWARDS, the well-known evangelist, has arranged to sail with his family on September 27 for a prolonged visit to America. It is proposed to have a farewell meeting in London some evening next month to commend him to God in his labours in the Gospel. Plan and date will be duly announced. Mr. Edwards possesses the gifts which enable him while reaching the masses to obtain acceptance with people of influence and education; and we believe his ministry will be as much valued on the other side of the water as it is in this country. He has made many friends in the work all over Great Britain, and any who desire to express practical fellowship with him in the expenses he will incur in this fresh field of labour can communicate with him at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, E., where he is conducting the services for September.

Bible Flower Mission.—Writing from 110, Cannon Street, E.C., MRS. L. E. TURTON, says: "Pressing applications are being received for lavender bags and texts for distribution among the hop-pickers, and, as the season is earlier than usual, we shall be glad to have them sent during the next few weeks, or even earlier where possible. Knowing how greatly these little messengers have been made the means of blessing in former years, we feel that such an opportunity of sowing the good seed should be utilized to the utmost." Gifts of flowers and lavender may be forwarded to the above address.

Homes of Hope.—To awaken solicitude and sympathy for young women who have been betrayed and deserted is the object with which the Committee of the Homes of Hope carry on their benevolent and needy work. Without the means of regaining the path of virtue and respectability, these victims would probably never be restored to society. Every care is taken in the institution to bring the inmates to a knowledge of God, and the formation of habits of honest sobriety and industry, and ultimately securing for them employment. The hon. secretary is Mr. William Hornibrook, 4, Regent Square, Gray's Inn Road, W.C.

Irish Notes.

MRS. DOLMAN, Principal of the Church of Ireland Home for Jews at Hamburg, reports that there are now on the register of the Home the names of nearly eighty converted Jews.

Irish Methodism provides sitting accommodation for 84,909 hearers in 382 churches. It has also 147 schoolhouses, 156 ministers' residences, and the estimated value of the whole is £568,609. During the past year it expended £10,044 on new buildings or improving old ones.

In connection with the Missions to Seamen there are at present at Cork Harbour twelve mission helpers and nine associates. The sale of Bibles to sailors, in various languages, has been going on during the year, and has been a distinguishing feature of the work.

In connection with the Irish Presbyterian Mission, about 2,000 famine orphans are being cared for in India. The Mission has opened a day school in Damascus. Its Chinese missionaries have leave to return home until the present disturbed state of affairs has come to an end. Mr. W. Beatty, son of Rev. Dr. Beatty, ex-Moderator of the General Assembly, has been accepted for missionary work in India.

The Bangor annual Christian Convention has just been held in Hamilton Road Methodist Church, Bangor, co. Down, and has been very largely attended. Mr. Andrew Bell, C.E., of Dunfermline, presided at the opening meeting, and gave an impressive address on "Looking to Jesus." At the subsequent meetings addresses were delivered by Professor Macintosh and others. A large open-air meeting was also held on the esplanade and was addressed by several speakers.

A conference of the members of the Southern Reformed Presbyterians has been held in Newry for the purpose of considering the best means of securing the full and regular attendance of the members and adherents of a congregation on the ordinances of the Gospel. An interesting discussion took place, and all seemed deeply impressed with the importance of the subject. A similar Conference has been appointed for November, when the question to be discussed is, "Christian Liberality."

The Corporation of Cork are doing their best to put down street preaching in that city. They forget the advice given them some time ago by Mr. Michael Davitt, who urged them to show "courtesy and fair-play," and who said that the preachers had as much right to speak in the streets of an Irish town as the Nationalists had to hold their meetings and propagate their views in the towns of Great Britain. It is to be hoped that these words will have some effect in mitigating the intolerance which has lately been shown to the street preachers in the capital of Munster.

Noon Prayer Meeting.

AT the noon prayer meeting at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., Rev. Dr. L. W. Munhall gave, last week, a series of addresses on the Resurrection.

Dr. Munhall is widely known as an evangelist and teacher, and each day, as he dealt with some new aspect of the great subject, his words had light and stimulus for his hearers. The concluding address laid stress on the point that Christ's resurrection assures us of the resurrection of those dear to us who died in the faith. The frame is only the temporary lodging house and through Him who conquered death we cry "O death, where is thy sting?" Dr. Munhall illustrated his topic by a number of points and anecdotes, which, while salted with humour, usually had a deeply pathetic touch. An old negro servant was found by the speaker, working in a hotel in a specially lovely part of "Edenic" South California. The old man was leaving the district, with all its exquisite scenery, for his old home in a desert part of Arkansas. Asked for his reason, he replied, "Why, boss, de folks is dere." It was his home, where his loved ones dwelt. Much more, said the speaker, should we look forward to the resurrection and heaven, where, not in a desert, but in a land of pure delight, our loved ones shall be.

Dr. Munhall also told of a negro, who, in the year 1833, when some very remarkable meteoric showers occurred, awoke his family in the night, fully persuaded, on seeing the falling stars, that the Lord had come. He instructed them to go on to the centre of the town, while he waited by the grave of his master who had died a Christian. "I'se gwine ter see ole massa rise," said the negro in his simple faith. Although the end had not come, his belief had a biblical warrant. The dead shall rise to immortality. "O grave, where is thy victory?" Dr. Munhall closed with earnest words of prayer for a spiritual revival throughout Britain.

Scottish Notes.

THE present minister of Bridgegate Free Church, Glasgow (Rev. Mr. Holburn), has revived the practice of preaching on Sabbath evenings from the stone pulpit in the outer wall of the church. This part of the structure was intended by the first minister (Rev. Mr. MacColl) for regular use in Evangelistic work; but it was found necessary to discontinue the open-air services nearly forty years ago, through the interference of the police on account of disturbances created by Roman Catholics. Much interest has been aroused during recent Sabbaths, and it is hoped that the renewal of the services may be accompanied by the same gracious working of the Holy Spirit which marked the early history of the congregation. The district immediately surrounding the church is one of the neediest fields in the whole city.

The nineteenth annual report of the Paisley Deaf and Dumb Mission tells the story of another prosperous year in the work. There have been numerous attendances at Sabbath services, Bible class, prayer-meeting, and lectures.

Among recent evangelistic missions in the Highlands and islands have been one conducted by Rev. Thomas Grant (Tain) in the island of Eigg, and another by Messrs. Gordon, Gow, and Maxwell, in the parish of Kiltearn. The last-named workers had previously experienced much blessing at several other centres in the north.

On Sabbath of last week a memorial service was conducted in the old graveyard at Cambusnethan, near Wishaw, which has many memories connected with it of those who laid down their lives for the sake of Christ in the times of the Scottish Covenant. There was a large gathering, and the preacher was Rev. Gavin Douglas, from Loughbrickland, Ireland.

At last meeting of Inverness Free Presbytery, Rev. Dr. Black said he had intended to propose that some action should be taken with regard to certain posters exhibited throughout the town which were of an indecent nature. He was thankful to say, however, that they had all disappeared during the previous night, and he hoped such things would never again be allowed to disgrace their streets.

The eighth annual conference for the deepening of spiritual life, in connection with the Lanarkshire Christian Union, was held in the grounds of Hamilton Palace on August 9, 10, and 11. There were good attendances at the various gatherings. Mr. John Colville, M.P., presided, and among the speakers were Mr. William Thomson, jun., Rev. John Riddell (both of Glasgow), and Rev. Henry Montgomery (Belfast).

The membership of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A. was reported last week at 7,143, with 1,854 members in the Young Women's Auxiliary, an organization entirely distinct from the local Y.W.C.A. The branch fellowship meetings number 217. The diminution in the number of members which has been marked for some years has been the subject of much anxious consideration on the part of the directors. It is hoped that, as the outcome of certain special efforts which have been planned for the coming winter, there will be a marked increase in all departments. Many will sympathize with the new secretary (Mr. C. R. Irving) in the difficulties of the great work to which he has set his hand.

Seldom has so much space in the daily press been devoted to the question of Sabbath Observance. In several newspapers voluminous correspondence has been appearing for some time. One writer in the Dundee Advertiser, on being challenged to define "the Scottish Sabbath," replied, "I would respectfully commend him (the interrogator) to a higher authority for information regarding the nature and character of the Sabbath: 'Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy.' Many of us can remember when the Sabbath day was reckoned the best and sweetest of the seven, not only because it meant cessation from strain and toil, but because our elders and fathers gathered in the appointed place to worship and recognise the Divine Father in common. To those with such memories I would confidently leave the question whether the Sabbath of their youth, with its quiet, restful hours, or the Sabbath of the present, with its increasing stir and frivolity, is the more likely to produce in the nation, as well as in the individual, the righteousness that exalts it."

Temperance in Wales.—The continuous temperance crusade of Mr. Tennyson Smith in South Wales is creating widespread interest. His recent mission at Wattstown resulted in an awakening of the temperance forces of the district. On the Sunday afternoon the Sunday schools united, and packed Calfaria Chapel, and an overflow meeting was held in the schoolroom. A campaign followed at Tonyrefail, a mining village, and here, in spite of the hot weather, the building was crowded every evening. Young men by the dozen went forward to the pledge table.

Oxford Letter.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

AT a semi-private meeting held in the Committee Room of the City Buildings, Rev. Adrian Moorrees, of the Dutch Reformed Church at Cape Colony, gave an address on the South African war. He set forth what he described as the views of that Church on the crisis. He pleaded that the Dutch should be considered in the final settlement. This he did on the ground that they were in the majority, and that they had striven for peace, and that it would transform foes into friends. Friends may not agree with many of the details in Mr. Moorrees' speech, but all were thankful for the light he threw on some obscure points, and for the conciliatory tone of his address.

"Their feet are swift to shed blood. Destruction and misery are in their ways, and the way of peace have they not known. There is no fear of God before their eyes" (Rom. iii. 15-18). Rev. W. B. Duggan, vicar of St. Paul's, made these words the basis of a sermon on "Anarchism" on Sunday morning. In many ways the sermon was a striking one. The preacher showed that our safeguard lay in bringing every department of thought and conduct under the influence of religion. The revengeful fierceness of Herodias was a type of Anarchist fury. Nothing less than the head of John the Baptist would satisfy her. Mr. Duggan also urged that the question should be put to ourselves, How far we were responsible for the Anarchist conspiracies? Two suggestions were submitted: Primary social duties have often been neglected—there is often at bottom a bitter sense of social injustice; and again, the fear of God must be set before men's eyes. Materialism grows, and this because of the insincerity of professing Christians.

A Temperance Hymn.

"Whose hearts are stirred within them"—
Come rally for the fight;
Beneath his royal banner
All panoplied in light.
Ye powers of darkness tremble,
As forth we onward go;
In stern and proud battalion,
Against the wily foe.

Ye that are men now rouse you,
Ye strong of heart and limb;
The enemy is subtle,
His citadel is grim.
Yet youths and gentle maidens
Are fettered to his van;
And only One can save them,
Who once Himself was man.

For his dear sake who suffered,
That we no more might die,
And entered for poor mortals,
Death's solemn mystery.
Oh! follow Him to Calvr'y,
The blessèd Crucified;
Take up the cross and bear it
In meekness at his side.

Forego your vaunted freedom,
That captives may go free,
Put far away what hinders
Another's liberty.
Ye that are strong, have mercy,
Another's weakness shield;
Ye that are whole have pity
On those who would be healed.

Old men with hoary foreheads,
And babes with sunny hair,
Are lured by this foul spirit,
And tempted to his lair;
Whom Jesus came to rescue
From sinless worlds on high,
And died that these poor sinners
Might live eternally.

O Infinite Redeemer,
Give us pure eyes to see,
And weep with hallowed sorrow
O'er sin and misery.
And then with love made perfect,
Through fellowship with Thee,
Oh, bid us share thy triumph
O'er souls from sin set free.

Harrogate. Mary E. Kendrew.

The Licensing Laws.

As the approaching general election will be the first since the Royal Commission on the Licensing Laws reported, we desire to lay the situation so arising before the friends of reasonable temperance legislation. We believe that the occasion, if rightly employed, may be the means of bringing public opinion to such a focus that something valuable may be effected.

A complete agreement was not to be expected between those members of the commission who were so deeply sensible of the mischief that they were compelled to regard the usual maxims of liberty as inapplicable to it, and those who represented the trade and were able to appeal to those maxims in their defence. Between parties so widely separated no arbitrament but that of a vote in Parliament ever decides. Neither in a royal commission nor in a select committee will either concede the full amount of what it may have to submit to in a final settlement.

But an amount of agreement really surprising in the circumstances was reached, although the public, led astray by the fact that rival reports were issued, and hearing the din of war on the subject continuing, seems to be unaware of that fact. Yet the prospect of any speedy advance being made depends on the fact being recognised and made use of, and we therefore earnestly invite attention to the following statement. Though longer than we could wish, it is necessary in order that our assertion of agreement may not be bare and unsupported.

A systematic reduction in the number of public-houses must, for the present purpose, be left out of consideration, because, although the majority and minority reports are at one as to its desirableness, they differ so widely in the method that the point is not yet ripe for legislation based on agreement. But on the following points the majority and minority reports (if we except the reservations of Messieurs Hyslop and Walker, the extreme representatives of the trade) present concurring recommendations, with no greater differences of detail than Parliament habitually disposes of without difficulty on bills introduced by private members, although the time at the disposal of private members would not allow these points to be so dealt with.

Consolidation and simplification of the licensing laws.
Nomination of the licensing authority, partly by the justices and partly by the county and town councils.
Extension of the disqualifications on the ground of connection with the trade.
Various other provisions with regard to the grant and transfer of licenses.
Greater publicity of the trade premises.
Consent of the licensing authority to be required for music and dancing.
Prohibition to serve children under sixteen.
Prohibition to serve habitual drunkards on a black list.
Extension of the Welsh Sunday Closing Act to Monmouthshire.
More restrictive definition of a traveller, and limitation of the houses at which he can be served on Sunday.
Suspension of license instead of fine in some cases.
Provisions for more effectual action by the police.
Licensing authorities to employ inspectors of high rank.
Various other provisions for the better regulation of the trade.
Drunkenness to be a cause of arrest, apart from disorder.
Higher penalty for being drunk when in charge of a young child.
Habitual drunkenness to entitle wife or husband to a separation, and protection for self and children.

Then there are points which, though they are more controversial than the foregoing, received an amount of assent not confined to those who signed the minority report. Parliament would probably expect the mind of the Government to be expressed on them, but, as they are not deeply controversial, it need not cost the Government much time to form and express a decision. Such are the following:—

Necessity of reforming the Court of Appeal from the Licensing Authority, the difference here between the majority and minority being whether the Court of Appeal should include members nominated by County and Town Councils.
Further limitation of the open hours on Sunday, and the publican to be required to prove ignorance or absence of consent when there is drunkenness on the premises. [We class these points together because, though they were comprised in the majority report, Messrs. Smith and Wigram dissented, as well as Messrs. Hyslop and Walker.]
Lastly, the registration of clubs, as to the necessity for which there is a general agreement; but the minority contend that the objections to a particular club should be tried before a judicial authority to which no suspicion of partiality or bias can attach.

The facts which we have now exhibited entitle us to assert that the Royal Commission has brought a large mass of temperance matter into a state of agreement sufficiently close and general to be ripe for legislation. It is of urgent importance that it should be legislated on without delay, both for its intrinsic value, which no one will doubt who has carefully read our enumeration, and in order that the way may be cleared for bringing the reduction of the number of public-houses to the front. We need not say that we should welcome a promise by the leaders of the Government to take up that question also, but in any case we wish to impress on the friends of temperance in the constituencies that success can scarcely fail to attend a united determination that what is already ripe shall be realized without further delay. Let every opportunity be taken to impress that determination on candidates. Each candidate might be asked whether he will support a resolution declaring that temperance legislation founded on the reports of the Royal Commissioners is urgently required, and calling on the Government to introduce it. We trust we have shown that if the members elected bring with them to Westminster the conviction that the country intends that something shall at last be done, there will be no difficulty in doing it.

The Christian Armour.

(Eph. vi. 10-20.)

I. The all-sufficient provision made for the Christian soldier. II. The consequences of neglecting to take advantage of the provision—(1) Reflection on God's goodness, (2) Sure defeat and disgrace. III. The conditions of victory. Having on the war gear and fighting in dependence on God. D. C. H.

A Prayer.

Oh, for a passionate passion for souls!
Oh, for a pity that yearns!
Oh, for a love that loves unto death!
Oh, for the fire that burns!
Oh, for the pure prayer power that prevails!
That pours out itself for the lost!
Victorious prayer in the Conqueror's Name!
Oh, for a Pentecost!

Visiting the Sins of the Fathers on the Children.

(Exodus xx. 5.)

I. The denunciation and sentence relate to the sin of idolatry in particular, if not to that alone. II. It relates to temporal, or, more properly speaking, to family prosperity and adversity. III. It relates to the Jewish economy in that particular administration of a visible Providence under which they lived. IV. At no date does it affect the acceptance or salvation of individuals in a future life. Archdeacon Paley.

Knowledge and Wisdom.

The true reason why, in an age where learning is held in universal admiration, so little profit is made and both error and vice do, notwithstanding, so wretchedly abound, is, in truth, no other than that men generally mistake their main business and proper excellence. They had rather cultivate their parks than their manners, and account it a greater accomplishment to know much than to live well.

Thomas à Kempis.

A Cure for Worry.

I begin my day's work some mornings, perhaps wearied, perhaps annoyed with a multiplicity of trifles which seem too small to bring great principles to bear upon them. But do you not think there would be a strange change wrought in the annoyances of every day and in small trifles that all our lives, of whatever texture they are, must largely be composed of, if we begin each day and task with that old prayer, "Rise, Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered"? Do you not think there would come a quiet in our hearts, and victorious peace to which we are too much strangers?

Dr. Alex. Maclaren.

Growth in Grace.

(2 Peter iii. 18.)

I. The exhortation: "Grow in grace:" (1) Downward, in the knowledge of ourselves, of our depravity of heart, humility. (2) Inward, in experience, in love to God, simplicity of faith. (3) Upward, victory over the world, more of the spirit of prayer, closer walk with God. (4) Outward, fruits of holiness; good works are indications of the vital principles within. II. Growth in grace is connected with knowledge. III. The ascription of praise. Christ is our Lord, our God, our Sovereign. To Him we are called to render Divine worship and honour. IV. Application. Are you growing in grace, in knowledge, in likeness to Christ? Do not despise the least growth, but foster it. B. T.

An Invitation, A Promise, A Revelation.

(Jer. xxxiii. 3.)

I. A Gracious Invitation.—"Call unto Me," implies all the constituents of successful prayer. (1) Penitence, (2) Contrition, (3) Humility, (4) Importunity, (5) Restitution, (6) Faith. II. A Precious Promise.—The invitation accepted, its conditions complied with, always brings the answer. (1) God's Word pledged, (2) God's Nature pledged, (3) Confirmed by the experience of his saints. III. A Glorious Revelation.—As the conditions of the invitation complied with bring the fulfilment of the promise, so the fulfilment of the promise always brings the revelation—"Will show thee." (1) The greatness of God's love, (2) the power of Jesus to forgive sin, (3) the worth of the soul, (4) the joys and comforts of religion, (5) the victory of faith in death. J. T. D.

Rabbi Lichtenstein's Work.

During the last year or two the aged Rabbi Lichtenstein has been in rather bad health, and sometimes in bodily suffering, but he has, nevertheless, continued both by voice and pen to testify of Christ as Israel's true Messiah and only Hope.

The following extracts from a letter written by Rabbi Lichtenstein to Rev. David Baron, and inserted in the annual statement of the work, will give some idea of the scope of the operations:—

"I move chiefly in circles of the well-to-do and educated, not among such as have to earn their daily bread with difficulty. I have already, during these past years, distributed pamphlets and New Testaments by thousands. I have extolled the name of Christ and exalted his all powerful hand. I have confessed the Lord with my whole heart among wealthy and poor alike, for Pastor Gordon, who has lately left this city, has confided to me the care of all those whom he used to instruct, together with his pamphlets, and this has opened to me a new and wider sphere of work.

"This new charge consists mostly of poor Jewish brethren with a thirst for knowledge, whose numbers are continually increasing from Galicia and Roumania; these do not only hunger for the Word of God, but also for material bread. 'Alas! the means are insufficient to satisfy their need.' I am still working at my new pamphlet, which, as I hope, will shine forth as a new light over Zion."

Can Consumption be Cured?—This question is answered by Dr. E. W. Alabone in the affirmative. In the interests of sufferers he has published a series of testimonials from patients who have derived permanent benefit from his specific treatment – of consumption, asthma, and other chest diseases. The book also contains some valuable comments by Dr. Alabone, concerning the "fresh-air" cure (1s. Aspley Guise, The Powage Press, Limited).

The Glory of God.

THE glory of a thing may be said to be its intrinsic worth, its excellence, or its perfection. To glorify a thing or person is to show forth or manifest that worth to others, so that they may be led to value or praise it. There might be a valuable jewel, so covered up with dust or débris that no one knows of its existence; we could reveal its glory by uncovering it and exhibiting to others its beauty and perfection. Thus it might become renowned.

The glory of God is in his attributes. Surely we do not sufficiently grasp its magnitude. It is the loss of this high conception which causes so much of the irreverence of the present day. The great thing needed is higher and nobler thoughts about God. The glory of God is taught in his Name—"this glorious and fearful Name, the Lord thy God" (Deut. xxviii. 58). "Jehovah," the self-existent, is "He which is, and which was, and which is to come" (Rev. i. 4). We are called upon to "Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his Name" (1 Chron. xvi. 29). Jehovah was glorified in creation. "Worthy art Thou, our Lord and our God, to receive the glory, and the honour, and the power; for Thou didst create all things, and because of thy will they were, and were created" (Rev. iv. 11).

Creation was consummated in man, who was made in the image of the Creator so that he should represent God on the earth, and show forth his glory. We know how man failed, and then Jesus Christ, the second Adam, was sent, because Jehovah must be glorified on the earth; and the Saviour could say at the close of his work, "I have glorified Thee on the earth, and accomplished the work which Thou gavest Me to do" (John xvii. 4).

We may trace through our Lord's life his great object in living and dying, to manifest the Father and show forth his glory. "Father glorify thy Name," was his prayer (John xii. 28). On the eve of Christ's betrayal, He exclaimed, "Now is the Son of Man glorified, and God is glorified in Him, and God shall glorify Him in Himself, and straightway shall He glorify Him" (John xiii. 3 and 32)—wondrous words at such a time. He promised that prayer should be answered, "that the Father may be glorified in the Son" (John xiv. 13). The work of the Holy Spirit, too, was to glorify the Son, and through Him the Father (John xvi. 14).

A life of holy, glad obedience to the Father's will was the glory of Christ's earthly life; and if we would fulfil our mission and "glorify God in our bodies," it must be in the same way. To be Christlike in every word and action, small or great, public or private, glorifies God. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit" (John xv. 8). The Bible is full of instruction as to how we may glorify God in "whatsoever we do" (1 Cor. x. 31, Phil. i. 11), by confessing Him (Phil. ii. 11), by offering the sacrifice of praise (Psa. l. 23), by suffering as Christians (1 Peter iv. 16), in sickness (John xi. 4), and in death (John xxi. 19).

Life is ennobled by this thought, and as we realize more the glory of God so shall we seek more earnestly to glorify Him with oneness of heart and purpose (Rom. xv. 5-7). Living day by day, by the power of the Holy Spirit, such a life, that when our Lord "returns to be glorified in his saints" (2 Thess. i. 10) we may be found so doing. To this end let our prayer be that of our Saviour, "Father, glorify thy Name," in, and through, and by me in any way Thou wilt.

Livingstone College.—In connection with the new College premises at Knott's Green, Leyton, which constitute a permanent memorial in London to the work of Dr. Livingstone, the sum of £2,000 has been contributed to the funds by two friends who have been associated with the work since its foundation, and other sums have been subscribed amounting in all to about £4,000. It is believed that another £4,000 will be required to complete the work. The Principal of the College, Dr. Harford-Battersby, is desirous of obtaining the names of all the late Dr. Livingstone's friends and associates, in order that an invitation may be sent to them to the opening ceremony of the new premises. He may be addressed at 133, Salisbury Square, E.C.

Evangelistic.

London Tent Campaign.

THE nine tents were all in full swing during the past week, and reports of blessing are coming from each; it is evident that the interest in each place is deepening and spreading. At Woolwich, in the midst of a thickly populated district made up chiefly of men who work in the Arsenal, a good work is in progress. Mr. W. Grove and Mr. R. Edwards are continuing the work there during this week, and they report that in some of the services husbands and wives, in fact whole families, are coming to Christ together. At Forest Gate the tent has been re-erected in Upton Lane. Of those who gathered on Sunday night last many were unable to find seating accommodation, and some remarkable cases of blessing are reported.

At Enfield, the work is going ahead with every encouragement, the local friends heartily co-operating and doing all in their power to make the meetings a success. In addition to the nightly Gospel services they have had special rallies for the young and for various classes of people. At Walthamstow the tent has been removed to a spot near James Street, Blackhorse Road. Mr. G. R. Cairns has been the first week there, and a good work will doubtless be accomplished in that needy district. From Wandsworth comes the news that the right classes are being reached. Drunkards and some of the lowest strata are coming out and laying hold of Christ as Saviour and Lord. Mr. J. Vine is continuing the work there this week. At Willesden Green Mr. C. Cook conducted the services. Mr. R. C. Morgan on Thursday afternoon gave a Bible reading to Christians. On Sunday the tent was more than crowded, hundreds standing around to listen to the grand old Story. Friends will be glad to know that a tent has been erected at Lavender Hill (Clapham Junction) the scene of such a remarkable revival last year, and though the notice of the meeting was a short one, the tent was crowded on Sunday night, many at the close of the service confessing their faith in Christ. Dr. Munhall is to preach there nightly this week, and the local friends expect a renewal of former visitations and manifestations.

To most Londoners Notting Hill is well known as a needy place. It was prophesied that a tent erected there would soon be destroyed, but as in all other places the Lord has prepared a people, and the tent is filled with an eager throng. The Gospel preaching by Mr. J. S. Brunning has, we believe, proved the power of God to salvation in many cases. At Hammersmith the meetings are growing in interest, and Mr. L. Weaver and Mr. W. S. Weeden are following the work, which has been characterized by much earnestness in the meetings conducted by Dr. Munhall. Great as the past blessing has been the future weeks point to a mighty ingathering of souls to the feet of Christ. May we ask the prayers of all the readers of The Christian that nothing may prevent the mighty incoming and outgoing of Divine love and power? W.

The Bull Ring, Birmingham.

During the past four weeks, Rev. A. C. Jarvis (pastor of Soho Baptist Church) has been holding an evangelistic mission from a Bible Van in the Bull Ring, Birmingham. Night after night, hundreds have gathered to listen to the Gospel story as delivered in speech and song, and many have testified to blessing received. A special feature of the meetings is the singing of the Gospel by the evangelist and wife, both of whom have musical gifts. A large number of backsliders have been dealt with, large numbers of tracts have been given away, and it is believed lasting good has been done. The van is to visit the "Black Country" during the next few weeks.

Tent Work in Philadelphia.

"The summary of the sixth week of the evangelistic tent work recently concluded in Philadelphia," says the New York Evangelist, "shows that in the six tents and on the Chestnut Street Pier there was a large number of attendances, while many more heard the Gospel addresses and singing while standing around the tents or sitting on doorsteps. Numbers signed inquirer's cards showing their desire to become Christians. The Princeton students who are helping in this work have followed up all those who have signified in any way their purpose to lead a better life, and have visited much in the homes of the people. Many lukewarm Christians have thus been reached, and have decided to take a stronger hold on Christ; many backsliders have turned, and in some cases where the children have been converted it has been the converting of the home, for father and mother and all the family have decided to unite with the church. Some who held unpresented letters have decided to connect themselves with the church."

"The opening meeting of the mission at Cobo, Guernsey," says the Guernsey Evening Express, "was a great success. The tent was soon filled, and part of the skirting had to be taken down to allow the people to stand outside and take part in the service. The speaker was Mr. B. H. Angel, of Wembley. English and American solos were sung, the choruses of which are very attractive and quickly learned."

A mission has been held, from Aug. 5-19, at Berachah Hall, Shatters Wood, Tunbridge Wells. The opening services were conducted by Mr. A. R. Fullford, of South Norwood. The faithful preaching of the Gospel by Mr. Fullford and others has been attended with great blessing. Tokens of the Master's presence and favour have been granted us, for which our hearts are made glad in the Lord. Souls have sought the Saviour, and Christian workers much edified and refreshed. J.E.M.S.

Mr. John Wooldridge is doing a good work with his Gospel tent in Russell Road, Custom House, E. Open-air meetings, together with house-to-house visitation, bring together many who seldom or never attend a place of worship. Many souls have been won for the Master. But in the midst of the mission came a disaster. The recent gale tore the tent down, and very much damage was done. The tent was repaired sufficiently to allow of its being re-erected, and the services are now resumed.

Mr. John Elliott writes: "The tent at Hutton was not totally destroyed; the fittings and side walls will do again. It requires a new roof and centre pole, which will cost several pounds to replace. There are many needy places where the tent might be the means of blessing if it could be put in order speedily. The old cider store is still open for Gospel preaching, and friends from Weston hope to carry on the work. We covered the barrels and walls with canvas and curtains with texts of Scripture."

Notes & Comments

DR. PIERSON'S visit to Great Britain has been much blessed in many directions. Worshippers at Bloomsbury Chapel will long remember the ministry he has been privileged to sustain during the past month. At the after-meeting on Sunday evening last, practically the entire congregation remained. Being a preacher of large resource, the Doctor has managed to cover a wide area of teaching in his discourses, including the fundamental truths regarding Condemnation, Justification, Sanctification, and Glorification. The prayers of many follow him back to America, and in his literary labours in the interests of foreign missionary enterprise.

One of the saddest aspects of wrong-doing is brought before us in the following admonition from one of our rising authors :—

Let us beware how we sin, inasmuch as by God's decree we do not pay. We could almost conceive a right to do as we will, if we could keep the penalty to ourselves, and pay to the utmost farthing. But not from us is the inevitable payment often required, at least in this world. The young, the innocent, the unborn, smart for us, are made bankrupt for us; from them is exacted the deficit which we have left behind. The sins of the fathers are visited on the children heavily—heavily.

The plea here implied, for a pure and noble life, lest the penalties of our evil-doing be visited upon those who come after us, is one that appeals to the best that is in us. We cannot keep the consequences of our actions to ourselves; let us see to it, therefore, that those consequences are such as we would care to find repeated in the lives of our children, and our children's children.

To many young people, and to many children of an older growth, who are familiar with the popular "Alice in Wonderland," it may be of added interest to learn that the author, "Lewis Carroll," was a well-known preacher of the Gospel; and that behind that, and other children's books which came from his pen, there stood a simple-minded Christian who wrote to a friend :—

I believe that when you and I come to lie down for the last time, if only we can keep firm hold of the great truths Christ taught us—our own utter worthlessness and his infinite worth; and that He has brought us back to our own Father and made us his brethren—we shall have all we need to guide us through the shadows. Most assuredly I accept to the full the doctrine you refer to—that Christ died to save us, that we have no other way of salvation open to us but through his death, and that it is by faith in Him, and through no merit of ours, that we are reconciled to God; and most assuredly I can cordially say, "I owe all to Him who loved me, and died on the cross of Calvary."

One of the wisest of modern teachers has stigmatized a wide-spread tendency in the following scathing words :—

There is no greater misnomer applied to creeds and opinions than that which lurks in the word "advanced." The man whose creed is the smallest, the most crude and colourless and flimsy, is called "advanced;" while he whose beliefs are richest and most full of hope and liberty is called "slow," "behind the times," and other tardy names. . . . It is no advance, but inertia—no free thought, but dullard slavery—which leads a man into a state like that. Exactness, earnestness, and precise fidelity to the truth of things, are better than a limp negation, and make a man a true, free, and advanced thinker.

Such "advanced" thinkers as are described in these words are soon left behind by the world, which at the time idolizes them, while the great teachers of the centuries are ever reappearing above the storms of controversy. The lamps of yesterday are burnt out; the stars shine on for ever.

The deplorable condition of our streets at night, and the supply of victims for continental maisons tolerées, could not be maintained without an organized system for inveigling and entrapping young girls, who are in peril everywhere. The National Vigilance Association and all kindred agencies are not only national but international benefactors, which it is the vital interest of every family to support. See p. 28.

As the South African and Chinese struggles are drawing measurably nearer their close, we find our attention being called from the sound of battles abroad, to the industrial battles just beginning at home. The railway war, started by the South Wales Taff Railway employés, is still threatening to break out on the extensive and highly important system of the G.E.R. Mediation has been seriously attempted both by the Board of Trade (whose function in this direction does not seem to be very successful at any time), and by private individuals, with no result apparently but that of postponing the evil day. The crucial points in dispute seem, to the mere outsider, to be disproportionate to the prominence given them; but there is no doubt an aspect of the case invisible except from the inside. The public generally is anxiously looking for a cessation of these disputes, in which "temper" seems to have not a small share. If this element were eliminated from the relations of employers and employés, industrial troubles would be far easier to settle.

There is no more vital question affecting the welfare and even the existence of society than the relations between Capital and Labour. As a weapon of oppression the power of money is more deadly than the power of the sword. Every new discovery, every new application of mechanical power, increases the power to get wealth, and makes a new batch of millionaires, whose millions become a curse to them and to their fellow-men. The workmen are often badly advised, give themselves away to agitators, and, as in a present dispute, put forth a case built up on a point—like an inverted pyramid.

But it is not wise even casually to speak or write of them as "the enemy," as does the leading journal. The railway companies, with their combined capital of £650,000,000, may crush the strikers, with their small fund of half-a-million, but it would be better for the commonwealth, and therefore for themselves, to study the causes of discontent, and prove themselves their friends. The risk of accidents, with the attendant loss of life and property, would be vastly reduced if Capital and Labour were working harmoniously, and with mutual help, rather than thinking of each other as "the enemy."

A significant statement appears in a book quite recently published in the interests of the Ethical Society—a Society which numbers amongst its members several well-known men of letters, and which has for its object the general uplifting of man, apart from religion. Hitherto, the attitude of most of the members of this Society towards Christianity has been one of polite but pronounced hostility. Now it is suggested that the policy of opposition is a mistake, and that it would be far better for all Christians and non-Christians to work together for the common good of mankind. Of course, Christians would be expected, in return for the cessation of hostilities, to suppress anything objectionable in their belief—no creeds, but an ethical movement pure and simple, designed to illuminate man's mind and to strengthen his morals.

It is quite in keeping with the invertebrate spirit of our time that a suggestion of this kind should come from such a quarter. Mrs. Humphry Ward, it will be remembered, recently put in a passionate plea for a common church, in which all might worship and work; persons like herself who utterly deny the Divinity of our Lord, and Christians who adore Him as their only Hope. And, unfortunately, there are very many who bear the Christian name who regard proposals of this sort with composure and even with delight. But to every such proposition true Christians can make but one reply. The Gospel is a stewardship committed to men and women who have experienced its saving power; and, above all things else, stewardship demands fidelity. Further, Christianity is a religion of facts, and the truth of its Gospel is demonstrated by its effects upon the lives that receive it. The Ethical teachers merely spin theories and propound philosophies; and these cannot regenerate men. So far from there being any rapprochement between the two things, we must see to it that the abyss widens every day.

The Society's leaders are further protesting against Christians "having a monopoly of Christ," and are urging that the æsthetic instincts of the members should be satisfied by some sort of ritual, and by the introduction of prayer at their meetings.

Not that cringing and grovelling form of prayer that appeals directly to an assumed power or mind different from and higher than man; but a prayer that expresses in poetic and rhapsodic language the highest and noblest aspirations of man.

If this represents the actual mind of the Ethicists in regard to prayer, it is difficult to understand what they mean by "the preaching of Christ by non-Christian people," another of their acknowledged needs, for did not Jesus teach men how to pray? But the spirit of the prayer most akin to the above description, would be that of the Pharisee in Luke xviii.

There is one channel of well-doing within the reach of everyone, and that is to show a true Christian regard for people for whom "nobody cares." A correspondent, writing in the name of one such class, complains of the coldness and aloofness with which so many who occupy the post of governess or helps in the household are treated, even in Christian homes. While all the comforts of life are provided, there is often lacking that home-feeling, and that personal spiritual interest, which go to make up the highest elements of happiness. In a hundred small matters they are made to feel apart from the true family life into which outwardly they are cordially received; and being often homeless, or far away from their own circle, they miss the "tiny nothings" of love and attention which mean so much to sensitive souls. A very little thought and trouble would do away with a great deal of heartache and bitterness in such cases.

An influential American writer, the President of the United Society of Christian Endeavour, has asked and ably answered the pertinent question, Do Foreign Missions Pay? and in doing so has dealt with the comprehensive query in almost all but its spiritual aspects. It is almost needless to say that the reply is "a strong, sweeping, unconditional, uncompromising YES." Studying the matter from the material point of view alone, he shows that, after considering what missions have done "for the arts and sciences, for geography, geology, meteorology, archæology, and philology, for education and civilization in their best and broadest sense, for the building up of schools and colleges, for the leavening of nations with the yeast of modern civilization, for trade and commerce, and for the widening of empire," no other verdict could possibly be given.

A missionary points out that where only one Christian denomination is working in a foreign field, there the power of the Spirit is greater and the quality of the work better than in fields where more than one denomination is at work. The work done by Judson in Burmah amongst the Karens, Moffat in South Africa, and Paton in the Hebrides, are cases in point. A high political authority in the United States, when the Philippines were opened to the Gospel, advised that the first denomination which had located itself on any island should be left alone to evangelize that island, so that the Philippine Roman Catholics should not be confused in their search for the truth. The great Apostle of the Gentiles refused to profit by other men's labours and sufferings, and made it his aim to avoid building on another man's foundation. It would be well if, in opening fresh fields of operations, his example were loyally followed. And to how many villages at home does the same apply!

We have often called attention to the great hindrance placed in the way of missionary work by the inconsistent lives of white residents in the mission-field. A letter has just reached us from a worker in the tropics in which he lays special emphasis on the difficulty experienced in teaching the natives to respect the Lord's Day in the face of the practices of such residents on that day. Africans are notorious imitators, and what they see white men doing they think must be right. The task of keeping them faithful to the high ideal of the New Testament is thus immensely increased by the bad habits of men who at home (many of them at least) are Church members, and conform to the customs of their fellow-Christians. Our Lord's awful words about the guilt of those who place a stumbling-block in the path of the least of his brethren have an ominous reference to conduct like this.

Our correspondent, in his further discussion of this painful subject, throws out a suggestion which, if taken up loyally, might have an enormous influence in promoting the sanctity of the Lord's Day. There are unions for all kinds of purposes already started, in which Christians all the world over are joined in common prayer and service. Is it not time that there should be a Sabbath-keeping Guild or Union, the members of which are pledged to keep the day sacred, and to do all in their power, especially in foreign lands, to get others to do likewise? Such a guild would specially strengthen the hands of young men sent out as traders to heathen lands, government officials, employers of labour, and others who simply do not feel strong enough to take the initiative in such a great matter, but who would feel encouraged to do their best if they realized that they were members of a great army of Christian men and women all pledged to the same cause, and working loyally to the same end.

The decision given by Chancellor Tristram a few days ago in the case of the Church of the Annunciation, Brighton, should be potent in the interests of Protestantism, as the order cannot be gainsaid to remove what has been aptly designated the "sacerdotal paraphernalia." The list given by Dr. Tristram is hardly distinguishable from the furniture of a Roman Catholic Chapel, while the fact that no fewer than 1,500 persons were induced to sign a petition against any change in the services being made shows the result of the Romanizing teaching at the church in question.

The High Church party are particularly shocked at the report, but the worst sin committed by Dr. Tristram in his judgment is the use of the phrase, "The Protestant Episcopal Church of England." At this the Church Times lifts its editorial hands in horror, almost refusing to credit him with such a "banality" as to call a Church Protestant which is Catholic, and says, so long as this goes on, it cannot expect the general public ever to come to understand the Church's true character. The public has a good deal more insight than the Church Times is willing to credit it with, and clings to the old-fashioned idea that the Reformation which made the Church of England was a Protestant movement, which it expects the Episcopal Church loyally to uphold.

The Americans, according to the statement of a correspondent in the Methodist Times, are about to make a fatal mistake in religious tactics in the Philippines. He says that the 10,000,000 of brave and singularly kind-hearted islanders are ready to accept a purer form of Christianity if they are not prejudiced against it by the action of the Government. But they have excluded the Roman Catholic religious orders as the Jesuits were expelled from Germany. In the face of this, it is stated that President McKinley, in view of the Roman Catholic vote at the forthcoming Presidential election, has sent Archbishop Chapelle to the Philippines to make recommendations. He has, of course, recommended the reinstating of the Orders. If this is done, it will issue in the unique spectacle of a Methodist President actually reintroducing these corrupt Romish organizations by force. It is to be hoped that mere political expediency will not result in so painful a reversal of the Protestant policy of America, and the further enslavement of an almost emancipated population.

The Pope's letter of a few days ago to the Cardinal Vicar, in which he calls attention to the danger of the free propagation of Protestantism in Italy, and especially in Rome, is opportune, but not in the way intended. It reveals clearly what course would be taken if only the Temporal Power could be recovered. The Pope regrets that the propagation is "permitted by law," and sorrows over the unhappy position in which it places him, as he cannot oppose the movement otherwise than by directing the Cardinal to extend the work of "the Propagation of the Faith," and by appealing to Catholics to unite in order to minimise, as far as possible, "the damage caused by the sectarian propaganda."

This admission of weakness, in face of the preaching of the Gospel in Italy, recalls John Bunyan's prophetic description in "The Pilgrim's Progress" of the occupant of the cave in the Valley of the Shadow:—

> By this place Christian went without much danger, whereat I wondered somewhat. But I have learned since that Pagan has been dead many a day; and as for the other, though he is yet alive, he is by reason of age . . . grown so crazy and stiff in his joints that he can now do little more than sit in his cave's mouth grinning at the pilgrims as they go by, and biting his nails because he cannot come at them.

It is remarkable how many men in dealing with difficult problems of human society have suggested "a new religion" as a remedy for pressing evils; and have either overlooked or wilfully ignored the prominent and evident fact that the religion of Christ, as proclaimed by Our Lord, contains the cure for all our social misery. A gifted Italian writer, Cesare Lombrosi, the author of a noteworthy volume upon Political Crime, treating the subject of the anti-Semitic movement in Europe, ignores the remedial and preventive strength and power of Christianity, making as they do for universal brotherhood and the breaking down of barriers between nations and races. He has nothing better to propose than the adoption of a neo-Christian socialism, a new religion "neither that of the Vatican nor the old Judaic one"—in other words a house built upon the sand.

Presumably Scotland will soon have a duly beatified and canonized saint, for it is stated upon Roman Catholic authority that the attention of the Vatican has been aroused by an inquiry being held at the St. Francis Friary, Glasgow, into the miraculous cures which the Friars believe to have been effected through the intercession of "the Venerable Duns Scotus." Unfortunately the evidence in such cases is not published, but it may be assumed that it is not of the kind to satisfy a legal mind, and that its perusal would carry one back to mediæval times.

A recent writer, who asks that he may be acquitted of any violent prejudice against increased clerical incomes, as he himself has just £40 a year when his rent is paid, apparently is not of opinion that the dearth of clergy will be cured by "fattening the purse," and he asks very aptly:—

> Will vocations from God come more frequently because the prospects of those whom God calls are improved? . . . Would it not be better to have fifty parsons with a vocation than 100 half of whom were not called by God?

Following this idea, he urges with much force that it is perhaps impossible to provide a ministry while we fail to recognise the vocation of any but those who belong to a special class:—

> If the Gospels teach us anything, they teach us that it is a sin to try and improve on Christ's method of evangelizing mankind. If He found the common people good enough for it, why should we reject them?

"If the Foundations Be Destroyed"——

Walk about Zion, and go round about her:
Tell the Towers thereof:
Mark ye well her Bulwarks:
Consider her Palaces:
That ye may tell it to the generation following.
For this God is our God for ever and ever:
He will be our Guide even unto death.—Psa. xlviii.

JOHN the Seer introduces himself to the Churches as their "brother and fellow-partaker in the tribulation and Kingdom and endurance in Jesus." It would have seemed natural to join the tribulation and endurance, but the revealing Spirit interposes the Kingdom: that we may lift our eyes and hearts above the tribulation to "the Kingdom of God for which we also suffer" and so gain courage to endure. Similarly, the Psalmist enumerates the Towers, the Bulwarks, and the Palaces of Zion. It might have seemed fitting to name the towers and the palaces together, preceded or followed by the bulwarks. But the Spirit interposes the bulwarks, and calls special attention to them—"Mark ye well (set your heart to) her bulwarks," for the security of her towers and palaces rests upon her solid foundations and her impregnable bulwarks.

Our Zion is that order of things which came in with the death and resurrection of Jesus our Lord—the dispensation of the glorified Jesus and of the outpoured Spirit. "We are come unto Mount Zion" (Heb. xii. 22). And it is essential that we should mark well her foundations and her bulwarks. "For other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ." Her towers may represent sanctification, and her palaces the beauty of holiness. But unless these are built upon rock foundations, and protected by well-cemented bulwarks, they will not stand, but will crack and crumble into dust. "Justification by faith," said Luther, "is the article or test of a standing or a falling Church."

The first essential to our justification is that God be justified: "That Thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when Thou art judged." "A just God and a Saviour." "Just, and the Justifier of him who believeth in Jesus." If God, the Judge of all the earth, is not right, righteous, just, in justifying me, in declaring me righteous, my justification is not worth the breath with which it is spoken, or the paper on which it is written. "How then should God judge the world?" (Rom. iii.).

The dying Scotchwoman knew her Bible, who, when asked of her state of mind, replied that she was peaceful, restful, and happy. Asked the ground of her satisfaction, she said, "The justice of God." They thought she was self-righteous, but she continued, "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness"—faithful and just to Jesus his Son, who suffered for us, and to us for whom He suffered; to forgive us our sins continually, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness, even that of our holy things.

We are justified by the grace of God, for our justification, and its method originated in the love of "the only wise God our Saviour." We are justified by the blood of Jesus, the Lamb of God; who poured out his soul unto death; upon whom the Lord laid the iniquity of us all; who died, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God; who beareth away the sin of the world. We are justified by faith in God, "who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead, who was delivered up for our offences, and raised again for our justification;" "who by Him do believe in God, who raised Him up from the dead and gave Him glory, that your faith and hope might be in God." We are justified by his resurrection, for "if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins." We are justified by works, for although "by works of law can no man be justified," yet we are justified, we are proved righteous, by those works which are the fruit of faith, and (according to the law of the everlasting circles) "by works is faith made complete." We are justified by our words, for our words are the expression and revelation of what we are, and "by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." Jesus is the Word of God; God spoke Himself out in his Son, who is the fulness of the Godhead bodily. We speak ourselves out in our words, and therefore are justified or condemned by them.

"If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" We do not for a moment think that evangelists and evangelical preachers and teachers have as a rule departed from the ground of justification by grace, by blood, by resurrection, by faith, by works, by words; but we do submit that Justification is not dwelt upon as it used to be. During the past twenty years it is no exaggeration to say that we have heard and read the word sanctification or holiness twenty times for every mention of justification: yet without this foundation they are as towers and palaces in the air.

Has the generation which is passing away been faithful to the generation which is following to take its place? The Psalmist demands that we go about Zion, tell the towers thereof, mark well her bulwarks, and consider her palaces; that we "may tell it to the generation following." But if we talk about her towers and consider her palaces, and do not set our heart to her bulwarks, and tell of them, to the generation following, we only teach them to build castles in the air.

A few slates off the roof, or even some more extensive damage, is not so alarming as cracks and separations in the walls, which indicate that the foundation is defective. Lapses from walking in the Spirit to walking in the flesh, are alarming as giving evidence that carelessness, indifference, or worldliness, is wearing away the foundation of the faith: and "if the foundations be destroyed, what shall the righteous do?" Such lapses are certain to take place if attention to Justification and the truths connected with it be suffered to decline.

Glorious things of thee are spoken,
Zion, City of our God:
He whose word cannot be broken
Formed thee for his own abode.
On the Rock of Ages founded,
What can shake thy sure repose?
By Salvation's walls surrounded
Thou mayest smile at all thy foes.

"A Million Temperance Pledges."—In connection with the forthcoming Twentieth Century Temperance Crusade of the Free Churches, an appeal has been issued, signed by leading ministers of the various Churches. The appeal says:—"It is proposed that the new century be inaugurated by a million pledges. This, obviously, is a modest aim compared with the magnitude of the evil. We are confident that if our Churches unite against the cruel drink evil, and enter as earnestly into the Gospel Temperance Crusade as they did into the Seven-day Newspaper agitation, the opening of the twentieth century will see a marvellous change of public opinion, which will not only powerfully influence the members of our Legislature, but bring untold blessing to the home-life of the people, and greatly extend the Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Heartily approving of the proposed Million Pledge Crusade on the part of the Free Churches, we very earnestly commend the effort to you, and invite you to give this new century movement—against the crying evil of our land and age—your powerful and active support."

The Need for an Open-Air Ministry.—II.*

HERE there is a side-issue that deserves our consideration. An open-air ministry helps to bridge the gulf between the Church and the world. Viewed from one standpoint it may be truly said that the Church is not so much in the world as the world is in the Church. Yet from another view it is equally true that there is a great gulf between the two. We may do what we will, but unless we cross that bridge we shall never win the world. There is in many hearts a bitter and its disturbing qualities, that can only be conquered by a loving presentation of Gospel truth. Think that beneath this world's fair show there is the ghastly form of death—that the majority of those people we meet are dying in their sin—that the age is hastening in its wickedness—that the world lieth in the wicked one—look upon the world as God sees it, and you will discover the need of an open-air ministry.

RESENTMENT AGAINST RELIGION

II. THE CHURCH'S NEED.

Let us now turn to discover the Church's need of this aggressive form of service. Years of pastoral life, years in which our ministers have watched the growth and decay of many a fair character, have taught us that there is nothing so beneficial to spiritual life as service. It is established by painful experience that if the people's doctrine does not result in practical holiness, that if their creed is not embodied in their conduct, their belief will soon develop into sentimentalism, and as such will wither before the storm. A robust, manly Christian life is only to be secured by exercise—not by greater gifts, but the exercise of those already possessed. Character based on a simple faith in, and an all-conquering love for, Jesus Christ—character moulded by varied experience and ennobled in the service of God, is what will demonstrate to men the Gospel of the Kingdom.

We are saved to save, raised to raise, blest to bless. It is the genius of the Gospel that it finds every Christian some work to do. The believer not only "Teach me thy will, O God," but also "Teach me to do thy will." It is this practical ministry that results in untold blessing to the Church; and what form of service could be better adapted to the training of young spiritual life than an open-air ministry? How various its duties—its forms of service; how great its joys and usefulness! Indeed, it might be thought that God had ordained this form of service as the peculiar possession of young Christians, in which they should fight the Lord's battles. If they are always resting, what then? Spiritual stagnation, and decay of power. It is an old adage and a true one, "Satan findeth mischief still, for idle hands to do."

Our churches as a rule need more of this young Christian life—young men and women, consecrated to the Lord's service—who will take the burdens from shoulders that have grown too weak. But the young men are found, not in the prayer-meeting, but around the public-house, in the theatre, solely for the want of something better to do. If they are to be won, if they are to hear the call of salvation, it must be

SOUNDED FORTH IN THE STREETS.

The Church needs a higher tone of spiritual life—this is best secured by exercise. The best exercise is offered in an open-air ministry; therefore the Church needs to go forth into the highways and the byways, and call the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind to the feast of love.

Let us now consider what the character of an open-air ministry should be, and in what way our present ministration needs improvement. There are lessons to be learnt from its history. Take Sinai as an example. God the Preacher, Sinai the pulpit, Israel the people. What a service! What a sermon! These are clear, unmistakable notes, and fearless warnings: "Thou shalt not kill;" "Thou shalt not steal;" "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour." Shall we not speak thus concerning the iniquities that surround us? What a service was that upon the Mount, when Christ explained the principles of his Kingdom! Here also is an example worthy of our most faithful adherence.

Christ was not always debarred from entering the synagogue, yet almost all his miracles were performed in the open air. The sick, the halt, and blind—these were in the street. Christ came not to call the righteous, therefore He was found among the cripples by the Pool of Bethesda, and in the byways, engaged in his Father's business. Here is not only an example but a principle, vital to our Church life, namely:

WE MUST SEEK THE LOST.

Like John the Baptist, in the wilderness, we must cry, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord! make his paths straight."

Our ministry should be one of salvation—Its theme, the Cross; its end, the salvation of the lost. Failing this, our ministry ceases to justify its existence. We have no right to go on the sands, among men who toil for their living, and join our voice with the already too discordant noise, unless we can tell men of One who is Mighty to Save. Let Christ be uplifted, and He will draw men unto Himself. There is nothing that will so effectively influence men as the pure word of the Gospel, and the purer it is preached the greater the influence.

You may stand in a crowded London alley, and tell the story of the Cross or of the prodigal son, or of the wandering sheep, in such a manner as to bring the tears to many eyes, and to cause the hardened in sin to look back and sigh for the innocent days of old. Christ touches something more sensitive than the musical ear, which is so often appealed to; he reaches the soul.

PREACH CHRIST

—his love, his passion, his glory, and you will see many wending their way to the Cross.

There is something peculiarly sacred about open-air ministry and worship, that should win for it the co-operation of every Christian. In it we approach so near to the world's heart, that we feel its beating; we influence its desires. Let us be strong, true men ourselves, and our influence shall be for good. The world calls for Christians, not creeds, or rather creeds that live in the lives of men, or men whose lives are faithful creeds; these the world will hear. As C. H. Spurgeon said: "If we would touch the world we must touch God." The River Nile is generally as wide as it is deep. A Church's influence will extend so far as its life is deep. If we are to take part in an extension of service, we must take part in an intension of life. Open-air ministry is sacred—demanding the highest qualities of our natures and the most sanctified of our gifts. Let us lay ourselves more unreservedly on the altar for God. The Church and the world call loudly for a faithful open-air ministry.

Shop Assistants.—The report of the London County Council shows that out of the 4,167 shops employing 11,414 females, visited by their inspectors, 505 had not yet complied with the "Shop Seats Act." The L.C.C.'s report of visits paid to enforce the "Shop Hours Act," which provides that no young person under eighteen shall work more than seventy-four hours weekly, also shows that Parliamentary aid was needed, 14,424 offences having been discovered. The successful working of these two Acts towards shop reform should remove all opposition to further legislative assistance for overworked shop assistants. We again appeal to ladies to give up the habit of late shopping. One of the saddest sights of London is to see shops filled late at night with ladies who thereby entail hardship upon thousands of young people.—

Pleas for Temperance.

By JOAN WYNCOTE.

III.—Sweating and Intemperance.

IT may sound paradoxical to say so, but sweating causes intemperance, and intemperance causes sweating. It is probably one of the greatest inducements for intemperance amongst women.

It is small wonder that a woman with a low moral balance, having toiled for hours for a mere pittance, feels too weary to cook the coarse food she is able to buy, and is tempted to spend a few pence on stimulants, ultimately forming intemperate habits.

To say what are and what are not sweated industries is not my province, but through an official report published lately I learn from a table of trades and wages, including seventeen different industries, that about one-third of the women employed received one shilling or less per day, another third from one shilling to eighteenpence a day, while one-sixth received from eighteenpence to two shillings a day; the remaining one-sixth, being the most skilful workers, earned over two shillings a day.

These are the wages of home-workers, who are chiefly married women; regular factory hands earn a trifle more and suffer less from slack times. Supply and demand, efficiency and inefficiency of workers, must govern wages; but six or seven shillings a week, with slack times to contend against, is not a living wage. It appears it is the home-workers who keep the wages so low in these trades. Many married women like to earn a little, to help to make the home more comfortable, or for the children, or even for dress or pleasure. This is quite laudable, but if they work at a lower rate than factory people, or being under no restrictions of the Factory Act, work longer hours or under less sanitary conditions, then they lower the price of labour, injure themselves and others, and, from causes which I have already named, are only too apt to form intemperate habits.

Mr. Morgan, in his excellent little card, GIVE THE CHILD A CHANCE,* has put before thoughtless parents the harm they do their children by sending them for beer; now, let me put before thoughtless husbands what false economy it is for their wives to work long hours to help the family income. By all means let a wife earn something, but not at the expense of her home, nor, if possible, at a lower price than the regular factory worker, for the following reasons:—

1. She lowers the price of labour.
2. She neglects her own home.
3. She injures her health by attempting to do both her housework and the factory work.
4. Neglecting her cooking, she buys inferior food, and loses her appetite.
5. She craves stimulants, and ultimately becomes intemperate.
6. She becomes the mother of delicate children.
7. Through the discomforts of his home, crying children, and badly-cooked food, her husband is driven to frequent the public-house, gradually becoming intemperate likewise.
8. The husband is also tempted to rely upon the wife's earnings, and gives her less and less of his own as his drinking habits increase.

CONTRAST THIS WITH A MODEL WIFE, who contents herself with earning a few shillings by working for the factory or shop about three hours a day, who keeps her home neat and clean, cooks properly, makes her own baby-linen, nurses her babies herself, instead of paying a few pence for some incompetent old woman or child to do it, and retains her own health by not being over-worked or craving stimulants through over-fatigue. Surely such a woman's children will be healthier and stronger than her neighbour's who attempts to do more. Much of the nation's money is now spent on teaching children cooking, sewing, and other useful household duties, and it is a great pity that when these children grow up, they do not see that it is far truer economy to do their own cooking and sewing than to try to earn too much by work brought home, thereby seriously lowering the wage of other workers, without really bettering themselves.

Of course the individual conditions of home-workers are so varied, it would be impossible to lay down hard and fast rules about the amount of work they should undertake, but if workers could be brought to see how they affect the price of labour and create the sweated price, they could by union amongst themselves alter things far more effectually than outsiders can do it for them. Above all, let women especially avoid any employment that will tend to create a craving for stimulants.

Work which has to be done in hot rooms makes people very thirsty, especially in summer; these employments are generally well paid, the workers have often short hours. Self-respecting men or women use their leisure time and money wisely, but it must be confessed that many of the best paid trades claim a great many drunkards. When people apply for work in a nervous condition, the result of their intemperance, they are naturally asked to accept lower wages, being not worth so much as temperate people. Gradually they sink lower and lower, until perhaps, having spent their last penny on drink, and being hard up, they are glad to beg to be taken on to work at any price. These are cases of and by sweating I mean underpaid labour, from whatever cause it may arise. But because those given to drink accept these prices, does it not sometimes follow that temperate workers are compelled to accept them also?

If those whose employments make them very thirsty would remember the many refreshing, non-intoxicating beverages they could have, such as, for summer, home-made lemonade, ginger beer sold in stone bottles, milk, or good wholesome country nettle-beer, with tea, coffee, or cocoa for colder weather, and give them a fair trial, I think they would find their craving for stimulants grow less.

There is just one more class of workers I should like to touch upon before I close—the flower girl. These girls must possess splendid grit or they could never be at the market so early every morning, though many of them work till the theatres close at night. The Factory Act forbids others from working such long hours; why should not the flower girl be prevented from doing so, especially as these late hours expose her to such terrible temptations in regard to intemperance and other vices? The "Flower Girls' Mission" is doing excellent work in this direction, but it is expedient that the public should consider the matter also, and see what can be done to protect girls from earning their living in such dangerous conditions. If people would inquire into these things for themselves, they would find what urgent necessity there is for the law to protect the flower girl from late hours as well as the factory girl. Let us do all in our power to get such a law passed.

"LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION."

I have not wished to set employers against employés, or vice versâ, nor to state definitely how much work ought or ought not to be done by home workers (only practical common sense can do that for each one), but rather to point out some real causes of intemperance, which are perhaps quite unsuspected by the intemperate ones themselves.

We are taught by our Lord Himself to pray, "Lead us not into temptation;" and surely the more we try to find out what constitutes the particular form of temptation to drink in the weaker members of humanity, the more able we shall be to lead them out of it, who rarely, if ever, offer the prayer for themselves.

It was a sad surprise to me to be told, when first I began to collect information for these articles, that intemperance is increasing amongst newly-married women; but only a fortnight ago a most distressing case was brought under my notice, of a young wife who bore an excellent character before her marriage last October, yet is now a complete slave to intemperance. Her employer, whom she served faithfully and well for five years, could not believe it possible of her.

Let me make a most earnest appeal to all women to find out how much this terrible evil has spread, that we may do all in our power to check it.

*Studies in Leviticus.

By Rev. HUBERT BROOKE.

III.—Purity.

FOR two mornings we have studied Christ as our perfect Sacrifice and as our perfect High Priest. What kind of life should be lived by those who know Him in those relations? The Book of Leviticus answers—it will be a life that is clean, and a life that is holy.

Clean and unclean are words that form a keynote for the six chapters xi.-xvi. In the whole of the Book, these words and their derivatives occur 186 times; but in the section just named, they are found 160 times, pointing to the necessity for a perfect line of demarcation in our lives between things fit for priestly service, and others which are not after the mind of Christ.

Cleanness and uncleanness are matters of God's law, and not of man's liking (Lev. xi. 45-47). It is from the Ruler of life and from his Word that we learn to discern between what is fit, comely, advantageous, and helpful in the Christian life, and things which are not so, in order that we may sever ourselves entirely from the latter. Paul desired for the Philippians (i. 9, 10), not a vague, uninstructed love, but that which abounds more and more in keenness of distinction—not only as to things grossly evil, and therefore undoubtedly to be discarded, but as to the things that make our lives fragrant unto God and well pleasing in his sight. It is in for us to put aside doubtful and unclean things that there many be continual perfecting of holiness in his fear (2 Cor. vi. 17; viii. 1).

We come short of the Divine will and lose the joyous fulness of blessing, when we are content with anything short of walking with God. In order so to walk, we must agree with Him (Amos iii. 3); and that can only be as we give practical effect to his decisions touching our manner of life (1 Thess. iv. 1). Will you listen, with me, to God's Word, that we may know the garments in which his people should be clothed and the cleanness of life that is necessary to our walk with Him?

Lev. xi. deals with animals respectively clean and unclean; with meats to be eaten, and others to be refused; with defilement by touch or otherwise, and the means of its removal. God is concerned for his people, even in the little details of daily life. The terms of Israel's communion with Him touched that material sustenance which foreshadowed

THE FOOD OF THE SOUL.

The redeemed people, under covenant with God, and called to Divine communion, were to bear such distinguishing marks that none could hesitate to acknowledge that they belonged to the Lord. It is hard to see that distinction when, as sometimes happens, both the Church and the world adorn themselves with each others garments. Not by way of bondage, but as a glorious privilege, Israel was instructed of God in observances concerning which the outside world was absolutely indifferent.

The conditions of human cleanness and uncleanness in the sight of God are dealt with in chap. xii.-xiv. The description (xiii.) of leprosy in man and in his garments is particularly remarkable; for the latter might be leprous when the man himself was clean. In xiv. 1-32 we find the method of man's cleansing; while verses 33-57 show how the priest was to deal with a plague-striken house.

Other conditions, touching cleanness and uncleanness, are contained in chap. xv.; and, at its close, we may well say, Who, then, can be clean before God, with the certainty that, to the end, nothing shall arise to mar communion with Him? None but God can be certain of that; and so (chap. xvi.) He provides which meets the last thought of uncleanness in his people, the sins hidden even from their own eyes, the sins of their holiest things. Thus, for Israel year by year, and for us once for all, there is provided a way of perfect communion and unbroken fellowship with the Father.

Not only is it beautiful and fair to seek the life which belongs to a people separated by blood and redeemed unto God, but it is a matter of definite command and absolute obedience. Every day do we need to hear the word, "Ye are not your own." Israel were "a holy people unto the Lord" (Deut. xiv. 21), therefore they must not touch things which the stranger or alien was at liberty to use until he came under covenant with God. The pleasant, well-mannered worldling, or the half-hearted professor of religion, seeks to feed mind or soul upon this or that. Why may not I do so? Because the rule of my life is the will of Him who hath redeemed me. The underlying reason for teaching spiritual lessons through outward purification may be traced in Lev. xi. 44, and, still more emphatically, in xx. 24, 25. The whole subject of purity in God's sight starts from the fact that his people are a purchased possession.

Men of science have gradually opened their eyes to see that the injunctions of this Book are not arbitrary and fanciful, but are

ROOTED IN PERFECT HYGIENE.

Apart from God, Moses could not know what is now discovered hundreds of years afterwards, namely, that the most perfect bodily health is obtained by following the Divine commands. Israel was brought out of Egypt a healthy people (Psa. cv. 37); and God intended them to remain so, even unto old age (xcii. 2). How many of us are ready, to aim at the food, for spirit and mind as well as for body, which shall secure perfect health?

If the prayer in the Third Epistle of John, verse 2, were answered for the whole Christian Church, that Church would be a vast hospital. If every spiritually feeble one were physically sick, how many healthy bodies would there be? Let us seek perfect health in both respects. Unclean feeders are most liable to illness; and from certain forms of disease the Jewish race is almost entirely free. Transfer that fact to the soul and to the spirit. They who feed on doubtful things lower the spiritual temperature of existence.

From the statement of an Eastern shepherd it appeared that when the health of his sheep is lowered by their keenness of ear is diminished, and they are liable to be led astray by strange voices. Let us take heed as to the food with which we seek to maintain the strength of our souls.

Seeking the most favourable physical conditions for some athletic contest, men eschew things which are regarded as quite harmless in other circles. Asked why he refuses a cigar, a young man replies, "Because I am in training." I wish some of them would stay in training all their lives; and I am not quite sure that any of us ever have the right to be out of training. I must leave you to judge whether God wants our service at its best or not. Our bodies are not our own, and we have no right to use them outside the consecrated life. God does not pander to our self-indulgence by giving back for a time the bodies which have been presented unto Him. All that is given to Him is to be used for Him at his command.

In the midst of this section of the Book come the solemn lessons connected with leprosy, which represents sin in the sight of God. The loathsome thing begins insidiously and imperceptibly, makes steady and unbroken progress, produces insensibility, excludes from fellowship, and is incurable save by God. Every soul here has known some touch of spiritual leprosy; but God has made wondrous provision for our relief at the hands of Him who says,

"I WILL, BE THOU CLEAN."

The one bird slain and the other sprinkled with blood and allowed to fly, tell of Christ's death and resurrection. After washing his garments, the quondam leper was touched on ear, thumb, and toe with the blood of another sacrifice, and with the anointing oil. Thus, of a leper, excluded from the camp, could be made a priest for the glory of God. In Christ alone is the cleansing touch, the atoning blood, and the anointing oil, for health, pardon, and service.

The whole subject of purity is of tender interest when viewed in the light of God's desire for the companionship and friendship of his people. "I have called you friends," said the Lord to his disciples (John xv. 15). Is there any earthly connection, self-indulgence, or doubtful thing worth keeping in comparison with that friendship? How few give the Lord in the things which they allow themselves; but the love which is sensitive anticipates the wish of the loved one. Every Christian man in business should make the Lord senior partner, in order that the decisions of Christ may keep the business clean.

The Lord will be truly Master of our homes, too, when He is really consulted about "whatsoever ye do," including the books and magazines we read, the recreations in which we have part, and the relationships we form. Experiences, of which I cannot here speak particularly, have shown me that the Lord's people come most short of whole-heartedness in the matter of their possessions; but there, as in all else, the Lord must have absolute rule.

Rom. xiv. 14, 22; 1 Cor. viii. 9; x. 23, 31, 32, all show that, from things lawfully chosen for ourselves, many may be cut off by Christian consideration for weaker brethren, the Jew, the Gentile, and the Church of God. But is better than the great riches of the ungodly, and the medium riches of the half-and-half Christians. The joyous liberty in Christ thus set before us is within our reach. We may have the testimony, in our own hearts and before the world, that we please God, if we walk with Him and accept his decisions.

But, after all, perfection is not attainable in our earth life; and the grace of the Day of Atonement crowns all these beautiful lessons concerning purity. Year by year, Israel's hidden and unperceived uncleanness and defilement were pictorially atoned for and placed on the head of the goat, to be sent away out of sight for ever. The Lord Jesus Christ has done that for us, once and for all. If we walk in the light, as God is in the light, obeying Him with heart, soul, and spirit, we have unclouded fellowship; and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin.

*God's Unparalleled Gospel.

By Rev. GEORGE HANSON, D.D.

Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God (1 Cor. ii. 9, 10).

THESE words are usually taken as referring to the unseen and unimagined glories of heaven; but the apostle makes allusion rather to the specific doctrines that he had been inculcating, more especially the great doctrine of the atonement. His cultivated hearers disliked the exaltation of what was, to them, a symbol of the deepest degradation, into the pledge of everlasting life. But the apostle's answer to all objections was simply that the message of Christ crucified was not his own but came direct from God; eye never saw, ear never heard, it never entered the heart of man, but the Spirit revealed it unto him.

I would to-day direct attention to the uniqueness, absolute originality, and Divine authority of the Gospel, and the deep chasm of difference between it and the tastes, prejudices, and conclusions of worldly wisdom. Taking the particular doctrine before the apostle's mind, the

of atonement aims to appease the supposed wrath of an imaginary deity or deities; but the Christian conception is summed up in the most glorious words that ever fell on mortal ear—"God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in

* Address at Mildmay Conference.

Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." It never dawned upon man, in his highest flights of fancy and aspiration, that the Creator of the earth should take upon Him the burden of a world's guilt, and purge it away by the sacrifice of Himself even unto death. In our familiarity with these thoughts, let us never forget that we owe this tender, restful, uplifting view of God to the Gospel alone.

In further illustration of this theme, take the conditions of salvation. The prevalent note in all heathen or semi-heathen faiths is salvation by works which are supposed to cover human defects and win God's favour. This is seen in Roman Catholicism, with its priestly intervention, saintly mediation, and long array of rites, culminating in extreme unction. In the dark ages, when the Bible was practically unknown, all sorts of errors sprang up, suggestive of man's desire to do something toward saving himself. The Mass is an attempt to add to the work finished by Christ upon Calvary; and "indulgences" relate to an alleged store of human merit. On the other hand, the Gospel pictures salvation as God's free gift, which no merit of ours can make surer, and from which no guilt can debar us save unwillingness to accept. As we sit here, for Christ's sake—whatever our past may be—we can lift our hearts to God and thank Him for of life and glory eternal. The Gospel of Christ is not "win God's favour," it is "accept God's mercy." Such a thought as that never entered the heart of man; it is peculiar to "the glorious Gospel of the blessed God."

Then, consider the measure of grace that God bestows upon us. The late George Bowen, once an infidel, but afterwards for many years an eminent and devoted Indian missionary, left a worthy legacy of a noble man, in a book of gracious meditations. One of these, upon our being joint heirs with Christ, opened to me very fully the exceeding riches of God's grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus. God not only pardons us, renews us, and calls us his children, but He associates us definitely with his only-begotten and well-beloved Son, giving us a share in his heritage, and a seat upon his throne. "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" It is no niggard Gospel that we have to preach. God gives right royally; and Christ includes and transcends every other gift that even God Himself can bestow.

The revelation of a personal Redeemer is also peculiar to the Gospel. Take Confucius from Confucianism, Buddha from Buddhism, Mohammed from Mohammedanism; and the great systems associated with the leaders' names remain. If you take Christ from the Gospel, what is left? Nothing but leaves. The Old Testament pointed forward to the coming One; it was the portrait of a living original, who was to appear in due time. In the New Testament we have not so much a revelation as an inspired record of a revelation. Christ is the revelation of God; and God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself. Christ came not merely to tell of life, love, and peace; but He is the Life, He is Love incarnate, and He is our Peace. We do not merely endorse this or that sentiment or principle; we commit ourselves into the hands of a living Saviour whose presence is with us all the way, and from whose loving arms not even death itself shall be able to separate us.

LOVE CRUCIFIED,

A little child can understand the attractions of the Saviour's love. Probably, most of us know the touching story of Yeddie, the poor half-witted Scottish lad who had an intense longing to join the communion of the Church. Under the customary examination, he made but a poor show. When the elders' adverse decision penetrated his understanding, the tears coursed down his cheeks as he exclaimed, "Three in Ane and Ane in Three; and the middle Ane He died for me." The godly men could then no longer withstand him; and when the minister heard of it, he said, "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings God hath perfected praise." Had the Gospel been a complicated system, to be understood only by deep thought, poor Yeddie had never learned to trust in the love of his Master. Let us hold constant fellowship with Christ as our personal living, loving Lord.

The Late Mr. George Holland.

TENDERNESS as well as solemnity marked the funeral and memorial services of the late Mr. George Holland. On every hand, and from persons in widely differing circumstances, one heard spontaneous expressions of regard and sympathy. The memory of the departed worker is cherished, not only for what he did, but for what he was, for the fragrance of his Christian character, as well as for the many-sided operations of the George Yard Mission.

The first service was held at St. Matthew's, Essex Road, N., the rector of which church, and his esteemed wife—particularly the latter—have been long and intimately associated with Mr. Holland at George Yard. At their residence, too, Mr. Holland, had been tended and cared for with filial regard and watchfulness. There was a numerous attendance. In the gallery were members of the mothers' meeting, who had trudged from Whitechapel or Spitalfields to pay the to their benefactor. Other reserved spaces were occupied by young women, brought into the Kingdom through the Mission, and now connected with various branches of the work, and by representatives of many religious and philanthropic societies which had received help and stimulus from George Yard. Here and there, too, were groups of plain working men in corduroy, and factory girls in sober attire, who had secured a half-day's leave in order to be present.

The coffin was placed in the space in front of the Communion-table; it was almost hidden by floral tributes of respect sent by the Duchess of Sunderland, the Marquis of Northampton, and by many equally sincere mourners in humbler walks of life. The service was simple and impressive. Revs. T. Hope Steen and F. J. Hobbins (the well-known Evangelical vicar of Christ Church, Jamaica Street, Stepney), taking part. The latter gave a brief address on Phil. i. 21, and said that while some found their chief joy in earthly possessions, in the pursuit of worldly pleasure or the praise of men, George Holland had steadily held in view the great end of being able to say "for me to live, is Christ." The secret of the prosperity which had attended the George Yard Mission was the indwelling of Christ in its founder. A short time before his death Mr. Holland had said, "I am not afraid to die; I am in Christ!" and when a friend had remarked, "You have been a good servant of his," Mr. Holland had quietly replied, "He has been a good Master to me."

The final portion of the service was held at the grave side in Highgate Cemetery, where a large concourse of friends and sympathizers assembled.

A notable tribute to the sustained energy and spirit of Mr. Holland was the presence of many young people who had found the Saviour during recent years, as well as those who had been associated with the work from its early days. The proceedings were brief, and, indeed, there seemed little call for words. Everybody knew the departed one so well, and the sense of individual loss was strong upon all. It was like taking farewell of a dear personal friend, and the occasion was precious in the hallowed realization of God's presence. At the conclusion, Mr. R. C. Morgan spoke a few words, voicing the general feelings of the friends in praise to God for all that his servant had been enabled to accomplish.

The Memorial Service was held in the evening of the same day in the large hall of the George Yard Mission, in High Street, Whitechapel. Long before the hour fixed for the commencement of the meeting, people began to assemble. George Holland had, by God's grace, done much for Whitechapel. He was one of the very first of the band of devoted men and women who, in the early sixties, applied themselves to the vast work of evangelizing the lapsed masses of our great centres of metropolitan slumdom.

MANY HAVE FOLLOWED

in their steps; but amid all the prosperous undertakings—and there is not one too many—which to-day have their sphere of operations east of Aldgate, George Yard holds an especial place in the esteem of the public. The extent and demeanour of the audience was, therefore, not to be wondered at.

Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided, after referring to the past accomplishments of the Mission and the noble character of its founder, encouraged the workers to go forward continuing in the spirit of love and power, and a sound mind. Reminiscences of past intercourse with Mr. Holland came from Mr. T. A. Denny, who recalled the Brotherly interest of Lord Shaftesbury, who frequently visited the Mission, and always with feelings of appreciation and thankfulness. Mr. Denny went on to speak of the gracious spirit of Mr. Holland, remarking that "his very face was a poem. The light of his countenance told of the beautiful spirit within. It was, indeed, the outcome of the indwelling of the Spirit of God."

As a representative of other missions, Mr. Merry, of Miss Annie Macpherson's Home of Industry, testified to the guidance and practical help received from George Yard, and also spoke of a young man, rescued from the depths, and led to Christ by Mr. Holland, who is now an esteemed minister in America.

The Chairman stated that the trustees were empowered, indeed obligated, to arrange for the work to be continued on the same lines as hitherto.

Dr. A. T. Pierson, in the course of a hearty address, said there were three men especially with whom he had come into contact for whom he had felt a profound respect and love—

C. H. SPURGEON, D. L. MOODY, AND GEORGE HOLLAND.

Of these, George Holland was fully the peer of the other two, notably in the measure of the Spirit of the Lord Jesus, which he exhibited in his words and his life. Dr. Pierson went on to refer to Psalm xc. (which had been read), in order to emphasize the order of the closing verse. First, "the beauty of the Lord our God" must be upon us, and then "the work of our hands" shall be "established." This is the divine order, first the life and then the work. Passing on, in considering the idea of spiritual development to Psalm i. and the comparison therein of the believer to a tree, the speaker mentioned four things as necessary to make a perfect tree: (1) life, (2) conditions favourable to growth, (3) growth, and (4) fruit; but the two latter are certain to follow if the two former are fulfilled. Beloved George Holland lived and worked in this spirit of love and sympathy, which cares not for its own; he spared nothing of all that he was, and all that he had. When hearing of the dying words of Moody, "Earth is receding, heaven is opening, God is calling, let me go," Dr. Pierson had exclaimed, "Let there be no weeping over such a death!" and in view of the saintly spirit of George Holland, he felt led to repeat the words in his case also, "God buries his workmen, but

and by the Divine blessing the work would still go forward at George Yard.

Subsequent speakers added words of testimony and remembrance, Rev. T. Hope Steen telling how a friend, during Mr. Holland's last days, had asked, with reference to a third person who was present, "Who is speaking to you?" and how the sick man, catching the words, although not the exact meaning, replied, "God is speaking to me." The meeting closed with words of praise for Mr. Holland's useful life, and with prayer for the blessing of God to rest upon the present and future work of the Mission.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, September 2. Solomon's Song viii.

THE Church comes up from the wilderness, leaning on her Beloved. She cannot be happy there. Spectators on the long line of hills where the Judæan pasture-lands descend into the dunes of the desert see the spouse coming up, leaning upon her Beloved: just as the angels that watch from the battlements of heaven view the militant Church hastening to join the triumphant. For the Church collective, as for the individual, there is no sure protection or help save to lean upon the Beloved—upon Him who was beloved of the Father before the worlds were made, and whom we love.

The love of saintly hearts to Jesus can never be satisfied till He sets them as seals upon his own heart, and wears them there for ever. And what a comfort it is to know that his love is stronger than death; the strong, cold current of the river of death cannot separate us from its grasp. What shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall death? The word translated "cruel" may be rendered tenacious; the love of Jesus never relaxes its hold. "Whom once He loves He never leaves, but loves them to the end."

Is the little sister, not marriageable when this Song was written, the Gentile Church? It may be so; at least it is in keeping with the tenor of the allegory.

The Song ends with the Advent Calling which is repeated from ii. 17, only the hills of separation exist no more. "Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

MONDAY, September 3. Isaiah i.

Ewald calls this chapter, most appropriately, the Great Arraignment. It seems as though God brings the chosen people into the presence of the universe, and charges them with base ingratitude and sin. Isaiah introduces the appellation for God, "Holy One of Israel," which is almost entirely confined to his writings, to mark still further the contrast between Jehovah and his people. We cannot read these words without being deeply convicted of their truth when applied to ourselves. The very dumb animals seem more responsive to their owners than we to God. How often have we gone away backward, returning to sins from which we had thought we had perfectly escaped.

The result of sin is misery. There was not a spot in all the land of Israel that did not show signs of the Divine chastisement which their sin had brought upon them. It was as though the back of some culprit had been scored with the scourge until there was not a square inch of sound flesh left. And we have suffered, too. What happy lives ours might have been if we had never swerved right or left from the law of God, if we had ever lived in love to God and man!

Whilst we are living inconsistently, God is weary of our outward religious rites. The solemn meeting is iniquity; the sacred ordinances of worship an abomination. But He waits to pardon, longs to make us white as snow, desires that we should eat the good of the land; and, better than all, He is able to purge away all our dross and take away our alloy. May He do this blessed office for us all, that our hearts may be as cities of righteousness and truth.

TUESDAY, September 4. Isaiah ii.

We cannot tell the origin of the grand old promise which occupies the first four verses of this chapter, and which had already, before Isaiah's time, been quoted by Micah; but we feel that it is one of the most solemn asseverations of the Word of God, and is destined to be fulfilled to its least and last iota.

Isaiah proceeds to mention some of the sins which hinder the fulfilment of this great promise: there were the practices of sorcery and spirit-rapping; there was their reliance on their money and martial resources, and, worst of all, their reliance on idols. How could God do for his people what was in his heart to do for them, so long as these sins were allowed unrebuked? It may be that there are secret sins allowed in our lives, which are sapping our soul-prosperity, and hindering the blessing which God longs to bestow.

There may be high things in our hearts that must come down. The Apostle speaks of casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalteth itself against God. Are we conceited of our gifts or attainments? Are we proud and lofty in our self-esteem? Are we jealous of others, and envious of their success? Nothing will sooner alienate God from us and us from Him. "Learn of Me," says the Lord Jesus; "I am meek and lowly in heart."

Let us cast sins and idols away to the moles and bats; let us bury them in the grave of Jesus; let us put that cross and grave between us and them. It is well every day to sit for a little in the grave of Jesus, still sweetly scented with the women's spicery, and remember that we have for ever put off the flesh with its affections and lusts, and have put on Christ, in all the beauty and humility of his perfect manhood.

WEDNESDAY, September 5. Isaiah iii.

Men are God's greatest gifts to man. They are as the stay and staff of the community, necessary as bread and water; and there is no calamity so dire as when God takes them away, and gives no others in their place; when children and babes are the princes and leaders of the State; when men who are competent to rule refuse responsibility, saying, I will not be a ruler. Methinks that a famine of this sort is afflicting England at this very juncture. We want men of power and character in the pulpit, and in every department of our civic and municipal life.

God is always standing up to plead the cause of the defenceless and weak. He enters into judgment, even in this life, with those who grind the faces of the poor and fill their houses with their spoil. Kingsley used to teach that what we do to others is done to us—that as we treat men, we shall be treated. It is a true verdict, and it is certain that ere death summons the oppressor to the bar of the Infinite, the retributive vengeance of God has made the oppressor repay the measure of his wrong, with an interest of suffering.

When men or women fall, the one sex falls with the other. We act and react. Probably women more easily affect men for better or worse than men women. But deterioration cannot be confined to one side of the household. So we are not surprised to hear these terrible words about the daughters of Jerusalem. The Prophet sternly and inexorably enumerates the vanities and follies of the life of fashion which they affected; but the long list of their trinkets might be duplicated from Bond Street and Regent Street. Is it not true that the more ornaments a woman puts on her person, the more she lacks the priceless ornament of a meek and quiet spirit?

THURSDAY, September 6. Isaiah iv.

The Branch can be no other than our Lord. He alone is worthy to be described in these adjectives, as beautiful and glorious, excellent and comely. It is a conception of the Messiah, which is taken up by later prophets, as Jeremiah and Zechariah (Jer. xxiii. 5; Zech. iii. 8), and has some analogy with the figure of the Vine. He is the Branch of the Lord, in his Divine Nature, and of the fruit of the earth, as the Son of Mary.

See what the Lord Jesus has realized among men. What the former dispensation set forth in symbol, He realizes as a living experience in the hearts and lives of his disciples. What the awful sufferings of the captivity began, the Life and Teaching of the Redeemer, and the gracious effusion of the Holy Spirit, completed. Those that belong to Jerusalem which is from above are holy; all who are written in the Franchise Roll of the Church are cleansed in their inner life from all that defiles and corrupts. The sins of which the previous chapter was full are put away. There is the Spirit of judgment, which winnows the wheat from the chaff, and the Spirit of burning which searches, cleanses, and purifies. "O Holy Spirit, come!"

But notice what our Lord does for the home life. Every dwelling-place fares as the Tabernacle did in the olden days of the Exodus. On each there is the cloud by day, and by night the torch of enlightening flame. God is a Shield and a Sun; and over all the glory there is the Divine Presence as a canopy. In other words, we have the Tabernacle of God's perpetual presence; He dwells with us, and is become our God. We hide in Him as a place of refuge, as a covert from the storm, and a shadow from the heat—always intercepting between us and what we fear.

FRIDAY, September 7. Isaiah v.

My heart is that vineyard, my Father; Thou couldst not have taken more pains with me, or put me in better and more favourable conditions for bearing fruit; and it is no fault of thine that, when Thou hast looked for grapes, I have yielded Thee disappointment and sorrow. Yet do not take away the hedge of thy protection. Do not break down the wall of separation. Do not give up thy loving care, and consign me to briars and thorns, or forbid the rain-clouds to visit me; for, if Thou forsakest me, I have no hope but to drift under midnight skies to my doom.

The sins of Israel are enumerated in all their terrible particularity. God does not bulk our sins together, but looks at them one by one. These indictments have their counterparts in the present day. Those that join land to land and lay field to field are the great Rings and Trusts for the sale of ice, or corn, or coal; or the vast Dry Goods establishments, which crush out the small shop-holders and dealers. Isaiah's drunkards and revellers have followers and successors, only too evidently. We, too, have our votaries of vanity, who seem bound to tissues of sophistry and deceit, and put evil for good and good for evil. Let us see to it that we have no complicity with such things. We have no right to invest our money in these rings and corporations; in these steamboat companies, that fill their boats with drink and gambling; or these railways, that make money by desecrating God's Day. The roaring of the Sea of Sorrow and the Darkness of Despair, the armies of Assyria and Babylonia, have also their counterparts still.

SATURDAY, September 8. Isaiah vi.

Kings die, but God ever abideth. If you look high enough, you may always see the King. The vision is of the Lord Jesus, in his ascension beauty; look away to Him (John xii. 41). If his train filled with glory the temple, what would not the light of his face do? Six wings—twain for the face, humility; twain for the feet, modesty: twain for flight, obedience—give me these three gracious attributes of a holy character!

"One cried to another"—thus I have heard one bird awaken a grove of feathered choristers; and one old man, who knew the art of prayer, incite an entire congregation. It was as though the seraph was disappointed that the heavenly worship was so inadequate of its great object. "Higher, brother seraphs; louder; fuller; worthier of our King!" The whole earth does not seem full of his glory, because our eyes are holden; but if our hearts were as full of God as the hearts of seraphim, we should see his glory everywhere.

> Earth's crammed with heaven,
> And every common bush aflame with God,
> But only he who sees takes off his shoes.

We may well confess ourselves undone. For if this is the use that seraphs make of their lips, what can we say of ours, except that they are unclean, and that the passage of our words has defiled the threshold? Yet for us there is the live coal, which has absorbed the blood of the lamb sacrificed upon the altar. Blood and fire—these are what we need, and the seraph will supply them unbidden; he knows there is no other remedy for stricken hearts, no other source of strength amid the awful discouragements of a prophet's life.

THE LATE

Dr. John Kennedy.

DR. JOHN KENNEDY, who answered his Master's call from service here on February 6, was one of those stalwart leaders in the defence of the faith to whom thousands had learned to look for constant guidance and support. For his first sermon, preached at the age of nineteen, with the fear and trembling of youth, to the little church at Aberfeldy which his father had formed in the beginning of the century, he took the text, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ;" for his last sermon preached to the same church, with no fear, but with the trembling of old age, during a visit to his beloved birthplace in his eighty-fourth year, he took the very same text; and in all the intervening years he wavered not a whit from his devotion to the cause of Christ as preached by the greatest of the Apostles.

His father, James Kennedy, was one of those men of God who were trained and sent forth by the Haldane Brothers to rekindle a fire of evangelic love and zeal in parts of Scotland where there seemed to be little but smouldering embers. Settling at Aberfeldy in 1806, he encountered opposition and persecution, which sometimes went the length of personal violence; but, with God's help, his indomitable spirit triumphed, and the eager congregations, which gathered from great distances to hear his message, were often so large that the assembly had to adjourn to the open air. During the week he carried the burning Word far into the recesses of the Perthshire glens, where thousands at a time would lay aside their work and gather to hear him, though preacher and hearers alike might have to STAND KNEE-DEEP IN SNOW.

Treading in his father's steps, John Kennedy never had any ambition except to be a minister of Christ, though he had abilities which might have carried him very high, either in politics or at the Bar. He was born in the little chapel manse of Aberfeldy on June 14, 1813. His early youth was full of experiences, which seem strange enough to our modern minds, for life in the Highlands eighty-seven years ago was curiously primitive, and in some respects only semi-civilized. It is interesting to know that before his departure Dr. Kennedy prepared a series of papers on those "Old Highland Days," for the pages of the Leisure Hour, a magazine for whose very first number, in 1852, the same pen was enlisted; these reminiscences will form the first part of a biography which the Religious Tract Society intends to publish shortly.

He completed his schooling at Inverness, to which his father moved in 1825, and thence he went on, at the early age of fifteen, to the university of King's College, Aberdeen. His father could only afford to keep him there for one session, so for two years the young man went to Moness House, near Aberfeldy, as tutor to the boy John Campbell, who afterwards succeeded to the Earldom of Breadalbane—the father of the present Marquis. In 1832 he was able to resume his studies, this time at Edinburgh University; and he never failed to remember the enthusiasm which the lectures of Dr. Chalmers aroused in him and in all who attended that great man's classes.

Of another famous professor, best known as "Christopher North," he had vivid but by no means equally pleasant impressions. He had to work hard in the evenings and early mornings, as tutor in private families, to support himself and his younger brother (James Kennedy, who afterwards did noble work for many years as an Indian missionary); yet he not only pursued his own studies with diligence and success, but preached regularly on Sundays in the neighbouring village of Portobello. From Edinburgh he went on to Glasgow for theological training, under Dr. Wardlaw and Greville Ewing; and after the completion of his course in 1835, he acted as mission pastor at New Lanark and other places.

It was the first Sunday of 1836 when John Kennedy began his settled ministerial career as pastor of Blackfriars Street Congregational Church in Aberdeen. He was very young, and he looked even younger than his years; but he speedily won the respect, as well as the affection, of the hard-headed Aberdonians, and for nearly eleven years he held a position of constantly-increasing influence in the Granite City. Over the young members of his congregation, including many University students, his influence was especially powerful, and there still survive quite a number of elderly men and women who recall with gratitude that they owe their conversion under God to John Kennedy's preaching.

His energies were immense, his sympathies far-reaching. To the instruction and pastoral care of his own church he devoted himself with the thorough concentration which always characterized him; but he made time for many duties which lay beyond. He was a keen worker in the Ragged School movement, in the Temperance crusade, in the cause of the Evangelical Alliance, and even in the Anti-Corn-Law and Anti-State-Church agitations. One of the earliest philanthropies to enlist his zeal was that of the Anti-Slavery Society.

His passionate love of justice, his abhorrence of everything unfair or mean or underhand, was one of his most marked and most admirable characteristics, while enthusiasm for the weak and oppressed races of the earth never abated from the day when, in the little Aberdeen manse, he received the famous Dr. Philip, champion of the Hottentots, to the last day of his life, when he expressed his longing for a complete British victory in South Africa in the interests of the black as well as of the white population.

It was evident almost from the beginning that the young minister was a born leader of men. He had a warm heart and a clear head; a great gift of speech, with an exacting conscience that would never let his tongue overstep the limits of truth; a noble enthusiasm, combined with a peculiarly well-balanced and far-seeing judgment. More than one flattering call from important churches had been refused before he felt it his duty to accept an invitation to London as Dr. Fletcher's successor in the pastorate of the historic Stepney Meeting House. This was late in 1846, a few months after his marriage at Melrose to Miss Helen Stodart Blackie, sister of Professor John Stuart Blackie.

The burden of London, as may be imagined, only stimulated his energies. He never paused to mourn or worry over the gigantic evils that faced him; he simply fought on the more strenuously, and prayed the more earnestly against them. His well-studied yet direct and simple sermons, his transparent sincerity and nobility of character, his conspicuous ability in leadership, drew round him a large and devoted congregation; and in 1863, the old Meeting House had to be replaced by the present handsome building with 1,300 sittings. His wise counsel was always at the service of his brother ministers, and of all who tried to serve their fellow men in any way; and he was often called the "Bishop of East London."

A constant friend of the poor, as his Master had been before him, he spared neither his great resources of physical and mental vigour, nor his slender resources of money, in the service of those who needed a helping hand.

Leaving his private beneficences where he himself left them, in the record which God alone can read, we may at least mention a few of the public causes into which he threw himself—the relief of the distress caused by cholera epidemics in East London and by famine in the Western Islands of Scotland; the Hospital Sunday Fund, on whose executive he was from the first one of the chief representatives of the Nonconforming Churches; the East London Children's Hospital, whose founders gained in him a never-failing counsellor; the rescue of East London's greatest play-ground, Epping Forest, a cause in which he vainly besought the help of unsympathetic statesmen; the defence of Christianity against sacerdotalism and materialism; the contest against established and privileged sectarianism, in the interests not of his own branch, but of all branches of Christ's Church; the efficient training of ministers, especially at Brecon College, which he visited and examined on behalf of the Congregational Fund Board for nearly half a century, and at New College, where he was Professor of Apologetic Theology from 1872 till 1876, and Chairman of Council from 1884 till 1895; the great work of the London Missionary Society, of which he was a director for fifty-seven years and for which he would himself have gone out to China in early life but for the objection of his parents, who had sent their only other surviving son to India; the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, whose committee he joined as long ago as 1850; the British and Foreign Bible Society, of which he was a prominent advocate long before he came to London; and the Religious Tract Society, for which he wrote many valuable works.

Dr. Kennedy was Chairman of the Congregational Union in 1872, the year in which he received the D.D., both from Aberdeen and—along with his friend, Dr. Moffat—from Edinburgh. In 1878 he filled the chair of the London Congregational Union. Into the history of his other unstinted services to his own denomination, and to the Church at large, it is impossible to enter here. Nor is it possible to give even the barest list of his literary works, though some of these have had a very large circulation, and a very deep influence on a multitude of lives. We must just mention, as among the more important, "The Divine Life: A Book of Facts and Histories," "Work and Conflict," "Rest under the Shadow of the Great Rock," "The Self-Revelation of Christ," "The Gospels, their Age and Authorship," "A Handbook of Christian Evidences," "The Pentateuch," "The Resurrection of Jesus Christ," "The Unity of Isaiah," "The Book of Jonah." His last work, written at the age of eighty-five with all the vigour and logical keenness of his prime, was that on "The Book of Daniel, viewed from the Christian Standpoint," in the Bible Students' Library. For seven years, now long ago, he edited the Christian Witness, and for four years, more recently, the Evangelical Magazine.

In 1882, Dr. Kennedy resigned the Stepney pastorate, feeling that a younger man was needed to cope with the changed, and still changing, conditions of East London life, and removed to Hampstead. But retirement was far from meaning inactivity. He continued to preach often in various parts of the country, and his work on committees, councils, and boards went on steadily till within the last two or three years. Even after he had practically withdrawn from public life, he was constantly to be seen in the streets of Hampstead with a genial smile and a cheery word for every friend; and in the Lyndhurst Road Church, under Dr. R. F. Horton's pastorate, where he loved and appreciated the minister even more than he dissented from some of the minister's views. In the infancy of that church, it may be added, Dr. Kennedy for some time acted as its pastor, before Mr. Horton gave up his Oxford work; and Dr. Kennedy's last public utterance was a genial, yet keen and vigorous, speech at the anniversary meeting of the church on January 18.

Words are quite inadequate to describe the man as he was at home. Great as was the esteem of those who knew him at a distance, and the affection of those who called him friend, it is impossible to convey an idea of the love and devotion he inspired in the members of his own family, by his own love for them, by his unwaning interest in their concerns, by the robust, yet genial, Christliness of his character, by the nobility and gentleness of his whole life.

At the funeral service in Lyndhurst Road Church on Saturday, February 10, when Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson gave an address, there was a very large attendance, not only of Dr. Kennedy's personal friends, but of deputations from many institutions to which he had rendered invaluable service. The interment was at Abney Park. On Thursday, March 1, the memorial service was held in Stepney Meeting House, when Dr. Guinness Rogers preached to a very large congregation.

To illustrate the way in which Dr. Kennedy won the hearts of men whose views on various points he most resolutely combated—men wide as the poles asunder from each other as well as from him, let us quote from three private letters.

The first is from a staunch Evangelical clergyman, the vicar of an important London parish, who says:—

"It was a gain for any Churchman to listen to his conversation. I felt as if I were with one of the Apostles—above and beyond all differences of Church organization; and I always had a sense of blessing when I saw him in our little church"—at a country village where they met a few years ago. "His very presence made me feel 'the peace of God.'"

The second is from an extreme Ritualist:—

Rest, a well-earned righteous rest, has come to the dear old "faithful soldier-servant" and messenger for our one Master. The King of Love has claimed him for higher service.

The third is from one who belongs to no church whatever, but who can, nevertheless, write thus of the departed Christian champion:—

I have never met a man who was at once of such unflinching orthodoxy, and of such largeness of heart and sweetness of nature as to appreciate and acknowledge whatever was good wherever he found it. There are many unlovely and even contemptible characters who are "champions of orthodoxy," but if they had all been like him no champions would have been necessary.

DR. JACOB CHAMBERLAIN.

The Open-Air Mission.

WITH many heavy demands pressing upon us, we look forward to our coming great campaign at Doncaster Races from September 9-14 with some anxiety.

We have organized it, however, on the same large scale as during the last few years, and have appointed twenty servants of God to attack this stronghold of evil in the Master's Name.

Happily, Christian homes are being opened to the whole number, hence the expense of lodgings is spared us. Our stock of literature is also sufficient, save in the matter of Gospels, of which we could use many thousands.

What we beg is, that Christian friends all over the country will uphold us in prayer day by day in view of the mass of evil which we have to confront, and send needed help for this and many other constantly-recurring occasions of a like sort, when a strong force of our evangelists has to be detached.

Plymouth Races, for instance, come immediately before Doncaster, on September 5 and 6, while, directly after, the visitation of the great autumn fairs has to be arranged for. Frank Cockrem.

Surgeon's Knife and Hindu Idol.

By Rev. JACOB CHAMBERLAIN, M.D., of Madanapalle, India.

IT was a busy day in my little dispensary-hospital in India, 150 miles inland from Madras, in a region where, up to that time (for this was more than thirty years ago), no European surgery nor medical practice had been known. I had been sent there to open out missionary work in a new region, and knew of no better way of "opening out the work," and gaining the confidence and good will, yes, and love of the people, than by following the Great Missionary who "went about preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people." My little dispensary was built of sun-dried bricks, and thatched with rushes, and would hold from seventy to one hundred people, besides the space railed off for prescribing, and for dispensing the medicines.

The door had been opened at sunrise, as was my wont, and I had begun at once to examine the patients and prescribe the remedies. The rule, "First come, first served," had brought fifty together by sunrise. Their names had been registered, and their residences; and tickets, containing a concise statement of salvation through Jesus Christ alone, had been given by my assistant at the door as they entered. In half an hour the room was full, and, pushing aside the instruments and appliances on my dispensing table, and taking down the Telugu Bible, I had read and preached of Jesus Christ, healing the maladies of the soul. I had offered prayer, seeking his blessing upon the patients physically and spiritually, during which there had been the utmost quiet and attention, and had then proceeded with my treatment.

More than four-score patients had been attended to. It was approaching eleven o'clock, and I was anxious to complete my work and get home to breakfast, when I heard the well-known semi-chant of men together bearing a burden, and, looking out of the rear door, I saw a sick man, "borne of four," hung in a blanket, tied, hammock-like, to a long bamboo, resting on the shoulders of the four bearers.

They laid him down gently on the floor of the back verandah, saying that they had brought him two days' journey, for they had heard that the foreign doctor effected marvellous cures, and this, their friend, was beyond the skill of all their doctors. With them had come an elderly man, led by another, an uncle of the first, who, they said, had recently lost his sight, and had come hoping that the foreign doctor could restore it.

The case of the young man was a desperate one. Nothing but a very serious surgical operation could save him, and he was now so low that it was doubtful whether he would not sink under the operation. I was at a loss what to do. Administering a restorative, and ordering suitable nourishment for them both, I told them to take rest until 2 p.m., and, finishing the other patients, I went home to breakfast, and to think over the case and

TAKE COUNSEL OF MY MASTER.

In my closet I laid the case before Him, asking "Will the man endure the operation? Shall I perform it? Or shall I decline to perform it as hopeless? Teach me, Master, what to do."

The assurance seemed to come that, desperate as the case was, it would prove a success, and that it might introduce the Gospel into the new region from which they had come. Thus assured, I went at two o'clock and performed the difficult operation, and, to my joy, he finally recovered. The treatment of his uncle was also so blessed of God that he recovered his sight, and they were told that they could now return to their village cured.

They came to my house that evening to take leave; and, after expressing their gratitude in the most touching and truly Oriental manner, they said:

"Will the Dhora please let us have copies of 'The Divine Guru's History' (The Gospels), and some of the 'Spiritual Teaching' (a booklet clearly explaining the way of salvation), to take home to our friends?"

"Can you read?" "No." "Is there anyone in your village who can read?" "No." (For they were weavers and farm-labourers, and it is not the custom for them to be readers.)

"But, sir, let us have the books, and we will get them read to us. When the cloth merchant comes to our village to get the cloths we weave, we will say to him, 'Here, read us this book, and then we will talk business.' When the tax-gatherer comes we will say, 'Read us this book first, and then we will settle our taxes.' We will NEVER WORSHIP OUR OLD GODS AGAIN."

The books were given them gladly, and we bade them farewell, saying, "When this hot season is over we will come to your village and see you and your people. We shall hope to find you all believers in the Lord Jesus Christ."

We went as promised to the Taluk or country under which their village had been entered in our register. There had been a mistake. No such village could be found in the Taluk. We were greatly disappointed. We could get no track of them. Some three years elapsed. We were out touring in another country. At a large weekly market, our native assistants, after preaching, were accosted by these men, whose village proved to be only a few miles distant, and who now begged that we would come and see them, for they said all their friends were ready to embrace Christianity.

At sunrise the next morning we neared their village among the hills, and there, under the "Council Tree" at the head of the little village street, were gathered nearly all of the men, women, and children of the hamlet; and there, with beaming countenances, were my two patients, my friends of three years ago. "We are all ready for you," said they. "Everyone in the village has agreed to give up his idols if you will put a teacher here to teach us how to follow Jesus."

We preached to eager listeners, explaining the way of God more perfectly, and all knelt in a prayer to Jesus Christ to take possession of every heart. Soon a covenant was written out in their language—the Telugu—and signed with his cross-mark by every head of a house for himself and family, they abjuring heathenism, renouncing their idols, and placing themselves under Christian instruction; we promising, in turn, to place a teacher there to instruct them in God's Word. Then my eye fell on or temple, with half-a-dozen stern idols, great and small, standing on a platform.

"What are you going to do with these idols now?" I asked, turning to the people.

"Have we not renounced them? They are nothing to us any more. You are welcome to them. We don't want them any more."

"I would like to take one of them," said I, thinking to test their sincerity.

"Do you want one now? I'll bring out the chief Swami (god) and give you," said Ranandu, the younger of my patients, and going and reaching in he shook the central and largest idol loose from its masonry setting, brought it out, and, as he reached it up to me on my pony, paused a moment, and, looking at it, addressed it somewhat thus, speaking in his own language:—

"Well, old fellow! be off with you! We and our ancestors for a thousand years have feared and worshipped you. Now we have found a better God, a real Saviour." So speaking, he handed him up to me as I sat on my horse, and now that idol adds interest to a missionary museum in the home land, as he sits among the dethroned deities, conquered by King Immanuel.

After a few months, I baptized them, they having meantime proved their faith by standing firm through the fiery trial of persecution which had burst upon them for deserting their ancient faith; and I thank God that the surgeon's knife had proved an effective instrument in dethroning some of India's so-called gods.

Soldiers in South Africa.

MRS. M. S. OSBORN-HOWE writes: "In my letter which appeared in your issue of June 21, it should have appeared that there were 6,000 (not 600) patients in the twenty-two military hospitals at Bloemfontein. Amongst the orderlies we know some who are witnessing quietly but powerfully, not only by a Christ-like walk, but by their words of life to the suffering and dying. Like sentinels of Christ, they watch for souls, each in his ward or tent. A telegram has just reached us from the principal medical officer, asking us to open two Camp Homes in the Transvaal, offering all the tent equipment and permits for the necessary number of workers. We are sending eight men.

"Last month we opened another Home in the Orange River Colony at the request of the military authorities. Crowds of men are drawn nightly to the Homes to hear the simple Gospel story, and to sing Sankey's hymns. Concerts and amusements have no place in the work.

"The liberality of your readers and other friends in supplying us with good literature enables us to distribute freely in the hospitals and trains. The converts are being helped by Anna Shipton's books, and the workers find not a little profit and encouragement from her writings.

"We have decided to close the Home at De Aar on account of the withdrawal of the eight workers for the Transvaal.

"We beg our friends to note that the only safe address is—Care of J. Storr Lister, Esq., King Williams Town, Cape Colony."

The African Institute.

BEING on a visit to Colwyn Bay, North Wales, I have had evidence of the great value of the above work, which is unique in Christian effort in this country. Its object is for training converted young Africans for missionary work in their own land. The students are recommended either by native churches, of Lagos, Sierra Leone, Yorubaland, and other parts of Africa, or by missionaries in Africa. They receive a course of English school training and are taught a trade or handicraft. In some cases, students become medical practitioners, when friends undertake the expense. Special attention is paid to Scripture, and in turn they take part in the services held in the Institute's Lecture Hall in winter, and Colwyn Bay Public Hall in summer. It was a joy to hear these young fellows pleading with God in prayer for the conversion of any in the Hall who were unsaved and to hear their petitions on behalf of their own people in Africa.

As one thought that these bright young Africans were once in the darkness of heathenism, one could not but praise God for the triumphs of his grace. One returned student is now a tutor of eighty native preachers at Cameroons. Many applications are received for studentship which cannot be entertained on account of lack of funds. The students are brought over from Africa and returned, through the kindness of a Liverpool shipping firm, Messrs. Elder, Dempster, and Co., free of charge. The work is carried out on the soundest Evangelical lines, and, in view of the great mortality among European African missionaries, is eminently important in the evangelization of darkest Africa. Communications may be sent to Rev. W. Hughes, Principal, African Institute, Colwyn Bay, North Wales.

The Indian Famine.

FOOD SUPPLIES.

THE food supplies which the generosity of our readers and of the manufacturers enabled us to despatch to India have proved of service in many important instances. Rev. Dennis Osborne, of Poona, forwards a selection from a large number of letters on the subject which have been received from missionaries. From these we make extracts:—

Miss O'Hara (Canadian Mission, Dhar), writes: "The foods have been of the greatest help, especially the Bovril and milk. I wish we had more. Nestlé's Food is easily prepared, and the sick ones enjoy it."

Rev. Alfred Taylor (Sehore) "found the farinaceous foods and those for children most helpful—still more useful are the lunch biscuits, for they cannot be gulped down by the starving like the softer foods—a most important point."

"I found the Nestlé's Food specially useful," writes Mrs. W. B. Stover (Bulsar), "in nursing back to life one of the little girls whom we have rescued. I have used, so far, only two tins, but she is nearly well. Others have received much benefit, especially from the condensed milk."

Miss Miller (Bina) used two consignments of infants' foods in the Government kitchen of which she has charge. She says: "We have nearly 2,000 in the kitchen, and among them are many babes in a very bad condition. To these I have been giving liquid food and biscuits, with excellent results."

Rev. D. O. Fox (M.E. Mission, Poona) states:—"We have been using the foods among the starving babies and children in Poona city. They are all most helpful. The begin at once to 'pick up,' and it is a joy to see the steady improvement in them."

"These stores," writes Rev. G. K. Gilder (M.E. Mission, Raipur), "will be most acceptable. I have charge of a mission where 300 are being fed daily, and the need for such nourishment is accentuated by the presence of cholera. I am also distributing medicines and nourishment to cholera plus famine-stricken people, old and young, in the villages near by."

A letter from Rev. J. S. Stevenson (Parantij) after expressing appreciation of the foods, goes on to say:—"'Oh, Sir, please to eat!' Could anything more vividly depict famine than this request of a little dying girl, lying near the half-eaten body of her dead mother?"

"Reports speak highly of the foods received," writes Rev. E. F. Frease (M.E. Mission, Baroda), "Nestlé's Food, Peek, Frean, and Co.'s Cabin biscuits, Rowntree's cocoa, the Anglo-Swiss condensed milk, Bovril, and Liebig's extract, have been of the greatest help to those in charge of relief works. Their special value lies in building up the emaciated, and for the sick. The foods are a great blessing."

In the course of a letter from Pundita Ramabai (Mukti, Kedgaon), we read: "The nourishing foods for famine sufferers have been most helpful. The condensed milk is most welcome for children. Owing to water famine, our animals are almost starved and do not yield enough milk, but this milk sent by you comes in time to meet a great want. The sick children are happy to get the biscuits."

Miss Phillips (Abu) says: "I had the joy to receive the box of good things for God's suffering poor. Poor starvelings have been made happy to-day by some of the contents. In giving out the breadstuffs there is a great responsibility. We shall most surely give the Bread of Life at the same time. How shall they believe on Him of whom they have never heard? How can they hear unless we tell them? God is sending them in crowds to our very doors, I believe for this purpose."

"During the cholera epidemic I found the foods simply invaluable," writes Rev. R. Henderson (Borsad). "For example, one of our Christian people lost his wife from cholera, and was left with a little girl eight or nine months old. We were able to give him a supply of Nestlé's milk, and the child is thriving. The bread-winners of three Christian families, in which there are a good many children, were cut down by the disease; we were able to supply the bereaved children with nourishing food."

Miss A. E. Henderson (Nagpur, C.P.) writes: "A famine orphan child, suffering from dropsy, is now improving, and, on Frame Food diet, is gaining weight steadily. A weaver's child, aged eighteen months, was in hospital, and developed chicken-pox. He had to be sent home, but on milk and Allenbury's Foods he is progressing very well. A child ill of fever, whose parents were unable to feed it, got Nestlé's Food, and is now well. This last case is typical of many. I have found the biscuits useful in giving immediate relief."

Rev. Dennis Osborne, commenting on the above extracts, says they have been selected, as samples, from 130 letters which were received, and adds:—

"LIVES HAVE BEEN SAVED, the starving nursed back to life, the sick restored, the enfeebled strengthened, and the despairing cheered with new hope. When cholera added its horrors to the ravages of famine, these foods enabled the devoted workers of all missions, as well as Government officers and private individuals, to fight disease and want hand to hand, and to wrest life from the jaws of death. To God be the glory!"

Mrs. Gordon (Mungeli, C.P.) writes: "Of little children we have about sixty, varying in age from a week to two years. Their mothers are widows or deserted wives, and it is to see the little ones lying on their mats so weak and frail. The Nestlé's Food came in beautifully to meet our need, and with it the Swiss milk. I give the biscuits to the older ones. The Government has erected temporary sheds for a hospital, and I have thirty patients, famine-stricken and sick, sent from the relief camp, being too ill to work. I give them the soups, beef-tea, and cocoa."

Advance in the Himalayas.

To reach the people of Thibet-ward Kumaon, the province for which Mr. Jai Bhai and we, his fellow workers in the Indian Christian Realm Mission, have chiefly been working, it was necessary to settle in a place not far from Kalimati, the old home. Kumaon is the mountain province through which the Thibetans and Bhutias pass from village to village when outside of their country for purposes of trade. Great yearly fairs are held by them in two Kumaon centres, Bageshwar and Thul. Between these two gathering places lies a field unreached.

Forty miles southwards, towards the plains, on the northern edge of European society, are the missionaries of the London Missionary Society. But all the regions north of the two fairs are unworked. At Sanyodiar we have a good centre, from which vantage ground to reach the villages that will be thickly around us, each a little world in itself. Our nearest neighbours at Sanyodiar are some native people who invited us to come and live with them. May our coming lead to the salvation of many souls in their district. The station of our fellow worker, Ishwar Das (Mr. Grundy), is some fourteen miles from Sanyodiar.

Industrial pursuits will be followed, together with wide district preaching. Our helpers on the Nepal border, to whom we are twenty miles nearer than before, work among the Nepalese, while here in Northern Kumaon we have around us great numbers of Kumaonese, for whose evangelization we long. Scripture portions could be widely sold here, in Hindi, Nepali, and Thibetan, and if they cost but a farthing each this will give them value enough to secure a reading.

Many would be interested to know that in the troublous times of the Indian Mutiny many Europeans found refuge among the Southern Kumaonese.

Our permanent address is, Indian Christian Realm Mission, Sanyodiar, viâ Almora, North India.

Foreigners in China.

The following letter appeared in The Times last week, and represents a statement agreed upon by the following missionary societies:—Church, London, English Presbyterian, Baptist, Wesleyan, C.E. Zenana, Friends', Methodist New Connexion, United Methodist Free, and the Religious Tract Society, on whose behalf it is signed by Revs. R. Wardlaw Thompson (London Missionary Society), H. E. Fox (Church Misionary Society), and Alexander Connell (English Presbyterian Missionary Society):—

The very serious and violent outbreak of hostility to Christianity and to foreigners in North China, which has called for so remarkable a demonstration of force by the combined Powers of Europe, the United States of America, and Japan, is by no means the first that has happened since the first treaty ports were opened in 1842. It has attracted special attention on account of its extent and the peril to which the Ambassadors of all the Powers and many other Europeans have been exposed, and also on account of the apparent danger that it would spread throughout the Empire.

A careful consideration of the causes which have produced such a state of feeling is of the utmost importance, in order that, if possible, they may be removed, and that the feeling of indignation against the perpetrators of a cruel wrong against thousands of native converts to Christianity, and of the murder of many missionaries and other foreigners, may not degenerate into an un-Christian cry for vengeance.

There seems to be a disposition to make the labours of

for the violent hostility expressed by the Chinese against foreigners. They have been seriously cautioned and counselled by her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. The newspaper and periodical press have pointed out in varying terms their power for mischief, and the perils which constantly threaten all foreigners in consequence of their action. Irresponsible and anonymous officials and others have expressed their opinion that the missionaries are the cause of all the trouble. It has even been urged that the missionaries should be excluded from China in future. Such statements, widely circulated as they have been, cannot fail to have prejudicial influence on the minds of many who read them. How far are they true, and, if true, how far are the missionaries blameworthy?

In regard to the complaint that missionaries by their enterprise and indiscretion involve themselves in difficulty and then appeal to their own Government for protection and vindication, it may, with truth, be said that the cases in which this has happened, at least in Protestant missions, have been so rare and exceptional that no general complaint against missions can fairly be based upon them. The missionary societies have at no time asked for the intervention of gunboats to afford protection to their missionaries or to avenge them when they have fallen victims to mob violence. It must, however, be remembered that while missionaries are pursuing their lawful calling they have an equal right with all others to claim the protection of their Government, and that in many cases failure to protect the missionary involves serious risk of

of the country which has allowed dishonour to its name and people to pass unnoticed.

It is further complained that missionaries have excited against themselves the hostility of the official classes in China by their habit of interfering in the law suits of their converts, the just administration of the law being constantly prevented by the powerful pressure of the foreigner's influence. A distinction ought to be drawn in regard to this complaint between the Roman Catholic and the Protestant missions. The former appear to act on the principle that it is the duty of the Church to act as the protector of its members, and its priests have become conspicuous by their vigorous and general action as advocates of the causes of their converts. The Protestant missionaries, on the other hand, have thought that to adopt this course would not only arouse the hostility of the magistrates, but would be a strong temptation to unworthy persons to profess themselves converts to Christianity for the purpose of obtaining the help of the missionary in law suits. As a rule, therefore, they have steadfastly, and often to their own disadvantage, declined to interfere. Yet the Chinese administration of justice is admittedly so venal and corrupt that it is often exceedingly difficult for the missionaries and see their converts suffering from the grossest injustice without making an effort to help them. We believe it will be found on candid examination that in regard to Protestant missionaries at any rate these popular grounds of complaint have no real justification in fact.

TO STAND PASSIVELY BY

The missionaries are, however, unavoidably connected with these troubles in two ways. Their presence in every part of China is a constant witness to that intrusion of the foreigner on the sacred soil of the Middle Kingdom which is so hateful to the exclusive and conservative spirit of China; and, secondly, their labours have already proved so successful that their Christian teaching and their Christian literature are now known in the remotest parts of the Empire, and are exerting a profound influence on multitudes.

There is no evidence that the persecution of the Christians and the attacks on missionaries, which have been so painful a feature of the present and of many previous outbreaks of fanaticism in China, have any religious basis such as was so prominent a feature in the Indian Mutiny. The Chinese are not conspicuous for their religiousness, and they are quite accustomed to differences of religious opinion, the country being FILLED WITH RELIGIOUS SECTS.

It is a striking evidence that the hostility is not to Christianity in itself, that all the missions have been most successful in the country districts and among the rural population who might be expected to be most conservative and most sensitive about anything that attacked a faith to which they were really attached. The Christians in country places, providing as a rule their own places of worship, and in many cases supporting their own preachers, have usually been able to live at peace with their neighbours, save as trouble has been stirred up by the officials or the literary class. The complaint against Christianity has been mainly that it was a foreign superstition. The Christians have been persecuted because they had adopted a faith which came from foreigners. The missionaries have been the objects of attack because they were foreigners.

China is a huge anachronism. For centuries a fourth of the population of the world have rigidly cut themselves off from all connection with the rest of the race. They have grown strong and haughty in their isolation, and have looked with supercilious contempt on the foreign barbarian. The gates of their exclusiveness were shattered and forced open by cannon to compel them to receive a commerce they did not want, and to share in an intercourse they despised. Little by little the masterful spirit of Western commerce has pushed on to fresh advantages. There is no great market in China in which anti-opium pills are not offered for sale under the title "cure for the foreign poison." Tens of thousands of acres of the richest land in China have in recent years been devoted to the cultivation of the poppy in successful competition with the foreign drug, and tens of thousands of Chinamen have become the

which all true patriots in China regard as the greatest curse of the country. Lately, the nations who have forced their unwelcome presence and their unsought trade on China have been openly indicating in their newspapers their ideas as to the partition of China. Under such circumstances, it seems scarcely necessary to saddle on the Christian missions the responsibility of anti-foreign feeling among the Chinese. The Chinese have nev[illegible]ost their repugnance to foreigners, and they have had good cause for maintaining that repugnance. China cannot shut out the tide of the world's life, however much she may desire to do so. The only hope of the great old-world kingdom retaining its place in modern life will be by such a process of reform and readjustment as will enable it freely to adapt itself to new conditions. Notwithstanding all the folly and cruelty of the present wild revolt against circumstances, the Empire claims the sympathy and patient help of the Christian Powers. The best thing Europe and America can do for China at the present crisis is to give it the Gospel of Jesus Christ more freely.

Crisis and Danger.

A DAY OF PRAYER FOR CHINA.

DEAR SIR,—The enclosed extract from a letter just received from my brother, Mr. D. E. Hoste, in the C.I.M., might be of interest, and stir up prayer for the work in China. He writes from Shanghai on July 18.—Yours faithfully, W. Hoste.

23, Sussex Square, Brighton.

EXTRACT.

We are much in prayer at this time of unprecedented crisis and danger. Human wisdom and power are quite unavailing, as we contemplate our dear fellow labourers in their far inland stations. But God is a present help in trouble. As the years passed by in China it used to grow upon me more and more that in every part of the country there were forces of hatred and dread of foreigners quite sufficient to destroy us at any time, apart from the Divine power restraining them. It only needs a withdrawal of that power for the fire to break out, and as his people wait upon Him, He will not allow it to go one inch beyond his will's ordaining. How much is at stake, not only as to the immediate future of the churches in China, and their leaders, native and foreign, but as to the future of this great land, it is hard for those unacquainted with China, as it really is, to grasp. I wish we could hear of a day of prayer among the churches at home on this behalf. When one is in absolute security oneself, it is not so hard to regard the murder of hundreds of foreigners and thousands of converts as incidents; but whether it is a healthy or desirable condition to be in or not, so to view them, one thing is tremendously sure, that we who believe in prayer need to be at the throne of grace continually praying that Satan's devices may be defeated and God's Kingdom extended. The faith and prayers of God's people are, to a very great extent, the means by which God's purposes are wrought out; and where there is unbelief or sloth in prayer, there will be a corresponding want of fulfilment of God's will. This does not interfere with the other side of truth, of the working of God, in sovereign overruling power, "all things according to his own will."

Bilbao Sailors' Institute.

REFERRING to the useful work being done among seamen at Bilbao, Spain, Mrs. P. Cawood Richardson writes: "Many residents and travellers are glad to avail themselves of the simple, hearty evangelistic services of our Institute. There is morning service at 11, Bible reading at 3.30, and evening service at 7.30. A free tea to seamen wishing to remain for evening service is provided. The Institute fully serves the purpose of a Y.M.C.A. Young English workmen, who are exposed to all the vices and temptations of Continental life, are welcome. We are saving many from attending bull-fights, &c., and seeking to win them for God. We have a debt of £1,200 on the Building Fund. The Local Committee are willing to meet the working expenses, but are anxious to raise the amount of the debt. A young Salvationist who had married only the day before he left England, told me he had had no Christian fellowship during the five weeks he had been out. He would have to await seven weeks before he could save sufficient money for his wife to come out to him. He gave his accumulated 'tenth' for the work, amounting to 17s. 6d."

The treasurer is Mr. J. K. Moffatt, Sailors' Institute, 192, Apartado, Bilbao, Spain.

The Northfield Convention.

Ss. Etruria, August 18, 1900.

IT seems generally acknowledged that this Convention has been one of the best ever held in this famous New England village, which seems destined to become as historic as Herrnhut, in coming years. Certainly there never have been much larger and attentive audiences, and at times the stillness and sense of God's Presence have been very remarkable. Every hotel and building has been full to overflowing, and the neighbourhood of the Marquand and Weston Halls have been dotted by tents, in which families or single individuals have encamped, taking their meals in the public buildings.

In the middle of the Conference the weather became very sultry. It was as necessary to go about under the shade of an umbrella as in India, and sleep seemed almost impossible. Then there was a sudden change, the hills were covered with mist and cloud, and we had deluges of rain, which laid the dust, cooled the air, and added greatly to the comfort of us all. The campers-out were most to be pitied during these days and nights of storm.

There was a natural misgiving in many quarters as to the effect which Mr. Moody's death would have on the Conference, and much prayer was offered by those who realised the importance of the influence exercised by Northfield on the evangelical life of the United States. But such apprehensions have been entirely dissipated, and everyone has become reassured by the admirable chairmanship of Mr. W. R. Moody. It was very interesting, also, on Sunday night to see him drawing in the net, after the evangelistic service, quite in his father's manner. He has sound judgment, and can frame his decisions with the speed and definiteness which were so characteristic of D. L. Moody. On all sides he has won golden opinions, and the whole of the old staff are loyal and enthusiastic in their allegiance.

In the mornings I have been able to pursue a consecutive course of teaching on the deeper truths of the Christian life, such as Cleansing, Consecration, and the Filling of the Holy Spirit, which seem to have been greatly owned of God; and in the evenings Rev. G. Campbell Morgan has delivered a brilliant series of addresses on Christian Ethics as Affecting the Individual, the Family, Commerce, and the State.

The ministers' meetings have been specially important and helpful, and have enabled one to explain more clearly points which needed elucidation, and to bring large numbers into the definite realization of new sources of life and power. There is evidently a great movement among the ministers of the Evangelical Churches in the States; and I am looking forward to the tour which Mr. Moody is arranging for me through the Middle and Southern States during March and April of next year, because it will bring me into such close association with these servants of God. Every year brings a larger number of clergymen and ministers to Northfield, many of them the occupants of distinguished pulpits.

The Sunday services of August 12 were very interesting. In spite of the broken weather the great auditorium was filled in the morning, when I preached on "Plenteous Redemption." In the afternoon, Dr. Barnardo gave the marvellously interesting account of his work from its inception, which deeply moved the people, and in the evening delivered an evangelistic address, to which many responded.

On Tuesday afternoon, a large meeting was held at Mount Hermon, where Mr. Moody's great Seminary for Boys is situated. The object of the gathering was partly to celebrate the new move of keeping this school open all the year round, so that those who desire may prosecute their studies during the summer, and partly to excite a deeper interest in this great institution, which now comes under the superintendence of Mr. W. R. Moody. It is not a small burden which falls on him of having to raise some £16,000 per annum for this. A number of addresses were delivered, of a peculiarly bright and interesting character. Among the speakers were Dr. Cutler (the Senior Master), Mr. Moody, the venerable Dr. Weston, Dr. Barnardo, Mr. Morgan, and myself.

On Thursday afternoon, a memorial service was held, especially commemorating dear Mr. Macgregor and Mr. Moody, who had fallen in the great fight. The way over the grass to Mr. Moody's grave is becoming worn into a trodden path, so many are constantly going there to see it, to pray in its vicinity, or sing hymns. His memory is as fragrant among his neighbours and friends as among those who come from many lands, and distant parts of the United States.

Many things besides might be chronicled—the frequent prayer for missionaries and others in China; the collection of £200 to pay for the seating of the gallery; the closing missionary meeting; speeches by Dr. Weston, Dr. Mabie, and Dr. Erdman; the daily meetings at the Young Men's Camp among the pine-woods; the evening corn-roasting bonfires, when the meetings were finished; the memorable gatherings for morning prayer at the hotel where Mrs. Meyer and I were staying; the many expressions of thankfulness and determination to live a new life; the discovery of great blessing received at previous conventions—all were interesting, and all incidents in the great sum-total of blessing for which the Northfield Convention of 1900 will always be memorable.

THE ROUND TOP MEETINGS.

The meeting on Round Top, on August 6, was devoted to City Missions. Rev. W. T. Elsing, of the De Witt Memorial Church, in Rivington Street, New York, was the speaker. No man is better qualified to speak on city missionary work than this faithful missionary, who began his experience in Chicago as one of Mr. Moody's helpers thirty years ago, and for nearly a score of years has laboured in one of the most difficult fields in the world. But daily contact with poverty and sin has not saddened his life or damped his enthusiasm. A faithful missionary and a lover of men, his message was received as coming from one who speaks with authority.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS.

In view of the fact that year by year an increasing number of young people attend the general conference of Christian workers at Northfield, the management planned this year to devote one session of the conference, each afternoon, especially to the young people. Mr. John Willis Baer was appointed to the oversight of the gatherings. A cordial invitation was extended to young men and women of all denominations to be present, and young people's societies were urged to send delegates for a part or the entire time, or to form parties and come in for the day. It is believed that real good resulted from attendance at these meetings, and from hearing and coming in contact with the speakers of the general conference.

Shanghai.—A much-needed home for the sailors and marines of the different navies on the China station has been opened by Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Felgate, late of the China Inland Mission, and Mr. D. J. Stuckenenbrok, late of the U.S.A. Navy. A reading room, mission hall, restaurant, and dormitories have been provided, meals and beds being at nominal cost. Any papers, magazines, and other suitable reading matter for use in the home will be gratefully accepted. Address: Shaftesbury House, 1, 2, and 3, Seward Road, Shanghai.

"A Call to Prayer."—Under this title Mr. Marcus S. Bergmann has issued a booklet calling for prayer on behalf of Israel. In earnest and pathetic words Mr. Bergmann pleads, with reference to the forthcoming Day of Atonement (Wednesday, October 3): "Whilst our Jewish brethren all over the world are clad in their grave-clothes, standing bare-footed, fasting and weeping in their synagogues on account of their sins, without a sacrifice and without a Mediator, standing afar off indulging in fruitless lamentations, will not the disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ, who, having boldness to enter into the holy of holies by the precious blood of Christ, draw nigh with one accord, and plead for these abject ones at the Throne of Grace?" Mr. Bergmann's address is: 222, Burdett Road, London, E.

Master Spade and Miss Pail.

A SEASIDE FABLE FOR THE YOUNGSTERS.

I AM only six months old, yet fully grown. My name is S-P-A-D-E, Spade—Master Spade. My sister, Miss Pail, is two weeks younger than I am. She and I never quarrel. I can do all sorts of things that she cannot, and vice versâ. We were born in Birmingham, but our home until a few days ago has been in Hastings, in a shop near the sea, outside which she and I hung on a string for many weeks. At night we slept under the counter.

It was a great moment for us when a lady and her little boy came into the shop and asked for a spade and pail. I trembled with expectation, while my sister blushed violently. Her cheeks, however, are always rosy.

"Which would you like, Berty?" said the lady.

"This one and the red pail," said he, taking hold of us.

"That will be one shilling and sixpence, please," said the proprietor, and Berty, capering with glee, bounded with us rolled in paper to the Parade. We were very happy; our new owner, Berty, we were sure was going to be a good master.

"These are splendid, mamma, I shall have a lot of fun with them," said he, unwrapping us on the nursery table that evening.

The next morning our master took us to the beach, where we saw many other spades and pails, and several playmates of Berty's. Three or four of them vigorously helped him to build a castle. Miss Pail and I did a deal of work. Our master would dig with me, then load up my sister with sand, and having obtained a bucketful, would place the little mound top downwards as a foundation for the walls, the surface of which I would afterwards smooth and make regular. He also used me to dig a splendid trench as a moat to surround the building.

A magnificent fortress it was to be! There were thick outside walls, enclosing a courtyard, a kitchen, a banqueting hall, a reception room, a chapel, a keep and stairs. There were also a round tower with peepholes, windows and battlements crowning the roof. Surrounding all was a thick rampart with deep bastions.

In the afternoon we continued our work. We had seen several forts being built at the same time as ours, but none so large nor so strong.

Berty's mamma came down just as we were finishing, and calling them very industrious children, she stuck a small flag in the top of the tower which floated proudly over the whole. We, too, considered Berty and his friends most clever, and thought that hour the happiest in our short lives.

It was quite twice as big as any castle on the sands there, and made a famous fortress.

We could hardly sleep for excitement that night; my sister said to me, "It must be larger and stronger than Windsor Castle where the Queen lives." "I cannot tell that" I replied, "but I should say it would last a hundred years." "I should think it will stand for ever," rejoined she.

The following day, as Berty took us to the sands, we thought what a commotion people would make when they discovered him to be the architect of so splendid a building. Visitors would come for miles to see the "Fort;" it would be the talk of the country. We pictured our young master with us in his hand, acknowledging the congratulations of hundreds of his admirers. We felt we had something exceptional to be proud of.

Approaching the well-known spot we looked for the paper flag waving gaily over the citadel. It was not to be seen, nor were any of the castles that reared their heads so triumphantly the day before. Where were they? At the exact place where we had worked so long and so hard, we discovered only a shapeless rise in the sand, almost imperceptible, and a tiny streak where I had dug the deep moat.

"Mamma," said Berty, "the tide has ruined the whole of our fort in one night." "Ah, my boy," returned his mother, "that is but the result of the very best of our undertakings whose foundation is only shifting sand. You and I must be thorough in all we do."

My little sister was sobbing bitterly, and I had to comfort her by saying how sorry I was to have misled her about the fort standing for 100 years. She and I concluded that to build really properly was a far more serious business than we thought. E. O. S.

An Infant's Hymn.

Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear,
Listen to an infant's prayer;
Turn not Thou thy face away—
Listen, Saviour, while I pray.

Thou dost live in glory bright,
Where there never can be night,
Where the holy angels dwell,
Where their holy praises swell.

I would learn to praise Thee, too,
Though my words be very few;
For I read in olden days
Infant voices lisped thy praise.

Make me fit with Thee to live,
All my naughtiness forgive;
Gentle Jesus, Thou didst die
For thy lambs on Calvary.

Many love me, but thy love
Rises higher far above;
On thy loving Name I call,
Make me love Thee best of all.

Shouldst Thou lengthen out my days,
May I walk in wisdom's ways;
And whene'er my days shall end,
Gentle Jesus, be my Friend.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 2.

SEEK SOULS (Luke xv. 1-10).

THE Pharisees could not understand why Jesus should prefer the company of publicans and sinners to their own; they were surprised at his treatment of these abandoned characters. It was necessary, therefore, that He should give reasons for his familiarity with such, which He did in the three inimitable parables of this chapter. The shepherd must be where the lost sheep is; the woman will stoop to the floor on which the lost coin has rolled; the father will leave his home and go forth a great way off to greet his wandering child. It was right therefore, that Jesus the Saviour should be in the midst of those who required Him so absolutely. He sought the proximity of publicans and sinners not because there was any affinity between his character and theirs, but because He desired to bring them back from the far country into which they had wandered, to the liberty and joy of the children of God.

The silly sheep heedlessly nibbles at the grass which lies immediately before it, and so crops its way from spot to spot, until it has wandered a great distance from the shepherd, and the rest of the flock. It appears quite happy; it has no thought of the peril it has incurred; it does not realize that any moment it may fall a victim to the wolf. Is this a picture of your life? Have you lived only for personal gratification, and so strayed on in thoughtlessness and unconsciousness of danger, drifting into dangers which threaten to destroy you? Then, remember, that though you care not for yourself your case is stirring the deepest solicitude in the heart of Christ; He cannot rest content. It has been well said that it is not the son who wanders from the mother's home, but the mother, whose hair turns grey with slow anguish as she marks the gulf which is yawning between him and purity and love. Probably you will never find your way back; no wanderer is so absolutely stupid as the sheep; but Christ is on your track, and He will not relinquish his quest until He has come where you are, extricated you from the rocks down which you have fallen, and the thorns in which you are entangled, and has undertaken to bring you back to the enjoyment of what you were in happier, better days.

The lost coin lies unused, tarnished, and perhaps defaced, amidst the dust of the corner, or in the chink of the floor. It bears the image and superscription of the sovereign, which were once clear cut by the mint. Its owner, in the earnestness of her search, sweeps out every dusty corner, shakes every article of clothing, searches drawers, lifts heavy boxes, ransacks her room; with lighted lamp she explores every possible hiding-place, and does not relinquish her search till she finds the piece she had lost. How aptly that lost coin represents the soul, made in the image of God, lying amid the dust of neglect. It may be it is yourself. The one hope for the lost coin is that the owner's heart can never be at rest until it rejoins its companions; and the one hope for you is the anxiety which fills the heart of God, and which will cause Him to leave no stone unturned that He may win you back. There is disturbance and removal on all hands; the house of your life is upset in every part for no other reason than that you should be recovered.

God's joy, bringing us home and recovering us to put us again in circulation, is greater than even ours is at our recovery; the gladness which thrills the heart of the restored backslider is infinitely less than his whose property we are, and who has made us his own by creation, redemption, and Fatherly interest. His joy is too great to be self-contained, He bids unfallen angels rejoice with Him. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

The official report of the Convention will shortly be published, entitled "Advance Endeavour!" Price 2s. 6d.

* * *

The Christian Endeavourers of Sheffield opened in March last a model lodging-house for the accommodation of twenty-five men, where Christian influence could be brought to bear upon them. Gospel services are held on Sunday afternoons and Wednesday evenings. The beds have been well let from the beginning. Derby Endeavourers having visited this Home, are about to start one on similar lines in their own town.

* * *

The members of the Society in the Presbyterian Church in Manilla have now organized a correspondence branch, with the object of reaching Christian Endeavourers who are scattered over the Philippine Islands in isolated places. Monthly letters will be sent out by the Society, and also magazines and papers, names being placed on a correspondence roll of the Society, all such members being asked to send a message to the monthly consecration meeting.

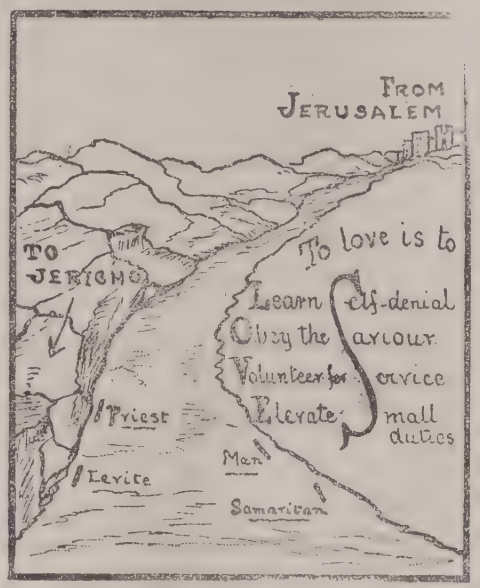
The Good Samaritan: Luke x. 25-37.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Love thy neighbour as thyself" (Lev. xix. 18.)

INTRODUCTION.

THE story of the Good Samaritan being kind to the poor stranger can plainly be seen to represent the Lord Jesus; while the priest and the Levite too often represent people who have no pity on those who are deeply wounded by sin, or are too selfish to hold out a helping hand to a poorer neighbour.



Key to Blackboard Plan.—A road from Jerusalem to Jericho. Four little marks show position of the four people mentioned, and the words at the side tell what "love" means.

Take the golden text, and learn how to love by spelling "love."

1.—LEARN SELF-DENIAL.

Love of self must go if love to neighbour is practised. Love means self-denial when it is genuine—real. (31, 32) Priest and Levite thought only of self (33); the Samaritan did not think of self at all; he went out of his way to do the kind act; he stopped on his journey, although his time was as precious to him as the priest and Levite's was to them; (34) he denied himself a ride, and walked all the way that the sick man might rest; (35) he gave of his little store of money willingly and promised more. He was a kind man, who loved his neighbour and practised self-denial. A type of Christ (Phil. ii. 5-8).

2.—OBEY THE SAVIOUR.

To love is to obey, and to obey Jesus is to ask "What would Jesus do?" when there comes a question of helping others; after studying this lesson, Christ says to each one of us, "Obey Me, and go and do thou likewise (37). (John xiii. 35; Rom. xii. 10; xiii. 10; Gal. v. 13; 1 Thess. iv. 9; 1 John iv. 7, &c.)

3.—VOLUNTEER FOR SERVICE.

Love longs to serve, and how can we show our love better than by living out "Inasmuch" (Matt. xxv. 40)? Christ wants volunteers for his service; He never forces anyone to do deeds of kindness for his sake; love must prompt them, must come with a free-will (33). The Samaritan acted without any persuasion or telling, therefore, whether you give money, or work for Christ's cause, first see that you love Him (Ex. xxxv. 5, 21; xxii. 29; Lev. xxii. 29).

4.—ELEVATE SMALL DUTIES.

To make everyday duties, however small, rise in value by doing them in a Christ-like spirit and for the glory of God. See what little things the Samaritan did. He bound up the man's wounds. He lifted him tenderly on to the back of his animal. He saw him safe to a place of shelter. He paid a few pence towards his keep. The world knew nothing of it; no flags were waved for his honour; but he had made small actions God-like, and they were registered in heaven.

"The trivial round, the common task,
Will furnish all we ought to ask;
Room to deny ourselves, a road
To lead us daily nearer God."

(1 Cor. x. 31; Col. iii. 17-23; 1 Pet. iv. 11.)

The Slum Worker's Plea.

(With apologies to Mr. Rudyard Kipling.)

I.

When you've preached predestination with a satisfaction keen—
When you've thundered forth the doctrine and the law,
Will you kindly drop a penny in my little tambourine
To save the poorest outcasts at your door?
They're a worthless class of people, stamped with every vice and crime,
But you and I must take them as we find them;
From the brothel and the gutter, they are covered o'er with slime,
And they've left all Christianity behind them!
Old men, young men, women and girls as well,
Thousands of them reckless—bitter with want and cold—
Paying the wage of sin—all of them bound for hell—
Will you broaden your Gospel teaching and let them into the fold?

II.

When you've reared your stately churches where you do not count the cost!
When you've preached your Gospel tidings to the rich;
Will you kindly save a penny for the penniless and lost,
For the drunkards lying helpless in the ditch?
They have long ago forgotten all the Gospel that you preach;
They are helpless in the bondage of their sin—
Though they're drifting far to seaward almost beyond our reach
There may be yet a chance to bring them in.
Old men, young men, women and girls as well,
Baffled and beaten at every turn—living as best they can;
Scarcely a helping hand outstretched—all of them bound for hell—
Is this the Gospel He preached of old, that wonderful Son of Man?

III.

When you've donned your costly vestments, when you've raised your altars grand,
When your cross of gold with jewels leads the way;
Will you kindly pause a moment, then lend a helping hand
To save these hapless people gone astray?
They are far from all your worship with their litanies profane,
The chants they sing are those of grim despair,
And their creed is interwoven with a world of vice and pain—
But are they quite beyond our thought and care?
Young men, old men, women and girls as well,
Brought to grief by their folly, lying low in their shame;
Come with me to their brothels, look and see where they dwell—
Can you spare from your ease and comfort a cup or two in his name?

IV.

When you've satisfied your conscience with a large subscription to
Your organized societies in charity's sweet name;
Will you kindly save a trifle for the undeserving, too,
Who are living open lives of vice and shame?
You may think their case is hopeless, that they're quite beyond recall,
That they scarce are worthy of your pence or prayer—
Shall we leave them in their sin, and let them in the gutter fall?
Driving headlong in their course to God knows where!
Old men, young men, women and girls as well,
Thronging the streets by night, flaunting their vice in your face—
How shall we answer for them? What shall the story tell
When you and I have gone with them, to our final resting-place?

ARTHUR D. F. RANDOLPH.

Glasgow Evangelistic Association.

TO the influence of D. L. Moody, the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association owes its initiation. Commencing with the noon prayer meeting, the Association has branched out continuously into larger undertakings and wider spheres. Last year special prominence was, of course, given to the department of evangelization in the memorable campaign, undertaken by the Association in combination with Presbyterian Churches and other Evangelical communions.

In the annual report recently issued, the entire field of operations is defined in sections —preparation, evangelization, amelioration, and fresh air; and keeping in view the two-fold purpose of Christ's life-work—the glory of God and the good of man—the Association has one object before it—to "seek and save."

At the Tent Hall the work is carried on every day in the week throughout the year.

THE ROUND OF DUTIES

commences at five o'clock on Sabbath morning preparing for the breakfast at seven, for about a thousand men and women. Then follows the forenoon meeting, and later the hall is filled to its utmost capacity for the poor children's Sabbath dinner. The latter has an average attendance of 1,800. The principal inducement to them probably is the mug of soup and slice of bread which are distributed at the close of the address. The service is rendered bright and hearty, plenty of singing, instrumental music, and a free use of the blackboard for object-lessons. The Children's Sabbath Dinner is also the source from which have grown various agencies.

One of the results of Mr. Moody's second visit to Glasgow was the organization of a Mizpah Band. This commenced with a membership of 194, and in less than six months the numbers had increased to 950. It is now one of the most flourishing branches of the Association. The Mizpah Band Rescue Wing is an interesting auxiliary. The members meet at eleven o'clock every Saturday night, separate after a season of prayer, each working in the direction of his own home, and endeavouring to get into touch with men on the streets under the influence of liquor, with the purpose of conveying them home. This is often a painful duty, and the workers are sometimes prevented from getting away until far into the Sabbath morning. Another call is generally arranged, and advantage is taken of this visit to take the Gospel into the home.

The Fresh Air Fortnight Scheme, in an increasingly marked degree, earns the sympathy and goodwill of the public. It was commenced in 1885 by the despatch of thirty-two children for a fortnight in the country, and altogether over have enjoyed periods of holiday at the seaside or in the country. Of the Homes for Destitute Children and the Weary Workers' Rest, a gratifying report is given. The need for these institutions is essentially one that continues to gather force and significance, and it is pleasing to learn that this department has not suffered through lack of support. The Poor Children's Day Refuges supply, in a degree, the place of parent and home, when sickness, want of work, or some other cause has brought a family into temporary distress. Food and shelter are provided during the winter months for destitute children.

Copies of the amply-illustrated report, with full particulars of the Association may be obtained from the hon. secretaries, Messrs. J. W. Arthur and J. R. Miller, Bible Training Institute Buildings, 64, Bothwell Street, Glasgow.

Ragged School Union.—Of the numerous agencies maintained by the Ragged School Union, the Holiday Homes at this season of the year claim special attention. These are at Bognor, Windsor, Loughton, East Grinstead, and Brenchley. During last year no fewer than 6,648 children were sent out of London for a fortnight's holiday. The secretary of the Union is Mr. John Kirk, 32, John Street, Bedford Row, London, W.C.

Scottish Notes.

WITHOUT any special missions or other efforts, the interest in the services at St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow, has been unusually well maintained during the present summer. Even in July the audiences on most of the evenings almost maintained their winter level.

An earnest though unsuccessful effort was made to extend the Sunday Closing clause in the proposed Glasgow Police Bill, by the addition of the words "making and manufacturing" to "vending." The committee in charge of the matter divided equally on the question, but the proposal was rejected by the casting vote of the chairman.

The closing fortnightly mission for the season in the Mizpah Gospel Tent, pitched at Cranstonhill, Glasgow, opened last Sabbath evening (26th inst.), the evangelist in charge for these weeks being Mr. Charles G. Roger, of the Evangelization Society. On Sabbath, September 9, work will be resumed for the winter in the Mizpah Hall, Pitt Street.

Speaking at Gargunnock (Stirlingshire) a few days ago, the Moderator of the Church of Scotland, Rev. Dr. Norman Macleod, Inverness, called earnest attention to the fact that, from about six hundred parishes in Scotland no contributions whatever are sent in to the foreign mission funds of the church. He declined to believe that there could be any adequate reason for not doing at least something in every case for the carrying of the Gospel to the heathen.

Mr. Quarrier has announced Wednesday, September 5, as the date for the biennial thanksgiving services in connection with the Orphan Homes of Scotland, at Bridge of Weir. The work at the house and grounds of the second portion of the Consumptive Sanitoria is being pushed forward in order that it may be formally opened on that occasion, when the Hon. Lord Provost Chisholm, of Glasgow, hopes to preside. The number of consumptive patients who can be received will then be increased from twenty-six to eighty, a boon which will be highly appreciated by many of the poor whose applications have till now been regretfully declined.

A newspaper correspondent calls attention to the reckless manner in which the feelings of the inhabitants of Nether Lochaber have been recently outraged by visitors who spend the Sabbath in fishing. Reverence for the Sabbath has in the past been one of the strongest characteristics of the district; and it is believed that the persons referred to are not only breaking the moral law, but are doing so without the permits from local proprietors requisite for fishing at any time. When will Christian people combine to take a stand against the killing for "pleasure"—under the denomination of "sport"—of any living creature into which God has put the breath of life?

The Motherwell Y.M.C.A. is to be congratulated on the formal opening—fixed to take place tomorrow, Friday—of their handsome new Institute. A daily newspaper describes the building as quite an imposing one, which will form an important addition to the structures upon the main street of the town. The Right Hon Lord Kinnard, as president of the Scottish National Council, is expected to perform the opening ceremony, with Mr. John Colville, M.P., in the chair. Among other speakers who are expected are Rev. John McNeill, Rev. D. Scott, Mr. J. Edgar Baker (English National Council), Mr. James Sinclair (Scottish Council), Provost Fraser, and ex-Bailie Findlay.

The annual service at Carlops, Midlothian, in memory of the Covenanters, was held on Sabbath evening of last week in the Free Church. It had been intended to hold it, as usual, in the open air at Harbour Craig, a favourite resort of the faithful in Covenanting times, but the character of the weather necessitated an adjournment to the church, where there was a good audience. Rev. George W. Taylor (Carlops) presided, and addresses were given by Rev. Adam Renwick (Ellsridgehill) and Mr. W. M. Ramsay (Portobello). Rev. Duncan Sillars (Edinburgh) also took part in the service. A choir from Roslin led the praise, and at the close a collection was taken for the benefit of the aged and infirm persons of the neighbourhood.

The Miners of Durham, weary of waiting for any Government scheme for providing pensions for the aged poor, organized a place which, by the formation of a permanent Relief Fund, secures the payment of a regular weekly allowance to all miners who, in consequence of accidents or old age, are incapacitated. In addition, they have purchased a deserted village and a chapel, and 100 houses in another locality, as free homes. The experiment having proved successful, it is already being followed in Northumberland, and more recently Earl Grey has given a large piece of land upon which to build such homes.

Irish Notes.

DURING the past five weeks, most successful open-air temperance meetings have been held at Ligoneil, Co. Antrim, by Rev. William Alford, Methodist minister, and others. As many as 1,200 persons have been present at a meeting, and already 200 persons have signed the pledge. The meetings are still in progress.

Rev. A. J. Pike has resigned the parish of Bailieborough in order that he may undertake the secretaryship of the Church Missionary Society in Ulster. Mr. Pike, who has had considerable experience of missionary work at Uganda, is an impressive speaker, and altogether the prospects of the Church Missionary Society are just now very bright in Belfast and in the north of Ireland.

Rev. Wm. Meara, Irish Methodist Missionary, who went out about a year ago to Barberton, Transvaal, but who on the outbreak of hostilities was obliged to vacate the station and return to Natal, where for the past seven months he has laboured with great acceptance among the soldiers at East London, is now, as soon as the way opens, about to return to Barberton. He has been the recipient of various gifts from his friends, both military and civil, in East London, and he says that the period he spent in that town has been the most memorable and useful of his whole life.

The report of the Registrar-General on Criminal Statistics in Ireland in 1899 just issued, is on the whole favourable, and shows that the number of indictable offences for that year fell below the number for the previous year by 8·5 per cent., and by 3·4 per cent. below that for the year 1897, while the rate represented by such crimes was only about two per thousand on the estimated population. The number of non-indictable offences was also somewhat less than in 1898. The chief increases in non-indictable offences were in cases of drunkenness, and it is certain if it were not for drunkenness there would be very little crime in Ireland at present.

The Wickliffe Preachers.

THE second visit to Selby of the Kensit Wickliffe preachers was the occasion of much disturbance in the town. A meeting was arranged to take place in the open air at the Cross, which, however, at the appointed time was found to be in the possession of a hostile force.

Mr. Kensit, jun., and his party made their way to the Cross, but no sooner had one of the preachers commenced to speak, than a number of Irishmen created great interruption. Encouraged by sympathizers, Mr. Kensit, jun., proceeded to speak. He delivered a message from Mr. Kensit, sen., which expressed regret that it had been found impossible to secure a hall for the meeting, and urged all friends to rally round the Wickliffe preacher. Mr. Kensit, jun., continued to speak, but the uproar became more intense, and attempts were being made incessantly to force the preachers to conclude. The mob at length carried their point. The occupants could hold their own no longer. In the course of the attack which followed, one of the Kensit band was somewhat seriously injured.

On the following evening a second but unsuccessful attempt to hold a meeting was made, and the rowdyism of the previous night was renewed by a crowd numbering between 3,000 and 4,000 persons. On reaching the Cross the police made an opening for the preachers. This step was opposed by the Irish party, and further disturbance ensued. Eventually a space was again cleared for the speakers, but it was found impossible to hold the meeting, and, acting on the advice of the police superintendent, the preachers withdrew to their lodgings, escorted by the constables. A number of the chief sympathizers with Mr. Kensit assembled in the Congregational schoolroom to discuss what steps should be taken to secure for the preachers a fair hearing and protection from Romanist intolerance.

Commenting upon the disorderly proceedings at the Cross, the Selby Times says: "We contend that it is simply intolerable that a number of Irishmen and Irish women should be able practically to gag the mouths of all else. This question concerns every man who values freedom of thought and speech. To all appearance Mr. Kensit and his preachers were defeated, but undoubtedly they secured a moral victory. They gained the sympathy, not only of the Nonconformists, but also of many Churchmen in the town. A spirit of inquiry has been aroused, and Churchmen and Dissenters alike are asking, 'Are these things so?'"

The Wickliffe Preachers, it will be remembered, not only denounce priestly errors, but also preach the Gospel. Mr. Kensit's address is 18, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

Evangelization in Ireland.

TO all who have at heart the highest interests of their fellow-subjects in the Sister Isle, tidings from the workers of the Irish Evangelization Society cannot fail to be of the deepest significance. The annual report, recently issued, furnishes details of many instances how the labours of the Society's agents have been crowned with success. Over 1,900 meetings were held during the year, being an increase of nearly 250 on those of 1898. Missions were held in 111 centres, and although the evangelists have occasionally to bear hardness for the Master's cause, and the Roman Catholics are no less defiant in their opposition to the movement, there is in this service of the Gospel. From Bantry, County Cork, one of the evangelists writes: "The Roman Catholics still treat us with stones. Passing the corner of an old lane a huge one was thrown at my head. We have joys, too. Two of the family where I am staying got blessedly saved, and the mother is also in the Kingdom."

Douglas, a suburb of the city of Cork, was visited for the first time by the Society in September, and a hall erected. A mission of six weeks' duration was held without opposition and with continued blessing. The gatherings here and elsewhere have given evidence of and an earnest desire on the part of the inhabitants to learn and accept the simple Truth of the Gospel of Christ. The evangelists enjoy the co-operation of clergy and ministers, who testify to the faithful witnessing for Christ and its far-reaching influence in their spheres of labour. Often in localities the missions are followed by the springing up on all sides of meetings conducted by converts themselves.

The committee are naturally unwilling that the operations of the Society should be curtailed, and are anxious that its development should be more extensive than in the past. The secretary is Mr. James Barton, Farndreg, Dundalk.

Aldersgate Noon Meeting.

AT the meeting on Monday last at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate Street, the friends were informed that Mr. Peter Bilhorn, of Chicago, had presented the meeting with a small organ for daily use. The address was given by Rev. Charles Herald, who prefaced his remarks with some references to Mr. Bilhorn's career and usefulness in America. The subject of Mr. Herald's address was, "The Christian as an Ambassador" (2 Cor. v.). Every Christian should be that, for each has the knowledge of God, and an assurance of reconciliation with Him. Each Christian, again, the same chapter tells us, has a sense of responsibility in view of an account to be rendered and each has the experience of the new birth—"all things have become new."

References to recent Christian effort were made by Mr. Heley, of Sandy, Beds, who detailed encouraging experiences among the villages of Oxfordshire and Buckinghamshire, where a spirit of earnest inquiry is abroad.

Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland. —The past year has been one of special difficulty to colporteurs in Ireland as elsewhere. The reading of the public has been directed into unusual channels, and in many instances Bibles and books could not be bought, the money being reserved for newspapers. The labours of this Society's agents, however, have been attended with encouraging results, and in the circulation and reception of the Word of God, the evangelization of Ireland, both Roman Catholic and Protestant, has been advanced. Some 22,000 families were visited, chiefly in widely-scattered districts, where opportunities were secured for the reading of Scripture, conversation, and prayer. The agents refer with joy to the easy access to the hearts and homes of the people, and speak with hope and confidence for the future of the Society's work in Ireland. The secretary is Rev. William Salmond, Loanend Manse, Temple-patrick.

"Hackneyed Terms" in Preaching.

DEAR SIR,—With reference to a paragraph in the current number of THE CHRISTIAN respecting the use of "hackneyed terms" in Gospel preaching, I beg to say that as an open-air worker of some little experience I regretfully endorse the statement.

"The Preacher sought out acceptable words," but of many to-day it may be said as of the prophets of old, they "steal my words, every man from his neighbour." (Jer. xxiii. 30).

The causes of this are:—I. Lack of Scripture study. II. Inattention to reading. III. Lack of observation. These suggest their own remedies. Scripture should be studied, not merely memorized. Works of travel, scientific and other text books, and biography will furnish plenty of material which the preacher can turn to practical account. Life in its many phases, as we see it day by day, will supply illustrations, topics, and pointed facts.

There are two books which I would like to be able to put into the hands of every preacher. The Open-Air Preacher's Handbook, by the late Gawin Kirkham; and The Gospel and its Ministry, by Dr. Anderson. The chapters on "Grace" and "The Cross" in the latter work are worth their weight in gold to him who seeks to present the Gospel in all its glorious fulness, freed from borrowed phraseology and "hackneyed terms."—Heartily yours, JOHN P. LEWIS.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE present is a timely occasion on which to manifest sympathetic interest with the Y.M.C.A. undertaking in Paris. The Extension Scheme is the outcome of much deliberation on the part of those who have it on their hearts to promote the highest interests of young men residing in Paris. The needs and possibilities of the movement are manifold, and can only be adequately realized by those in touch with the work of the Association in the French capital. The expenditure incurred by launching this scheme is, of course, considerable. Some £620 has been contributed towards the outlay. The address of the Association is 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris.

The National Council of Young Men's Christian Associations has received the award of the Grand Prix in Class 108, for its exhibit in the Social Science Department of the Paris Exposition. The exhibit embodies representations of the four-fold work of the Associations—spiritual, educational, social, and physical—together with a bust of the founder, the group of delegates to the Jubilee Conference of 1894, taken on the east front of Windsor Castle, and pictures of some of the best known Y.M.C.A. buildings in this and other lands.

Personalia.

Mr. CHARLES INGLIS, who has been preaching in Lucerne, is now holding missions in connection with the London Tent Campaign.

The tenantry and neighbours of the Kinnaird family gathered together at Rossie Priory, N.B., on Tuesday of last week, on the invitation of Lord and Lady KINNAIRD to join with them in celebrating their silver wedding, and also the coming of age of their son, the Master of Kinnaird.

Dr. JOHN ROBERTSON, of the City Temple, Glasgow, will commence his six-months' ministry at the East London Tabernacle, Burdett Road, E., on Sunday next. A member of the church writes: "We are prayerfully anticipating the visit, in the hope that God may be pleased to use Dr. Robertson for reviving and quickening believers, and bringing many to Himself."

Miss BEATRICE HURDITCH, writing from Panchgani, India, says: "I have been confined to my room for a week, suffering from fever and tonsilitis. The ulcers extended to the chest, but with careful treatment they are gradually disappearing. My nerves are quite unstrung, which I have never had before in my life, and I feel quite an invalid. Pray much for me."

Gifts of cast-off Clothing, Boots, &c., capable of being adapted to the needs of men, women, and children, attending the Friends' Mission Institute, 488a, Commercial Road, London, E., are urgently needed. Hospital letters will also be acceptable. Communications may be addressed to the secretary, Mr. Jno. Reeves, at the Institute.

Mr. William Forbes, 71, Tollington Road, N., writes, in connection with the work among theatrical women, "I have several applications for letters for Convalescent Homes. Some suffered in health during their recent trying experience in Paris, where so many were suddenly stranded in that city. I shall be glad if some readers will help in this matter."

About Books.

A BOOK FOR DOUBTERS.

IN A FAITH FOR TO-DAY, Rev. R. J. Campbell, B.A., offers "Suggestions Towards a System of Christian Belief." (6s. James Clarke & Co.) Originating in a series of sermons preached in Union Church, Brighton, these chapters discuss in a reverent and helpful manner great questions of theology and life, faith and practice. Beginning with "The Idea of Religion," the author proceeds to deal with sublime questions as they relate to God and Christ, man and moral freedom, sin and redemption. A study entitled "The Historical Jesus" is calculated to minister light and comfort to many. The book is designed to guide the perplexed, and to assist such as are distressed by doubts regarding the Christian faith. Hence in its place "The Problem of Pain" is considered; there are also chapters on the Holy Spirit, Prayer, and the Hope of Immortality.

Mr. Campbell comes after many who have endeavoured to commend the Gospel to men and women who, in their thought and inquiry, have not arrived at definite conclusions regarding God and themselves, or found rest and peace in the Lord Jesus Christ. But we doubt if there is any work of similar aim which is so fresh and up-to-date as this, which is obviously the outcome of a serious and earnest purpose on the part of its accomplished author.

A neatly designed book of poems and fragments (some of which have appeared in periodicals) by Laura L. McL. Backler, is published under the title of Voices of Christian Love and War. Readers cannot fail to be inspired to higher thinking and nobler living, through these timely messages of faith, hope, and spiritual consolation and promise. (The Author, "Norland," Champion Park, Denmark Hill, S.E.)

Sunday Afternoons for the Children, by E. Frances Soule, is appropriately designated on the title page as "A Mother Book." It suggests simple and acceptable methods of employing young minds and fingers on Sunday afternoons, combining kindergarten with other principles of juvenile education. A collection of "Hymns and Poems for the Little Ones" is also given, some familiar, some not. (75 cents. Fords, Howard, & Hulbert, New York.)

The Life of Gerhard Tersteegen, with Selections from his Writings, by H. E. Govan, M.A. (3s. 6d. Nisbet), is a welcome work. Tersteegen was a noble soul; his life was beautiful, and his spiritual teaching is as much required by Christians to-day as by those of the eighteenth century. Though there is no need to eulogize the subject of this memoir, it is a great pleasure to commend Mr. Govan's work. The available material regarding the sainted Hymn Writer, Evangelist, and Guide of Souls, has been so manipulated as to make this a very readable book, while the pages describe with abundant sympathy a ministry which was greatly blessed, and the fragrance of which lives on to-day to the greater glory of God.

From the Fight, by Amy Wilson-Carmichael (C.E.Z. "Keswick" missionary, India), is a beautiful book, made up of letters and other literary items. It is, in fact, a patchwork of facts and impressions from the pen of one who for some years has laboured with signal devotion among the women of India. The contents may well be judged from the chapter headings—Indoors, Out of Doors, Caste and Custom, Sorrow and Suffering, Phases of Thought. There are admirably finished illustrations (from drawings by F. A. Baker), and choice excerpts from the writings of native poets. Every page touches the heart; and we trust many will read, and yield to, this appeal for prayerful sympathy and practical effort in the interest of the sorrowing millions of India's women. What is with reason styled "A Unique Book," has been issued by E. H. Marsom, 17, Cathedral Yard, Exeter, with the title, My Note-Book—a production in which Bible students and Christian workers may well show a practical interest. Here we have, first, 900 pages of finely-ruled paper, numbered throughout, and apportioned for the various books of the Bible; and then 100 pages of similar paper, lettered A to Z, in which to instal an index of the topics recorded or passages illustrated in the body of the book. Neatly bound in limp leather, with round corners and red edges, this handy volume will greatly facilitate a methodical storing-up of the results of Scripture study. Rev. George Soltau, in a suggestive preface, points out that such a book as this may not only supplement marginal annotation, but continue to be of service when individual Bibles have to be laid aside, worn out from age. The student who adopts this Note-Book will find it comparatively easy to command and use the contents of a Biblical Index of his own compilation. (Price 10s.)

Evangelistic.

1900 London Tent Campaign.

At the Lavender Hill Tent there were scenes of great rejoicings in the three services conducted by Messrs. Weaver and Weeden. At the evening service a distinct climax was reached, when probably from 3,000 to 4,000 people listened for one hour to the Gospel message, at the close of which an invitation was given for those desiring salvation to stand upon their feet. In all parts of the Tent men and women arose, and afterwards were dealt with personally, many of whom entered into the joys of forgiveness. Among them, three brothers sitting together, rose to their feet, and declared themselves on the Lord's side. A husband and wife and daughter also came out decidedly for Christ. In the after-meeting those who had been converted in the Mission held on the same spot last year were invited to come to the platform, when scores filed down the aisles and, amidst demonstrations of thanksgiving, gave their testimony, not only to the saving power but the keeping power of God. Dr. Munhall's addresses during the week were much blessed.

Since the Notting Hill mission opened, on August 12, Mr. J. S. Brunning has been the evangelist, and much blessing has been the result of his labours. Twenty-seven meetings have been conducted, seven of which were for the young. At one of these, on Tuesday last week, the attendance exceeded 800. The local friends have conducted this work; and, on account of the promising character of the same, it has been decided to continue them throughout the mission. The evening meetings have also been well attended. Each Sunday night the tent has been overcrowded, and hundreds listening outside. At a meeting on Friday a testimony meeting was held, and for two hours these testimonies continued. The missioner's heart must have been gladdened by the tidings from so many lips of the power there is yet in the Old Gospel.

The meetings at the Willesden Green Tent are marked with deep earnestness. It is encouraging to the workers in the tents to hear of blessing from the mission reaching distant parts. News comes to us from many places of people converted in the tents going to their homes in the provinces and taking their stand for Christ.

At the close of the service on Sunday afternoon at Hammersmith a man came and told us he had been converted at one of the meetings in the early part of the week, and told his story. He had run away from his wife and family in America, they being Christians, as he felt they were too good for him. He had been leading a bad life, and sleeping out in the parks several weeks. But now the Lord had saved him, he had written telling his wife what the Lord had done for him, and that as soon as he had got a little money he would sail back to his home. Meetings growing with interest all the week, which reached the climax after the meeting on Sunday, when the large tent was crowded, and after Mr. Van de Venter's powerful address on "Eternity," an invitation was given to those who desired to find Christ, from forty to fifty people all over the tent arose and came forward.

The Racecourse Mission.

We have never had a greater call to praise God than for the blessing that rested upon the work at Goodwood and Newton Abbot races. At the former, by the kindness of the Hon. Mr. Dundas, we were permitted to place our pantechnicon van near to the course. This van was our store and our inquiry-room, and as there was a good deal of wet it stood us in good stead. Our labours were not confined to the course only. Each evening found us mounted upon our drag, illuminated by naphtha lamps, surrounded by large crowds of people. The hearty co-operation of the local friends was, of course, a great help, and we rejoiced to have such an out-and-out band of young men around us together with other of our Racecourse Mission workers from Fareham. The gatherings were of great spiritual power; said one of our local friends, "We have never had such meetings here before." We had the joy of dealing with some who were deeply impressed.

At Newton Abbot even greater things awaited us, for although, on account of the rain, we could not do so much in the way of meetings, we had blessed times in personal dealing while distributing the Word of God, and each night we had impressive open-air meetings at the Clock Tower. Here many precious souls sought the Master, while others, by request, were visited in their home, where they took Christ as their Saviour. On two occasions the clay-pits were visited by two of our workers, and meetings held, with good spiritual effects. The Volunteer Camp at Haytor, also, by the kindness of our local president providing a conveyance, was visited, and in the tent erected by the Plymouth Y.M.C.A. we had a good evangelistic meeting. We ought to add that Sister Melli, of the King's Own Mission, was made a blessing by her singing. Truly the little Devonshire town was stirred throughout the week, and many were spiritually quickened. O. L. Heatley, Secretary.

St. James' Hall, Kennington Park, S.E.

Mr. John Climie, of Glasgow, has concluded a fortnight's mission in one of the tents of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission in Aberdeen. His addresses to believers proved helpful to many, and his presentation of the Gospel, in the power of the Spirit, was blessed throughout to numbers of the unconverted. Mr. J. A. Smith will carry on the work until September 2, when Mr. Hugh Paton comes for the closing effort in the tent for the season.

We desire to record with thankfulness the success attending the Tent Mission held in Wellingborough during the last four weeks by Mr. Chas. Noakes, of the Evangelization Society. The intervention of the holidays has not prevented large attendances at the meetings, and on Sundays the tent was crowded to overflowing. We have cause to praise God for the faithful declaration of the truth by his servant, whom He has been pleased to honour, in leading precious souls nightly to accept Jesus Christ as their Saviour.

Points and Outlines.

Preacher and People.

It pleased me nothing to see people drink in opinions, if they seemed ignorant of Jesus Christ, and the worth of their own salvation, sound conviction for sin, especially for unbelief, and a heart set on fire to be saved by Christ, with strong breathings after a truly sanctified soul. That it was that delighted me; those were the souls I counted blessed.

John Bunyan.

Following Christ.

John i. 43.

Jesus said, "Follow me." What does that mean? This, at least: (1) To trust Him; we must follow the Good Shepherd (John x. 4). (2) To be obedient; Christ did always the things that pleased Him that sent him (John viii. 29; xvii. 4). (3) We must be occupied; be "about our Father's business," engaged upon God's concerns. The injunction is "occupy (be busy) till I come" (Luke xix. 13). (4) We must be prayerful: Christ's life was one of prayer. Among the many things that will follow may be specified: (5) We shall show the kind and loving spirit which Jesus manifested (Matt. vi. 14). Where this is lacking, one may well question our claim to trusting, obeying, working, or praying. If we follow Christ in reality, we shall assuredly exhibit "the mind which was in Christ Jesus" (Phil. ii. 5).

Now.

It is a solemn thing to say to-morrow when God says to-day, for man's to-morrow and God's to-day never meet. The word that comes from the eternal throne is "now," and it is man's own choice that fixes his doom. Duncan Matheson.

The Light of the World.

(Matt. v. 13, 14.)

Light is far-reaching and brilliant, flashing that it may be seen. That is one side of Christian work, the side that most of us like best, the conspicuous kind of work. Ay, but there is a very much humbler, and, as I fancy, a very much more useful kind of work, that we have all to do. We shall never be the "light of the world" except on condition of being the "salt of the earth." You have to do the humble, inconspicuous, silent work of checking corruption by a pure example, before you can aspire to do the other work of raying out light into the darkness, and so drawing men to Christ Himself.

Alexander Maclaren.

The Jews as Witnesses of God.

Rom. xi. 22, 23.

The Jews testify to us of three things: (1) That "it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God" (Heb. x. 31). (2) "Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown" (Rev. iii. 11). (3) "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound" (Rom. v. 20). It is God's will that the Jews, as a people, should participate in the grace which abounds to all believers in Christ. He desires us to do what in us lies to guide into all truth these who are descendants of Abraham according to the flesh. H. K.

God's Part and Ours.

How generally do Christians deceive themselves with a self-sprung religion! Divine indeed in the institution, but merely human in respect of the radication and exercise; in which respects also it must be Divine or nothing. Are we yet to learn that a Divine power must work and form our religion in us, as well as Divine authority direct and enjoin it? Do all such scriptures go for nothing that tell us it is God that must create the new heart and renew the right spirit in us; that He must turn us if ever we be turned; that we can never come to Christ except the Father draw us, &c? Nor is there any cause of discouragement in this—Ask and you shall receive, seek and you shall find, knock and it shall be opened to you. Your heavenly Father will give his Holy Spirit to them that ask, more readily than parents give bread to their children. If you be put to ask often and wait long—this doth but the more endear the gift, and show the high value of it. Remember how often you have grieved, resisted, and vexed this Spirit, and that you have made God wait long upon you. John Howe.

Obituary.

REV. T. LYDIATT.

THE death is announced of Rev. Thomas Lydiatt, of Birkenhead, who was for long a Baptist minister. Mr. Lydiatt began life as a blacksmith, and having deep religious convictions, he conducted open-air missions in his spare time. Subsequently, he entered the Baptist ministry. For twenty-five years he had also been superintendent of the Liverpool Evangelization Society. A few years ago he found the claims of this work so exacting that he gave up his pastorate in Birkenhead. In some parts of the town Mr. Lydiatt would proclaim his open-air services by ringing a bell, and the crowd once gathered, his fervent words kept them together.

REV. BENJAMIN GREGORY, D.D.

The death is announced of one of the best-known Wesleyan ministers, Rev. Benjamin Gregory, D.D., who passed away last week at his residence at Crouch Hill. He was the son of a Wesleyan minister eminent in the early years of the century, and entered the ministry in 1840, his first appointment being to Woodhouse Grove, near Leeds. His other circuits included Ilkeston, Redditch, Kettering, Hull, Rochester, Southampton, Barnsley, Oxford, Waterloo, and several London Circuits. In 1868 he was appointed Connexional Editor, in which post he rendered great service to Methodism, finally relinquishing the office in 1897. He was a profound theologian, and remarkable for the versatility of his pen. He wrote on widely different subjects — philosophy, history, theology, biography, and general literature—with equal facility, and produced some poetry of no mean order. He was deeply interested in Church History, and wrote most readable reminiscences on Methodist progress. In 1879 he received the crowning honour in the gift of his Church by being elected President of the Conference. One of his sons, Rev. A. E. Gregory, has just succeeded Dr. Stephenson as Principal of the Children's Home.

MR. A. H. WHEELER.

Many will hear with sorrow that Mr. Arthur H. Wheeler, General Secretary of the Soldiers' Christian Association, passed away on Sunday morning last at his residence in Balham. For some time Mr. Wheeler had been in weak health. In November last, when he went to South Africa to promote Gospel effort among the troops, he was unwell; and the trying nature of his engagements still further reduced his strength. Coming home in the spring, Mr. Wheeler sought recovery by comparative rest, but soon found himself compelled to relinquish work entirely. In due course he improved sufficiently to take his place at the headquarters of the Association, but a relapse quite recently prostrated him, and the affection of the heart from which he suffered carried him off as stated, on Sunday last. Mr. Wheeler had been connected with the Soldiers' Christian Association from its formation, having previously been engaged in Y.M.C.A. work. He brought Christian sympathy, practical wisdom, and mature experience to the discharge of duties which were at once onerous in themselves and singularly beneficent in their results. He leaves a wife and grown-up family, in whose grief many Christian friends will cordially sympathize. The interment will take place on Thursday at Streatham Cemetery, Tooting, where the service will be conducted at 2 p.m., by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch.

"The Well is Deep."

(John iv. 11.)

I often dropped my bucket
Down—down into the well:
It never touched the bottom
However deep it fell.
And though I keep on dipping
The bucket of my prayer,
I have no power to measure
The living water there.

The Churches.

* The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Worcester has been forbidden by his medical adviser to do any public work until he has taken a rest.

At the October meeting of the Worcester Diocesan Conference the Bishop of Coventry will lay before the members a scheme for a "Million Shillings Fund" for the diocese.

Rev. S. C. Lowry, vicar of North Holmwood, Dorking, has been appointed by the Bishop of Winchester to be the first vicar of the newly-formed parish of St. Augustin, Bournemouth.

The Bishop of London has presented the vicarage of St. Anne, Highgate Rise, vacant by the resignation of Rev. C. T. Acland, to Rev. Alfred Tanner, who has been vicar of St. Mary, Haggerston, for the past fifteen years.

Rev. James White, in his parochial statement on the work at St. Peter's, Paddington, says that the report shows freedom of debt, and marks progress. The Sunday schools are well attended, and the services for children more valued than ever. The Institute for Young Men has revived the classes on Sunday. It is intended during the coming autumn and winter to hold monthly services for men on Sunday afternoons in connection with the Men's Society.

Congregational.

The congregation at Alpha Church, Greenfield, have lately celebrated the extinction of debt on the building, the freehold of which they bought in 1895.

Slad Church has been renovated, and reopened free of debt. Mr. Alfred Apperly, J.P., Revs. George Barrett, A.T.S., H. G. Hastings, M.A., E. W. Hopkins (pastor), J. Temperly Grey, and Mr. F. G. Payne, took part.

Rev. Stanley Rogers, who has been spending his holiday in Scotland, resumes his ministry in Westminster Road Church, Liverpool, on Sunday next. The church building, in which for twenty-three years Mr. Rogers has ministered, has been closed for alteration and renovation during his absence.

Rev. Henry J. Shirley, who recently resigned the charge of the church at Dawes Road, Fulham, to undertake the oversight of the Congregational Church at New Amsterdam, British Guiana, and to develop mission work in the island, has been welcomed at a public meeting presided over by Rev. F. G. Glasgow, Chairman of the British Guiana Congregational Union.

Rev. W. J. Woods is to be seen daily in his office at the Memorial Hall, and, though far from enjoying his wonted health, he continues to gain strength. He is gradually undertaking the onerous duties associated with the secretariate of the Congregational Union. It is uncertain as yet whether he will be able to take charge of the autumnal assemblies of the Union, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, in October.

Of the county auxiliaries, Lancashire heads the list in its contributions to the London Missionary Society, as its annual report to be issued next month will show. Its total gifts amount to £13,919, which is a decrease, however, of £1,570 as compared with the previous year. Staffordshire comes second with £10,508, but a single legacy brought in no less than £9,000. The third county position is filled by Yorkshire with £8,390, an increase of £580.

A village pastor is annually invited to plead the cause of the Congregational Church Aid Society at Mount View Church, Stroud Green (Rev. J. Hilton Stowell). On Sunday last Rev. John Greig, who has been in charge of the churches at Hadham, Herts, for over twenty-one years, gave a vivid description of his work in the small village churches. Mr. Greig, who is the secretary of the Eastern district of the Herts Union, is responsible for five services every Sunday in a district covering nine miles in area.

Resignation.—Rev. J. Pedrog Williams, of the West Kensington Welsh Congregational Church, Liverpool.

Baptist.

Open-air Gospel meetings in Belfast are conducted each Lord's Day evening at 8.30, at the junction of Atlantic Avenue and Antrim Road, by members of the Antrim Road Baptist Church. Large numbers of attentive listeners come together.

Rev. W. Williams has completed twenty-three years of ministry at Upton Chapel, Lambeth Road. Mr. Williams has seen 2,500 candidates for church membership and inquirers during this period of happy service. Thirteen were received into fellowship this month.

When the restored Metropolitan Tabernacle is opened next month, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon will have the satisfaction of announcing that the whole of the contract price (£44,576) for the rebuilding has been received, and the new building will, as desired, be inaugurated free from debt.

—Tankerville Mine Mission, which belongs to Lord's Hill, Salop (Pastor W. L. Jones) and which has been closed for twelve months, was re-opened on Sunday week, when three sermons were preached by Rev. W. Jenkins. The large carpenter's shop where the meetings are held, which will seat about 200, was full.

The Welsh Union is desirous of encouraging the study of Baptist Church history, and Principal Edwards, D.D., of Cardiff, will, next month, at the Union meetings at Bangor, read a paper on "Baptists and their Struggles for Civil and Religious Liberty." This paper will, it is thought, probably form the nucleus of a popular handbook on the same subject.

Methodist.

Rev. Joseph Hocking will enter next month upon the pastorate of Union Chapel, Woodford, which is a union church of Congregationalists and Free Church Methodists.

In connection with the services at the Primitive Methodist Central Hall, Wigan, a spiritual awakening is being experienced and good prospects are before the members. The congregations are largely increased.

The Methodist Free Church has now over 86,000 guineas promised towards the £100,000 it is seeking to raise as a Twentieth Century Fund. Of the £25,000 the Bible Christians have set before themselves as their goal, quite two-thirds has been promised.

Rev. W. G. Lane, Methodist chaplain to the Canadian contingent, is recruiting in Cape Town. He is suffering from rheumatism and sciatica after long and severe exposure with the troops, with whom he has often had to sleep in the open air on soaking ground. Mr. Lane has ridden many hundreds of miles in the saddle, and with his contingent has been well to the front, his last outpost having been some miles beyond Pretoria.

A poor woman, in one of the Northampton Wesleyan circuits, whose eyesight is exceedingly bad, and who is in receipt of 2s. 6d. per week from the guardians, and adds to this about 1s. 3d. per week by a little work given to her by the good friends in the circuit, has actually saved in the last fifteen months her guinea for the Twentieth Century Fund. She secured the amount by selling potato parings, cabbage leaves, and vegetable refuse given to her by friends, and also by the disposal of rags and bones.

The centenary of Wesleyan Methodism in Wales has been celebrated at Ruthin, where the first Wesleyan Chapel in Wales was established by Rev. Ed. Jones in the year 1800. At the chief gathering, Dr. Allen, in the course of a vigorous address, said he rejoiced to say that the closing century, which had witnessed so much division, had witnessed also a strong reaction in favour of union. Charity was the force which would unite all the forces of the Kingdom of God. Mr. J. Herbert Roberts, M.P., who represented Calvinistic Methodism, said that many giants of evil still stalked the land, drunkenness still desolated the life of the people, and many forms of vice, before unknown, had arisen in our midst. Surely all this was a call to united action, to the sinking of all petty differences.

Presbyterian.

An interesting ceremony recently took place in the Auchindoir Free Church, when Dr. Robertson Nicoll was admitted to the eldership in the church of which his father was minister for many years. Dr. Nicoll afterwards addressed a few words to the congregation.

Rev. Josiah Thomas has retired from the secretariate of the Foreign Missionary Society of the Calvinistic Methodists. For upwards of twenty-five years Mr. Thomas has with marked devotion and ability served his denomination in this capacity, and the success of the Society is to be attributed in a great measure to his labours. It is probable that he will be succeeded by Rev. J. Morgan Jones, of Cardiff.

A correspondent of The Presbyterian wrote: "The Highgate congregation have been favoured with the preaching of Rev. J. T. Lloyd. Mr. Lloyd's messages from his Divine Master should be the means of blessing to many, and one cannot but think that his simple, earnest appeals will alter the course of many a life, and make the Church member a more spiritually-living being than he usually is. We want nowadays people who are something better than mere churchgoers. Mr. Lloyd's addresses all tend in the direction of greatly improving the lives of professing Christians."

Society of Friends.

Alfred Wright has spent three weeks at Leiston, attending the meetings and schools as they came in course. He was at Woodbridge Monthly Meeting, Ipswich, where he also attended the first-day meetings and men's adult school.

John F. and Alice Hanson have recently been visiting Sande, Skoldsogn, and other places in Norway. They are endeavouring to help the smaller meetings by more frequent visits. A plan is being inaugurated to pay regular visits at least once a month to the smaller companies of Friends in country districts. It is hoped that this will help the meetings, and will develop the gifts of some who are acceptably taking part in public service.

Fallen Asleep.

The death has occurred of Rev. WILLIAM KICK, Congregationalist, of Hendon, and formerly a village pastor in Somerset. —Aged seventy-four, Mr. JAMES DOWNING, senior deacon of Christ Church (Congregational), Enfield. He was for many years secretary of Earlswood Asylum.—Mr. J. BAIRD SMITH, an elder of Claremont Church, Glasgow. Mr. Smith was one of the legal advisers of the United Presbyterian Synod.—The death by drowning of Rev. WILLIAM HOTHERSALL, coming so soon, comparatively, after the death of Rev. J. W. Clutterbuck, who was also stationed at Shoreham, and perished in the Stella, is a severe blow to the new promising cause at Shoreham.—Mr. J. HALLIWELL, a prominent official and local preacher in Chorley Primitive Methodist Circuit, has been killed in the pit of which he was colliery manager. He was caught by the cage and dashed to the bottom of the shaft.—Rev. HENRY A. HAZEN, D.D., secretary of the National Council of the American Congregational Churches. He acted with Rev. Dr. Alexander Mackennal, of Bowdon, as one of the secretaries of the first International Congregational Council, which met in London in 1891.—Aged ninety, Rev. the Hon. W. H. SPENCER, rector of Great Houghton, near Northampton. —Rev. J. SCHOFIELD, vicar of Westgate in Weardale, an old "standard bearer" of Evangelicalism.—At East London, South Africa, Miss LONG, of Coleraine, Ireland.—At Greenane, Co. Galway, Mr. JAMES TYNAN, a devoted member and official of the Methodist Church.—At Blackrock, Co. Dublin, Mr. JOHN MCCORMICK, son of late Rev. Charles McCormick, Methodist minister, a humble and Godly man, aged eighty-seven years.

Notes & Comments

SEPTEMBER is the month in which most of the Churches resume their full indoor work. Vacations, for the greater part, are over, and ministers and people settle down to a winter programme. There are very special reasons why all workers should seek a definite and a remarkable manifestation of Divine power during the coming season. For one thing, the great United Mission to be held in January next demands a thorough preparation. It will be an opportunity such as has never yet presented itself, and it must be seized to the very best advantage. We hear of certain Churches in which a day for prayer has been set apart as a first preparation for the Mission. Would it not be a good thing if every Church in the Kingdom set apart a day for prayer, not only for this special effort, but for its own particular work? A praying Church cannot fail to be an evangelizing Church.

In the midst of embittered relations between employers and workpeople, and in face of the misery which must reach thousands of homes this winter, in consequence of the numerous unhappy strikes, it is pleasant to record that an arrangement has been arrived at between the colliery owners and the miners in Lancashire under which a conciliation board of masters and men will be established, to which all disputes will be referred for settlement "before notices are tendered," so that the clumsy and costly arbitration of the strike, with its attendant misery and ill-feeling, may be avoided. The working of the scheme, which does not seem in any way to run counter to the Conciliation Act of 1896, will be followed with much interest, as doubtless it will result in the development of a kindlier feeling than that which has existed of late under the strained relations following upon the bitter trade struggles of recent years.

A writer in the Daily News, who has been a Chinese resident for eighteen years, in some informing letters on "The Trouble in China," throws further light on the cause of the Boxer movement dealt with in our last number. He brings evidence to show that this lay not primarily in the territorial greed of the European Powers, nor recent floods and famine, nor the disturbing influences of mining and engineering works, nor yet in the preaching of the Gospel as such, though all these items contributed to the result. The immediate cause was the recent action of the Roman Catholic party in China, led by their priests, who last year came into the enjoyment of special political privileges, and have in many cases used these for illegitimate political purposes. Their action in defending their converts in the native courts had a specially disturbing effect on the course of native justice, and the Boxers, always anti-foreign in temper, found in this a coveted opportunity of which they made ruthless and unmeasured use.

The moral of this revelation of the inner causes of the revolution in China is obvious. The first duty of missionaries in every country is to remember the spiritual character of the Kingdom of Christ, and to pursue their high calling in independence of all political alliances and privileges. That the Roman Catholic party alone are sinners in this respect is clear from the evidence adduced in these striking letters. The writer says, apropos of the French demands for a special status for their priests:

> To the honour of Protestant missions be it said that in all parts of the field resolutions were passed absolutely declining to accept any political status. "My Kingdom is not of this world." The four Bishops of the Church of England met and earnestly discussed the subject, and unanimously resolved that the Church of England could not accept the offer of the Chinese Government. It was noble self-denial on the part of all these men, for to have accepted would have given them much influence in the Yamens, and consequently with the people. The Government would have preferred that their offer be accepted; and, had it been aware beforehand of such strong support from the Protestant Church, its hands would have been strengthened in resisting the French demands.

Would it not be wise if the Church of England learnt the same lesson at home that its representatives have so nobly practised abroad?

The Pope has addressed to his co-religionists a letter, in which he deplores the success of Protestant Missions in Italy and in Rome itself. It is a curious and an instructive document, though it contains statements that are manifestly untrue.

> Evangelical work is declared to be "the attempts which sects of all kinds from foreign places are making to spread amongst believers the poison of negation and error." Evangelical teaching is classed with "the depravity poured forth daily from books, professional chairs, and theatres," &c.

Of course we are not surprised that the Pope is angry at the spread of the truth "under the sanction of the public laws;" but Leo XIII. does not know what he is writing about. Shut up within the sumptuous "prison" of the Vatican, the only Rome of which he knows anything is the well-dressed Rome which, in holiday attire, pays him respect upon great festivals.

But under the very shadow of the Vatican there are crime-blackened districts which the Romish Church never touches, and which would never be evangelized but for the loving efforts of Christians "from foreign places." One district for example, San Lorenzo—within sight of the gorgeous Church of St. John Lateran—is sodden with vice and crime. Murders, attempted murders, bloodshed, prostitution, and drunkenness flourish, and the only ray of light that ever penetrates this fearful place comes from a small Baptist Mission Hall which is planted in the centre of the district. The "pilgrims" who visit Rome, and who, according to Leo XIII., are shocked at the spectacle of Protestantism in the Holy City, would do well to leave the beaten show track, and examine the festering sores of Rome. They would then perhaps be still more shocked at the presence of such a life at the centre of "Apostolic Life."

The impudence of these Papal letters is amazing. Against their assumptions we place one significant fact with which a contemporary supplies us:—In the United Kingdom the proportion of murderers is six to every million of the inhabitants. In Germany it is eleven. These are Protestant countries. But in Hungary the proportion is sixty-seven per million; in Spain eighty-three per million; and in Italy ninety-five per million. Comment is needless.

A Roman Catholic journal, by printing the paper twice in the same issue, gives great prominence to an article upon "The Restoration of the Mass in the Church of England," in which the differences, "not in detail, but in root principle," dividing the Communion Services of the Book of Common Prayer from the Mass in the Roman Missal, are fully and clearly explained and insisted upon. It is stated that in hundreds of churches clergymen who hold the Romish doctrines of Transubstantiation and the Sacrifice of the Mass have restored the Mass in their churches, and say the prayers expressing the Eucharistic sacrifice and the Real Presence privately during the long pauses. Naturally this "Polyglot Mass" and dishonesty are strongly deprecated, and the article concludes:—

> To Catholics it cannot but be a matter for satisfaction that the Catholic doctrine of the Eucharist should have gained such a hold on members of the Church of England as these facts demonstrate. But, at the same time, they cannot but feel that the making of such far-reaching changes by individuals on their own responsibility is contrary to that principle of authority which is a fundamental principle of Catholicity.

It is gratifying to observe that at Dover and elsewhere the magistrates at the Licensing Sessions dealt drastically with the public-house question, by refusing all new applications, upon the principle that no fresh licences should be granted unless the brewers gave up a "tied house" in each case. The method is a simple and common-sense one, and Christian abstainers in other towns would do well to influence the magistrates in their districts to adopt it as one means of stopping the development of the hideous drink traffic, with its consequent evils.

We are informed by the Journal de Genève that on the occasion of the International Alpine Congress in Paris (August 11-15), a resolution was unanimously adopted, to the effect that alcohol, being not only useless, but dangerous, and the first cause of most of the accidents that happen in the Alps, its use should be condemned, and such drinks as coffee, tea, and cola be recommended to the mountain climbers.

The habit of drug-taking among women is said to be greatly on the increase. A writer in the British Weekly gives some facts that point strongly in that direction. One lady who took lodgings for a month in a certain neighbourhood consumed four large bottles of chlorodyne in an incredibly short space of time, and when the landlady taxed her with it, expressed no regret, but was only anxious to learn how the bottles could be disposed of. When this story was told at an evening party, several guests gave from their own knowledge other instances of the ruin of women's lives through using chloral or opium. That these drugs are too readily obtainable is clear from these and many other facts. Their use is commenced in some emergency of illness, without the slightest idea of forming an evil habit, which grows insensibly from little to more, until it breeds an irresistible craving in the constitution. The only sensible and safe rule in regard to such perilous drugs is to decline to touch them, except under competent medical advice.

The New York State has done well in declaring prize-fighting to be illegal. Henceforward persons who offend in this matter place themselves within reach of the law. The sporting fraternity made the best use of their time, and several disgusting exhibitions were organized for the last few days of August —the new law came into force on September 1. Several English newspapers thought fit to devote columns to the reports of those degrading scenes. They are as blameworthy as the principals. There is no need to characterize the hypocrisy of some so-called "sportsmen," who apologize for the "art" on the ground that it develops "courage and manly forces." Far from doing that, this "sport" develops everything that is base and ignoble in the human breast. New York has done well in suppressing it.

A recent writer, in dealing with the question of the simplification of life, has pointed out that it is the artificial wants of life which cause the most trouble; and he has urged the wisdom of arranging life by a law of exclusions, making the first question, "What can I do without?" Bearing in mind Christ's teaching, that a man's life consists not in the abundance of things which he possesses, a noble illustration of the application of this principle has, within the last few days, been afforded by the Nizam of Hyderabad, who has ordered that all the festivities in honour of his birthday this year should be abandoned, and the money so saved, about £7,000, be given to the Indian Famine Fund. Less remarkable, but no less definite, sacrifices are within the reach of each of us. Unhappily, we never need go far to find those to whom that which we can do without will be of the greatest value.

It is the fashion just now in fiction to deal with questions of heredity, and in doing so the modern novelist, who generally seeks to enlist sympathy on behalf of the wrong-doer, invariably shows that he possesses no more than a mere surface knowledge of the subject, and fails to see that what appear to be the laws and facts of heredity, if they "give mystery and immensity to the spiritual life of man," just as certainly "widen enormously the range of his responsibility." None of the modern gossipping about "atavism" and other isms furnishes the key to the whole mystery of the life of man, but we do know that Christ came "to seek and to save" that which was lost, and that in whatever environment a man may be, if he will turn to Jesus there is restoration and salvation for him. In discoursing fancifully upon peculiar developments of the disease, the novelist fails to call attention to the potent remedy.

In the death of Nietzsche, one of the most remarkable personalities of the world of thought on the Continent has passed away. He represented the logical outcome of the Evolutionary philosophy when divorced from all religious influences and reactions. Beginning as a pessimist of the Schopenhauer school, he ended by being an Epicurean of the most prominent order. Self-realization was his principle of life; "Man is his own providence;" there is no God to worship except human reason and "enlightenment"; life here is the only life; enjoyment must, therefore, be the wisest watchword. Nietzsche waged war on all social and religious institutions. His theory of life may be termed, "Individualism run mad." The significance of the Nietzschian philosophy lies in its being the inevitable resultant of a mechanical evolutionism. The remarkable thing about it is that it has so many advocates among the "cultured" classes in Germany. Ten years hence it will be forgotten, except as a milestone in the dreary road away from Christ and his salvation.

An interesting paper in The Quiver furnishes noteworthy information in regard to the extent to which native pastors are being employed in mission work by the various societies, who are now not only largely utilizing native Christians as ministers in their own country, but are sending them to other lands as missionaries. The idea seems to be growing that a very large portion of the evangelization of the heathen must be taken in hand and carried out by the natives themselves, a course which is being largely developed by the London Missionary Society, who have sent from their stations in the South Sea Islands no fewer than 250 native missionaries to New Guinea and elsewhere during twenty years. Some of the societies, however, count their native pastors and teachers by the thousand, and Burmah and China, Western Equatorial Africa, and other countries are already showing satisfactory results from this policy.

In an admirable series of articles on "The Missionary Methods of the Apostles," now appearing in the Expository Times, Rev. J. Reid, of Dundee, goes to the root of the whole missionary question. In the current number, he discusses the treatment and organization of converts. His conclusion coincides with views frequently expressed in our columns. In view of the divisions and sub-divisions of Christian societies in China (one denomination alone having no less than eight sub-divisions), Mr. Reid seems to have sense on his side when he remarks, "We must either give up the hope of Christianizing China at all, or adopt some other method." It does not require a very vivid imagination to comprehend what must be the effect upon heathens of the disastrous divisions which the missionary societies present to them. Surely there is no need to plant our differences upon virgin soil.

An American preacher in London told a characteristic story in speaking of the common ground of relationship and brotherhood created by the Gospel among men of every race and language. It would be difficult to suggest a greater contrast than that between a Maori and a Burmese. Two of these nationalities once met, each ignorant of the other's tongue. But they were both Christians. "Hallelujah," said the Burmese. "Amen," replied the Maori; and they were content. This is a little parable of the grand forces of reunion and love that flow out in all directions from the Cross of Christ. He unites men to one another in uniting them to Himself, and feeds their regard for one another as streams that run in all directions are fed from the waters of the sea. It is the love of Christ that in the end will reunite men of every blood and creed, and make them one in Him. Hatred now separates men like mountain chasms; but love will, in the end, bridge them all.

Apropos of the Sunday School Union's annual appeal for prayer for Sunday schools, some very disquieting facts are published regarding the steady decrease in the number of scholars as compared with some years back. The official returns of the leading denominations show the following results:—The Established Church shows a decrease of 7,000 scholars; the Wesleyan Methodist Church a decrease of 5,400; the Baptists of 7,000; the Calvinistic Methodists (in Wales), of 4,200; the Presbyterians, of 1,400; the United Methodist Free Church, of 3,000; the Free Church of Scotland, 4,300; and so on. Many of these figures have special reference to the elder scholars. The Free Church of Scotland, e.g., has lost 1,300 in its Bible classes alone. Indeed, but for a large influx of infant scholars, the net decrease would have been much greater.

It is surely time that this important question be faced courageously in every church and school. In order to provide a remedy, the cause or causes of this decline should be ascertained. Perhaps if a canvass of recent scholars were made, with a view of ascertaining their real reason for ceasing to attend Sunday school classes, it might bring very definite results to light. Doubtless one of the most frequent reasons alleged is that they feel too old to attend. A more mischievous and mistaken course could not be followed than to desert an institution whose sole aim is to bring and keep young souls under Bible teaching and influence—when the temptations of life pressing on unformed and plastic natures make it most necessary. Cannot teachers do something to dispel this foolish notion? The whole question needs a thorough sifting, and the methods of Sunday school teaching a careful revision.

The Post Office Department is dealing very practically with the lead-poisoning question, and is now using only insulators coated with leadless glaze; and it is stated that other Departments, and the London School Board, are using only ware similarly coated, the latter Board having inserted a clause in its contracts forbidding the use of goods glazed with lead. As Dr. Thorpe, the Principal of the Government laboratories, finds that it is quite unnecessary to use poisonous lead in the pottery trade, no injustice will be done to the manufacturers if buyers will ask for and insist upon obtaining articles coated with the leadless glaze. They will thus assist in putting an end to the terrible loss of health and life among the pottery workers, which unfortunately results from the present very general mode of manufacture.

Mr. Arthur Morrison, who by his terrible "Child of the Jago" and other books has done much to bring some pressing social questions before the minds of the thoughtless, has just stated that he knows of little houses of seven rooms in which thirty-five people, of all ages from a few months upwards, are crowded, and he adds,

> Now it needs no telling to make it plain that when acres of these little dens stand festering together, with scarce an open yard between them, disease, degeneration, and physical ruin are the lot of the indwellers, while physical foulness, to say nothing of moral, reaches degrees difficult to make known in public print.

In the face of all the difficulties in the way of the proper "housing of the poor"—and we admit they are not few—the question must come to many of our leading politicians "Am I my brother's keeper?"

"Power With God."

By SAMUEL PEARSON, M.A.,
of Broughton Park Church, Manchester.

WHAT a strange and startling expression! It must mean something great, take it as we will. Originally used about Jacob, who wrestled with the Angel of the Lord, and perhaps hardly meaning more when first used than that he strove with God, it has come to express a deep significance, which attaches to all believing and wise prayer. Such prayer avails much. Some, alas! is feeble, faithless, out of accord with God's will; and it has no power with God. But all kinds of Pentecostal blessings are showered down as soon as some men speak to heaven. Why then don't they speak oftener? Partly because we are not ready for their intercession; and they know it. A young man once asked his minister to pray with him over a sin; but the minister saw no signs of repentance, and said, "You must be sorry first; but till then it will be useless for two of us to pray! We are not agreed."

But how blessed are the souls of men when all such obstacles are removed, and they approach the source of all benediction and peace! Let us try to depict

THE MAN WHO HAS POWER WITH GOD.

1. He wants to know God; and God reveals Himself. To get God to unveil his grace is an act of power. God dwells in the high and holy place—in secret pavilions of glory where mortal man may not penetrate. But there are seasons when the curtains of the pavilion tremble, and are lifted, and God is seen. They are great times in the history of the soul; they are remarkable seasons in the history of the Church. God becomes known, and these seasons are distinct altogether in their character from the general knowledge of the nature of God, which is open to every reader of the Bible, where revelation is stored.

This unfolding is a direct and intimate one, by which the man gets to see his own individual relationship with God, and appropriates the lovingkindness of Jehovah. He has heard of the King, but now he sees Him. A report has reached him that God is the Father of mankind; but now the love of that Father rests upon his own soul. The general oversight by God of the world's affairs does not satisfy him, and he now knows that his own life is a plan of God. Can any knowledge be comparable with this? None! No pursuit of science, of the beautiful in literature and art, of the wonders of our globe or of other worlds, can be named by the side of this intimate,

PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE OF GOD.

It is the wonder and ecstasy of the soul—the mark of a re-birth into which we are brought by the Spirit of God.

In order to obtain this knowledge there must be a deep-felt want in man's heart; and because this is so often absent, even from men who pray, there is little of this spiritual influence exerted on the Divine Being. He cannot force moral and spiritual gifts on man, as the waters are driven down the channels scooped out of the rocks. To drown men with knowledge for which they do not ask, is not to give them the life of God. It is when they feel that this Divine vision is the best which their eyes are capable of beholding, that they begin to ask for it with earnest quest; and God gives the light to eyes that wait for the morning.

We live then among those to whom this vision has been granted; to whom God is not a Force, but a Person; not the vague, indefinite Source of love to a wide universe, but the highest conceivable love which they could ever know. They carry an inward secret and experience which others do not know. Men like General Gordon have an atmosphere around them which is transparent and heavenly. They have seen God.

2. He gets love from God; for he walks in the light of God's truth.

Wesley's hymn on wrestling Jacob is a truly great one; not because of its poetry, but because it describes under poetic form some of the deepest experiences of the aspiring soul. The answer, as that hymn points out, to all our struggles is that God is love; and this was why Dean Stanley thought so highly of this production. But the man who has power with God does not content himself with sublime generalities about the nature of the Deity—he is able to appropriate Divine love.

And on God's side there is no vague and undefined affection which belongs equally to all men. We cannot conceive of a love which has not some particular object on which it fastens itself; and we cannot suppose that God is so different from ourselves that He does not care for special persons. In all his dealings there is discrimination of character, and a definite movement of his heart toward separate souls. "I love them that love Me; and those that seek Me early shall find Me." It tends to the obliteration of all moral distinctions if we say that the love of God belongs alike to the wicked and the righteous. It is ready doubtless to spring forth in mercy's activities towards all; but it rests with holy complacency alone on

THOSE WHO OBEY GOD.

The wrestling, then, is not over in a night. The crises are but types of that onward journey which takes the soul through shadows toward the perfect light. But when the face is turned toward the East of God's love, it catches the first beams. It is the direction which tells, not the pace. Men seem to be standing still, but they are inching the pathway to holiness.

Though I fail, I weep,
Though I halt in pace,
Yet I creep
To the throne of grace.

When we read in the New Testament that Christian people are saints, there is a kind of audacity about the term which surprises us. A landscape in drizzling rain has a dull look; when it is suffused with sunlight, all its innate beauty makes a never-to-be-forgotten picture. Thus even a commonplace man with the love of God resting upon him is recognised even by the worldly as a saint. In our churches there are some very quiet people who are pre-eminent for goodness. They never seem ruffled, discontented, complaining, difficult to work with; they always seem kind, considerate, generous, full of love. They are God's favourites. In a busy, dusty road in London, there used to be one garden which attracted every passer-by; it was full of flowers, gay, glorious, triumphant flowers; and there the sunshine seemed to gather and linger. It is so on the road of life.

And here in dust and dirt, O here,
The lilies of his love appear!

3. This man gets influence from God—when he seeks to promote God's glory alone.

Influence, next to love, is our greatest possession. But the coin is often counterfeited; and we suppose that we have the genuine gold when it is only a child's counter for a passing game. The influence which some men and women exert, whose names are almost world-known, will pass away like the spray that wets and bedews the rocks, and will leave as little result. When men seek their own glory they are pursuing a corruptible crown; and very soon the roses fade and the leaves crumble.

But there is an impalpable influence which falls upon us from some which, by an instinct, we know to be derived from God. The case of George Müller is very perplexing if we try to reason it out. Some have copied his methods, and have egregiously failed. He succeeded in getting tens of thousands of pounds sterling; but we often forget that he took the orphans first. In other words, his spirit was that of entire consecration of self to the glory of God; and the glory of God meant the care of orphans. It is impossible to read the Life of C. H. Spurgeon without seeing how little he cared for money for its own sake, and how much he loved to spread goodness and happiness. A lady unknown to him asked him to spend £20,000 in building an orphanage. This was an evidence of his power greater in essence than the mere eloquence by which he could sway the emotions of vast multitudes. It was his love for souls that told, both in private life and public ministration.

A kind word goes much farther than many gifts, and God pours this simple but effective eloquence into the lips of those who wait upon Him, and who seek in their lives to spread his glory. He gives them a power which is all their own. They have a way with them which few can resist. And through them the kingdom of heaven comes with power. The "Friends" have spread the principles of peace not by noisy declamation, but by silent and self-sacrificing witnessing. Pentecost belongs more to the one hundred and twenty than even to Peter the preacher. Mothers are mightier far in the spiritual world than all our committees and machinery. God's Spirit finds the focus of his power in separate and separated hearts. And if men want to have and exert lasting influence for the highest good, they must walk in the light of God's Purpose, Truth, and Love. Then God will come down; Christ will dwell in the heart; the Holy Spirit will make them men of power. Influence must be preceded by inspiration, and inspiration is given to the soul self-devoted to Christ. Would that we were ready for the entrance of this Power, and for the exercise of this influence!

Look Up!

(Heb. xii. 2; 2 Cor. iii. 18; Psa. xxxiv. 5.)

O child of God, as on you tread.
Look up!
There's nought but glory overhead,
Look up!
Remember, your bright home is there.
What matter then the trials here?
With Christ the glory soon you'll share.
Look up!

Oh, why should e'er the heart be sad?
Look up!
He died to make you always glad.
Look up!
Awake, and sing his fullest praise!
With Him you'll dwell through endless days.
Oh, what a thought the heart to raise!
Look up!

If daily you would be sustained,
Look up!
In all with which the heart is pained,
Look up!
Ne'er tempted be to look within,
The only way to keep from sin
Is this—be occupied with Him.
Look up!

No longer hanging on the tree,
Look up!
He lives in glory now for thee.
Look up!
If we would manifest him here,
The eye must gaze upon Him there;
So shall we, changed, his glory bear.
Look up!

Forgiveness.

"There is forgiveness with Thee, that Thou mayest be feared" (Psa. cxxx. 4).

FOR the forgiveness of sins we are shut up to God alone. There is no other with whom is forgiveness for a guilty soul. The pretensions of a fallen human mediator to administer an effectual pardon are so obviously preposterous that the wonder is that any reasonable being can be deluded by it. The claim of our Lord Jesus Christ to forgive sins was one which aroused the fiercest opposition of the Pharisees. "Who is this that forgiveth sins also?" was the indignant demand. They knew and recognised the Divine prerogative. Nor can we ever think lightly of sin if we fully apprehend the impossibility of cleansing apart from atonement.

In the Old Testament the word fear is often used as the equivalent of trust, and it is probable that it must, in a primary sense, be so understood here. This is, indeed, implied in what goes before. "If Thou, Lord, should'st mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand? BUT there is forgiveness with Thee, that Thou mayest be trusted."

We trust our friends in proportion to our belief in their willingness to forgive our failings and shortcomings. It is impossible to feel full confidence in one whom we have proved to be "touchy" and unwilling to overlook an injury, actual or imaginary; because, even in our human friendships and relationships there is that which calls continually for forbearance, and

THE EXERCISE OF A FORGIVING LOVE.

Far less could we feel the happy confidence of children in approaching the Holy One if it were not that He has demonstrated to us his character—"ready to pardon," "abundant in mercy," "forgiving iniquity," &c. As an article of our faith we know it so well. If we have taken the very initial step in the heavenward life, it has been taken in the belief that "God, for Christ's sake, hath forgiven" (Eph. iv. 32), and that, therefore, we may dare draw near. To us, as to the sinful of old, the first healing words of life which came from the Saviour's lips, and penetrated to the heart's deep need, may well have been those his human lips actually chose: "Thy sins be forgiven thee." But it is what we know so well that we too often forget.

And perhaps this familiar passage, sweet and full as it is, is one which we practically relegate to those who are still afar off—to the "sinner"—as we sometimes crudely say. YES; and yet it is one which we, who are "called to be saints," need to remember just as much; and one which comes with unspeakable comfort to us as we, walking in the all-revealing light, discover more and more of our natural depravity and of the deceitfulness of the human heart—a deceitfulness which still assails even the renewed heart.

Then it is, when most bowed down beneath the weight of frailty and shortcoming (even if not of actual transgression, in thought, word, or deed), that the Divine Spirit applies the healing, reviving balm of a word like this: "There is forgiveness with Thee, that Thou mayest be feared." And so the tempter is foiled, who would have us to despair because of our unworthiness, for "THERE IS FORGIVENESS WITH THEE."

Instead of that vain, painful effort by which we have sometimes sought (is it not true that we have sometimes so sought?) to work up ourselves to the pitch of trust and enthusiasm which would be a salve to our treacherous hearts, and give a secret sort of feeling of justification in expecting again great things of God, and enjoying complete reinstatement in his favour—instead of all this, we hasten straight to the pierced feet, all wounded and unworthy, as at first we came, and say to Him—"There is forgiveness with Thee, that Thou mayest be feared."

If Grace invites confession to detach
Souls from their sin, shall Faith not lift the latch?

He forgives, as he gives, "upbraiding not"; and He forgives thus—may we not say it?—not only because it is his nature to forgive, but in order also that we may learn unreservedly to trust Him.

It is, "That Thou mayest be feared." Shall it all be in vain? Shall we consent still to doubt the readiness to receive us and forgive us, even unto the "seventy times seven"—as if He were so hard to be entreated, as if there were so great risk in trusting to the uttermost Him who loves to the uttermost?

Nay, "there is forgiveness with thee, that Thou mayest be feared," is the one only plea with which we will draw near, in all our weakness and want. "There is forgiveness with Thee." It is not simply forgiveness from God (that were much), but forgiveness which brings us into abiding contact with the Great Forgiver. (And this is incomparably more). We will stay with Him; we will abide under the shadow of his wings, for THERE is forgiveness.

How much and how often we need that forgiveness we do not even know. Ill would it fare with any of us if there were not for those sins and failures which are hidden from our dull eyes the unchanging promise, "Their sins and iniquities will I remember no more." But we know and that He urged upon his failing disciples a degree of forgiveness so great—and yet, as we are well assured, so far below his own. How did He forgive Thomas? And yet the doubts of Thomas must have sorely wounded the heart which yearned for full trust. How did He forgive Peter? Peter had even disallowed his own discipleship; and perhaps it would be difficult to him to take to himself the message sent to the "disciples." Hence the special mention of the poor erring one from the lips of the risen Saviour, "Tell my disciples, and Peter," as well as the early and public reinstatement in his office as an under-shepherd.

How did He forgive us, when we first came to Him for pardon? How has He, since then, "forgiven until now"? The experiences of every one of us would form one chorus of consent. There would be one vast consensus of testimony which could best be voiced in the brief, expressive words, "There is forgiveness with Thee, that Thou mayest be feared."

Let us remember Luther's words: "Whoever, then, do believe that God is ready to forgive, and, for Christ's sake, to remit sins, they render unto God true and reasonable service; they strive not with God about the law, works, and righteousness, but, laying aside all trust in themselves, do fear Him because of his mercy, and thus are made sons who receive the Holy Ghost, and begin truly to do the works of the law. So, in these two lines, David sets forth to us the sum and substance of all Christian doctrine, and that Sun which giveth light to the Church."

"O Lord, How Great are thy Works!"

FROM Orient cradle streaked with gold,
To set of sun in Western grave,
What wonders doth the day unfold
O'er hill and vale, on land and wave.

And in the silent hours of night
What beauty and what grandeur reign,
The moonbeams' soft and silver light,
The splendour of the starry train!

Throughout the round of nature's work
We dimly trace design and love,
In flowers which in the woodland lurk,
As in the canopy above.

With verdure clad, behold the sod,
For beauty and for herbage given,
And look through Nature up to God—
The great and lofty King of heaven.

The springing corn, the babbling brook,
Our daily bread and water bear,
In every page of Nature's book
We can discern a Father's care.

Then praise the God of matchless worth
For miracles of Love and power,
And pray the seed we sow on earth
May yield celestial fruit and flower.

God's Care on the Battle-Field

BY WILLIAM LUFF.

SOMETIMES God permits accidents to happen to his people, and even from the battle-field takes his own soldiers to their rest; but how often they are wonderfully preserved. "The Lord preserveth the faithful" is still in the Book of our Father's promises (Ps. xxxi. 23). "The Lord will preserve him and keep him alive" (Ps. xli. 2); "The Lord preserveth all them that love Him" (Ps. cxlv. 20), are also still in their places.

We have been led to these thoughts by reading the letters of soldiers at the front, Christian men who have written to Miss Perks and other helpers at the Soldiers' Home, Winchester. Here are extracts from one just received from Pretoria:—

"Truly the Lord has blessed me, indeed, and I have realized and laid hold of Gen. xxviii. 15 as my very own:

"And, behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest, and will bring thee again into this land; for I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of.

"I fully believe the Lord is going to bring me safe back again to the land of my birth. I have found Jesus to be a Friend that sticketh closer than a brother. He has never failed me once. When bullets have been falling around me thick as rain, I thank God I felt no fear, for I knew it was all right. Father was with me, and so nothing could harm me; for

Not a single shaft can hit,
Till the God of love sees fit!

On the long and trying marches, and on outpost duty at night, and on the hard-fought battlefield, Jesus has been and still is my strength."

Then follows a list of the many engagements this Christian soldier has passed through untouched, finishing with this message: "Tell all at the Soldiers' Home, that I am very happy, and it's peace, perfect peace."

Another saved man writes: "I have been in a few engagements while I have been out here, and I have found that God has protected me in all. Once, when bullets were flying overhead and one dropped almost on my feet. Again, when one splintered not four inches from my face. And again, when I was praying to God on the field for protection, conscience told me to move my leg from where I was resting it, and as I moved it, a bullet fell, touching the puttee. Is not that the mercy of God?"

In the midst of all these dangers this believer writes, in concluding his letter, "I am happy and contented out here alone with my God, who protects me, and I can still point to 1 Pet. i. 5 as my testimony, 'Kept by the power of God.'"

A third, to whom we remember saying "Good-bye" at the "Home," writes of spiritual protection. "I have to thank God for a good many things I have experienced since I came out here, which I never could have learned in England; and it is wonderful the way God leads his children. I think I am one of those wonders, for I have been tempted and tried in every way by the devil. I have often heard it said that a soldier cannot be a Christian. Praise the Lord, I can say it is much easier to serve God in the army than as a civilian; but to live a Christian life your comrades must know it, or else your life will be a hard one. Praise God, we have many a light in Africa to-day that never would have known the love of Jesus if it had not been for the war."

In sorrowing over the many who have fallen, it is encouraging to faith thus to hear of God's preserving care, and again to fall back upon the soldier's psalm (xci.):—

He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust; his truth shall be thy shield and buckler.

Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day.

Nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday.—

A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee.

And may not those who are in danger upon battle-fields nearer home claim the blessing?

Studies in Leviticus.*

By Rev. HUBERT BROOKE.

IV.—Holiness.

"And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, speak unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, and say unto them, ye shall be holy; for I the Lord your God am holy." (Lev. xix. 1, 2.)

"Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." (2 Cor. vii. 1).

THE word cleanse is in the Greek aorist, indicating that everything God marks out as unclean, defiling, or doubtful, is to be immediately put aside once and for all, not gradually and by degrees. This can be done only by faith in God's promises. If growing light reveals further unsuspected doubtful things, they must be dealt with in the same way. Thus, every hour of our lives, we should be "perfecting (present participle) holiness in the fear of God." This perfecting is the same as "accomplishing" the service of God" (Heb. ix. 6). Up to the measure of our light, purity is to be thorough, and holiness is to be continuous.

The words holy, holiness, and sanctify, all from the same root, occur in Leviticus 131 times. Our first two studies revealed what we have in God; our last two show what He would have in us. Christ is our perfect Sacrifice, our perfect High Priest; He desires us to be

A PEOPLE CLEAN AND HOLY.

The popular use of a Scriptural phrase is often faulty. In the ordinary acceptation, holiness is super-eminent piety; but God's Word applies the term holy to everything as well as to everyone that belongs to or is brought into contact with God (Ex. xxix. 37). Every soul touched by the sprinkled blood of Jesus, who has redeemed us unto God as his purchased possession, is called holy, irrespective of attainments at first. The Corinthians were "called holy" (First Epistle, 1, 2); yet they were walking earnestly (iii. 3). They who are called holy are to translate their title into conduct. Even if, in whole or in part, we defraud the Lord of his right, we are none the less his. It is no strange thing to say, "You are holy, therefore be holy;" for, in the earthly sphere, a nobleman by birth is not necessarily a noble man in his ways. The motto for every child of the King of kings, no less than for members of the English peerage, is Noblesse oblige—rank imposes obligations. Live up to your calling. When holiness becomes a characteristic as well as a title, it means the working out in our lives of that which is after the mind of God.

Our subject is a far-reaching one, covering the eleven chapters of Leviticus numbered xvii. to xxvii.; and therefore I can only touch upon the main points of teaching.

From xvii. we gather that every Christian meal should be a sacrament. In olden days, as German families gathered round the table on Christmas eve, there was always a vacant chair kept for the Lord Jesus. May our spirit too be that of 1 Cor. x. 31.

Lessons of domestic purity and family chastity are taught in xviii., in direct contrast to the impurity and

VILENESS OF HEATHENISM.

They who study God's Word from a semi-unbelieving position, speak of God's "harsh" judgment upon the idolatrous nations of Canaan. Some diseases are cured only by the knife; and the moral life of the whole world may depend upon the cutting off of one corrupt nation. Men who have entered the closed museums of Herculaneum and Pompeii, fully understand why God overthrew those cities; and they who serve Him in our Indian Empire testify that the sanctities of Hinduism are inconceivably vile. Moreover, God dealt justly with Israel for their conformity to the idolatrous nations around, by allowing the offenders to be carried into captivity. The Lord will be sanctified in all who are called his people.

Holiness in everyday life is the theme of xix. Verses 3-8 teach reverence toward parents and toward our heavenly Father; 9-18 embrace five pentates or short lessons concerning righteousness; 19-29 differentiate the people from heathen races, in certain particulars; and 30-37 include reverence for sanctuary and Sabbath, with courtesy, kindliness, and justice toward all men. Verse 36, in particular, cuts at the root of much in to-day. One who has left that sphere, described to me some of the petty dishonesties against which he had to wage a continuous fight; and the very name of Sheldon is eloquent upon this point.

Penal judgments following disobedience to these laws are found in xx. Priestly holiness is the subject of xxi. and xxii. Israel was called to be a kingdom of priests; and members of Christ, who are a royal priesthood unto God, may well attend to the rules of their order. God's law is supreme over the priestly life, in all its relations. The feasts of the Lord are dealt with in xxiii. Not only the Sabbath day, but other days, and even weeks and whole years, were occasionally claimed by God as exclusively his, to show that all the days of his people belong to Him, and are to be holy, no less than their persons, homes, and service.

We are reminded by xxiv. that the light to guide us and the food to strengthen our souls are both holy. In the Sabbatic year and the Jubilee year (xxv.) God required from the people their acknowledgment that the land and possessions which they called their own were really his. When, for 490 years, Israel failed to keep the Sabbatic year, God turned them out of their possessions, until they had made up their arrears to a day. We are who can evidently keep account.

These studies have shown me how broad is God's claim for holiness in his people's lives (Ps. cxix. 96), and yet the Psalmist says (next verse), "O how I love thy law! it is my meditation all the day." Our Queen's possessions bear a certain mark; and it has been well said that holiness is the broad arrow of the King of kings. God would have us to own his mark upon our food, homes, families, business, words, judgments, intercourse, courtesies, joys, griefs, principles, time, strength, powers, knowledge, possessions, and upon our many relationships in this life. Is there a single thing that touches you, from your innermost thought to the outermost circle of your life, in which He does not expect your recognition of his claim? He says, "All that is thine is mine; you must hold it only for me." One thing held back upon our part may lose the enjoyment of all that God in Himself offers us.

When the Lord's priestly people stepped out as having nothing that was their own, then the Lord said,

"I AM THINE INHERITANCE."

To the soul that yields everything it has to God, He says, as the father did in the parable, "Son, daughter, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine." With hands and hearts emptied, and with lives cleansed, we may reach out and apprehend that for which we are apprehended of God. Like children tenderly drawn from dangerous playthings, let us yield what is forbidden, and hear the voice which declares, "All things are yours, and ye are Christ's."

Lev. xxvi. 39 record's God's solemn words of warning, uttered in the wilderness, as to what would happen if his people did not obey Him when they came into the promised land; and the sum of it is in verse 33, "I will scatter you among the heathen." Then follow the promises, centring in the declaration (v. 44), "And yet, for all that, when they shall be in the land of their enemies, I will not cast them away." The fulfilment of both warning and promise is before our eyes in the Jewish race, which, though scattered all over the world, does not mingle with other peoples—a condition of things unparalleled in all history. Now, in the event of receiving a letter purporting to come from the Queen, I need not spend time in doubtful criticism upon it; for the signature, seal, and attestation at the foot would at once set my mind at rest. This Book of Leviticus, written 3,400 years ago, with these prophecies, 1,500 years before the final scattering of Israel, evidently bears God's sign-manual, attested as it is by the condition of that nation to-day.

Vows, freewill offerings, tithes—these are the topics of chap. xxvii. "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me?" I have naught to give Him, beyond that which is his own; yet, wonderful to relate, He would have me give this to Him, and hold it for Him! It has been beautifully said that God would have us to deal with our lives as the mother of Moses dealt with her child. When she freely gave him up, he was given back to be nursed for the king's daughter; and, moreover, the woman received wages. Oh, friends, if our lives are to pay in the end, if they are to count for anything they must be wholly yielded unto God! To Him must be given all that He claims.

WHEN WE MEET THE LORD,

Holiness, as God's mark of possession, must be upon your life, from its smallest detail to its greatest concern. Then shall the talents, few or many, given to be employed for Him, be used under his guidance, in his strength, for his service, and with the prospect of his reward in the glory.

Surely, none can fail to know, this morning, that God claims us, body, soul, and spirit, thoughts, possessions, and powers. With a fuller grasp, perhaps, of the exceeding breadth of his commandment, let us gladly yield all He desires and demands. Then shall we know his companionship and blessing, and delight to serve Him, as far as He can use us. As we have received, during these holy days of Conference, instruction as to "how ye ought to walk and to please God," may we each, in our measure, "abound more and more."

* Concluding Bible-reading at Keswick Convention.

Consecration and Daily Life.*

By Rev. F. B. MEYER.

"In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses, holiness unto the Lord; and the pots in the Lord's house shall be like the bowls before the altar. Yea, every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness unto the Lord of hosts; and all they that sacrifice shall come and take of them and seethe therein" (Zech. xiv. 20, 21).

THE attitude of consecration is hardly a matter of option to a true believer. The professing Christian who is not entirely consecrated to Christ, is really stealing the property of Him who has bought us by his precious blood, to be absolutely his own. Christ's body given to the tree, demands the corresponding gift of our entire being yielded to Him. Consecration does not make us Christ's, but is our recognition of his right in a purchased possession. The act of consecration should be consentaneous with the event of conversion. Consecration is of soul towards God, which is applicable to all our outward circumstances, and to all our inner conflicts. Every question is solved by the consideration—What would My Master desire from me at this point of my experience? This attitude is taken up by the will, not by the emotions. In cold blood, if I may use the expression, you may here and now choose that that which is true in the purpose of God shall be true in your life. The power of God, working by the Holy Ghost, in you and with you, makes possible that which you choose to be yours.

The text points out three great principles. First, concerning what is human and natural, consecration is not exclusive but is inclusive. There are things, such as ungodly alliances and worldly pleasures, which are as deleterious to the soul-life as is gas to a flower; and, in these cases, the Christian has no choice. In the name of Him whose dear hands were pierced for us, I ask you who would be his alone, and you will here and now put away anything that is blighting, blasting, and injuring your life. If heart and flesh fail, then trust the Holy Ghost for deliverance, that the evil thing may drop off as did the viper from Paul's hand.

But there are other things in the great range of human life, such as enjoyment and music, recreative games, and high-class literature—what of these? At first, the Israelites were not to have horses; and yet we know that this noble animal was created for man's use. In the eyes of Israel, however, the horse was associated with Egyptian pride and human might; hence, for a temporary purpose, horses were contraband.

But later, when the people were purged and purified by the discipline and providence of grace, horses were permitted; but then their bells, enamelled with the words on the frontlet of the high priest, were to ring out the same melody as those upon his blue robe. Hence, I argue that, when a thing is natural and innocent, it is better to bring it than to exclude it from the life. Hurtful associations, existing in connection with cricket and violin playing, led a friend to temporarily abandon these things at his conversion; but he afterwards found himself able to use them to the glory of God.

The second principle is, that we are to make no distinction between religious and secular duties. The prophet spoke of a day when the common vessels of God's house should have the same dignity as those used upon the altar. True holy living makes no difference between ministerial preparation for the week-evening service and that for the Sunday; and, under its influence, a teacher will be as punctual and careful with a class of grimy street arabs as he would be in the most solemn assembly of God's people. Everything is great that Jesus gives us to do for Him.

There is a third principle, namely, that consecration to Christ touches the commonest details of life. The law of gravitation as much affects the fall of a withered leaf to the forest floor, as it determines the flight of the planet through space. Living only for Jesus Christ, we make no distinction between secular and sacred. We have no water-tight compartments in the vessel of our life, so that we may say, "This is for my Lord, but that is not."

A man truly yielded to Christ will not make a rush for the best seat in the Convention Tent. He is ready to make way for some deaf person, or for one who is too weak to contend with the crowd. Walking into the great meeting, he says: "Lord, where wilt Thou have me to sit? If there is one to whom Thou would'st have me speak, guide me to the seat where I may do so." Consecration to Christ, as I understand it, means that, seeking to reach home when trams are few and crowded, we stand aside, that women and girls may be seated first. A truly consecrated soul would as soon do that as sing the most sacred song or utter the most solemn prayer.

I think, my young brothers, that consecration to the Lord Jesus Christ comes into the tennis-field; and, instead of pressing into the most skilful set, one spends an hour, perhaps, in teaching some blunderer to play better. It seems to me that true consecration, dear girl, may mean that you shall stay at home with your mother and care for her until she passes away, rather than go forth at the impulse of your own will to serve God in a distant land.

Being "only for Jesus" touches our behaviour at meals. As the servant of Jesus Christ, I must not be self-indulgent in the matter of rich food. Consecration puts us into so that we constantly ask ourselves what men will think of our Master, as they look at us. As I told Mr. Sheldon, his book will cost him much while he is in London; because every cabman he employs who knows him will expect something beyond the bare fare. We may often give a cabman an extra sixpence, "to keep up the honour of the kingdom." Everyone who sees the white cravat, knows that I profess to be Christ's servant; and I must keep the altar of my Master without stain. Into the common acts that lie, like vessels, between our rising in the morning and our rest at night, we may put a libation to pour out for Christ. We may say, "Lord, this care over my meals is for Thee; this guarding of speech is for Thee; this quiet retiring manner shall be increasingly for Thee." From morning to night our one thought should be, Master, what is thy will?

Such an attitude will affect our investments. Can any man who thus recognises the claims of his Lord invest his money in ventures which are dishonouring to Christ? Can he have shares in things which bring blight and stain upon vast numbers of his fellow-men? The law of being "only for Thee" touches the whole of our life in all its details and relations.

A NEEDED CAUTION.

Let us, further, note that they who do not use our nomenclature may be as consecrated as we are. Again and again I have met persons, especially in India, who have said, "Oh, these young people who come out from Keswick! To hear them talk, you would think that no one was consecrated before they came along. They seem to think that the Holy Ghost is the exclusive prerogative of Keswick people."

My reading in church literature has been wide and comprehensive. I have read the writings of men with whose doctrines I have no sympathy, but whose lives I revere; they do not use the word consecration, yet I will not assert that because they refuse the term they do not possess the thing itself. There are many Free Church ministers who stand aloof from Keswick; but I would not say that they may not be much more devoted than myself.

We have no right to set ourselves up as the exclusive guardians of the doctrine of consecration, nor as being the only recipients of the power of the Holy Ghost. Let us not use the word "Keswick" so frequently. Dare to believe that, in every branch of the true Church of God, there are men who are living as intense a life as we are trying to live, though they may never come within a hundred miles of this tent.

I quite understand the good motive of men who say, "As soon as you get home, tell others what has happened." But I would rather say, in the very presence of Jesus Christ, until people ask, "What on earth has happened to you?" Then comes your opportunity for testimony. Friends may differ from me, but, for my part, I would say to every young man and to every young woman who has resolved to be absolutely for Jesus Christ, go and live it. People will find it out, within half an hour of your getting home. If you can hide it, you have not received it; if you have received it, you will not need to talk about it. Nay, I take that word it back, and I say Him. It is Jesus Christ—absolutely and only and for evermore—Jesus Christ, the King of the heart and of the life.

BEGIN TO LIVE

Instead of Us.

"Instead of us." Oh! to know it thus,
For a fact beyond dispute;
Thou, Lord, wast punished instead of us,
As a perfect Substitute.

Instead of us at the judgment bar,
Where sentence of death was passed;
Instead of us, as condemned ones are Disgraced to the very last.

Instead of us where the stripes fell fast,
And thy back—not ours—was bared;
Instead of us in the biting blast,
Unsheltered, uncheered, unspared.

Instead of us, with the pierc'd side, Thou,
And the wounded hands and feet;
Instead of us with the thorn-set brow,
And the malefactor's mete.

Instead of us, where the light died out,
And the awful darkness spread;
Instead of us, in the land of drought,
Where no cooling streams are fed.

Instead of us, bringing wealth to pay
Our contracted debt of years;
Instead of us, claiming right of way
To realms that have seen no tears.

Instead of us. Oh! to find it out,
As a thing beyond dispute;
With never a tremor or a doubt,
To rest in our Substitute.

Missionaries in Egypt.

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—Probably you have seen a very severe critique in the August issue of the Nineteenth Century upon "Missionaries in Egypt." We sent a reply to the Editor, but he refused to insert it. I enclose you a copy.—Yours sincerely,

(Rev.) C. Inwood,
Chairman of Egypt Mission Band.

33, College Gardens, Belfast.

[Copy.]

To the Editor of the "Nineteenth Century."

Sir,—I have read an article occurring in the current issue of your valuable magazine on the subject of missionaries in Egypt, and as that article contains some very serious mis-statements which constitute the mainstay of the charge of "amazing imprudence" brought by the writer against myself as secretary of the Egypt Mission Band, I shall be glad if you will in the interests of truth kindly insert this correction.

The writer states that I had a certain controversial tract translated into Arabic, and having obtained the addresses of the principal Mohammedans in Egypt, "forwarded to them copies of the tract enclosed in wrappers which bore an unfortunate resemblance to those in which Government circulars are sent," implying, as his subsequent argument shows, that our object was to lead those to whom the tract was sent to believe that it came from the Government. Certainly if this were the case I should be the first to admit that it was not only an act of "amazing imprudence," but even gross folly. Not only was the tract not sent out in wrappers resembling those in use by the Government, but they were not sent out in wrappers at all, the address being simply written on the folded pamphlet. And to completely identify the tract with our mission our name and address was impressed by means of a rubber stamp on the outside of each copy. Besides, the postage stamp would sufficiently indicate that it was not official, as in Egypt there is a distinct Government stamp. By anyone undertaking the alphabet of missionary enterprise such a course of action as the writer attributes to us would be deemed too ridiculous for even a "young English missionary." Our constant care is to dissociate ourselves from all connection with the Government, and to insist on the purely spiritual character of our message.

The writer refers to our annual report for 1899, and would lead your readers to believe that our whole work consists of discussions day and night, and "living in a perpetual state of controversy and tension." He goes on to say "they had not the faintest idea of adopting any other method than that of conversion by theological argument." This is so far from the actual fact that our report even expressly states, "as a rule we refused to enter into controversy" (page 6), and in further contradiction I would say that we would not only have the idea of adopting other methods, but actually do adopt them, and at the present time we have two flourishing boys' schools with many Mohammedan pupils.

I will not trespass further on your valuable space, as I only desire to correct the mis-statements which I submit lent colour to the whole charge of imprudence brought against us in particular. That such statements should be made seems to me to indicate either culpable ignorance on the part of the writer, or else a deliberate attempt to mislead the British public as to the real issues at stake, and to obtain their sanction and sympathy in an anti-missionary campaign, especially in Mohammedan countries, such as Egypt and the Soudan.—Your obedient servant, J. Martin Cleaver,
Sec. Egypt Mission Band.

The Kilburn Sisterhood.—We would again warn our readers against appeals signed in the personal names of "Frances Ashdown" or "Clara Pettiward." They are being constantly addressed to the charitable public.

A Model City.—The seat of the American University of Harriman is a widely-known city in the east of Tennessee, whose citizens are noted for their energy, enterprise, hospitality and refinement. The city contains eighteen manufactories, nine churches, four railroads and no saloons. In fact, Harriman is a Prohibition city, and can never be anything else. In this respect, as in many others, it is a perfect model of what a modern city should be. The motto on the city's seal reads: "Prohibition, Peace and Prosperity," and the principles and teachings of the University are in harmony with its spirit. Its Chancellor, the venerable Dr. J. F. Spence, S.T.D., LL.D., is not only a distinguished educationist, but a gentleman who cherishes the loftiest ethical ideals, and labours with practical wisdom and great success for the general welfare of the community.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, September 9. Isaiah vii.

THE prophecies of chapters vii.-xii. were occasioned by the invasion of Judah by the kings of Syria and Israel, and by the alliance which Ahaz hastily formed with the King of Assyria for his protection. The prophet predicts the failure of the confederacy, but goes on to announce that Judah would ultimately be subjugated by its Assyrian allies. The whole series of prophecies is, therefore, full of precious teaching for us all.

The temptation to seek the aid of the King of Assyria, when we are confronted by the adverse circumstances of life, is a very real and pressing one. And, therefore, God sends his word to reassure us before we take so wrong and fatal a step. He says, "Take heed and be quiet; fear not, nor be fainthearted." He tells us that, if we are right with Him, no weapon that is formed against us shall prosper, and that every tongue raised in judgment against us shall be condemned. He assures us that the confederacy of evil shall not stand. He asks us to believe, since faith is the one condition of our steadfast establishment. Yea, He goes further, He gives us the word Immanuel as our watchword and rallying-cry — God with us.

If men turn from God's way of deliverance and peace, and summon creature help, they will bitterly rue their choice. They may have temporary relief. It may seem as though their policy has been justified by the event. But just as Israel would be so wasted by Assyria, that the people would cease to till the land, and return to the practices of a pastoral and nomad life, so the soul which turns from the Creator to the creature is ultimately reduced to the direst extremity. "He sent him into his fields to feed swine, and he would fain have filled himself with the husks."

MONDAY, September 10. Isaiah viii.

With sure prophetic intuition, that the confederacy between Syria and Israel for the destruction of Judah would be absolute, Isaiah named his child, "Haste, spoil! quick, prey!" The child thus became the symbol and reminder of the impending destruction of Syria and the Ten Tribes.

But there seems to have been a growing party in Jerusalem, which desired to make an alliance with these two nations against the growing power of Assyria. It may indeed be true, as it is supposed by some, that the hostility of Syria and Israel against Judah had been in the first instance excited by the refusal of Ahaz to join them in an offensive league against that dark northern kingdom, which threatened to engulf them all. If so, we can understand Isaiah's saying, that Jerusalem was in peril of refusing the Divine help, which he compared to the waters of Shiloah, a little brook, which flowed perennially from its hidden source beneath the Temple; and relying on Rezin and Remaliah's son. The air was full of the cry, "Confederacy, confederacy." Men were enthusiastic for a vast alliance, which should bring Assyria to book. "Nay," cries the great religious statesman of his time, "it must not be. Let God be your sanctuary, your refuge and strength, and the river of his protection shall make glad the city of God." But in vain!

How often have men turned from the Holy Spirit to spiritualism, from the Living to the dead, from the Holy Oracles to the chirp and muttering of the necromancer! There is no stint of this in these days of crystals, and clairvoyantes, and seances. But let us wait for God, and look for Him, that light may arise in our darkness; and whilst the souls of men fail for fear, we may lift up our heads and rejoice, as our redemption draweth nigh.

TUESDAY, September 11. Isaiah ix.

We pause to give here a better rendering of the opening verses of this magnificent prophecy, which begins with the last line of the previous chapter. "The thick darkness shall be driven away, for dimness shall not continue to her that had been in suffering. As the former time degraded the lands of Zebulun and Naphtali (because, on account of their close contiguity to Assyria and Babylon, they were constantly suffering the oppression of the foe), so the latter time shall honour Galilee of the Gentiles." And the prophet breaks forth into a sublime announcement of the Advent of the Deliverer, the light of whose coming was first shed around the shores of the Lake of Galilee, to give joy and gladness to the long-oppressed people who dwelt there, and so to spread over all the earth.

What joy heralds his Advent! It is as the joy of harvest-home; the joy of the victor, who divides the spoil; the joy of Israel, when beneath Gideon's leadership the long oppression of Midian was broken, and the land breathed again its native air of freedom.

What peace attends his reign! All the armour of the armed man in the tumult, and the garments rolled in blood, shall be for burning, for fuel of fire, i.e., all warlike implements and equipments shall be destroyed, and war shall be abolished.

> No war or battle's sound
> Is heard the world around;
> And kings sit still with awful eye,
> Because they surely know their Sovereign Lord is nigh.

What titles are his! They celebrate—the wonder of his nature; the wise counsel He instils; the might of his wonder-working arm; the eternal ages of which He is Father; the peace, of which He laid the foundations at the cross. Oh, let us put the government of our lives on his shoulder, and as that increases, so will our peace increase, and of either there shall be no end.

WEDNESDAY, September 12. Isaiah x.

Little do bad men ween, in all their pride of power, that they are but rods and instruments in the hand of God, and that He will lay them aside, when He has done with them. "He meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so." So, child of God, be not dismayed by the proud boastings of your oppressor. It is but for a moment. Meekly bend beneath the Father's rod. Think not of the man who hurts you—the Shimei that curses, the Judas that betrays; but go behind them both, to Him who is using them for his own purpose. It is a profound and comforting thought that those who oppress us, are only as the axe or saw, the staff or rod, in the hand of those who wield them, and absolutely powerless of themselves. "As if a staff should brandish those who wield it. As if a rod should lift up that which is no wood." Can a tool use its owner?

What a wealth of benediction accrues from chastisement rightly borne! The soul which has learnt its lesson returns to the Mighty God, and stays upon the Holy One in truth. It waits to see dreaded evils pass away. It knows that when the anointed Saviour is fully enthroned within, the burden ceases from off the neck, and the yoke is destroyed (v. 27). Is this your case, my reader? Have you put God's Anointed on the throne, so that all the city of Mansoul is at his feet? If so, fear no more the oppressor's tyranny; there shall be a certain release and emancipation from his power. His onset may be swift and terrific, stage after stage may witness his furious on-coming, but when he is in sight of his prey, he shall fall as a mighty tree suddenly felled by the axe, and your Redeemer shall secure your entire deliverance.

THURSDAY, September 13. Isaiah xi.

In these two chapters Isaiah seems to lose sight of the political affairs around him, and passes into a sublime description of the days of the Messiah; and this is referred to by the Apostle Paul as one of the notable predictions of our Lord's Advent (Rom. xv. 12). The picture is that of a vine cut down to the ground, but beginning to bear fruit again; and reminds us of the lowliness of our Saviour's origin. Joseph and Mary were of the house and lineage of David, but we know how poor and obscure they were. The Scion of the royal house, who was to revive it to more than its former glory, was born in a stable; but how greatly He was enriched by the Holy Ghost! From the waters of baptism He came, saying, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, and He hath anointed Me."

We, too, may be lowly and obscure, but on us that same Spirit may rest. It is specially good to know that through his grace we may be made "quick of scent" (R v. marg.). In such a world as ours this is peculiarly necessary. How often have we been saved from fever and cholera, issuing as an effluvium from an untrapped drain, because our sense of smell has warned us that danger was near, and we have started back! So the Holy Spirit may make us equally quick in spiritual sensitiveness, and we shall know almost instinctively when some book or companionship is fraught with evil.

The beautiful picture of Peace and Righteousness with which the chapter closes has been the dream of the weary ages. Some day it must be realized; but ere that happy result is achieved in the world, let us ask that it may be fulfilled in the Church, and in our own hearts.

FRIDAY, September 14. Isaiah xii.

An exquisite psalm, which has been prepared by the Holy Ghost against that glad day, when Israel shall be saved and restored, and when the Gentiles, with God's ancient people, shall be gathered round the Rod from the stem of Jesse, which shall have become the Banner of the peoples (xi. 10). It reminds us of Miriam's song in Exodus xv., and anticipates the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb.

But there is a tender appropriateness in every clause of this psalm of triumph for the redeemed children of God, especially for those who have had much forgiven, and whose hearts are overflowing with tender memories of God's great goodness.

Yes, my God, Thou wast deservedly wroth, because knowing the better I did the worse; but I have come back from the swine-trough. Thou hast brought me back as the sheep and the silverling. Thine anger is turned away, and Thou drawest near me with words of comfort. Thou art my salvation from the results and consequences of my wrong-doing, trampling out the fires I have kindled in the dry grass, standing between me and the consequences of my mistakes and sins. Against all future temptations Thou art my strength, and, amid all anxieties and sorrows, my song. From thy deep and loving heart, in all coming days, I will draw salvation; and it shall be the glad aim of my life to incite others to praise Thee.

SATURDAY, September 15. Isaiah xiii.

This chapter begins the third section of this book, which continues to the end of xxiii. It contains twelve burdens of prophecy against the surrounding nations. Would that we might be burdened with the weight of others' sins and their inevitable consequences! When we have to proclaim the terrible punishment that must follow on sin, would that we might do it with breaking hearts!

The prophet's quick ear detects the gathering of the nations against Babylon, the panic of the Chaldeans, the carnage and bloodshed caused by the pitiless Medes, and the ultimate overthrow of the proud city, which even Daniel compared to the golden head of the fourfold image. So literally have these words been fulfilled, that even to this day the wildest animals make their home among the ruins of Babylon, and the Arabs are superstitiously fearful of spending the night in its neighbourhood. "Their houses are full of doleful creatures, and ostriches dwell there, and shaggy goats gambol there; wolves cry in their palaces, and jackals in their halls of pleasure." This prophecy is all the more remarkable when it is remembered, that at the time of its utterance, Babylon was but a part of the kingdom of Assyria, and had not risen into prominence. But if these words have been literally fulfilled, what hope they inspire that God will as literally realize the predictions as to the fate of Babylon the Great, the rival of the Bride of the Lamb. (See Rev. xviii., xix.)

How Foreigners Treat the Chinese.

WE have been kept for the past month in an awful suspense with regard to the fate of those shut up in Pekin.

For some time past the murder of missionaries has become of common occurrence, and nothing very satisfactory seems to have been done or determined upon to ensure their safety. They are here under the same treaty rights as the merchant and the minister. As a missionary in this port, and doing business work for some hundreds of missionaries in outfitting, passages, &c., I have from time to time asked their opinion as to the general state of things, and it has been one of general sorrow and disgust at the home Governments in allowing the Empress Dowager to usurp the throne, and hide away the Emperor, and in taking no active step towards his recovery.

Foreigners and missionaries alike have expressed their opinion that nothing would be done until a foreign Minister was murdered. This has proved to be the case. We ask ourselves towards the foreigners? Some are bold and wicked enough to say it is the missionary. Li Hung Chang recently expressed himself that it was chiefly towards the Roman Catholics, and circumstances prove he is right; for in all cases of riot the Roman Catholics are the first to suffer, and no one can contradict the statement that as a body they are hated by the Chinese.

A lady told me to-day that in the Treaty port where she labours a native tailor a few days since called on her asking for work. She said, "Why do you ask me for work when notices are put up saying we are all to be killed?" He replied, "That is the Tien Chu huei"—or Roman Catholics and the Customs officials. She knew they hated the Roman Catholics, but said, "Why do you hate the Customs people?" Said he, "I make coat, ask for money; he say he have no time; he have got time, he sit still do nothing. I go again ask money; he cut my money, and then pay me."

Turning to Europeans and Americans who live in these ports, the Chinese suffer much at their hands. I asked a tradesman why he charged me one price and the foreigner another. He replied, "We can catch your money; but foreign man go away, and we lose money." No business man at home would put up with the treatment to which many foreigners subject the Chinese out here. The poorer, or coolie class, suffer most.

My wife was recently eye witness to a Parsee riding in his trap in a main street. The traffic was congested, as it often is; immediately in front of the trap was a large truck of cases from the dock drawn by six coolies, they in turn waiting for the road to clear before them. The Parsee took the whip from his driver and lashed the men terribly over face and neck. I myself saw a young man driving a dogcart and very fast pony. An elderly Chinaman was crossing the road quite away from the trap, when the driver struck him with the whip across the face. It is no uncommon thing to see foreigners kick or strike the Chinese in the streets, especially if they use the footways. I have myself received both when in Chinese dress—on one occasion by a well-dressed French lady, who begged my pardon when she saw I was an Englishman.

Then there is the opium question—the long and lasting stigma that is attached to that, the baneful and sinful effects which we can never wipe out, and for which the Chinese very rightly hate us.

During my twenty years of business life in the city of London, and my work among the poor there, I never saw anything to equal the cruel and brutal treatment that Chinese receive at the hands of the foreigner. No parallel would be suffered for a moment in any European or American city. Then it is wondered why the foreigner is hated, or why the Chinee wreaks his vengeance on them when he gets a chance!

VERITAS.

Shanghai, July 16.

THE LATE

Mrs. Mary Anne Clark,

OF PALAMCOTTAH.

THE subject of this biographical outline was a member of a missionary family. Her great grandfather, Rev. B. Kohlhoff, afterwards a fellow worker with the great Schwarz, was one of the pioneer missionaries to India, arriving in the country in 1737, to carry on missionary work in Tanjore. Passing over a generation, we find that Mrs. Clark's mother, Mrs. Baker, of Kottayam, Travancore, was engaged in missionary work from girlhood till her death, at the advanced age of eighty-six. Mrs. Baker's name is a familiar one in all missionary circles, in consequence of her long and remarkable connection with the Church Missionary Society. She was, just before she died, teaching in her school the great grandchildren of her first pupils! Mrs. Clark's father and brother, both of whom bore the honoured name of Rev. Henry Baker, were C.M.S. Missionaries, the former, with Messrs. Bailey and Fenn, being the first representative of that Society in Travancore. It was always a joy to Mrs. Clark to know that the labours of these early workers in the foreign field were at length bearing such a rich and abundant harvest.

Mrs. Clark was married to Rev. William Clark, of the Church Missionary Society, in 1851, and would thus have celebrated her golden wedding next year. For thirty-five years she was engaged in missionary work at Palamcottah and Nallur, in Tinnevelly, and then in Ceylon and Travancore, in co-operation with her husband. During that time she had the privilege of establishing and carrying on many mission schools for girls of various castes, a sphere in which her unusual ability had full scope. Her great command of the Tamil and Malayalam languages enabled her to give much personal attention to the management of these schools, and she constantly conducted classes herself, especially those for the study of the Scriptures.

In 1884, Rev. W. Clark retired from active missionary work, and in 1885 Mr. and Mrs. Clark removed to Bombay. It was not long before Mrs. Clark connected herself with the Y.W.C.A. movement in the city, and after a period of helpful service as an ordinary member, she became honorary secretary for Byculla in 1889; many of the older members of that branch remember with pleasure her loving and helpful efforts on their behalf. At the close of that year, Mrs. Clark became honorary general secretary of the Association. During her tenure of this office the Association made great progress; branches were established at Surat, Lonauli, and Igatpuri; the building fund was largely increased; and the "Monthly Letter," the organ of the local Association, was started.

In January, 1895, Mrs. Clark resigned the honorary general secretaryship of the Y.W.C.A., after four years' service in that capacity, and as a mark of their appreciation of the good work she had done, the members presented her with a testimonial in the form of a silver tea service, and the most kindly expressions of loving regard. In 1894, Mrs. Clark met with an accident which, though apparently very slight, caused such serious injury that an operation became necessary. It was hoped that all danger had been averted, but, after passing through further operations and much suffering, it was found that the disease was beyond cure. Notwithstanding all this, Mrs. Clark, at the call for a worker to take charge of one of the Malayalam Mission schools at her old home, Kottayam in Travancore, offered for the post, and for nearly two years discharged the very arduous duties, with much blessing and success.

Just before Christmas, 1898, she returned with her husband to Western India, and settled down in Nasik. In the quiet little C.M.S. village of Sharanpur (the "City of Refuge"), the last days of her life were passed. Though in much suffering and great weakness, she always took the keenest interest in all Christian work around her, especially that of the C.M.S., the Y.M.C.A., and the work among the Jews. Her desire to "go home" was only equalled by her longing for the Lord's coming, and her mind dwelt constantly on the goodness of God to her and hers. Almost her last written words were those of Joshua xxiii. 14, "Not one thing hath failed"—referring to the entire verse.

She passed away in perfect peace about midday on January 27 last, at the age of sixty-nine years, her husband and elder daughter being with her. For her there is no cause for grief, but rather those whom she left may glory in her joy and the blessed rest that she enjoys with her Lord and Saviour. In Mrs. Clark Christian workers in India indeed lost an honoured and true friend.

Lebanon Hospital for the Insane.

WE have drawn attention from time to time to this work for alleviating the sufferings of the insane in Bible Lands.

Since the days when our Lord trod "those holy fields," so far as is known nothing has been done for these poor mentally afflicted ones, who are allowed to roam about at will, often with serious results, or chained up to rocks in caves when they become too unmanageable.

Mr. Waldmeier, who, after nearly thirty years' residence in the East as a missionary, has undertaken the cause of these afflicted ones, visited Great Britain and America about three years ago, and great interest was aroused in his hospital scheme. An influential committee was formed in London, and sufficient money was subscribed to enable him to go back to Beyrout, buy the needful land, and erect a hospital under the control of an executive committee. This building is now completed, and open to patients.

The hospital has been erected after designs approved by mental specialists in Great Britain and America. There is one large administration block, which includes offices, medical and business superintendents' residences, and stores; two large hospital buildings, or cottages, containing room for twenty patients each; and a nurses' home. There are about thirty-four acres of land (freehold), and this is being utilized as far as possible for cereals, &c. At present there is room for forty patients, and the hospital is being filled up rapidly with the most needy cases.

It is hoped that, later on, when the prejudices of the rich natives have worn off, some of the better class of paying patients will be sent, and this will, in a measure, pay for some of the poorer ones. At present, however, support can only be looked for from friends who are touched with the hopeless present condition of the insane in Bible Lands.

It is estimated that each patient will cost about £25 per annum. The treasurer of the London committee is Sir Richard Tangye, and the secretary, Mr. Francis C. Brading, 35, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.

Copies of the new annual report (illustrated) will be sent on application.

Pastor F. E. Marsh, OF SUNDERLAND.

BY local testimony and general report, Pastor F. E. Marsh, of Bethesda Free Chapel, Sunderland, is a hard-working minister. He is not only hard-working, but ever to the fore in social and temperance as well as evangelical effort. In the words of a local writer, he is "a powerfully-built man, with strong features, zealous, enthusiastic, and aggressive."

So, also, we have found our friend. To be enthusiastic, is of course, to incur the suspicions of the over-cautious; and to be boldly aggressive, is to ensure the condemnation of self-complacent moderates. Pastor Marsh, however, holds his powers and talents as a stewardship, and regards the opportunities of life as God-provided occasions for hearty service. His sincerity is as unquestioned as his earnestness is apparent; and this cannot but be where practising and preaching are properly related and combined.

Mr. Marsh is a native of Brighton, where he was born in 1853, and spent his youth and early manhood. Coming to London in 1877, he engaged in religious work, identifying himself with the Evangelization Society. Being a practical man of business, he found a ready hearing among the common people. His work took him all over the country, and God greatly owned his exertions to bring men to a knowledge of the Gospel. He was much sought after by the Churches, and in many cases his engagements were booked twelve months in advance.

At length his ministry entered upon changed conditions. From travelling in the Gospel he settled down to pastoral work. This was not of his own ordering. In 1887 the pulpit of Bethesda Free Chapel became vacant by the death of Rev. A. A. Rees, and Mr. Marsh's name was brought before the members. He entered upon temporary labour among the people, and it was obvious that he was the right man for the sphere. The invitation was unanimous, and it was accepted in reliance upon the Great Head of the Church.

Bethesda is a church with a history. In general classification it would be reckoned as "Baptist" in principles. It originated in the work of Rev. Arthur Augustus Rees, a remarkable man, who started life as a midshipman in the navy, and left the service to enter upon religious work. This action greatly displeased his friends, who refused to help him in educational preparation. A clergyman raised the needful funds to send Mr. Rees to college, and at length he became curate to Rev. W. Webb, rector of Sunderland, being ordained by Bishop Maltby in 1841. Owing to departures from the liturgy, and to certain features in Mr. Rees' preaching, differences arose between the young cleric and his Bishop, and ultimately Mr. Rees wrote a "Farewell to the Church of England."

Meantime, a congregation gathered round the uncompromising Evangelical preacher, and in due course Bethesda was built. It was opened without ceremony and without debt; and, what is better, was from the first filled with hearers. Every seat was free, and boxes were placed at the doors for voluntary contributions. This plan proved successful, and has continued ever since.

The latest returns of the church show nearly 900 members on the books. The membership has increased during the superintendency of Mr. Marsh, no less than 750 having been admitted to fellowship during his faithful pastorate. From time to time Pastor Marsh has received tokens of the warm affection and loyal co-operation of his people. His outside work, at conventions and other large gatherings, has the sympathetic interest of the church, which takes a deep interest in foreign missions. There are at the present time missionaries in North Africa, South Africa, West Indies, China, and India, who have gone out from Bethesda. Two missionaries are supported by friends in the church, besides occasional help given to three others.

Mr. Marsh believes in extension no less than consolidation. There are in connection with his church no fewer than eight offshoots, in the shape of missions in various parts of the town, and to keep these supplied with speakers and workers there is a body of about 100 young men and ladies on the plan. There are two elders and fifteen deacons, and everything in connection with the government and administration of the place is carried out with regularity and order. There are, of course, a Sunday school, Christian bands, &c., and it may be mentioned that during the year an average sum of £2 a week is distributed among the poor members.

Though the congregation does not consist of rich people, so conscientious are the members in the matter of giving that all the work of the church is carried on without a penny of debt being incurred. Another curiosity in connection with Bethesda is that the pastor has no fixed salary. Boxes are placed beside the others at the different doors, and into these are placed contributions for the pastor's use. The jubilee of the chapel was celebrated on March 22, 1895, and it was then stated that during the fifty years of its existence 2,663 persons had been enrolled as members.

The administrative abilities of the Pastor are also placed at the service of the general public. This is as it should be. For several years Mr. Marsh has been a member of the Sunderland Board of Guardians, where he has opportunities of looking after the social welfare of the poor, and where his early business training has stood him in such good stead that he was for some time chairman of the Finance Committee. He is connected with the Vigilance Association, a warm friend of the Y.M.C.A., and is ever forward when local distress calls for a special public effort for its alleviation. He is also Secretary of the Free Church Council, thus helping in a definite manner the larger enterprises of the Church of Christ in the important town in which he resides.

It only remains to add, by way of completing this slight sketch, that Pastor Marsh is a travelled minister. In 1890 he went to America as an invited speaker at Mr. Moody's Convention, and gave a course of Bible lectures to students at Chicago. More recently he has paid another visit to "the other side," and was cordially received in Christian circles. May he long continue to witness for the Lord and labour among his people!

Things which Abide.
By Pastor F. E. MARSH, Sunderland.

THE eternal things of the Eternal God are, as the adjective implies, endless in their duration, imperishable in their character, and abiding in their nature.

I. The Abiding Christ. "Christ abideth for ever" (John xii. 34). The statement was made by those who had no sympathy with Christ, but it is none the less true. The title "Christ" is used in three senses in the New Testament.

In the Gospels, it is the Personal Christ, as the Anointed of God sent into the world (John xvii. 3); in the Acts it is the Official Christ, as the One who occupies the highest place in heaven, as the channel of blessing, by virtue of his death on the cross (Acts ii. 33-36); and in the Epistles, it is the Mystical Christ, for the Church is identified with Him (1 Cor. xii. 12). The glory of his Messiahship, the benefits of his offices, and the partnership of his Church are things which will remain.

II. The Abiding Spirit. "I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever" (John xiv. 16). In bodily presence Christ had to leave his disciples; in contrast, the Holy Spirit, the other Helper, will remain always with us. This must be so, for He is the seal within us unto the day of redemption (Eph. iv. 30), the earnest of the glory (Eph. i. 14), and the first fruits of the harvest of final deliverance (Rom. viii. 23). As when Eliezer went into the far country to get Rebekah as a bride for Isaac, and then conducted her all the way to his home; so the Holy Spirit having found us, and saved us, will be with us till we meet our Divine Isaac in the air.

III. The Abiding Word. "The Word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever" (1 Pet. i. 23). The Word of God is "settled" in its abode (Ps. cxix. 89), "sure" in its statements (2 Pet. i. 19), "living" in its character (Heb. iv. 12, R.V.) mighty in its operations (Acts xix. 20), sanctifying in its ministry (John xvii. 17), incorruptible in its essence (1 Pet. i. 23), and lasting in its duration (Mat. xxiv. 35).

IV. The Abiding Fruit. "Your fruit should abide" (John xv. 16, R.V.). There are four stages of fruit-bearing mentioned in John xv. (1) "Fruit;" (2) "more fruit;" (3) "much fruit;" and (4) "abiding fruit" (verses 2, 4, 5, 8, 16). There are four definite thoughts attached to these four stages in fruit-bearing. The secret of fruit-bearing is vital union with Christ. The secret of "much fruit"-bearing is communion with Christ. The secret of "more fruit"-bearing is through the gracious discipline and pruning of the Heavenly Husbandman; and the secret of abiding fruit is, on the Divine side, his choice of us, and on our side, our choice of his will, for that is the meaning of prayer in his name.

V. The Abiding Work. "If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward" (1 Cor. iii. 14). There is a great deal of difference between "fruit" and "work." The first refers to what we are, and the second to what we do. The material we are to build on the foundation is, the gold of Divine righteousness the silver of Christ's atonement (Ex. xxx. 12; 1 Pet. i. 18), and the precious stones of Christ's glory. This sort of material will stand the test of the judgment of Christ, and will abide to the worker's credit and reward; while the wood, hay and stubble of man's opinion, and self-utterance, will all be burnt up to the worker's loss.

VI. The Abiding Graces. "Now abideth faith, hope, and love" (1 Cor. xiii. 13, R.V.). Some have thought faith is to be done away with when we see Christ, but will not our confidence in Him then be without alloy? Some have thought hope will flee away in the glory, but will not every fresh view of Christ's glory awaken in us the desire to see more, and will that hope be disappointed? Love certainly must remain, for it is the harmony of heaven, the bliss of the glorified, and the nature of God.

VII. The Abiding Saints. "He that doeth the will of God abideth for ever" (1 John ii. 17). God's will-doers are his well-abiders. God's will and our weal are like two halves of an orange; the one is the complement of the other. A permanent place in God's realm is found by being under his reign. Doing God's will is like the train keeping on the rails; it is the secret of advancement in his ways. There are three "P's" we always ought to remember in relation to God's will. Its Pattern is Christ Himself (Ps. lx. 8; Luke xxii. 42); its Power is the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. xii. 11; Phil. ii. 13; 1 Thes. v. 24); and its Pathway is the Word of God (Eph. i. 9).

Soldiers in South Africa.

AMONG the troops at the front, the South Africa General Mission continues its beneficent work. In reference to recent operations with the Highland Brigade, Mr. Arthur Mercer, the secretary, writes:—

"On the march between Ventersburg and Lindley, the mission cart did service as an ambulance waggon to some footsore men, and in the evenings, prayer meetings were held around it, to which many of the Christians came. At one of these a lad said, 'We are tired in body to-day, and our feet are sore, but, Lord, our hearts are light.' It is interesting to hear that the chorus 'Jesus will never fail,' has become the chorus of the campaign with the Highland Brigade, the men singing or whistling it during the day, and not thinking a service complete without it.

"It is no uncommon thing for the workers to give up their horses to men who find themselves too foot-sore to continue the journey, and during or after an engagement they proceed on foot to the field to see if anyone is needing their help.

"Sometimes they have to take shelter behind an ant heap to avoid the bullets. At Heilbron Mr. Darroll tells of experiences among

THE WOUNDED SEAFORTHS.

One, a sergeant, was shot through the heel; another, a bugler lad, severely wounded in the hand.

"Warm underclothing was taken to some of the men who were in need of it in the hospital. One of these was found nearly dying of a very bad wound, and so the invitation of Jesus, 'Come unto Me and I will give you rest,' was passed on to him. The poor fellow said, 'It is beautiful; I should like to give my heart to Christ,' and it is believed he really met with God. Being asked if there was nothing he would like done, he said, 'If anything happens to me, write to mother.'

"Sometimes during the weary marches men are found who have decided for Christ long after the meetings at which they heard the Gospel proclaimed, and many of their testimonies give evidence of the blessed work God has been doing in Camp Soldiers' Homes. One lad—a backslider, who returned to God at Modder River—had the message on a certain Monday morning, 'When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee . . . through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt.' Being in charge of one of the ammunition mules, he had during the day to rush through a heavy fire with his cap full of ammunition, for those of his comrades who had run short of it. Remembering his morning's promise, his heart was kept in perfect peace.

"AT WYNBERG, night after night the large S.A.G.M. recreation tent is filled almost to overflowing with convalescents, who have the appearance of being very much at home as they read, engage in games, or play on the much-appreciated piano. The meetings are held in the marquee adjoining, and three nights a week this is filled, the Old, Old Story finding its entrance as life and power into sad and weary hearts, a notable feature of the work having been the restoration to God of quite a number of backsliders.

"Many Christian soldiers from different parts of the world rally round our workers, and most of them have much liberty in the prayer meetings held at the beginning or close of the services. Besides the men who congregate at night in the marquees, there are many others who prefer to spend their evenings outside the camp, and so find their way to the bright and cheery Soldiers' Home. Here also they come in contact with our workers."

Rev. Norman Bennet, writing from Bloemfontein, to Mr. Walters of the Scripture Gift Mission, says: "I have been able to put in some work here as well as at St. Helena. No sooner do the boxes of arrive at the front, than their contents are carefully distributed. Everyone is keen for a copy, from the chaplains of the forces downwards. All the chaplains are helping. At Kaffir River I gave to all the men of the Norfolk Regiment, also to a number of Mounted Infantry stationed there. At Kornspruit I supplied a further company of the Norfolks, also gave copies to a number of men at Vet Camp nearer Bloemfontein. I go out each day with my haversacks filled to overflowing, and have in this way supplied companies of the Gloucesters, Army Service Corps, Engineers, General Kelly Kenny's men, Cape Mounted Police, Post Office Corps, &c. I have had many pointed talks with the men, as the presentation of such a memento gives one a grand opportunity. I am now going to Sand River with 1,000 copies for distribution on the lines of communication, and the friends at home may thank God that it was put into their hearts to send this witness for God to be given out to our soldier sons."

Amanda Smith's Orphan Home.

OUR sister writes from North Harvey, Illinois, with reference to the Industrial Home for coloured orphans, which was opened free of debt in June, 1899:—"The Lord is with us, and blessing us. The Home has now fifteen inmates. Our first anniversary was a success in every way, except financially. Since then our little folks had a prize oratorical contest, and did nobly in the presence of a crowded audience.

"At times our faith is being severely tested, but God never fails us. We sweetly realize that 'Bread shall be given him, his waters shall be sure.' I have just returned from a camp-meeting. While there, with some of the children who recited and sang to the people, I mentioned our need of a cow. At the close of the meeting £10 was presented to me for that purpose. So the Lord is providing for us—blessed be his name.

"The receipts from our little paper, The Helper, the book 'Amanda Smith's Own Story,' and the souvenir book-marks, along with our evangelistic work, have enabled us to meet all our incidental expenses, and so far to keep out of debt. Our present need for repairs, making garden, and other absolute necessities, is about £200, and for our endowment fund we want 20,000 dols. Of this amount we have deposited about 500 dols., which is in the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago."

The Indian Famine.

COMMUNICATIONS from India continue to bring tidings more or less distressing. Rain has fallen in many districts, but in other parts it is still awaited with intense anxiety, and the suffering in consequence is beyond description. Day and night the piercing cries of terror and anguish arising from the helpless victims of famine, give place to the piteous wail of the dying. The plague of cholera falls upon a gradually starving people, already grappling with death.

It is impossible to give in detail the heart-rending accounts forwarded by missionaries and others, through whose hands the contributions of friends have been administered.

From Belgaum, Bombay Presidency, Mr. Villiers F. Hunter writes: "Mr. Bird and myself have just returned from a short visit through one of the worst famine districts, and we hope never again to witness such sights, and hear such sounds and cries. At the railway sidings children could be found sifting the dirt to find a little grain. Houses unroofed, and the wood work taken out, indicated what the owners must have suffered. Cattle wandering in processions, vainly and falling down one by one. Along the roadside could be seen men, women, and children climbing the trees and devouring any green to be found."

Writing from the Wesleyan Mission at Faizabad, Miss M. J. Fentiman says: "With the donation you have sent me I shall be able to enlarge the industry considerably and take on several more women. By teaching the women some industry we enable them to earn a livelihood, find them occupation, call forth latent talents, and give them a deeper interest in life. The poverty among Mohammedan widows and deserted wives is most appalling. We give the women we gather together in the industrial class daily religious instruction, and pray that many of them may be led to Christ."

Mrs. F. M. Hewlett, Shanti Kothi, Benares, in a recent communication, remarks:—"I am making garments for the girls who attend my school, as many of them are without clothes, and their parents are unable to provide both food and clothing."

From Madak, Nizam's Dominions, Rev. Charles W. Posnett, of the Wesleyan Mission, writes:—"I have been shocked beyond measure to find that some of our Christian people, fleeing from the famine camp, have been stricken down in their flight, and without a hand to help or a friend to comfort. Many people are acting as if the rains were the end of our troubles, whereas it is just the opposite; for those who have endured twelve months of famine can hardly live through the next four months of hard toil on the phantom vision of a harvest festival five months ahead, when all has been gathered. In another two months, when the crops have half-grown, it may be possible to wrest a loan from the money-lending sharks, who are the curse of India; but if only a little is obtained the interest rises, and when the crop is cut a handful of armed servants appear. They will show the paper he signed, but could not read, and by sheer force will take away a hundred fold their due, while the man falls at their feet begging for sufficient to be left for the needs of his children. To save such as these from the all-devouring jaws of the usurer; to provide cattle and seed for those who have lost all; to give medicine to the cholera stricken, whose friends come even in the night-time, and while in bed will seize our feet, and with a voice full of anxious terror of death, beg for help—such a service is full of joy, which even the angels might well covet. I have seventy-six orphan and destitute children whom I have taken in during the last few months, whose drawn faces and prominent bones are a silent, eloquent, appeal one cannot withstand. The price of grain is so high it is most costly to feed them all."

THE POOR CULTIVATOR

Mr. Sankey's Visit.

SACRED SONG AND STORY.

ON Friday last, Mr. Ira D. Sankey, accompanied by Mrs. Sankey, landed at Queenstown en route for Cork, where he held his first meeting on Sunday.

"What is the precise purpose of your visit, Mr. Sankey?" I asked, as soon as I found myself alone with him.

"Partly work, partly pleasure," he responded, genially; "or, rather, to make pleasure of work. I have so many friends in Great Britain and Ireland whose faces I want to see again while health permits, and it is not likely that I shall ever cross the ocean again after I return home."

"I suppose you are overwhelmed with invitations?" I suggested. "Why, yes!" he replied. "Somewhere near a hundred, I guess, and shall accept as many as possible."

"Are your meetings to be evangelistic?" I asked. "Well no, not exactly. You see I shall only hold one, or at most two, in each town I visit. My idea is rather to meet the Christian people, and renew the acquaintance of old friends."

"Then what form will the gatherings take? You will sing, of course?" "Yes; many of the hymns we have been using all these years, as well as some of the new ones, have histories or associations more or less remarkable, to relate, which will, I believe, prove not only interesting, but also a means of encouragement and blessing. I shall therefore intersperse my singing with and stories, some of a humorous, some of a serious character; making them all subservient, of course, to the spiritual purpose of the meeting. I am not a preacher, but I hope, in the way I have indicated, to make the way of salvation plain and real, believing that God will bless these hymns again and again, as He has in days gone by."

"You must have quite a collection of such incidents and experiences!" "Yes, I have; enough for a book—or two. In fact, I hope some day to publish a volume containing the most striking ones. I have been at work at it, on and off, for some time; but I don't know when it will be finished."

"Well, Mr. Sankey, now about your programme. To begin with, how long is it since you were in Cork, and what plans have you got fixed?" "It is seventeen years since, with Mr. Moody, I paid my first and only visit to this city until now. Mr. Moody was here in 1892, when he laid the corner-stone of the present Y.M.C.A. building. I am only holding one meeting, and from here I go to Limerick, Waterford, and Dublin, before crossing to England."

"Are you not going to Belfast? You will be badly wanted there, in view of the great gatherings you and Mr. Moody have held there in former years." "Yes; but I can't get there just now. I shall be in Glasgow later on, and shall hope, if possible, to visit Belfast from there. I am due in London on the 13th for a great meeting in Exeter Hall, where a reunion of our old choirs is to take place, and Sir George Williams is to preside. After that I am to sing at the opening of the new Metropolitan Tabernacle, for which three or four days of meetings are announced. Mr. C. H. Spurgeon was a warm supporter of our evangelistic work, and the last time I sang there was at his funeral. I feel it therefore to be a special privilege to help his good son Tom in any way I can, for he has great responsibilities weighing upon him, which I am glad to know he is discharging nobly and well."

"Have you any towns in your mind you would especially like to visit?" "Yes, but it might sound invidious to name them. I may be excused, though, if I mention York for one, seeing that it was there Mr. Moody and I held our first meeting in the British Isles; and while so near, Newcastle and Sunderland may be included, while of course, Glasgow and Edinburgh have special claims on account of the great permanent evangelistic agencies which arose out of our visit in 1873-4, and which have been carried on ever since. Then there are other cities in which marked blessing was experienced, such as Liverpool, Manchester, &c. But these are typical of so many that I'd best not enlarge upon them."

"You will have a choir in each town you visit, I suppose?" "Yes, I hope so. For one thing, it is hard work at my age (I spent my sixtieth birthday in mid-ocean the other day) to run a meeting from beginning to end single-handed, singing and talking the whole while; and it will relieve the audience to have an occasional change of voice. Besides, we have always found a choir of great use while audiences are assembling and leaving."

"You referred to your age, Mr. Sankey. You don't show any signs of failing health." "No, perhaps not; I am thankful for all the vigour vouchsafed to me for so many years, and for that which I still enjoy. But there must come a time when a man needs to let up a bit, and I have not spared myself these thirty years. That is one reason why I do not propose to stay more than a day or two in each place I visit; the other is that I want to cover as much ground as possible and see all the old friends I can during my stay."

It was certainly a very encouraging reception that the people of Cork gave to Mr. Sankey as he inaugurated his new campaign on Sunday afternoon. The meeting was announced for 4 p.m., but as early as 2.30 a hundred or more persons were waiting outside the Assembly Rooms for the doors to be opened. By 3.30 every nook and cranny was occupied—aisles, platform, doorways, and adjoining rooms all being requisitioned, to say nothing of the doorsteps and pavement outside, which held a throng of disappointed lingerers long after the doors had to be finally closed.

Hale and hearty, smiling and genial as ever, Mr. Sankey briefly explained to his audience the object of his coming among them. He had just been at Northfield Conference — and here, at the outset, he paid a grateful and to his beloved friend, Mr. Moody, with whom he had for so many years been a fellow-labourer in the Gospel. "We were very happily united," he explained at a later stage, when, relating how Mr. Moody had called upon him suddenly to sing a hymn with which he was unfamiliar; "he was captain of the ship, and there could be but one, so I had to obey."

The gathering was an important one in view of two facts—first, the vast preponderance of Roman Catholics over Protestants in the city; second, the notable proportion of young people present, to whom, until now, "Mr. Sankey" had been no more than a name.

Nor was there a dull moment from the time the choir commenced to sing till the benediction was pronounced. But it was left to the post-conclusion of the meeting to demonstrate how far Mr. Sankey had gauged the Christians of Cork aright in assuming that he had many friends among them; for, for nearly half-an-hour, they pressed upon him to shake his hand and to express their pleasure at his all too brief visit.

The service itself was homely and informal. Old and new hymns were sung, interspersed with brief talks about their origin, or the varied associations that had clustered round them.

It was gratifying to find that the voice of the singer showed no trace of failure, and that, as compared with his prolonged use of it, in the missions of 1883-4, for example (which is more clearly in the memory of the majority than the earlier visit), no appreciable change could be detected.

One meeting in Limerick and one in Waterford complete the present week's engagements, followed by two meetings in Dublin on Sunday; and subsequently the London gatherings. Mr. Sankey may be addressed during his stay: care of the office of The Christian. G.

A large meeting, in the form of a reception to Mr. Sankey, has been arranged by the

The Blankenburg Conference.

IT is remarkable that each of the three great Conventions, which I have been privileged to attend during July and August, has been overshadowed by the sense of irretrievable loss—that at Keswick, by the death of the beloved Macgregor; that at Northfield, by the death of the prince of evangelists, D. L. Moody; and this at Blankenburg, among the pine-forests of Luther's country, by the death of Fräulein von Weling. I use the word death in the conventional sense; I should rather speak of translation and home-going.

There is a remarkable parallel in the last two cases which I have mentioned. Last year each was apparently in perfect health, and the life and soul of the Convention, which had been gathered; each passed home before the natural force had abated to any considerable extent, and when years of holy service seemed still possible; and the mortal remains of each have been interred in the close proximity of the crowning achievement of

A UNIQUE LIFE WORK.

The grave of the evangelist, from Hill-top, overlooks the Connecticut Valley, where he was born, lived, and died; the great Seminaries which he erected for young men and women; the Conference Hall, and East Northfield, which he so largely created; whilst the grave of the beloved mother of the Blankenburg Orphanage and Conference lies just behind the neat and commodious Conference House, which, humanly speaking, would not have existed but for her. In each case I visited the grave first of all, that I might renew my own consecration to the earthly service they have left for higher work yonder.

It is very remarkable that God's work never stays, as his workers are called home. Indeed, their removal seems to make way for some whose opportunities were straitened and their powers cramped by the over-abounding genius and energy of their leaders. At Northfield, it was evident that there are many men of conspicuous power ready to do their best to carry on Mr. Moody's work; and here the removal of Fräulein von Weling has had several interesting results. It has led to this work being placed on a solid, legal recognised basis; it has brought about the formation of each of whom is devoted to the maintenance and furtherance of the original plans which she laid down; and it has called into existence several committees, to attend to the various branches of enterprise, which will thus be more thoroughly cared for than they could be by one individual, however talented and devoted. So that the conferences, the religious papers, the orphan work, the Evangelical Alliance, the evangelistic operations in this neighbourhood will be as before, and better; and all who have been in the habit of forwarding contributions from various parts of the world for the support of this great and good work need not hesitate to continue doing so, directing their donations to the care of Mr. E. F. Hoyer, Allianzhaus, Blankenburg, Thüringia, Germany.

The story of Mr. Hoyer is an interesting one. His father was Vice-Governor of Pomerania, and in his early years he was a journalist. He was brought to the Saviour during an illness, by a simple remark of the pastor who was visiting the hospital where he was lying. After some experience of Christian life and service in Berlin, he applied for further training to Mrs. Baxter, and spent some time in the Bible School at Highbury. In the July of last year, he came to Blankenburg as a guest, but became interested in the work, did what he could to assist amid the pressure of the 1899 Conference, and finally made his home here, going out on the lines of the Evangelical Alliance to hold services throughout Germany, and wherever doors were opened. On returning in February he found Fräulein von Weling very ill, and, relinquishing his public work, set himself to relieve her of the burden of the institutions which looked to her for guidance, and during the last two or three months of her life received her parting directions. He was designated by her will as in her judgment most suited to be the permanent worker here in conjunction with two noble, practical, and consecrated ladies (sisters), who are making their name of Nordsick beloved wherever it is known. To these three, under God, the calling of the present Conference is due; and I am glad to say that a larger number have accepted the invitation than ever before, all the arrangements for the accommodation and feeding of the great congregation of being undertaken and carried through, as in former years, by the staff of Allianzhaus. It is quite a marvellous piece of arrangement, and yet seems to work very smoothly and pleasantly. The entire expense is met by the free gifts, placed in very modest and unobtrusive boxes. Amongst the guests is the Countess Waldersee, the noble wife of the Commander of the Allied Forces in China.

The list of speakers is a considerable one. First and foremost the beloved Dr. Baedeker, Dr. Grattan Guinness, Pastor Jellinghaus, Colonel von Knobelsdorff, Dr. Lepsius, Pastor Mascher, Rev. C. G. Moore, Pastor Stockmayer, and myself. These treat as God may direct them the general theme of the Conference, which is the Divine Plan of Salvation from Death unto Life. So far an intense spirit of hearing seems to rest on the people, and there is every reason to believe that the results will be deep and far-reaching.

Thus God fulfils Himself in many ways. No one of us is necessary to Him. In his grace He will use us, if we yield ourselves to Him; and, when we are not allowed to continue by reason of death, He remaineth the same, and the River of his Life makes for itself new channels.

At the Paris Exhibition.

THE committee of the Salle Evangélique, 59, Avenue La Bourdonnais, close to the Paris Exhibition, in appealing for pecuniary help, express their gratitude for the large measure of success which has attended this effort to spread the knowledge of the Gospel amongst the French people. Night after night the beautiful hall is occupied by audiences usually ranging from 150 to 250. Of these the majority are manifestly strangers to the preaching of the Gospel; yet they listen attentively and respectfully to the earnest and faithful proclamation of the message of salvation. The majority are mere passers by, visitors to the Exhibition, who have been attracted by the notices given away in the street, and by the conspicuous announcement, lighted by electricity, of "Addresses on the Gospel." These remain for ten or twenty minutes, sometimes till the close, listening, often doubtless for the first time in their lives, to evangelical teaching, and carrying away with them Gospel tracts and Scripture portions.

The Bible and Tract Depôt, which forms an important adjunct to the Salle, is fitted up with an attractive display of Bibles in some sixty different languages, lent by the British and Foreign Bible Society, with other illustrated evangelical publications. The Salle is also the centre from which the distribution of already more than 150,000 illustrated Gospels, published by the Scripture Gift Mission, has taken place. Many interesting conversations in connection with this work, and that of the Bible Depôt, show that the good seed is not sown in vain.

The committee has exhausted the funds kindly entrusted to it for the rent of the Salle and the various expenses. Communications, referring to the Paris Exhibition Fund, may be sent to Mr. J. F. W. Deacon, 20, Birchin Lane, London, E.C.

Missionaries in China.

A CIRCULAR letter from the office of the China Inland Mission on September 1, says: "This morning we have received a telegram from Mr. Orr Ewing, informing us that all the Kiang-si missionaries arrived safely at Kiu-kiang, all well. This includes ninety-one of our own missionaries, as we had that number in the Province at the end of June this year."

The following is a list of missionaries who, it is FEARED, have LOST THEIR LIVES IN RIOTS:—

SHAN-SI: Hsias-i.—Miss Whitchurch, Miss E. E. Searell. Ho-tsin.—Mr. and Mrs. G. McConnel and one child, Miss S. A. King, Miss E. Burton. Luch'eng.—Mrs. E. J. Cooper and one child, Miss Rice, Miss Huston. Ping-yao.—Three of Mr. and Mrs. Saunders' children.

CHIH-LI: Pao-ting.—Mr. and Mrs. Bagnall and one child, Mr. Wm. Cooper.

CHEH-KIANG: Kü-cheo.—Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Thompson and two children, Miss Sherwood, Miss M. Manchester, Miss J. E. Desmond. Chang-shan.—Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Ward and one child, Miss Thirgood.

The compiler of the list adds: "We also fear the worst for Dr. and Mrs. Millar Wilson, Miss M. Clarke, and Miss J. Stevens, who are known to have been in Tai-yuen-fu on June 27.

Seed by the Way.

IT was a lovely Sabbath day, and I was sitting at the window looking out upon the public gardens which are the charm of Buxton. I had been an invalid for about three months, and during all that time had been deprived of the privilege of public worship. As two o'clock struck, I was present in spirit with my own people, who would be assembled in their renovated church, and my heart filled with deep emotion as I thought of the many Sabbaths I had been away from them.

Weak in body, at any rate, I was getting depressed by my reflections, when suddenly a burst of music roused me from my reverie, as a small detachment of the Salvation Army stopped under my windows. Their leader announced that they were to have a short service, in which he asked his hearers in front of the many villas to join. He then gave out the hymn, "Rock of Ages," and with a trembling voice, all alone in my room, I joined in. Tears came unbidden to my eyes as I sang the beautiful words, and it was with a prepared heart that I listened for the text which would be chosen for the address.

Presently a clear, sweet voice gave out, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." The speaker was a young girl with a bright, beaming face, and as she opened up the familiar text, from which I had often preached, she drew me very near to Christ, and so proved herself an "able minister of the New Testament." Wasn't I weary and heavy laden when the invitation reached me? That I was, and at Christ's feet that day I found soul-refreshing rest.

Sweet and satisfying was the Gospel as it pulsed from the heart of this young girl. I had heard the most famous preachers of the time, but never had I been so deeply touched and moved as by this evangelist. Her appeals to the cultured audience throbbed with a tender pathos which fairly captivated me. I fell on my knees and joined heartily in the short prayer that followed the address, and when the last hymn was sung, and the Gospel band left, I gave God thanks for sending me the first preacher I had heard for three months.

He had been mindful of me in my weariness and sent a girl, and not an angel, "to minister unto me." I met her a few days afterwards on the street, and thanked her, telling her how her message had been blessed to me.

"Thank you, sir," she said, "for your kindly words, for we street preachers hear so much to discourage us, that testimonies like yours gladden and strengthen us." I give my experience here to encourage open-air workers. They little know the good they do, but the Master they serve will reward them for all their labours of love.

Trifles.

"THIS only a trifling thing, let it go, what does it matter?" How often have we heard such a sentence uttered, or words implying the same meaning. Yet it is dangerous, and likely to affect our bodily and spiritual welfare, if we allow the idea to grow that small things are to be despised.

The mustard tree is in the tiny seed. The sturdy oak, with its umbrageous, leafy wings, is in the acorn. The coming deluge is in the cloud no larger than a man's hand.

Let us think of these trifles more, for in reality they are of immense import. We shall then consider how that harsh word we uttered cut our friend's heart to its utmost depths. We had forgotten it, and little knew of the silent tears shed in the solitude of his room during the still hours of the night. We shall then say a word of comfort more often to cheer a weary traveller on life's way. One sentence of hope, one grip of brotherliness, may turn many a heart again into the right path. One loving, sympathetic smile may bring sunshine to the sad one's tears, and thus through the dimness, he may catch the beauty of the rainbow, telling of the brighter glories about to be revealed.

A word or two telling of the path that leads to salvation may sink into a heart, and after many years it may be—will lead the wanderer home.

God does not despise the smallest creature. Not a sparrow falls but He knows of it. His heart is ever ready to catch the faintest whisper for help. He can hear the heavy sigh for forgiveness from the contrite heart, when speech fails to tell of its profound longing for Divine love. Ofttimes no language but a sigh breathes to the full the soul's deepest yearnings.

The snowflake becomes the avalanche—the spark the conflagration that devours the whole town in its fiery jaws.

When the heart is right, we shall not scorn the trifling things, knowing that God in his infinite goodness uses both the small and the great to advance his kingdom, and for the eternal good of his children.

Making One's-Self Necessary.

"IF I were only necessary to somebody," lamented a girl, the other day, "I should have something to live for. But if I were to drop out of the world to-morrow, it would not make any real difference to anyone."

"But there is your father," said an older friend.

"Yes; but he is at business all day, and often away from home. Jane, our old cook, does the housekeeping, and he really could get along just as well without me. He seems so wrapped up in his business that he scarcely notices he has a daughter."

"Is Jane's housekeeping good?" asked the other.

"Not very. When father has to entertain his friends he takes them to the club—but he would rather do that, anyway."

"Well," said her friend, "you are evidently making yourself as unnecessary as possible, my dear child."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean that you are avoiding every opportunity you have—and they are many—of making yourself necessary to your father. If I were you, Mabel—and I do not say this unkindly—I would put all thought of self away, and study the situation entirely from his side.

"I would make his home comfortable, that he would be happy to bring his friends there, as I know he used to do. I would show myself loving and responsive always, even though your father is undemonstrative.

"But I think you would soon find that he has an interest in other things, too, that you have never tried to meet. I believe that in six months, by these simple means, you would make yourself so necessary to your father," with a twinkle of fun in her eye, "that Jame could never hope to equal you."

But Mabel did not smile. Truth is not always comfortable to hear. "I've had a new view of myself in your looking-glass," she said, "and I don't believe I know how to be necessary to anybody. But, at any rate, I've got my eyes open to the reasons why!" So, as Mabel is an energetic girl, we shall probably soon see a useful and happy daughter in that little household.

Selected.

Be Little Sunbeams.

CHILDREN, you are household sunbeams; don't forget it, and when mother is tired and weary, or father comes home from his work feeling depressed, speak cheerfully to them and do what you can to help them. Very often you can help them most by not doing something, for what you would do may only make more work for them. Therefore, think before you speak or act, and say to yourself, "Will this help mamma?" or "Will this please papa?" There is something inside you that will always answer and tell you how to act. It won't take a minute, either, to decide, when you do this, and you will be repaid for waiting by the earnestness of the smile or the sincerity of the kiss which will then greet you. One thing remember always—the effect of what you do lingers after you are gone. Long after you have forgotten the smile or cheerful word which you gave your father or mother, or the little act which you did to make them happy, it is remembered by them, and after you are asleep they will talk about it, and thank God for their little household sunbeam.

Sunday Reading.

The Seed of Love.

The farmer planted a seed—
A little dry, black seed;
And off he went to other work—
For the farmer was never known to shirk—
And cared for what he had need.

The night came with its dew—
The cool and silent dew;
The dawn came, and the day,
And the farmer worked away
At labours not a few.

Home from his work one day—
One glowing summer day—
His children showed him a perfect flower;
It had burst in bloom that very hour;
How, I cannot say.

But I know if the smallest seed
In the soil of love be cast,
Both day and night will do their part;
And the sower who works with a trusting heart
Will find the flower at last.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 9.

Our Simple Duty (Luke xvii. 7-10).

TO plough and to keep sheep are the two special functions of Christian service. We are called to plough up the hard subsoil of the soul, making an inlet for the seed of the Gospel, or to look after our Master's sheep and lambs. But whatever our service is, we are at our Master's disposal, as his bondservants (R.V. margin). It is a blessed thing, when we are wholly yielded to obey Him, for his service is perfect freedom from envy, dissatisfaction with our lot, jealousy of others, and pride.

How often when we have been engaged in hard, earnest work in the service of others for Christ's sake, we are inclined to say to ourselves, "Now we may have a good time for ourselves; we may relax the girdle from round our loins; we may sit down to meat." We are often tempted to this on Sunday evening, or when the annual holidays come round. Many act at these times as if they were off duty, and as though their Master, Christ, had no jurisdiction over them then.

But in Christ's service there are no hours when we cease to be his slaves, or pass from under his eye. We are always his, always at his disposal, always bound to ask what He would have us do. In this there is no hardship, because He knows our frame, and remembers we are but dust. He is well aware that the machinery needs time to cool and rest and recreate itself. Did He not Himself bid his disciples leave the crowded lake-side, and come with Him apart; and anon their boats were speeding across the lake to the blue hills on the other side? Jesus knows that we must have rest and change, but He keeps these hours under his own command because they are often the most perilous to our soul's health. If we are right in our hours of ease and relaxation, we shall be almost certainly right in the hours of toil and struggle.

Most often, when we have done our Master's work, He will say to us, "You have been so taken up with my work that you have a little neglected Me. You have thought more of the straightness and depth of your furrow, more of the wool and safety of your flock, than of Me for whom you work; now give Me a little of your thought and love. Make ready wherewith I may sup, and gird thyself and serve Me." Ah, Jesus wants our love, and He will not be satisfied if we give energy, time, thought to his service and forget Him. He wants to be fed with the burnt-offering of our consecration, with the peace-offerings of our thanksgiving and gratitude, and to drink of the libations of our love. In the evening of the Lord's Day, and during our vacation, let us contrive to let Jesus know how much He is to us, how dearly we love Him, how anxious we are that He should be pleased with us. Oh, it is well indeed when, in the language of the Bride, we can ask our Beloved to come into the garden of the soul and eat of his pleasant fruits, so that there shall be no lack to Him, as He will see there shall be none to us.

When we have done all that the Lord Jesus asks of us, we have nothing to be proud of. It is only our duty. Our good works do not earn our salvation, nor merit anything at the hand of our Saviour. On the cross He purchased us, and all the activities of our redeemed nature. We do not work for salvation, but, being saved, we work for Him to whom we owe all. Our uttermost service is only our bounden duty and privilege.

As life goes on, and we see the mixed motives that enter into and vitiate our holiest service; as we see how much we have left undone, and how much we have done amiss, we are more and more disposed to call ourselves unprofitable servants, and to wonder that the Lord deigns still to employ us. And as the best day of our service wanes to evensong, we need to ask Him to go over what we have done, to forgive, and to make good and right its mistakes and wrongs.

C.E. NOTES.

The members of the Wesleyan C.E. Society at Kimberley for some months past have held weekly socials for the soldiers. In addition to this they are invited to the church services, the Endeavourers afterwards taking them to their homes.

Dr. Clark sends an interesting account of the Conventions he has been attending since the World's Convention. The French meetings were held in Paris; the German, at Wernigerode in the Hartz Mountains; the Swiss, in Geneva; the Spanish, in Zaragoza. Dr. Clark says of the latter meeting, "The devotional spirit was marked by earnestness and warmth, the enthusiasm for Christian Endeavour methods was unbounded, and the outlook for the future is most hopeful. Spain has now thirty-seven societies."

International S.S. Lesson.

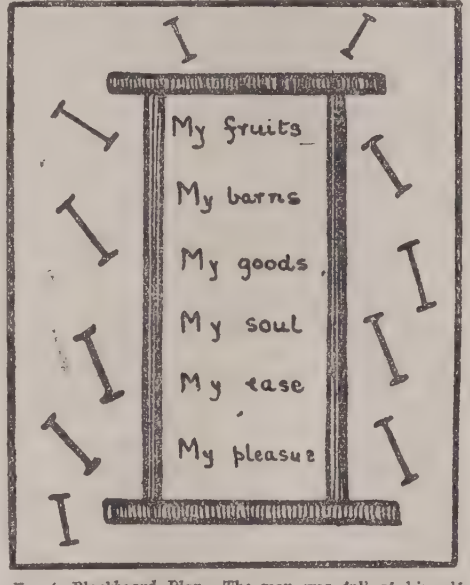
The Rich Fool (Luke xii. 13-23).

Golden Text.—What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" (Mark viii. 36).

Introduction.

THIS foolish man talked all about himself, as if he had grown his grain; he quite forgot that God sent the rain and the sunshine. He said "I" six times and "my" six times, and not "God" once; and finished up by talking to his soul which was not his. Then God had to speak to him to his dismay (20). Study Golden Text.



Key to Blackboard Plan.—The man was full of himself. The great "I" blotted out everything else in life. God was nowhere.

I.

This man was rich (16), selfish (17), greedy (19), never satisfied (18); his thoughts were full of this life, and nothing beyond just what Jesus Christ said should not be (22, 23); and he thought it was for many years. We all forget often how short our lives are, we are taught not even to boast about to-morrow (Prov. xxvii. 1). Look also at the teaching of James (Jas. iv. 13-17), and see other symbols of our lives, "a leaf," "grass," "a flower," "a tale told," "a shadow," &c. Life is not abundance of goods and heaps of gold (15); God has to tell us this again and again (Psa. xxxix. 6; xlix. 16, 17; lii. 7). It is not a sin to be rich if God gives riches, but it is a sin to live for riches, spend them all on self and give none back to God.

II.

The man did not realize three things about his soul: (1) that it was not his own; (2) that it would never die; (3) that earthly things could not satisfy it (Eccl. v. 10); only eternal things can satisfy souls.

Now none but Christ can satisfy.

"Thou hast made us for Thyself, and our hearts are restless till they rest in Thee."

Let us live ever remembering that God created us, that He has control over us (Eccl. xii. 7; Ezek. xviii. 4); and that we are very plainly taught in the Old Testament as well as in the New that there are two divisions of souls, those who live and those who die (Ezek. xviii. 4; Jer. xxxviii. 20); those who believe and live for God, those who disbelieve and live for themselves only.

III.

What had God to say to this man? "Thou fool;" "Thou senseless one" (1 Cor. xv. 36); "This night." We cannot live one day unless God wills it, our breath is in his keeping (Acts xvii. 25; Dan. v. 23); even the hairs of our head are all numbered by Him.

But this foolish man thought he could take his life into his own hands and live for long years.

Why do we not acknowledge God more? Why do we not recognize his control? Why are we not more willing that He should carry out his plans with us? Let us answer these questions truthfuly.

IV.

We learn some solemn lessons. To erase all the "I" and "my" from our lives. To give over our money, possessions, belongings to God, to be used for his glory (21). To lift our hearts into the higher life of heaven, and our treasures with our hearts (Matt. vi. 19-21). To take heed to Paul's advice in 1 Tim. vi. 17-19, and to do our alms so that no one knows but God (Matt. vi. 1), and not long to see our names down on subscription lists with big sums attached.

Spanish Christian Endeavour

THE First National Convention of Christian Endeavour Societies in Spain was held in the Chapel of the American Board's Mission in Zaragoza on August 22 and 23. The first Christian Endeavour Society in Spain was organized in the Boarding School for Girls of the American Board, in San Sebastian, some twelve years ago. During these years they naturally extended, in the first place, through the stations of the American Board's Mission in the North of Spain, and then by degrees throughout Spain, with the result, that at this Convention, thirty-seven societies were represented by some fifty delegates.

On the first day of the Convention, Dr. Francis E. Clark, President of the World's Union of Christian Endeavour, attended. Fresh from his tour around the world and bringing Christian greetings from so many different countries, peoples, and societies, the Convention markedly felt the stimulus of his presence, and the authority of his counsels.

A special feature of this Convention was the reports of the humbler classes of Christian Endeavourers. Speaking simply, earnestly, and naturally of their own work and varied experiences, they moved and stimulated their hearers. It was evident that they had been taught and helped by God, and that it was his Spirit that had so successfully and beautifully worked through them.

The unexpected and violent outburst of the greater portion of the public press of Zaragoza against the Convention must be mentioned as a part of the history of this event. These papers demanded that the soil rendered sacred in their eyes by the presence of the "Virgin of the Pillar" in her great cathedral, should not be desecrated by the Protestant meeting discussing the living themes of Christian Endeavour. The pressure brought to bear on the Civil Governor was so great that he forbade the Convention; but, knowing our rights, and knowing that he knew them, we quietly held our meetings, did our work, heard the discourses and sermons, received God's most manifest blessing, and—went our way rejoicing!

The chief result that we have heard of thus far from this agitation, is that the Chapters of the great Zaragoza Cathedrals of La-Seo and of the Virgin of the Pillar, have decided to celebrate a mass in the latter in deprecation of, and amends for, the Evangelical Convention!

A Badge.—Christ in the heart, and a cross on the shoulders—this is the badge of all true Christians.—Martin Boos (1762-1825).

Notes from Wales.

A QUESTION which is beginning to agitate Welsh Calvinistic Methodist circles once more, is the future of their theological colleges. Opinion is divided as to the desirability of their amalgamation. In this connection, the letter of Rev. T. Witton Davies, Ph.D., of the Baptist College, Bangor, in a recent issue of the Goleuad is of considerable interest and value. Dr. Davies suggests that there should be a federation of the theological colleges of the Baptist, Congregational and Calvinistic Methodist denominations. This, he argues, would secure all the benefits of amalgamation, besides others of great value. Already the Baptist and Congregational colleges at Bangor are federated. The suggestion is also made that the colleges at Brecon and Trevecca, belonging to the Congregationalists and Calvinistic Methodists respectively, should be federated with the Baptist College at Cardiff.

The temperance party in Rhyl, North Wales, in addition to a public protest, have appealed to the Town Council to prohibit sand competitions of a certain kind. The protest and the appeal have been occasioned by the action of a local spirit merchant in offering prizes to children for the best designs in sand suitable, presumably, as an advertisement of a certain brand of whisky.

Efforts are being made to raise some memorial to the late Canon Evans, of Rhymney. At one time the deceased clergyman was considered to be one of the best preachers in the Welsh Church. As a parish clergyman he was an earnest and successful worker. His last incumbency at Rhymney embraced a period of forty years. Canon Evans had also been editor for many years of the Cyfaill Eglwysig.

The meetings of the North Wales Calvinistic Methodist Association, held at Pwllheli on August 21-23, were attended by a large number of ministerial and lay delegates. One of the most successful meetings in connection with the Association was one for young people. There was an overflowing attendance, and the speaking was of a high order. The preaching services in the open air were attended by from 4,000 to 5,000 people.

An unfortunate misunderstanding has arisen between the Churchmen and Nonconformists of Bangor, North Wales. It has arisen in connection with a suggestion made by the latter that Churchmen should be placed on the same footing as the other denominations in the matter of holding services in the workhouse. The Bishop of Bangor has written a letter refusing to accept the suggested compromise, on the ground that it will allow the Anglican inmates of the workhouse to enjoy the services of their own communion only at infrequent intervals.

The celebration of the centenary of Welsh Wesleyanism took place recently at Ruthin, North Wales. The meetings were attended by a large number of Wesleyans from different parts of the country. Some of the best known ministers and laymen in the Principality took part in the various services, which were also attended by the President of the English Conference—Rev. Dr. Allen. It was appropriate that the celebration of the centenary should take place at Ruthin for, although there are records of visits paid to Wales by John Wesley as far back as 1739, yet it was not until the year 1800 that the first Welsh Wesleyan Society was formed at Ruthin.

Country Towns Mission.

THE sixty-third annual report of this Society, which carries on missionary effort in towns and villages, is of an encouraging character. The work has been well maintained, and the spiritual results at some of the stations have been exceptionally happy. The work is very diversified, but there is absolute unity in the aim and object—that of making known to all the one way of salvation through Jesus Christ. Of the fifty missionaries connected with the Society, about one-half are stationed in groups of villages. The value of their labours can hardly be over-estimated. Many instances are given of the favour which God has vouchsafed to the efforts of these devoted men during the past year. The report may be had from the Secretary, Mr. G. H. Mawer, at the offices of the Society, 18, New Bridge Street, E.C.

Scottish Notes.

A SUCCESSFUL mission has just been concluded in the Town Hall of Peebles, in connection with the Faith Mission. Miss Garrat (Blackrock, Ireland) and Miss S. A. Gavin (Tayport) were the speakers.

A petition has been received by the town council of Stirling, from a number of shopkeepers, asking that the local detachment of the Salvation Army may be prohibited from creating a disturbance by holding meetings in the street on Saturday evenings.

Pastor John Currie (of Montreal) leaves for home this week, after a brief visit to Scotland. He spent his last Sabbath in this country preaching at St. George's Cross Tabernacle (Glasgow), where he is a general favourite, there being many seals to his ministry among the people.

The monthly Conference of the Glasgow Christian Workers' Union was held on Sabbath of last week in the National Halls. Addresses were given by Mr. William Thomson, jun., and Mr. J. H. Payne, evangelists. Mr. A. B. Munro (president) occupied the chair, and Miss Jeannie Smith was song preacher. As usual, open-air gatherings were held before and after the Conference, at Gorbals Cross.

Mr. John Davidson (Penicuik), who has been appointed secretary of the Motherwell Y.M.C.A., goes to the town with an excellent record as an aggressive Christian worker. During the last eleven years he has been teacher, and latterly assistant-superintendent, at Wellington Reformatory Farm School; and has devoted all his spare time to furthering the cause of temperance and organizing various Christian Endeavour movements in the neighbourhood of Penicuik.

The annual Conference of the Abbeyhill Branch of the Railway Mission took place at Edinburgh on Saturday, August 25. Mr. Allan Stewart (agent for Scotland) presided, and gave an address on "The Hope of Abraham," showing how the patriarch had been enabled to endure disappointment. Mr. William Mackinnon (evangelist) also spoke. A public tea meeting took place in the evening, when several addresses were given on "Aids to Christian Missions." On Sabbath an open-air meeting was held on the Calton Hill, attended by over a thousand persons, when pointed addresses were varied by personal testimony and the singing of the Gospel.

Dr. Thompson (of Hamilton) told his Presbytery last week that he had occasion on a recent Sabbath to walk past Bothwell Bridge. As he drew near he was surprised to find thousands of men (many with bicycles) crowding the road and lining the hedges, until it was almost impossible to pass. At first he thought he had approached a religious service; to his amazement he discovered that the meeting had been convened for the purpose of discussing a local strike. He returned in an hour to conduct the evening service in his own church, and found that practically a few ladies composed the congregation. The contrast was overpowering. He had a strong feeling that, at the close of their business, he would have liked to ask the gathering of workmen—now that they had discussed secular interests—whether they would allow him to say a few words to them on the text, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." But his courage failed him, and it was with a sad heart he reached home.

A Conference in connection with the Fife and Clackmannan Baptist Association was held at Largo, on Saturday, August 25, Mr. Balfour (vice-president) occupying the chair. In the course of an address on "Spirituality in the Church," Rev. W. B. Nicholson (Edinburgh) remarked that this is a practical age. Our modern literature is largely taken up with the idea of limiting our higher aims and restricting our spiritual hopes. To pursue high ideals is stamped as quixotic and unreal. As a denomination, he said, they existed for a spiritual ideal. In these days of church union, he had asked himself whether they were justified in maintaining their separate existence, and he thought they were. Their distinctive principle was not simply baptism, but the truth that lies behind it. They lived and existed for the spirituality of the Church. The foundation of this spiritual side of church membership lies in maintaining the Lordship of Christ—(1) our faith in Him, (2) our dependence on Him, and (3) our obedience to Him. As Baptists they insisted on the individual union of every believer to Christ. A conference followed, in which the following members took part—Rev. W. Pulford (Largo), Rev. G. H. Wilson (Pathhead), Rev. H. Edwards (Anstruther), Rev. James Young (Leslie), and Mr. Gourlay (Kirkcaldy). The following office-bearers were elected for the coming year—President, Mr. Balfour (Largo); Vice-president, Rev. H. Edwards (Anstruther); Secretary, Mr. Robertson (Leslie); Treasurer, Mr. Love (Kirkcaldy). The new congregation at Cupar was welcomed into the Association.

Irish Notes.

REV. WALTER CHADWICK, son of the Bishop of Derry, is going out under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society as the first "Own Missionary" of the Diocese of Derry. The minimum sum requested for his support has already been raised. The Bishop of Derry has had a daughter working as a missionary in Uganda for some years.

In Portadown there are eighteen most willing and efficient Methodist local preachers. These conduct as many as three services each on some Sundays, and during the current half year they are responsible for no fewer than 230 religious meetings, besides doing a large share of Sunday school labour. In fact, the spiritual work of the district could not be carried on without their aid.

Colonel Craig has presented, at a cost of £750, a house, free of rent for ever, to the Carrickfergus Young Men's Christian Association. At a public meeting held last Friday evening he handed over the key and title deeds to the secretary of the Association, and addresses were delivered on the occasion by Mr. J. K. Mitchell, of New York; Mr. D. A. Black, of Belfast; and several local ministers and friends. Colonel Craig, although now resident in England, is a native of Carrickfergus, and continues to take a deep interest in the religious welfare of the town and neighbourhood.

No institution has grown more rapidly in public favour in Ireland in recent years than the Homes of Rest at Bangor, Co. Down. Commencing with a very modest rented house, in which respectable working girls could spend a week or two at the seaside and recruit their health by paying, or someone paying for them, the cost of their board, these homes have grown in ten years into a home for working girls, a home for men and lads, and a home for mothers and children. During that period, too, about 20,000 persons have enjoyed the benefit of these institutions for a longer or shorter period, and now a home for cripples is in process of erection. Mr. James Stewart, of Beechmount, Belfast, has contributed £1,250 towards the cost of building the last, and has given an additional sum of £2,000 towards its endowment. The homes are under the care of an undenominational committee, and have already proved a great boon to many persons.

Oxford Letter.

LADY JERSEY, in opening a bazaar at Blenheim on Wednesday, gave a very helpful address on the Religious education of the young. Quoting the words of one of the heads of the French police, she said, "A large increase in crime among juveniles in France must be attributed to the fact that religion had been banished from the schools." She urged that all Christian parents, whether Churchmen or Nonconformists, should know exactly what religion was taught in the schools to which they sent their little ones.

Speaking at the installation of the new Vicar of SS. Philip and James on Friday, the Bishop of Reading said: "If it were the will of God to reveal to anyone all that would befall him throughout the days of his ministry, there would be no man courageous enough to lift up the burden which a call to the ministry entailed." Speaking of the claims of the people upon their minister, he said these were days when very reaching claims were made; but they had a right to expect that he will give all he has and all he is in their service—his time, his strength, his knowledge, and his self-sacrifice. The service was most impressive.

The Y.M.C.A.

AT a joint meeting of the Executive Committee of the Irish Y.M.C.A.'s, held in Dublin on Monday last week, Mr. Robert McCann, travelling secretary, stated that he had received an invitation from the North Midland District of England to act as travelling secretary of that district, and, in view of the extended sphere which that field presented, he had decided to accept it. The chairman (Mr. J. G. R. Porter, J.P.) and several members of the committee expressed their deep regret at Mr. McCann's resignation, and stated that they felt his removal would be a great loss to Association work in Ireland. They wished him every success in his new sphere, and adopted a resolution recording their devout thankfulness to God for the growth and development of work for young men throughout Ireland during the period that Mr. McCann had held office, and also expressed their high appreciation of his painstaking and self-sacrificing labours as organizing and travelling secretary. Mr. McCann will not, in all probability, vacate his present position until January, 1901.

With Troops at Lydd.

IT would appear that the quiet, restful town of Lydd, situate on the south-east corner of Romney Marsh, within view of Dover Cliffs and Dungeness Lighthouse, is to become an important centre of military activity. For many years, various regiments have assembled for their annual training, and recently the town has been declared a permanent camp. Between 3,000 and 4,000 troops are at the present time under canvas and in barracks; they consist of detachments of Royal Artillery, Royal Fusiliers, &c. Happily, there are Christians who interest themselves in the welfare of the men, and find pleasure in ministering to their spiritual needs.

In 1892 premises were secured in High Street by the Y.M.C.A., and a useful work was soon instituted. Its amalgamation with the S.C.A. followed, and, under the auspices of the Young Men's and Soldiers' Christian Association, has been established. Organized and supervised by Mr. Frank E. Wootton, the movement is one of singular promise, while its possibilities and usefulness cannot be over-estimated. Removed, as the young soldiers are, from domestic and the usual religious influences, and beset by manifold and peculiar temptations, it is of the greatest importance that special and well-considered steps should be taken to reach them.

A SOLDIER'S HOME

At the Soldiers' Home, in High Street, a cordial welcome is extended to the men trooping into the town during their hours "off duty." Suitable games are provided, as well as refreshments, newspapers, periodicals, and there is a useful library. Every evening, too, a brief, hearty service is held, when the Gospel is presented in simple and earnest addresses. The men are cordially entertained, but the chief aim of the promoters of the "Home" is to exhort them to take

A STAND FOR CHRIST.

The services are well attended, and are fruitful in results. Many are the letters from distant lands which come to hand telling of blessing realized while paying a visit to the Home. Loving parents, too, whose hearts have grieved for the runaway sons, have been made to rejoice, and have acknowledged with touching gratitude what has been done for "our boys."

The power of personal appealing to the soldiers is abundantly manifest, Mr. Wootton's exertions are purely honorary, but unremitting withal. He deals with the men in a practical and bold manner. The work is often tinged with sadness, for the wanton indifference and callous disposition will not always yield to the counteracting influences brought to bear upon it. Probably few would look with indifference upon work among soldiers and sailors; experience assuredly indicates this as a branch of Christian effort specially worthy of support.

Mr. Wootton and his helpers do not confine their ministry to the Soldiers' Home. Permission is obtained from the Commandant for the holding of

SERVICES IN THE CAMP.

These are conducted on Sunday afternoons, and afford many opportunities for intercourse with the men, and bringing before them the higher life, with its obligations and blessings. The visitation of the hospital is carried on with encouraging results. Tracts and booklets are distributed among the inmates, and these have often been instrumental in arousing slumbering consciences, and revealing the way of salvation to anxious souls.

Efforts are being made to extend the operations of the Home, and to meet the requirements of the increasing numbers of troops stationed at Lydd. It is necessary that larger and more commodious premises should be secured, or new buildings erected immediately. At least £200 should be in hand before steps can be taken to attain this object. Towards this amount some £120 has been contributed and promised. Communications respecting the Soldiers' Home should be addressed to the secretary and treasurer, Mr. Frank E. Wootton, North View, Lydd, Kent.

Conference on Bible Study.

IN view of the deplorable unhinging of the minds of this generation as to the inspiration and authority of the Scriptures, and the consequent lowering of the tone of Christian life, an instructive and useful Conference on Bible Study was held on four days of last week in Pakefield Church, Lowestoft, under the presidency of its venerable rector, Rev. L. Price. The opening address was by Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, who emphasized the prevailing indifference and the tendency to discard the Word of God; and then considered in an able manner the questions, What is the Word of God? What is spiritual life? A series of expositions of the Pentateuch, by Rev. J. Urquhart, was the main feature of the Conference. He replied to the so-called higher criticism by showing the structure of Genesis, Exodus, and Leviticus. Rev. Canon Garratt spoke of the Prophetic Scriptures in relation to these last days. Rev. J. B. Barraclough gave some practical openings-up of Rom. viii. Mr. R. C. Morgan spoke of the appearances of the Lord Jesus to John the Seer, in view of the tribulations that were to come. Rev. Samuel Wilkinson dwelt upon the promises to Israel which are yet unfulfilled, and gave interesting particulars of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews in London and abroad.

New Court, Tollington Park.

ON Sunday last, Mr. Campbell Morgan preached, at New Court Chapel, his first sermon after his return from Northfield; subject "Prayer" (Luke xi. 1).

True prayer must come from a belief in three truths: The Revelation of God, the Mediation of Christ, the Inspiration of the Spirit. Prayer must be definite, importunate, submissive.

His late beloved friend, Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, once said to him, "I would rather teach ten men to pray, than 100 to preach."

We have men, money, organizations, and a measure of Spiritual understanding; but none of these will be of any use unless they are linked to God. Let us, like Epaphras, agonize together in prayer for the glory of God.

Dr. A. T. Pierson will give addresses at New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N., each evening next week at 8; also from Tuesday to Friday at 4 p.m.

U. K. Band of Hope Union.

HAPPILY the wisdom of training the young in the principles and practice of total abstinence is becoming more generally recognized year by year, and the plea to save the children commands almost universal regard. Under the auspices of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union the temperance movement among juveniles has continued to make substantial progress. During the year eight new local unions were organized, and the number of societies at work increased by 704, and the membership by 74,427.

The present strength of the juvenile temperance movement is represented by 341 Band of Hope Unions, 28,540 Bands of Hope or similar societies, with which are associated three-and-a-half million children, who are receiving training and instruction for the inevitable days of temptation. In the course of the annual report the committee state that every year it becomes more easy to bring the forces of the unions and societies to bear in any desired direction. The "school scheme" has furnished satisfactory results. The staff of lecturers visited over four thousand schools, while a number of important conferences of teachers were also held, and several training colleges visited. The village campaigns have been successfully maintained, and the publications of the Union have proved a means of consolidating efforts of workers at home and abroad.

The annual report of the Union gives interesting details of the progressive operations of the movement during the year, and will prove stimulating to all who have at heart the highest interests of the future citizenhip.

Spurgeon Memorial Sermon Society.—Mr. William Taverner, secretary, writes from the International Headquarters, Greenhithe S.O., near London: "By the generosity of a friend we have nearly 'A Million of Spurgeon's Sermons' waiting to be distributed free of cost to voluntary Christian workers of all denominations. We supply them in sets of fifty, specially covered for loan distribution from house to house."

About Books.

EDERSHEIM'S LIFE OF CHRIST.

The new and cheaper issue (tenth impression) o the late Dr. Edersheim's Life of Christ, brings a wor of exceptional value within the reach of persons o strictly limited means. The title of the work show its comprehensiveness, The Life & Times of Jesus th Messiah; but no review notice can give an adequat idea of the wealth of information adduced to illustrat the ways and words of the Saviour of mankind an those among whom He moved in the days of his flesh That Dr. Edersheim was specially equipped for suc an undertaking as this, will be allowed by all wh know his valuable works on Social Life and the Templ Service in the time of Christ, or his well-know History of the Jewish Nation.

The story of this large work as a piece of literatur places its greatness beyond need of argument; fo already nine impressions have been sold since origina publication in 1883, and all at the price of tw guineas—not to mention the abridged Life issued som years ago with a preface by Professor Sanday. Tha scholarly theologian was well within the mark whe he wrote:—

Our generation has seen a number of attempts—some i their way of great merit—to reproduce the externals an surroundings of the Life and Ministry of Christ. But it wil I think, be admitted by the general consent of scholars that i this respect Dr. Edersheim surpassed his predecessors. N one else has possessed such a profound and masterly know ledge of the whole Jewish background to the picture presente in the Gospels—not merely of the archæology, which is some thing, but of the essential characteristics of Jewish though and feeling, which is far more.

It is this great and useful work, by one who seem not only to have studied the subject personally, but t have read almost everything relating thereto, an particularly to have had a complete acquaintanc with pertinent facts and fancies as embedded i Jewish literature, that has now been published in cheapened form. Though a verbatim reprint of th expensive edition, this is issued at 12s. nett, and i produced in a manner becoming the importance of th work, both for reading and reference.

Ministers and other students will find the page (1,570 in number) replete with information, rendere accessible by full indexes of subjects and passages Planned on a large scale, this "Life" was execute throughout in a spirit consistent with a high aim an noble purpose. Workers who cannot buy it wil welcome it as a present; and we are confident tha generous Christians will find pleasure, and reap real reward, in passing on such a splendid work (Longmans, Green, & Co.)

Sir Wilfrid Lawson, by W. B. Luke, is a readabl sketch of the life and work of the well-known advocat of Temperance Reform. (1s. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

Two useful publications in the "Little Treasure" series are—The Way to be Well, by Mrs. F. York Smith; and Miniature and Window Gardening, by th Editors of the "Sun Children's Budget." (Paper, 3d. cloth, 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) These are small books, but full of information well arranged

The Lecture Agency Date Book is arranged for th use of those whose life is a round of engagements. I will be of service to lecturers and clergymen. It con tains two complete periods of twelve months each, on beginning July, 1900, and the other July, 1901. (1s Lecture Agency, 38, The Outer Temple, Strand W.C.)

Calls to Holiness is a volume of sermons by Pre bendary H. W. Webb-Peploe. (3s. 6d. Marshal Brothers). In the preface, the preacher informs u that these are "Motto Sermons; or, New Yea Addresses," and that they have been published at th urgent request of friends. The discourses are eleve in number. Needless to say, they are eloquent an earnest presentations of sound doctrine.

The monthly publications of the British & Foreig Bible Society are of increasing interest and value The current issue of The B.S. Monthly Reporter, i addition to biographical particulars of the late Rev. J Gordon Watt, has communications on Bible work i China and Abyssinia, and an article entitled "John Careless, Martyr, of Coventry"—a note on a Tyndal Testament of 1548. The B.S. Gleanings, for th young, is filled with matter about the Book in the pas and the present, and is calculated to promote all round Scripture education in Christian homes. (On halfpenny each.)

Bible students, and especially teachers, will be glad to hear of a new edition of the Scriptures, which is t be published by Mr. Henry Frowde, Oxford University Press. The new volume, which is of very moderat size and yet in clear type, contains the text of the Authorised Version with the differences of the Revise Version printed in the side margins, so that both texts can be read from the same page, while there are marginal references in the centre columns. Hitherto difficulties have prevented the use of the Revised Version to the extent that might have been expected; but these, as the Bishop of Gloucester points out in a preface, have now been overcome successfully. When the simple plan followed by the printers has been mastered, every difference between the two versions, including even punctuation, can be recognized with readiness and certitude. The Two-Version edition will be procurable with or without the Oxford Helps to the Study of the Bible; and will be ready next month.

The Atonement in Modern Religious Thought is the title of a Theological Symposium, to which English, American, French, Swiss, and German scholars have contributed. (6s. James Clarke & Co.) Seventeen in number, the papers originally appeared in the columns of The Christian World. Some of them are more weighty in modern thought than in theological instruction; but as a rule the deliverances are to the point, and well worth study. Enjoying the utmost liberty of expression, the writers simply tell us where they stand and why; and while free to admire the candour of one or two who are more critical than constructive, we are glad to say that several of the papers are sound and strong expositions of the Evangelical position. Among these we would specialize the contributions of Principal Cave, Dr. P. T. Forsyth, and Dr. Fréderic Godet. Taken as a whole, the symposium is calculated to assist those who have been troubled with objections to the Evangelical view; and as its writers use modern phraseology, and are acquainted with present-day thought, the Symposium will impress attentive readers in a direction that will prove helpful to heart and mind.

ROME. A REFUGE FOR THE DISTRESSED IN HEART: IS IT TRUE? This is the title of a booklet by Gabrielle M. Maynard (1d. Marshall Bros.). It points most clearly to the only Refuge for anxious souls.

Herr George Liebling has published, through Mr. Charles Vincent, an anthem, for the words of which he has used Mr. Mackenzie Bell's Lyric in "Spring's Immortality," called "LORD, TEACH US TO PRAY."

It has been decided to issue THE TWENTIETH CENTURY NEW TESTAMENT (Horace Marshall & Son) in three parts instead of two. The second volume, containing St. Paul's larger Letters, will be ready in December.

Messrs. McCaw, Stevenson, & Orr, 12, Renfield Street, Glasgow have issued attractive sheets of Sunday School Tickets. They are printed in colours and are illustrative of Scripture scenes and symbols. (2d. per sheet.)

THE FOLD is the title of a small chart, designed by Miss E. Lyne, illustrating the fact that, while there is but one entrance to the fold of Christ, there are many outlets to the dominion of Satan. (6d. The Author, 62, South Street, Reading.)

THE PAINS OF LOWLY LIFE is the title of a reprint in booklet form of a striking letter written by Mark Twain to Mr. S. G. Trist, secretary of the London Anti-Vivisection Society. (2d. Office of the Society, 32, Sackville Street, W.)

An ably-written and timely pamphlet is WHAT IS IDOLATRY, AND WHO ARE GUILTY? The subject is strongly argued and closely reasoned, and the question is answered in definite and cogent terms. (2d. Chas. J. Thynne, 6, Great Queen Street, W.C.)

Rev. Chas. Bullock in a booklet entitled A VOICE FROM MAFEKING, pleads for self-sacrifice and earnest endeavour on behalf of the "Mafekings" at home. It is a timely and thoughtful utterance. (1d. Home Words Office, 7, Paternoster Square.)

An admirable statement of Protestant truth is CONFESSION OF SINS as taught by Holy Scripture, the early Church, and the Prayer Book. By Rev. Witham Burnet, M.A., vicar of Childerditch. (Protestant Reformation Society, 62, Berners Street, W.)

The latest issue contains an account of the Society's operations during the past twelve months. (½d. Tract Depot, 22 The Cross, Worcester.)

Travelling in Egypt.—Messrs. Cook & Son have just issued their new programme, by which it appears that their steamers will commence to run between Cairo and the First Cataract in November, and continue until the middle of March, with connecting steamers between the First and Second Cataract. A new and interesting feature is the arrangement of combined bookings by Messrs. Cook's steamers and the Egyptian and Soudan Railways, enabling tourists with only limited time at their disposal to make their visits to Upper Egypt more rapidly than can be done by using the steamers only. Under arrangements with the Governor General of the Soudan, through tickets will be issued to Khartoum. Excellent facilities are afforded to the travelling public for inspecting the wonderful remains of ancient civilization which adorn the banks of the Nile.

Evangelistic.

London Tent Campaign.

WE are holding two meetings a day at the Notting Hill tent. Interest in the gatherings is growing, and larger meetings were held last week than ever. At Mr. Grove's closing meeting on Friday 1,000 were gathered to hear the message. Among many encouraging cases we might mention the following: A week last Saturday an aged brother suggested an early morning prayer meeting for Sunday, and quite a number gathered at seven o'clock for prayer; the same brother was also active in the open-air demonstration before the evening service. On Tuesday evening he stayed at home that his wife might come to the service, and was rewarded by her conversion the same night. At the commencement of the mission, the first to yield was a poor woman sitting in the front with her husband, but he refused, yet he continued to attend with her regularly. Last Sunday week, after Mr. Grove's solemn message, he also surrendered. The children's work continues, with much encouragement. W. W. M.

The Open-Air Mission.

A fortnight's services have just been completed at Morecambe. The evangelists were—Mr. WM. LAWRENCE TWEEDIE, Mr. R. E. V. FIFIELD, and Mr. WALTER GOFF. The work commenced with united prayer meetings in one of the local chapels. Large crowds gathered on the foreshore and on the sands. Many evidences of the Holy Spirit's presence to save and bless were experienced. Thousands of Gospel books, portions of the Word of God, &c., have been distributed, to be carried into numberless towns and villages by the throngs of visitors.

On the Beach at Yarmouth.

"For the past seven weeks (writes Major J. C. Cox) our mission has been holding services here twice daily on the beach, where we have had large and most attentive audiences, and on each Sunday three times in the Singers' Ring, a canvas-sided enclosure on the beach, lent by the corporation of the town, capable of seating 1,500 people.

"We have had the joy, not only of preaching Christ and Him crucified to thousands, but of seeing the 'signs following,' and knowing that many precious souls have been born again on Yarmouth beach."

The Racecourse Mission.

In view of the approaching campaigns at Doncaster and Totnes, Mr. O. L. Heatley, secretary of the Racecourse Mission, writes:—"All things are ready—between thirty and forty men of God, 30,000 Gospels and Gospel stories; the hearty and united co-operation of the Christian Churches together with the inspiration of the memory of last year's wave of blessing, and the faithfulness of God as our assurance for the present. Our headquarters is to be the Wesleyan Chapel, Priory Place, where Bible readings and prayer meetings will be held each morning at 9 a.m., conducted by the secretary. The workers are voluntary, and pay their own expenses. The financial help we need is chiefly for literature and other incidentals; and this we feel sure the Lord's stewards will rejoice in providing, while those who cannot pay can and will PRAY! for us."

At Totnes (September 8 and 9) a smaller band from headquarters, including the secretary, who will go from Doncaster, will be reinforced by the local friends and Y.M.C.A., together with some from Newton Abbot.

During August Mr. NEWTON JONES (S.S.U. evangelist) has been holding a mission at Margate. Children's services, open-air meetings, and Bible readings—in all, sixty-seven gatherings—have been conducted. A new feature adopted this season was the use of a blackboard for services on the sands, the illustrations adding greatly to the interest of the meetings.

During a recent three-weeks' visit to Hastings, Mr. PAUL REDWOOD (a converted Jew), in company with other Jewish brethren of various nationalities, conducted open-air meetings daily on the beach. Numbers of Jews were attracted, and many who at first were inclined to offer opposition ultimately became seekers after the truth. Mr. Redwood delivered three helpful lectures, which were appreciated by large audiences. Bible readings were also given—two of these being for men only, and two for Germans.

Mr. JAMES WHARTON, of the Evangelization Society, London, has concluded a ten days' mission in Tent 24, at Kingswinford, and with grateful hearts we can speak of the success and good which have attended his work. The Spirit of God was present each night in a very special manner, with the result that many have been brought to decision for Christ. A special service was held for young people, assisted by Miss Marion Dunn, at the close many stayed behind, and surrendered themselves to Christ. The faithful earnest preaching of the evangelist, has also been the means of strengthening and stimulating the Lord's people to greater zeal for souls. We trust that the mission will be the beginning of a revival.

M. DUNN.

A fifteen days' mission has been conducted under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. by five evangelists of the Open-Air Mission, London, in Abergavenny and neighbourhood. Twelve villages have been visited, houses canvassed, and open-air meetings held in each place. Much blessing and many signs have followed the earnest and loving labours of the brethren, the Lord's hand being plainly seen in the conversion both of old and young, from the little daughter of a vicar to the cottager of seventy-nine years of age, whose godly children had prayed for her for many years. The morning's work (before departure for the villages) consisted of visits to the back streets, where impromptu meetings were held. The results of the Mission clearly prove the need of more earnest effort in open-air work.

EARNESTLY APPEALS FOR PRAYER THAT THIS MAY NOT BE SO. THE NEED IS TRULY URGENT.

Obituary.

MR. W. BLOOMFIELD.

THE death has taken place at Norwood, at an advanced age, of Mr. William Bloomfield, a vice-president of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and one of the oldest directors of the London Missionary Society. Mr. Bloomfield was widely known in past years in London business life, and took an active part in all philanthropic movements. He was a vigorous Congregationalist, and took a prominent part in company with the late Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., and others, in securing the site for the erection of the Memorial Hall in Farringdon Street.

REV. BENJAMIN EVANS.

The death of the Rev. Benjamin Evans, of Aberdare, removes one of the best-known Baptist ministers in South Wales. Born of humble parentage at Dowlais, Mr. Evans had to enter upon the battle of life at the early age of eight. He commenced preaching at Mountain Ash, and in 1868 entered Haverfordwest Baptist College. After a three years' course, he undertook a pastorate, St. David's, Pembrokeshire. In 1876 he removed to Aberdare, and from then until his death retained his connection with the Church at Gadlys in that town. Here he laboured well and successfully. From time to time he filled various offices of importance, amongst them the Welsh agency for the Baptist Missionary Society, the financial secretaryship of the Welsh Baptist Union, and the Presidential Chair of the East Glamorgan Baptist Association. He was also one of the editors of the Welsh Missionary Herald.

REV. E. BACHELER RUSSELL.

With deep sorrow we record the death, under singularly painful circumstances, of Rev. Edward Batcheler Russell, Vicar of Leyton. Staying with Mr. Gilmour, the owner of Rosehall and Glencassley, Sutherlandshire, Mr. Russell was seeking rest and change. He was a cylist, and while riding at Walkerdale Bridge, about a mile from Rosehall House, on Thursday evening last week, he met with a fatal accident. In the words of a correspondent of the Aberdeen Free Press, "he came into violent contact with the parapet of a bridge, and was projected into a deep and rocky ravine, and was killed instantaneously." Mr. Russell was greatly beloved by his parishioners, though he had only laboured among them about a year. He was converted to God during Mr. Moody's great mission in London in 1875, and told the story in Exeter Hall in February last. Having been the subject of definite spiritual experience, he was a staunch Evangelical. He was forty-eight years of age.

MISS CATHERINE HALLAM.

At Llanaway House, Godalming, on Sunday, August 26 (her ninetieth birthday), this venerable lady, in the terms of the simple inscription on her coffin, "Went Home." Miss Hallam was well known to many of God's servants, not only in connection with evangelistic work in her own neighbourhood, but as a generous supporter of Christian effort at home and abroad. She was indeed a "succourer of many." She and her surviving sister, Mrs. Birt, opened their drawing-room eight years ago for addresses by the late Earl of Cavan, Mr. J. W. C. Fegan, Mr. H. A. Mandeville, and others. Subsequently they built a mission hall, coffee tavern, &c., in which much good work has been done amongst old and young. Miss Hallam was endowed with rare intellectual gifts, but all who knew her were far more impressed by her just yet tender mind, simple devotional spirit. The beauty of her character and mind was reflected in the presence of singular gentleness and dignity. The funeral took place on Friday, August 31. The private service at Llanaway was conducted by Mr. Fegan, and the public service at the grave in Godalming Cemetery by Rev. J. W. Goodfellow, pastor of the Congregational Church, of which Miss Hallam was a member.

The Archbishop of Dublin has conferred the vacant canonry in Christ Church Cathedral upon Rev. Dr. J. H. Kennedy, the well-known Irish theologian.

Rev. Cecil Henry Druitt, B.A., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, is about to relinquish the curacy of Ellacombe, Torquay, having been appointed by the Church Missionary Society Theological and Hebrew Lecturer at the C.M. College, Islington.

An effort is being made to complete the church at Bettws-y-coed. The church was consecrated in 1873 to take the place of the ancient parish church, which still exists, but has proved quite inadequate to accommodate the summer visitors. A sum of between £5,000 and £6,000 has been spent, but the tower is still to be erected.

There are no fewer than four benefices in Nottingham vacant—St. Mary's, St. Ann's, St. George's, and St. Luke's. The trustees have offered the living of St. Ann's, vacant through the removal of Rev. Canon Lewis to Trowell, to Rev. Lawrence Wilkins, vicar of St. James', Nottingham, who has not yet announced his decision.

The appointment of Rev. Canon M'Cormick to the rectory of St. James', Piccadilly, has been received with much satisfaction by Evangelical Churchmen. The canon is popular as a staunch adherent to Protestant principles, and his selection by the Bishop of London to so important a benefice is more significant by reason of the fact that the rector of St. James' becomes patron of five livings, three of which are at present held by Ritualists. While Select Preacher at Oxford in 1895-96, Canon M'Cormick delivered a remarkable course of sermons on "What is Sin?" which have since been published.

Congregational.

Rev. George McLuckie, B.A., late senior student of New College, commenced his ministry at Harley Street Church, Bow, E., on Sunday week.

Having accepted the invitation of the church at Batley, Yorks, Rev. S. Stroud recently preached his farewell sermon at Moretonhampstead. A public meeting was held to take leave of Mr. Stroud.

During the last two months more than forty churches have applied for copies of the Historic Roll of the Twentieth Century Fund for the purpose of commencing operations. This makes nearly 140 additional churches since the May Meetings.

Rev. John Wilkins, who has been pastor of Marlborough Chapel, Old Kent Road, for nine years, has accepted an invitation to become pastor of Beresford Street Church, Auckland, New Zealand. The late Mr. Henry Richard, M.P., was minister of Marlborough Chapel prior to his entering Parliament.

The services at the City Temple on Sunday week were conducted by Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., Carr's Lane Church, Birmingham. The text of the morning discourse was "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ." The Gospel of Christ was "the power of God unto salvation." It was, the preacher urged, a dynamic; its truth was to be demonstrated, not by argument, but in practice. Its secret was not to be sought in controversy, but to be discovered in life.

Baptist.

Rev. A. T. Walker concluded his ministry at Allerton Church, having accepted the charge of the Ward Road Church, Dundee.

Mr. Sebastian Anderton, senior student of Manchester College, has accepted a hearty invitation to the pastorate of Park Road Church, St. Helens.

Considerable damage has just been done to the roof of the school buildings belonging to Cottage Green Church, Camberwell, by thieves, who ripped up and removed the lead. The schools have only recently been put in repair.

Rev. Carey Bonner, who has been appointed secretary of the Sunday School Union, has said farewell to the Portland Church, Southampton. He has been presented by the congregation with various tokens of the affections of the Southampton church.

Rev. Alexander Bremner, late of Lossiemouth, has been inducted as pastor of the congregation in Inverness. The services were conducted by Rev. William Grant, Edinburgh, and were largely attended. At a public meeting, addresses were delivered by Revs. Alexander Maclaren, D.D. (Manchester), and William Grant, Edinburgh.

Thanksgiving Day at Herne Bay has this year provided £101 9s. 6d. towards the reduction of the chapel debt, and one of the donors to that fund has generously lent, free of interest, all the money needed to pay off entirely the remainder of the debt. Another donor has generously promised £100, so soon as £200 has been raised, for the building of a school chapel at Beltinge, a rapidly-growing seaside suburb of Herne Bay, which at present has neither church, chapel, nor mission hall.

Among those who are to take part in the opening services of the new Metropolitan Tabernacle, which commence on September 19, are Revs. John Thomas (Liverpool), Alex Connell, F. B. Meyer, J. H. Jowett, Dr. Hanson, Dr. John Robertson, Dr. Newman Hall, Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Rev. J. McNeill, Dr. Alex McLaren, Pastors Tom and Charles Spurgeon, Pasteur R. Saillens, and others. Mr. Ira D. Sankey is to sing at several of the gatherings, and on September 22 will give his "Service of Sacred Song and Story."

Methodist.

Rev. S. Gamble Walker, of Brunswick Chapel, Birkenhead, is leaving the Wesleyan ministry to take charge of an undenominational church at Port Sunlight.

A Wesleyan Church is to built at Mapperley Plains, where there is at present no Nonconformist place of worship, though the population has considerably increased during the last few years.

Rev. George Atchinson has been appointed to the Methodist Free Church, Cheetham Hill, to assist Rev. J. Marshall Mather, whose health is at present indifferent. Mr. Atchinson has been twenty-five years at Union Chapel, Woodford.

The first report of the Southwark Primitive Methodist Mission at St. George's Hall has been issued by Rev. J. Flanagan, the superintendent. It states that the total cost of the hall—£12,000—has been raised, and the income of the year amounts to £990.

Mr. H. Adams, of Sheffield, has laid the foundation-stone of a new Primitive Methodist Sunday school in connection with the Hoyle Street Chapel, Sheffield. The new building is to provide accommodation for about 400 teachers and scholars, and the estimated cost is £1,600.

The arrangements inaugurated four years ago for supplying the weaker rural districts of the Primitive Methodist Connexion with an evangelist or hired local preacher for the understaffed circuits is to be continued. The Missionary Committee has allocated £250 for this purpose.

The memorial-stones of a new Wesleyan chapel, being erected at the village of Hasland, near Chesterfield, have been laid. The chapel has been rendered a necessity by the rapid growth of population in the district. It is to cost, including site, £2,600, and will seat 300 worshippers. The sum of £250 was realized at the afternoon's proceedings of the stone-laying ceremony.

The Methodist Church of Tasmania has decided to fall into line with the Church in the mother country, and has placed before itself the task of raising at least 10,000 guineas. There are twenty-six circuits in the colony, and of these eight have made definite promises, and these promises amount to 6,520 guineas. It has been estimated that Wesleyanism throughout the world will raise as a thankoffering something like £6,000,000.

The annual Pastoral to Wesleyan Ministers, which is to be read early this month at specially-convened gatherings, urges Methodists to be jealous lest they should be found more humanitarian in their spirit than religious, more ethical in their doctrine than theological, more æsthetic and sentimental in their worship than contrite and adoring; and lest, in their eagerness to realize for a suffering world the Christian promise of the life that now is, they should miss its goal and fruition in the promise of the life to come. The Pastoral inculcates the duty of church membership and the Connexional church life which is based upon it.

Presbyterian.

Arrangements are progressing for the Synodical Conference, for the deepening of the spiritual life of the Church, to be held in Liverpool on October 15, 16, and 17.

Dr. Lorimer's services at Marylebone Church have been warmly appreciated, and he has been invited to give the congregation four Sundays next summer.

Dr. John Watson, as Moderator of Synod, is to preside over the Liverpool Convention, and also to take the chair at the Home Missionary Meeting in Exeter Hall on October 10.

The feeling that Presbyterianism is not fittingly represented at Brighton appears to be receiving considerable attention, although no definite steps have been taken to provide a second church for this popular watering place.

The new buildings of Westminster College, Cambridge, which were opened last October, will this year again have a full complement of residential students. The course of study, which is purely theological, extends over at least nine terms, covering a period of three years.

Rev. David Fotheringham, J.P., of Tottenham, is at present in Canada, where he is gathering information regarding the boarding-out of pauper children. Mr. Fotheringham is deeply interested in the working of the Poor Law, and has been for some years chairman of the local Board of Guardians.

The Conveners of the Synod's Committee on Intercourse with other Churches, have issued an appeal to congregations soliciting help for the great Home Mission enterprise of the Canadian Presbyterian Church amongst the British and other European emigrants in the Western districts of the Dominion of Canada. It is estimated that there are about 150,000 English-speaking people in the Canadian North-West without the ordinances of religion.

Fallen Asleep.

The death has occurred at the age of sixty-five of Mr. JAMES PROE, ex-president of the Independent Methodist Connexion. He first served the Connexion as treasurer of the Ministers' Assistant Fund, afterwards Connexional treasurer, and in 1886 was elected president.—Mr. J. F. JONES, eldest son of Rev. J. C. Jones, M.A., pastor of the Baptist church at Spalding. He was formerly a Baptist minister at Wolverhampton, and for a time acted as assistant to Dr. Clifford, at Westbourne Park. Mr. Jones was forty-five years of age.—Tunbridge Wells Baptist Tabernacle has lost its oldest member by the death, at the age of seventy-six, of Mr. CARIE.—Mr. JOHN HOPKINS, for upwards of forty years organist at Rochester Cathedral.—Mr. LAWRENCE W. PIKE, a well-known Dorset magistrate, and prominent temperance reformer.—A worthy representative of East Anglian Nonconformity, has passed away at Maldon in the death of Mr. JOHN GRANGER SADD, one of the best-known laymen of the Congregational body in Essex.—At Raphoe, Co. Donegal, Very Rev. RICHARD BENNETT, dean and rector of Raphoe.—At Paris, Miss EMILY O'SULLIVAN, only daughter of the late Rev. Dr. O'Sullivan, rector of Tandragee, Co. Armagh, aged seventy-two years.

A Mission to Kurds.—After reading the terrible accounts of the Kurds in your paper, some of your readers may be glad to join in a little mission started by two friends of mine for the evangelization of that people. Although their atrocities have been continually before the public, there is as yet, only one missionary among them, Deacon Shmuel, a Nestorian supported by this Mission. If funds were subscribed they would be glad to send more missionaries, under the superintendence of the American missionaries of Uroomiah. Abu Sayd, chief over 50,000 Kurds, was converted through Deacon Shmuel, who, knowing their language and customs, and being himself Oriental, has found remarkable acceptance among them, and for eighteen years has done good work. Reference is permitted to Rev. W. Shedd, Uroomiah, Persia, and communications may be addressed to Miss Finn, 72, Brook Green, Hammersmith.—M. BARCLAY.

Notes & Comments

THE shadow of plague that has threatened to invade us from the North has been mercifully lifted, and the country once more breathes freely. Preventive medicine is one of the youngest of the sciences, but it has already scored many signal triumphs, and the way in which the dread bubonic plague has been stamped out in the crowded purlieus of Glasgow is one of the most impressive instances of what may be done by foresight, firmness, and adequate precautions in the way of averting sickness. If the moral world were as well watched for the germs of disease as is the physical nowadays, this would be a comparatively clean and healthy world; and the epidemics of vice, which pollute society with their soul-devastating influence, would become things of the past.

Messrs. Morgan and Scott are preparing a popular edition of "The Life of D. L. Moody," by his son, W. R. Moody. It will contain the whole of the literary matter, in the same type as the larger volume, with the omission of some of the less important illustrations. It will be ready in a few weeks, and will be published at 5s.

The Queen's Ministers have not honoured our Sovereign nor our country by advising her to send Admiral Sir John Fisher as a delegate to present Her Majesty's congratulations on the occasion of the Sultan's "jubilee." The unavenged multitude of murdered Armenian Christians cry out through their very silence for different treatment than this towards the man who, being set over them to dispense justice and foster their true interests, basely inspired their indiscriminate slaughter. The Press of England has been silent under this gross insult to decency. Can it be that our conscience as a nation has been drugged, so that the fierce agitations of six years ago are forgotten, and we are able to witness hollow congratulations being paid in our name to the monarch who will go down to posterity under the unenviable title of the Great Assassin of his people?

The Times deserves well of the public for the publication of the frank correspondence on the ethics of present-day journalism, and the exposure of an iniquitous system of fabricating intelligence that has become rife. That telegrams of four words are expanded to forty before publication; that brilliant descriptions of battle-scenes filling a column are evolved from twenty or thirty words of telegraphy; and that even manufactured telegrams are systematically supplied to the newspapers—are facts well known to the initiated. These practices are sanctioned by responsible editors, not because they approve of such methods, nor in order to increase the circulation of their papers, nor for any dearth of real news, but simply because they cannot afford to let unscrupulous rivals score at their expense, and so be under a stigma of being devoid of "enterprise." Under the pressure of this quite secondary consideration, the high character of the British Daily Press is rapidly sinking to a lower level.

These serious facts suggest that it is high time not only for a thorough exposé of the state of things, such as is being now made in The Times, but that a remedy should be diligently sought. Newspapers form the sole reading of by far the larger portion of our population, and it is monstrous that they should be largely fed on such food as has just been described. The trouble, however, will not be met without a hearty co-operation between editors and their readers. The former should take for granted that the public at heart desires facts, which it is incapable of discriminating from fiction till the march of events has clearly distinguished between them—hence the responsibility of editors; the latter should show that they appreciate accuracy more even than raciness, and truth above smartness; and the circulation of newspapers would soon depend on their bona fides. The Institute of Journalists would do well to take up this subject strongly.

The address of Sir William Turner before the British Association, at Bradford, was remarkable for its great omission. The learned President gave a résumé of scientific research in the nineteenth century, fully accepting the Darwinian theory of development. He spoke of man's "nerve energy" being "endowed with higher powers" than other animals, and then went on to speak of this superior energy when "translated into physical activity," enabling him to progress from the condition of a rude savage to an advanced state of civilization, &c.

When Sir J. W. Dawson was President of the British Association, he spoke with equal force about progress, but he was reverent enough to speak about his God, and to demand for man something higher than translated "nerve energy" as alone explaining his higher life. It should be understood that when scientists speak of material forces being alone sufficient to account for life and activity, they do so without any established facts to support them, and also in the teeth of the finest human experience. The testimony of scholars and thinkers who confess to a personal experience of supernatural power in their life, should have some weight surely with scientific men who profess themselves lovers of all the facts of life.

The Free Church ministers of Nottingham, under the leadership of Dr. Paton, have memorialized the Executive Committee of the National Free Church Council to send forth an appeal to the ministers of all the Free Churches of England, asking them to unite together, ere they enter upon the new century, in a holy fellowship of prayer for one another and for the Church of Christ; and that, as the members of the Prayer Union of the Free Church of Scotland had expressed a desire to be united in a fellowship of prayer with their ministerial brethren of America and the Colonies, so the Council might express a desire for the same privilege. This appeal is strengthened by the forcible statement of three reasons—(1) the growing need and desire for unity among all Evangelical Christians; (2) the difficulties and perils of the times should draw all preachers of the Gospel closer together; and (3) being on the threshold of a new century, which is certain to be fateful in its many and varied issues.

There is no more urgent need than the preaching, clearly and urgently, of the Gospel of God in our places of worship. Would that they were all as well served in this repect as New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, of which Rev. G. Campbell Morgan is the pastor—an evangelical and evangelistic preacher of thoughts that breathe of Christ and words that burn with the love of God. His text on Sunday night was "Repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." The house was crowded. Such preaching always brings a crowd.

The people now, as of old, hang on this kind of preacher—are very attentive to hear him—the common people hear him gladly; and even the Herods desire and expect to see some sign wrought by him. The people press on him to hear the Word of God, and blessed are they that hear that Word; for faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God. Oh that through the hearts and lips of all preachers might flow the living water that issues from the throne of God and of the Lamb.

Dealing with the question of "The Village Pastor and His Difficulties," a contemporary has proposed, as the best method of dealing with the pressing difficulty, the stoppage of the exodus of the labourers by bringing about the acquisition of land and the letting it in small holdings, and also a change in the character of education. Meanwhile, however, it may reasonably be asked if in many villages a reduction in the number of chapels might not be advantageous to both pastors and people. In things essential, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; in all things, charity. Even in villages in which the Church services are Ritualistic, it would be a source of greater strength if the Evangelical work were not split up into small sections.

A correspondent, writing in the interests of that higher communion of Christians of various types and denominations which is doing so much to reunite the broken and disunited Church of Christ, suggests that some such idea must have been in the mind of the apostle in Eph. iii. 18, 19, where he prays that his readers "may be able to apprehend with all saints what is the depth and height of the love of Christ." It is certain that the world at large can be fully blessed with the Gospel only when Christian people shall have learned the secret of united life and service. The great blessing that has followed the united efforts of the various churches in evangelization, in America and elsewhere, is a proof of this; and the mid-day services and prayer-meetings held in many centres of population (these might well be multiplied), with the invariable quickening that flows out of them to the churches, is another. All this throws forward a vivid ray of hopefulness on the great universal evangelistic effort now being organised by the Free Church Federation for the opening of the new century. If properly conducted, it cannot fail to command a blessing.

Canon Newbolt's recent statement that "the English people have firmly believed in three things—Sunday, the Bible, and hearing sermons—but are now getting to disbelieve in all three," if it be true, is a very serious accusation against the nation at large. There is no room for doubt that Englishmen have done what they have done, and are what they are, largely through the influence of these three potent factors on the national life; and if these are no longer to have the chief share in the moulding of the British character, we may be sure that we are on the road to decay and ruin as a people. Possibly, the above estimate is too sweeping in its pessimism, and is true rather of the cultured classes than of the nation as a whole; still the remark should be well pondered by all who have the well-being of the country at heart, and who are able to influence public life and opinion for good.

It would appear that in quite a large number of districts the magistrates are recognising the urgent need that exists for practical measures in dealing with the drink curse. At the recent session at Chorley, an application for a licence was backed up by an offer from a Brewery Company to give up two other licensed houses in exchange for it; but the Bench refused it, and taking the Company's offer as an admission that the other two were unnecessary they at once abolished them! This course might reasonably, and with advantage, be adopted in only too many towns in which it is the practice of the brewers to offer a comparatively unimportant licence for one in a new and thriving neighbourhood, or in the vicinity of newly-established manufactories.

At the recent Brewster Sessions at Abergele, the chairman, Mr. Herbert Roberts, M.P., expressed his regret that the law, as it stands, does not allow magistrates to deal suitably with persons against whom a number of convictions for drunkenness had been recorded; and he expressed a hope that there would be an early adoption of the recommendation of the Licensing Commission that the police or public authorities should have the power of naming persons to whom drink should not be supplied. Such an arrangement to save a man from himself commends itself on many grounds, but unfortunately it has been pigeon-holed with other common-sense proposals of the Royal Commission which clash with the interests of the brewers. The point might, however, be pressed in other localities.

Some time ago we published an article pointing out the dangerous pressure which is being applied, under the Local Government (Ireland) Act, to drive out the Protestant population from the South and West of Ireland. Other indications are from to time accruing which show how the machinery of local government in Ireland is made subservient to the interests of the Church of Rome. In many places nuns are being appointed as workhouse matrons and nurses, and a demand is made for the erection (of course by public money) of convents and oratories for their use within the workhouse premises.

The Loughlinstown Union has recently decided upon the erection of elaborate buildings for the accommodation of the nuns, at a proposed expenditure of more than £4,000. As some of the Protestant ratepayers very naturally object, the Local Government Board has been moved to order an inquiry into the matter. All such proposals should be carefully watched, and the fullest inquiry should be demanded.

Dr. Story, in The Times, relates how the Church of England authorities in India have captured the use of the military churches to the exclusion of other denominations. These garrison churches were built by the Government at public expense for the use of Her Majesty's British-born Protestant troops. Services were held without distinction for Episcopalians and Presbyterians in the same buildings. The bishops, by degrees, succeeded in getting these buildings consecrated and conveyed to the Episcopal Church by "deed of gift." Now they refuse to permit the ministers of any other denomination to preach or conduct Divine service in them. Dr. Story stigmatizes the transaction that has vested the control of these churches in these scathing words:—

> The whole process might be supposed, by worldly-minded people, to bear too artful a character to be accomplished by holy hands, and to deserve episcopal benediction; but there it is, and the mischief done by it we are now told cannot be undone. The undoubted right of the Presbyterians to worship in these churches cannot be recognised except as a "concession." It is a new adaptation of that term, that when a man has been robbed of his possessions and demands their restoration he should be told he is seeking a "concession."

Such a policy cannot help the cause of religion in India, either among the civilians or the troops.

The Pope has addressed a circular letter to the various Roman Catholic Governments in regard to the change in the Italian Throne, and in that communication it is declared that he renounces none of his rights over Rome or over the provinces "which composed the patrimony of St. Peter;" that his condition under Italian rule is gradually growing worse, the Pope and his Ministers being at the mercy of the anti-clerical sectaries favoured by the Government; that he invokes the aid of Catholic States to relieve him from the intolerable situation; and that so long as it continues he will not recognise the new King as King of Italy, but only as King of Sardinia.

The Catholic Times must, however, have overlooked this intimation as to the temporal power, for in comment upon the false position in which the Romanist mission and other missions in China were placed, in consequence of some of the priests having received the title of mandarin, thereby coming into conflict with the people, it goes on to say—

> The whole episode is another proof of the danger of allying the Gospel with the civil power, and of complicating the work of the Church with the passions and prejudices that spring from political or judicial interests.

It is pleasant to record, as illustrating the development of the Christian virtues in the Colonies, that at the recent consecration in Sydney of Archdeacon White to the see of Carpentaria the offertory for the Australian Board of Missions amounted to over £8,500. Australia, at any rate, does not appear to be troubling itself with the discussion of niceties in regard to mission work, and is resolutely setting its strong hands to the plough.

The importance of "environment"—social, economic, religious—on the well-being, and even the character, of men is well known. But to affirm that the economic environment altogether settles what men shall be, and even what their ideas of God shall be, is a half-truth which may readily become a whole falsehood. And yet this is what was dogmatically announced from the Chair of the Trades Union Congress last week. Here are the words of Mr. Pickles, the President:—

> In all forms of social evolution the economic factor is the dominant one, and it is this factor which conditions the struggle for existence, and thus determines which shall be the fittest to survive. Now we will note the direction in which the economic factor is impelling us to-day. "What," you may ask, "do you dare to state that such an enlightened society as ours is dominated by economic forces?" Yes; in my opinion there never was a period in history in which this factor acted with greater force than it does to-day. Art, literature, science, and religion are mere appendages of this one.

Such crude and one-sided teaching as this works for pure materialism, and removes the emphasis from conduct to externals. It is the denial of freewill, responsibility, revelation, and God.

Such utterances throw a vivid light on the alienation of vast masses of our working men and many of their leaders from the Christian faith. For the New Testament is uncompromising in affirming the ultimate independence of character and spiritual condition from environment. It lays the chief stress on the crucial truth that man is not made by the external forces of life, but by those that flow from within, and those that descend from above. "The Kingdom of God is within you." Until that great fact is clearly seen and firmly held, the Gospel is bound to be a stumbling-block and a rock of offence. No "economic" condition can guarantee human welfare and happiness unless the hearts of men are right with God. Satan was in heaven when he rebelled, and Adam was in Eden when he fell. But when once the world comes to recognise the Christian view of life, and not till then, will its economic and social conditions of life be put right.

There are one or two things in Dr. Parker's book, A Preacher's Life (Hodder & Stoughton), which deserve the widest circulation. At the age of seventy, the renowned preacher, who for a whole generation has attracted a larger audience of strong men than any other living man, thus speaks of his Christian Belief:—

> I should account myself unfaithful and ungrateful if I could write my biography and leave out the very pith and blood of the story. . . . I have companied with Him of Nazareth in all holiest and tenderest love. I ask no man's mere opinion about Him. I will not listen to changeable, pedantic, self-satisfied opinion about my Redeemer, nor will I allow capricious opinion to put on and take off his royal crown just as fickle moods may come and go. Christ is not a picture to be admired; He is a Saviour to be trusted and served. Christ is not a problem to be intellectually solved; He is a Priest, a Daysman who can lay his hand upon God and the sinner, and make them one by the power of his reconciling blood.

Indeed it is difficult to choose where so much is good. But the chapter on his "Inner Life" might well be separately printed and distributed broadcast. It is a remarkable testimony to the power of our Lord and Saviour—a personal witness to the grace of God, that has rarely been excelled.

Elsewhere in the same book the preacher has some pungent words which might be perused with advantage by some of the lofty spirits of our day, which borrow the Christian Name and carefully deny its central truth:—

> I dread the knavery that takes Evangelical money and preaches Unitarian doctrine. There is a preaching that is negative, unsettling, destructive, full of untested theories, and useless speculations, and windy vanities. It is common to say that the blessing of God does not rest on such preaching, but I want to say that the blessing of man does not rest upon it. That is clearly shown by dwindling congregations and every other sign of indifference, or even resentment. We need not say God does not bless it. Man himself will not have it. In such husks the soul can find no satisfaction.

We are thankful for this testimony. It should have a great influence, coming, as it does, from one who has demonstrated beyond question that men with the most vigorous minds appreciate the beauty of Evangelical teaching, since in thousands they have flocked for years to Dr. Parker's teaching.

Upon several public platforms lately the question of the "coming revival" has been dealt with. Christian men of all shades of thought seem to anticipate in the near future a revival of religion in our midst. One note, however, that has been struck by several speakers needs receiving with qualification. We are told that the next revival will be "not emotional, but ethical—a revival of justice and of duty and of good conduct." Such a revival is certainly needed—badly needed, but we must be very careful that the ethical element is not thrust forward to the obscuring of the spiritual. The ethics that Christians desire to see flourish are ethics which are the product of a new life. If we are to be misled by a preaching of external justice, the gain to the country and to the individual soul will be ephemeral and unreal. No doubt some Evangelicals have minimized ethics in their desire to preach the Gospel of grace; but the opposite extreme is equally perilous. At all hazards, let us keep to the mean, and preach the Gospel of regeneration by the Holy Spirit, issuing in a true ethical life for the glory of God.

The ministry of sorrow is hard to recognise and understand, "for no chastening seemeth for the present to be joyous, but grievous." It is the mistake of many who are afflicted that they expect to see at once the meaning of their troubles, and for lack of this vision they rebel against the Hand that is shaping their lives according to his hidden but holy will. We are to be willing to have faith where we cannot see, knowing that our future happiness and well-being are dependent on a wise acceptance and use of our sorrows and difficulties. "Sorrow with his pick mines the heart. But he is a cunning workman. He deepens the channels whereby happiness may enter, and hollows out new chambers for joy to abide in when he is gone."

Among the minor moralities of public life, a higher place should be given to the relations of speakers and audiences. The little affectations and insincerities of the platform are frequently annoying and always demoralising to both sides. A contemporary wisely calls attention to the way in which a speaker often smilingly assures his audience at an annual meeting that while he is glad to be there, he really does not know why he was asked, and is quite sure that many others would have been far more suitable, &c., or, consciously armed with a thirty minutes speech, he declares his intention of only saying a few words, and then proceeds considerably to overlap the time of the other speakers, and so on, indefinitely. These palpable insincerities are not only lowering to personal dignity, but they destroy confidence in a speaker. No one who descends to them is likely to have much influence over an audience. The first principle of public speaking, as of public and private business, should be entire honesty and straightforwardness.

In a recently-published descriptive volume which has no reference to social questions, the writer, an eminent naturalist, incidentally refers to the cathedral city of Chichester as being in a disgraceful condition owing to the "tied house" system which the brewers are doing all in their power to develop throughout the country.

There are 12,000 souls in the town, that is to say an adult male population of 3,000. This number includes a rather large body of clergymen and ministers, and perhaps a couple of hundred highly respectable persons who do not go to bars. To provide this village population with drink there are seventy public houses, besides several wine and spirit merchants and grocers with licences. To keep all these houses open there must be an immense quantity of drink consumed. At eight o'clock in the morning you will find men at all the bars, often in groups of three or four, standing pipe in mouth and tankard in hand, and when closing time comes, out of every door a goodly crowd of citizens are seen stumbling forth.

The author, who, by the way, admits that he is not an abstainer nor an extremist, adds that in the streets, at the Market Cross, and at corners, "you will see groups of the most utterly drink-degraded wretches it is possible to find anywhere in the kingdom," and that the explanation is, as the publicans themselves asserted, there are thirty or forty too many licensed houses—"the brewers own them, and it is more to their profit to give the house rent free than to close it"—and that the clergy and ministers of the twenty churches and chapels are doing nothing in the matter, because "probably they have discovered that nothing is to be done." Yet there are people who talk about the "vested interests" of the drink trade, and who propose to compensate the publican and the brewer!

A Plethora of Speakers.

We hear much in these scientific days about the conservation of physical forces, and the way in which Nature economizes her used-up energies by transforming them into something else; "gathering up the fragments," as it were, "that nothing be lost." There are few directions in which the parable does not apply to human life. There is much unconscious waste of time, energy, opportunity, will-power, and not unfrequently the waste is wilful. There is also much well-meant waste of energy and materials on good objects which might be better attained by a more economical use of our resources. Here is one example.

In arranging for public meetings of a religious kind, there is a growing tendency to draw up a programme which depends for its attractiveness largely on the number of speakers. It is supposed at least that the public measure their enjoyment of the gatherings to which they are invited, whether it be an annual tea-meeting or a religious convention on a large scale, by the number of speeches they hear on a given subject. A meagre "platform," say the promoters of any meeting, means a scanty audience. And so they invite one busy man after another to leave his fireside or his study, to "say a few words," or give an address of ten minutes or so, for which (with the travelling involved) they have to occupy several hours of valuable time. The question is,

DOES THIS SORT OF THING PAY?

If it does, then the serious sacrifice which it involves must be cheerfully borne by the already over-burdened men who are the chief sufferers, and an expensive process must be justified on the score of results. That the sacrifice is a serious one is self-evident to anyone who has the gift of putting himself in another's place. Granting that there are some speakers who are never so happy as when they are addressing public meetings every night (be it for ever so brief a period) it is certain that to most men of average temperament there is nothing so wearing and wearying as to spend hours several evenings in the week in crowded meetings, in which they are called upon to take little more than a formal part. Sooner or later, if this practice is persisted in, a break-down is sure to follow. Nothing, therefore, but strong proof that the custom of overloading a programme with many speakers is a real benefit to the community, can justify its continuance.

But we venture to say that, with certain exceptions, such as will suggest themselves at once to the reader, of using our religious leaders and speakers does not pay from any point of view. We have before us a letter on this subject which has suggested these remarks. In it the writer speaks of her own experience as a member of the audience. "It has often struck me," she writes, "that to expect a speaker, even the most experienced and self-contained, to give anything like a lucid or interesting account of any Christian work, or aim at any clear abstract teaching in the very few moments allowed at some meetings, is really impossible, and is unsatisfactory for the audience." She instances a meeting at which, during one hour and forty minutes, nine addresses were given, which resulted in so superficial an account of the various forms of the Christian service described that it was impossible to appreciate them, to say nothing of the discomfort and disappointment caused to the speakers. "Very different," she continues, "was one unhurried meeting, and great was the gain in the quality of the addresses. . . . Should not conveners of meetings consider whether they are not crowding in too much matter, to the loss of all repose of feeling, and of all thoughtfulness in the addresses, and, moreover, of all consideration and courtesy to the speakers, especially to missionaries home from their fields of work, eager and full of matter?"

THIS WASTEFUL METHOD

We are persuaded that this way of looking at the matter is more general than is suspected. If so it suggests that better meetings may be secured by a wise selection of speakers, than by their multiplication. Two or three addresses of twenty or twenty-five minutes' duration are more likely to create a definite impression than half a dozen or more of ten minutes' length. And if speakers know that the success of a meeting depends largely on their own contribution to it, they will be encouraged to make a more thorough preparation than they often do when uncertain whether they will be called on at all, or only for a very few minutes, and then when the audience is already wearied and the time is late. "Let all things be done unto edifying."

The London School Board has more than once been exercised about under-fed scholars in the day schools and the impossibility of effectually teaching them even the rudiments of learning. The great difficulty lies in the existence of unnatural parents, who neglect their children when they might well maintain them if they would; and who would still further dishonour their parental responsibilities once their children were even partially fed at public expense. The Board practically declined to accept the recommendation of the majority of its committee of investigation last year, and its General Purposes Committee now aim at providing for the efficient organization of charities administered by local individuals, &c., rather than of using public money for the purpose of feeding the hungry children. This seems a very sensible way out of a situation that bristles with economic and moral difficulties.

What Think Ye of Christ?

THIS question is powerfully raised by Mr. Avary W. H. Forbes, M.A., in a pamphlet entitled Called Wonderful; or, Cause and Effect as Seen in Christ (2d. Partridge & Co.). The pages are addressed to doubters, and they present a well-reasoned argument for the Deity of Christ, which is very properly styled the premiss of Christianity. That premiss is set forth in the language of Scripture, and supported by facts of history—classified under the head of Effects—in institutions and literature, faith and works. We make brief extracts from the early part of the argument—What think ye of Christ?

What Christ's enemies thought of Him.—The officers who were sent by the chief priests to take Him, said: "Never man spake like this Man" (John vii. 46). The Pharisees, intent on destroying Jesus, said in council: "This Man doeth many miracles" (John xi. 47). Judas said: "I have betrayed the innocent blood" (Matt. xxvii. 4). Pilate said: "I find no fault in this Man" (Luke xxiii. 4); and again: "I am innocent of the blood of this just Person" (Matt. xxvii. 24). Pilate's wife said to her husband: "Have thou nothing to do with that just Man" (Matt. xxvii. 19). The thief on the cross said: "This Man hath done nothing amiss" (Luke xxiii. 41). The centurion and they that were with Him said: "Truly this was the Son of God" (Matt. xxvii. 54).

How did his friends speak of Him?—John the Baptist said: "I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God" (John i. 34). Nathaniel said: "Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God" (John i. 49). The Samaritans said: "This is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world" (John iv. 42). His disciples in the ship on Gennesareth worshipped Him, saying: "Of a truth Thou art the Son of God" (Matt. xiv. 33). Simon Peter said: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God" (Matt. xvi. 16). Thomas said to Him: "My Lord and my God" (John xx. 28). The Epistles are it is almost superfluous to quote from them. Paul says: Christ was "the Son of God" (Romans i. 4). Peter quotes the voice on the Mount: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (2 Peter i. 17). John says: "God sent his only begotten Son into the world," and "The Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world" (1 John iv. 9, 14); and all the apostles fully and emphatically acknowledge the Deity of Christ. Paul, in the Acts, says: "Feed the church of God, which He hath purchased with his own blood" (xx. 28). The author of the Hebrews says: "Unto the Son He saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever" (i. 8).

What Christians now think of Christ.—What say the Lord's followers at the present day, and since the apostolic age? To cite their testimony would be to fill many folio volumes. That Jesus was the Son of God, is preached in thousands of pulpits, and at thousands of street corners every day, in both hemispheres; it is embodied in prayers, sung in hymns, taught in Sunday schools and day schools, set forth in tracts, and confessed at Bible classes and prayer meetings, at conferences and conventions. Within doors and without, Christ is distinctly and emphatically held up as the crucified and risen Saviour of the world, the Author of everlasting life; Him by whom God made the universe, the only sinless One, the Mediator through whom alone we can approach the Father, the only Name given under heaven whereby we can be saved, "the Begotten from everlasting of the Father, the very and eternal God."

What Christ said of Himself.—Let us listen for a moment to the Divine self-assertion of Christ Himself: "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life; no man cometh unto the Father but by Me;" "I am the true Vine;" "I am the Good Shepherd;" "I am the Resurrection and the Life;" "I am come that they might have life;" "I give unto them eternal life;" "I am the Light of the World;" "Without Me ye can do nothing;" "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me;" "I have overcome the world;" "I will never leave you nor forsake you;" "I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you;" "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world;" "I said I am the Son of God;" "Before Abraham was I am;" "I proceeded and came forth from God;" "I and my Father are one." There is no uncertain ring about these and many other utterances of Christ, and they place the Unitarian on the horns of a pitiless dilemma. When the wish is father to the thought, men will believe almost anything; yet in the eyes of every unprejudiced and candid person, these words of our Lord show Him to be either an altogether superhuman being—"the Son of God," in fact—or else the greatest impostor that ever lived.

Christ's supreme claim.—Modern sceptics will not understand Christ's words; but the Jews, his contemporaries, understood Him very clearly. "Art Thou, then, the Son of God? And He said unto them: Ye say that I am. And they said, What need we any further witness? for we ourselves have heard of his own mouth" (Luke xxii. 70, 71). Whatever the English translation may sound like, it is evident that the words in the original suggested no ambiguity to the Jews. They were clear about it long before this. "The Jews sought the more to kill Him, because He had not only broken the Sabbath, but said that God was his Father, making Himself equal with God" (John v. 18). Again, "By our law He ought to die, because He made Himself the Son of God" (John xix. 7). And again, "He trusted in God; Let Him deliver Him now, if He will have Him: for He said, I am the Son of God" (Matt. xxvii. 43). The Jews were very consistent compared with our modern unbelievers. They believed Christ to be neither the Son of God, nor yet a good Man: the latter believe Him to be the best Man that ever lived, and yet not the Son of God. Would a good man have put forward such tremendous claims if they were false? Would He have called Himself "the only begotten Son of God"? Would He without any rebuke have allowed Thomas to address Him as "My Lord and my God!" (John xx. 28); or Mary to have said: "Yea, Lord, I believe that Thou art the Christ, the Son of God" (John xi. 27)? Would He have commended Peter, and called him "blessed," when the latter said: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God" (Matt. xvi. 16)?

It must be evident, therefore, to all unbiassed persons, that Christ claimed to be the only begotten Son of God, co-eternal and co-equal with the Father, and as such deserving of similar worship and reverence.

The Fatherhood of God.

DEAR SIR,—What is the meaning of the term the Fatherhood of God? In other words, who have the right to call God their "Father"?

This question, if put to the individual members of the Christian churches of to-day, would meet with two different answers, not only distinct from, but really antagonistic to, each other.

Some would answer, "God became, through the incarnation of his Son, the Father of the whole human race." Others would answer, "God becomes the Father of the sinner directly he individually receives God's Son as his personal Saviour."

With these two distinct views before us, let us ask, "What saith the Scripture?" at the same time desiring the guidance of the inspiring Spirit in understanding his inspired Word, and bowing unreservedly to what God says.

"Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God (and such we are, R.V.); therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew Him not" (1 John iii. 1).

If it be true that God is the Father of the whole human race, then this verse tells us—

(1) That the Father hath bestowed upon us something which we already possessed, viz., "sonship."

(2) That the world knows us not because we are the sons of God,, and yet (according to the above theory) all the people in the world are themselves sons of God.

Thus we are landed in two contradictions. (See also v. 10, "children of God" and "children of the devil.")

"But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name" (John i. 12; see also v. 13).

These verses, if read carefully and prayerfully, hardly need comment. It is surely evident from them that becoming sons of God is dependent upon personal reception of Christ as our Saviour.

I will, in order to save space, only give references to further texts on this point: Romans viii. 14-17; John viii. 38-44 (esp. v. 42); Gal. iii. 26.

In Matt. vi. 1-18 and 31, 32 the true child of God is contrasted—

(1) With the hypocrites, the former having the secret reward and approval of his Father, the latter having the approval of men (see esp. vv. 4, 6, 18). (2) With the heathen, vv. 7 and 8, and Gentiles vv. 31 and 32; and yet, if God is Father of the whole human race, the hypocrites, heathen, and Gentiles are his children, and the title, Father, so frequently used in the above passage loses all distinctive meaning.

On what passages do the advocates of the universal Fatherhood of God ground their views? I believe very largely on the Lord's Prayer and the parable of the Prodigal Son.

The Lord's Prayer is recorded in Luke xi. 1-4, and Matt. vi. 9-13. In the former passage it is distinctly stated that one of our Lord's disciples said to Him: "Lord teach us to pray." In the latter passage the prayer comes in the midst of the passage above referred to, in which our Lord contrasts the conduct which ought to characterize his true followers with that of the hypocrites, heathen, &c.; and the whole context shows clearly that the prayer was given to his true followers.

But, apart from this, the Lord's Prayer itself shows unmistakably that it was meant for the use of his redeemed children, and of them only. An unconverted man might sincerely pray the last four petitions, but how could any unconverted man truly and sincerely pray: "Thy Kingdom come," or "Thy will be done," when he had neither yielded his own heart and life to God's will, nor accepted Christ as his King?

The parable of the Prodigal Son is supposed by many to show the Fatherhood of God and the sonship of the sinner before conversion. Is there good ground for this? I think not. It is a mere truism to say that teaching by parables is in its nature figurative. Why, then, are we asked to literalize the characters in this one particular parable and not in others?

Luke xv. contains three parables. By what rule of interpretation may we literalize the characters in the third parable, if not also those in the first and second? In other words, if the third parable proves that God is a Father and the unsaved sinner a son, the first parable equally proves that God is a Shepherd and the sinner a sheep; and the second parable, that God is a woman and the sinner a piece of silver!
